History of West Virginia

HON. I. GRANT LAZZELLE. The career of Hon. I. Grant Lazzelle, judge of the Circuit Court, is strongly entrenched in the history of the jurisprudence of Monongalia County. The City of Morgantown, which witnessed the beginning of his professional career in 1889, offered a promising field for the young man of twenty-seven years, and the citizens who have watched his advancement have never had cause to regret the faith they placed in his energy, enthusiasm and ability. He has grown into his opportunities, has fashioned his resources to his needs, and has reflected dignity, sincerity and genuine worth upon a profession for which he is singularly and even admirably equipped.

Judge Lazzelle was born on a farm in Cass District, near Morgantown, May 10, 1862, and is a representative in the fourth generation of an honored pioneer's family of Monongalia County. The Lazzelle family, as the name might intimate, is of French stock, and was founded in America during Colonial days. Thomas Lazzelle, the great-grandfather of the Judge, was born near the City of Philadelphia, married Hannah Beck, of Pennsylvania, and a short time after marriage he and his wife came to the borderland of Virginia and settled on Government land in Cass District of what is now Monongalia County, West Virginia. Thomas Lazzelle was a pioneer farmer, and was also the first Methodist preacher of his district.

Thomas Lazzelle, the younger, son of Thomas Lazzelle, was born in Cass District in 1788, and became a large farmer and stock-raiser and one of the prominent and influential men of his locality. He married Miss Rebecca Bowly.

James Lazzelle, the son of Thomas Lazzelle, the younger, was born on the old Lazzelle homestead December 25, 1810, and followed in his father's footsteps as to a choice of vocations, likewise becoming a successful farmer and raiser of livestock. He was a man held in high esteem in his community and took an active interest in civic affairs, although not a seeker of public office. He married Miss Eleanor Courtney, of Monongalia County, who died in 1896, and Mr. Lazzelle's death occurred the following year. Among their children was Judge Lazzelle of this review.

I. Grant Lazzelle received his early education in the public schools, following which he attended the University of West Virginia, from which he received his Bachelor of Arts degree in 1883 and his Bachelor of Laws degree in the year following. He did not immediately enter upon the practice of his profession, taking up teaching instead, and from 1884 for four years was engaged in educational work, during which period he was principal of the Kingwood, West Virginia, and LaGrange, Arkansas, public schools. He entered the practice of law at Morgantown in 1888, is senior member of the firm of Lazzelle and Stewart, which association continued until the senior member was elevated to the Circuit Bench in 1921. Great ability, unusual natural resource and firm belief in the best tenets of his profession enabled Judge Lazzelle to make himself a factor to be reckoned with, and in the course of his career as a lawyer many of the most important cases in Monongalia County received his support. In 1894 he was appointed mayor of Morgantown to fill a vacancy, a position in which he served during that year, and in 1897 was elected prosecuting attorney of Monongalia County, an office in which he served for four years. His splendid record in these two capacities was a helpful factor when he became, in 1920, the candidate of the republican party for the office of judge of the Circuit Court, and he assumed the duties of this position January 1, 1921. In addition to ability and experience Judge Lazzelle possesses in marked degree the judicial temperament, and during the comparatively short time that he has been on the bench has won the esteem of the members of the Monongalia bar and the confidence of the people in general.

On September 23, 1891, Judge Lazzelle was united in marriage with Miss Norah H. Jackson, daughter of Joseph Jackson, of Kingwood, West Virginia, and to this union there were born two sons: Donald Grant, born February 3, 1894, now a practicing attorney of Morgantown; and Eugene, born January 25, 1897, who died November 30, 1902. Judge Lazzelle is esteemed for his many admirable qualities of heart and mind, and his thorough knowledge of the theory and practice of law and his wise interpretation thereof, and for a public-spiritedness that has ever prompted a sane and practical interest in those measures which tend to greater happiness, stability and good government.

DONALD G. LAZZELLE. One of the leading professional men of Morgantown is Donald G. Lazzelle, a lawyer of sound judgment, and a citizen of honest purpose and enterprising effort. He is a member of a sturdy old county family, and other good fortune has been his, in the way of honored parentage, educational advantages and social opportunities. He was born at Morgantown, Monongalia County, West Virginia, February 3, 1894, and is a son of Hon. I. Grant Lazzelle, judge of the Circuit Court of Monongalia County.

In the public schools of his native city Mr. Lazzelle continued a student until he was graduated from the high school in 1913, with decision already made as to his future career. The profession of law undoubtedly offers a very attractive field to the ambitious young man of studious habit and disciplined mind, especially when inheritance plays a part. Mr. Lazzelle has the example of a distinguished father. He then entered the West Virginia University, where he completed a course in law and was graduated from that institution in 1919, and in June of that year was admitted to the bar.

As a loyal son, Mr. Lazzelle returned to his native city to start his professional life, and was associated with the law firm of Lazzelle & Stewart until January 1, 1921, when he entered independent practice. It is the expressed opinion of many of the older members of the Monongalia bar that very seldom have young lawyers shown such a mature grasp of the letter of the law and such thoroughness and accuracy of judgment. He has forged rapidly to the front in his profession, and commands universal confidence, in recognition of his legal ability and his personal probity.

Mr. Lazzelle married in 1918 Miss Mildred Price, daughter of William E. and Elizabeth E. (Mack) Price, old residents of Morgantown, and they have two daughters: Louise, born March 19, 1919; and Mary Jean, born September 5, 1920.

Mr. Lazzelle is interested in politics to the extent of earnest, good citizenship, and is an active member of the Chamber of Commerce. He belongs to the Monongalia County Bar Association and the West Virginia State Bar Association. He is a member of Morgantown Lodge No. 4, A. F. and A. M.; Morgantown Commandery No. 18, Knights Templar; and Osiris Temple, Mystic Shrine. Personally he is genial and companionable, and belongs to the Country Club.

JUDGE GEORGE W. ATKINSON. A life of public service, involving some of the highest honors that can be conferred by state or nation—former governor of West Virginia and former judge of the Federal Court of Claims—has been that of Judge Atkinson. Most significant is the fact that he has retired from his public career possessing in magnified degree the affection and esteem of the people of his home state. This esteem was justified by his character. It can be said of him as of few other men that he never abused the confidence so completely reposed in him during all the years he was in public office.

Judge Atkinson was born on a farm along Elk River in Kanawha County, June 29, 1845, son of James and Miriam (Rader) Atkinson. He was carefully educated, and his scholarship is attested by degrees representing graduation from several higher institutions and also honorary degrees conferred as tokens of his public services. He graduated A. B. from Ohio Wesleyan University in 1870, and Master of Arts in 1873, and in 1874 graduated in law from Howard University at Washington. He received the Doctor of Philosophy degree from Mount Union College in 1885, pro merito, and honorary degrees have been conferred upon him by De Pauw University, U. S. Grant University, University of Nashville, Ohio Wesleyan University and West Virginia University.

He was admitted to the bar in 1875, and from the first has been active in civil and political affairs. Before he took up law practice he was a member of the Charleston Board of Education, in 1869-71, and was postmaster of that city from 1870 to 1876. He was a United States internal revenue agent from 1876 to 1880, and in 1881 was appointed United States marshal for the District of West Virginia, serving four years. His conduct in that office was accorded special commendation by the Department of Justice. In the meantime Judge Atkinson had become a resident of Wheeling, and in 1888 he was elected to represent the First Congressional District in Congress, serving as a member of the Fifty-first Congress from 1889 to 1891. He declined reelection. He was engaged in the practice of law at Wheeling until 1896, and in that year came to him the distinctive honor of being elected governor of West Virginia on the republican ticket, the first republican to hold that office since 1871. His term of governor ended in 1901. As governor his administration was an effective one in every department requiring his executive ability, and these results were accomplished in part by his practical and diplomatic method of handling conflicting interests and disposing of party and personal quarrels. Possibly no other governor of West Virginia ever left office with so great a degree of esteem from his party and citizens generally.

Soon after the close of his term as governor he was selected in 1901 as United States district attorney for the Southern District of West Virginia. He served in that office until April 15, 1905, when he was named by President Roosevelt a member of the United States Court of Claims. When he retired from this court after eleven years of service, on April 17, 1916, he received the grateful tributes of many men prominent in the life of the nation, who united in paying their respects to the high quality of his work on the Federal Bench and to his personal character as well.

Early in his life Judge Atkinson became a member of the Masonic order, and he was grand master of the Grand Lodge of the state in 1876-77, and for twenty years, 1885-1905, was grand secretary. Judge Atkinson from youth has been an earnest Christian, and one of the prominent lay members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, being lay delegate to the National Conference of 1876 and to that of 1888. He has been one of West Virginia's most popular and widely sought public speakers, and besides his appearance in political campaigns he has done much platform work, lecturing on literary, religious and Masonic subjects. He is author of an impressive list of works, including: "History of Kanawha," 1876; "West Virginia Pulpit," 1878; "After the Moonshiners," 1879; "Revenue Digest," 1880; "ABC of the Tariff," 1882; "Don't, or Negative Chips from Blocks of Living Truths," 1886; "Prominent Men of West Virginia," 1895; "Psychology Simplified," 1897; "Volume of Public Addresses," and a "Volume of Poems," and more recently he was author of the "Bench and Bar of West Virginia," published in 1919 by the Virginia Law Book Company of Charleston.

December 2, 1868, Judge Atkinson married Miss Ellen Eagan, of an old Kanawha County family. She died in 1893, the mother of five children. On June 24, 1897, Judge Atkinson married Mrs. Myra Hornor Camden, widow of the late Judge G. D. Camden of Clarksburg.

Kindly by nature, generous to a fault, true to his friends and his convictions, knowing no distinction in rank among men, except that marked by character, Judge Atkinson is a splendid type of the sturdy American boy grown to a man of influence and still, at the age of seventy-seven, exercising an influence for good in his home state.

HARRY P. CAMDEN. Among the distinguished men of this state Harry P. Camden is entitled to a prominent place. His professional ability and standing give him rank among the foremost lawyers of the state, and his achievements in other lines make him conspicuous among men.

Harry P. Camden was born at Weston, West Virginia, September 8, 1858. He is the son of T. B. Camden and Susan Holt Camden, and he owes much to these sturdy parents of good stock. His lineage runs back to the Camdens and the Spriggs of Montgomery County, Maryland, on the father's side, and to the Holts and the Wilsons of Pennsylvania on the mother's side, all of whom are of Revolutionary stock. One uncle on the father's side was twice elected United States senator from the State of West Virginia, and another uncle, on the mother's side, was judge of the Supreme Court of West Virginia for many years.

The subject of this sketch was educated in the common schools of this state, and later attended for two years a preparatory school at Norwood on the James River, in the State of Virginia, and from there he went to the University of Virginia at Charlottesville. For two years he was a student in the academic department of the University and was graduated in 1878-79 and in 1879-80 in several branches of study. As a member of the class of history and English literature for the year 1879-80 he was awarded the honor of having his graduating essay adjudged the best essay written by the class, and he had as competitors such students as Charles W. Kent, who afterward became professor of History and English Literature at the University. Mr. Camden's essay was published in the first issue of the University Magazine for the year 1880, and the same issue of the magazine contained complimentary announcement of the fact that Thomas Woodrow Wilson had received the orator's medal and the magazine medal for the same year.

In the year 1880 Mr. Camden entered the law class of the University of Virginia, without any previous preparation, and he achieved what has been accomplished by few students under the same conditions, and that was the making of his degree of Bachelor of Law, under Prof. John B. Minor and others, in one scholastic year.

After graduating in law he first located in Charleston, West Virginia, where for five or six years he practiced his profession, most of the time in partnership with Gen. C. C. Watts. He made his mark at the bar, even in that early day.

Later, at the instance of his uncle, Senator J. N. Camden, he came to Parkersburg to assist him in taking care of the legal end of the many large enterprises which he was then promoting, and after these were firmly established he entered into partnership in the practice of the law with the late John A. Hutchinson, a leading lawyer of the bar at Parkersburg, and remained with him until his death, at which time he fell heir to the large practice that had been built up by Hutchinson & Camden.

In 1896 Mr. Camden was made general counsel of the Ohio River Railroad Company, and for about nine years and until this road was sold to the B. & O., he successfully and satisfactorily guided the legal destiny of this company, and always with conspicuous ability. One prominent member of the local bar, who had had experience in the same line of legal work, paid Mr. Camden the compliment of saying that he was the best counsel the Ohio River Railroad Company ever had, and it had had some able lawyers for counsel.

Mr. Camden is still in active practice and has justly earned the enviable reputation of being one among the leading lawyers, not only of the local bar, but of the state. At the present time he is attorney for the estate of J. N. Camden, deceased, the Union Trust & Deposit Company, the Wood County Bank, the Cairo Oil Company and the Parkersburg-Ohio Bridge Company.

Mr. Camden has been active at all times as a public spirited citizen outside of his profession, and has always taken an interest in the welfare and progress of the city in which he lives. For years he was a director of the Parkersburg Board of Commerce and was recognized as one of the most active and most valuable members. He was made chairman, some years ago, of a committee to devise ways and means for constructing a bridge over the Ohio River at Parkersburg, and he evolved and formulated the plan for financing the project, and it is due in great measure to the services, advice and activities of Mr. Camden that Parkersburg now boasts of one of the handsomest bridges over the Ohio River from Pittsburgh to Cincinnati. He is president of the Parkersburg-Ohio Bridge Company, as well as attorney for the company.

Mr. Camden married Juliette Graham Blackford in February, 1899, and they have three children, Harry P., Jr., Mary V. and Graham Blackford Camden. He is affiliated with the Episcopal Church, and in politics is of the democratic faith.

JOHNSON NEWLON CAMDEN. One of West Virginia's most eminent citizens, a business man, financier and public leader, was the late Johnson Newlon Camden.

He was born in Lewis County March 6, 1828, and died at Parkersburg April 25, 1908, at the age of eighty years. He was the oldest son of John Scribner and Nancy (Newlon) Camden. In 1838, when he was ten years of age, the family moved to Braxton County, and he grew up there in the rural backwoods and became proficient in the arts and sports of that district, being a skilled hunter, fisherman, and guiding a canoe with all the expertness of a native Indian. In this way he acquired his first practical knowledge of the mineral resources of the state, in which subsequently he played so prominent a part in the development. He made good use of limited opportunities to gain an education, and subsequently spent two years in an academy. He was deputy clerk of the Circuit Court of Braxton County under his uncle, Col. William Newlon, and at the age of eighteen was appointed a cadet in the West Point Military Academy, but resigned two years later to begin the study of law. He was admitted to the bar in 1851, and served as commonwealth attorney for Braxton County and later for Nicholas County.

In a few years he gave up the practice of law to look after his growing interests acquired by the purchase of large tracts of wild land in Braxton and Nicholas counties. He established his home at Weston in 1853, and the following year was made assistant in a branch of the Exchange Bank of Virginia. Four years later he again resumed the practice of law and the work of developing his lands. He had made some experiments in the production of oil from cannel coal, but was soon diverted from this enterprise by hearing of the petroleum resources in Wood County. He began operating in that field when there was only one oil well, and soon had a company organized to drill and brought in a well that produced oil more rapidly than it could be stored or shipped. Much of the oil from this pioneer well was transported by flatboats down the Little Kanawha River, and it is said that the first week's operations yielded the company $23,000. That was the beginning of a feverish oil boom in that section. The outbreak of the Civil war shortly afterward brought about a general suspension of work in the West Virginia oil fields, though Mr. Camden did not allow his interest to lapse. He and the Rathbone brothers developed some additional leases in the oil belt, and at the same time he became identified with others in providing a financial organization to give more extended banking facilities, out of which the First National Bank of Parkersburg was formed. Mr. Camden became its first president. During subsequent years it is said that he owned an interest in every oil producing belt in West Virginia with one exception. From oil production he and his associates in 1869 entered the refining branch of the industry, erecting large storage tanks and a refinery at Parkersburg. Soon afterward the West Virginia fields began to decline, the great bulk of production being in Pennsylvania, and in order to secure crude oil for the refinery Mr. Camden became associated with the Standard Oil Company, then in its infancy. He became a director in the company and had charge of its West Virginia and Maryland combinations. The business at Parkersburg was continued under the name of the Camden Consolidated Oil Company, and the refinery at times manufactured 300,000 barrels of oil yearly. Later the refining interests were removed to the seaboard, and Mr. Camden was responsible for the consolidation of the refineries at Baltimore under the Baltimore United Oil Company, a million dollar corporation of which he was president.

Without doubt Senator Camden was one of the foremost men in vision, executive planning and practical administration in developing the mining, manufacturing, commercial and agricultural interests of West Virginia. In 1882 he helped organize the Ohio River Railroad Company, which built the line from Wheeling to Huntington, now a part of the Baltimore & Ohio. He later organized and built a railroad from Fairmont to Clarksburg, opening a great coal field, and subsequently extended its facilities to important timber regions of the state. This was one of the first of an extensive system of narrow gauge railroads that furnished a network of transportation for the productive resources of the state. With Henry Gassaway Davis he was interested in the building of the West Virginia Central Railroad, now the Western Maryland. He was president of the Monongahela River and the West Virginia and Pittsburgh railroads, and at different times was identified with many of the financial and industrial corporations that have been powerful in West Virginia.

The responsibilities and honors of politics and public affairs could hardly have been avoided by a man of such prominence. He was a leader in 1867 in the movement to remove the political disabilities from the citizens who had given their support to the Confederacy. In 1868 he was nominee of the conservative party for governor. While continuing his efforts to repeal the disfranchising clause of the State Constitution, he was equally open in his advocacy of recent amendments to the Federal Constitution, and this stand prevented his nomination for governor by the democratic party in 1870. He was again nominated in 1872, but was defeated by a combination of democrats with the republicans who were seeking to defeat the new State Constitution. In 1880 he was almost unanimously nominated by the democratic caucus for the United States Senate, and was elected by the Legislature of that year. He was one of the able men in the Senate while the democratic party was ascendant in national affairs during the '80s. While he was not reelected, he was able to name his successor, and subsequently he was offered the nomination for governor, but declined. His last political honor came in 1893, when he was chosen to the United States Senate to fill the unexpired term of Senator Kenna, and he served from January 23, 1893, to March 4, 1895. He was a delegate to the Democratic National Convention in 1868, 1872 and 1876.

Senator Camden in 1858 married Anna Thompson, daughter ter of George W. and Elizabeth (Steenrod) Thompson, of Wheeling, where her father was a man of public prominence. Senator Camden and wife had two children. The son, Johnson Newlon Camden, is a prominent leader in agricultural and stock raising affairs in Central Kentucky, married into one of Kentucky's oldest and most distinguished families, and recently served a brief term as a member of the United States Senate. The daughter of the late Senator Camden, Annie, became the wife of Gen. Baldwin Day Spilman.

WILLIAM ALEXANDER MACCORKLE, who was the ninth citizen to hold the office of governor of West Virginia, has been a member of the Charleston bar for over forty years and is a member of the law firm of Chilton, MacCorkle, Clark & MacCorkle.

He was born at Lexington, Virginia, May 7, 1857, son of William and Mary (Morrison) MacCorkle. He graduated in law from Washington and Lee University in 1879, was admitted to the bar the previous year, and began practice at Charleston in 1879. The law firm of Chilton, MacCorkle & Chilton was organized in 1897.

Governor MacCorkle is a democrat. He was elected and served as prosecuting attorney of Kanawha County from 1880 to 1889. His service as governor extended from March 4, 1893, to March 3, 1897. Some years later he was elected a member of the state Senate, serving from 1910 to 1914.

Governor MacCorkle is well known as a writer and is author of "Some Southern Questions," "The Monroe Doctrine," "The Book of the White Sulphur," and many addresses and articles upon economic subjects.

October 19, 1881, he married Isabelle Goshorn, of Charleston.

REESE BLIZZARD. Considering the broad range of his services and activities Reese Blizzard, of Parkersburg, has lived an exceedingly busy life, and his friends have many times admired the wonderful energy which he has put into his undertakings. He is one of West Virginia's distinguished lawyers, formerly a circuit judge, and has also been a constructive factor in the larger business affairs of the state.

Judge Blizzard was born in Nicholas County, West Virginia, October 17, 1864, son of James and Elizabeth (Gill) Blizzard. His maternal grandfather came to this country from Ireland. His paternal grandfather, Alexander Blizzard, came from Scotland. His wife was a Campbell, also of Scotch ancestry and related to Alexander Campbell, founder of Bethany College, West Virginia. Alexander Blizzard made his home in New Jersey. James was one of his three sons, one of whom went to Ohio and the other to Indiana, while James settled in Greenbrier County, West Virginia. He was a clergyman of the Methodist Protestant Church, though his duties were only local. The greater part of his life was spent in West Virginia, and he was a private soldier in the Confederate army and wounded in the battle of Shiloh. He died in 1889 and his widow in 1907. James Blizzard's first wife was a daughter of Rev. A. T. Morrison, of Nicholas County, and she became the mother of ten children. His second wife, Elizabeth Gill, was the mother of thirteen children.

Reese Blizzard lived in Nicholas County until he was thirteen, and thereafter made his home with his parents in Gilmer County until he reached his majority. Following that he spent some time in Calhoun County, and eventually came to Wood County. His education was the product of common schools, and the Glenville Normal School at Glenville in Gilmer County. Among the experiences by which he made a living and prepared himself for bigger things he taught school, worked on a farm, clerked in a store, was assistant in the circuit clerk's office and carried mail. He read law at Glenville with the firm of Linn & Withers, and was admitted to the bar in 1886. Beginning practice at Grantsville, he was soon recognized as a man of superior powers in the law and his practice came to extend all over Central West Virginia. Ten years after his admission to the bar he was elected circuit judge of the Sixth Judicial Circuit in 1896. The circuit was composed of the counties of Gilmer, Calhoun, Roane, Jackson and Clay. As judge of that court he made the court a purely business machine, and attracted the attention of the entire state by the rapidity with which he transacted the business of the court. He was only reversed twice by the Supreme Court during his entire term of office—a record never made by any other judge in the state. Judge Blizzard served only four years of his eight-year term, resigning midway to remove to Parkersburg and engage in the general practice of the law.

In 1901 he was appointed by President McKinley United States district attorney for the State of West Virginia. Soon after this the state was divided into two districts, and Judge Blizzard was made district attorney for the Northern District. He was reappointed by President Roosevelt, and had charge of all matters in his district under the Federal Department of Justice until 1910. For ten years he was attorney for the Street Railway Company of Parkersburg. He has served as attorney for the Little Kanawha Syndicate Properties, and in that capacity directed the condemnation proceedings for the right of way from the Pennsylvania state line to Fairmont for the Buckhannon & Northern Railroad. Judge Blizzard is president of the Parkersburg Commercial Banking & Trust Company, president of the Parkersburg Ice Company, president of the Oil & Gas Company, and has many other business interests too numerous to mention. His chief hobby outside the practice of law is farming, and his home is on a beautiful suburban place at Parkersburg. He has given considerable attention to the breeding of pure bred livestock, chiefly horses. Judge Blizzard has been directly connected with the building of five fair grounds in West Virginia, the last one being at Parkersburg, said to be the best in the state. He was president of the Parkersburg Fair Association for many years.

In politics he has always been a loyal republican. The five counties in the Sixth Judicial Circuit had a normal democratic majority of 1,372. In that circuit he was elected to the judgeship by 819 majority.

In 1904 Judge Blizzard was in the storm center of the politics of West Virginia. The late A. G. Dayton, W. P. Hubbard, George C. Sturgiss and Judge Blizzard were agreed upon as a committee to make recommendations to the Legislature for the enactment of laws after the storm produced by the report of the West Virginia Tax Commission.

As a member of this committee Judge Blizzard proposed many laws that had not been recommended by the tax commission and which were afterward enacted as laws by the Legislature. As a result, leaseholds for oil, gas and coal have been taxed ever since. The fees of state officers, and especially that of secretary of state, amounting to $60,000 per year, has been turned into the state treasury. Capitation taxes have been collected by the assessor when assessment is made. This has netted the state treasury something like $100,000 per year. In all, more money has been turned into the state treasury as a result of these recommendations than was turned in as a result of the recommendations of the State Tax Commission.

But the real character and public interest of the man was more clearly shown in the ownership and editorial management of the Parkersburg Dispatch News, a daily newspaper, than in any other phase of Judge Blizzard's life. It was in this that his independence and fearlessness were displayed in a most remarkable degree.

He was one of the earliest, if not the very earliest, progressive republicans in West Virginia. As editor of the Parkersburg Dispatch News he was a most unwavering advocate of Roosevelt's principles and policies. In some matters he was in advance of Roosevelt. While he stoutly opposed strikes as a means of settling differences between capital and labor, he even contended that capital was worse than labor for making conditions which brought about strikes. His doctrine was that if the great body of the people knew that labor would not strike it would be much more friendly to labor, and that if labor would put into politics the money it put into strikes in properly setting itself before the public that it would, with the masses favoring it, be able to enact laws which would prevent capital from being unfair. He constantly proclaimed that the insignificant number of capitalists and the small number of organized labor ought not to be permitted to disturb the great body of the people; and that the people, being disinterested and fair should make such laws as would prevent the great body of the public from being disturbed, harassed and injured by a fight between capitalists, composed by not more than five per cent of the people, and organized labor, constituting not more than fifteen per cent of the people. He urged that at the beginning of the existence of civilized man capital and labor began the settlement of their differences by the same method that two bullies employ by trying which are the stronger. It has settled nothing: it has constantly become worse. That the real solution of the problem is in eliminating the difference between capital and labor by making the great masses both capitalists and laborers. That there was no law, moral or divine, which of right would constitute one man a laborer and another a capitalist. That, without revolution or seriously disturbing business, and by a system of inheritance and income taxes, the enormously few estates of the country, composing ninety per cent of its wealth, could in twenty-five years redistribute ninety per cent of the wealth of the country; and that the money thus derived should be employed in paying all of the expenses of educating all of the children of the country; and in the construction of our permanent public roads; thus relieving the masses of the great burden of taxation; that the same authority which voted out of existence the liquor power because it was against the public interest could, with the same license, redistribute the enormous holdings of the few, because such holdings are against the public interest.

His first wife was Lillie Stump, who died in 1896. The four children by that union were Reese, Jr., Roy, Pearl and Ethel. Judge Blizzard then married Fannie Holland, and they have three children, named Paul, Pansy and Fannie. Two of his sons, Reese, Jr., and Paul, made creditable records during the World war, both seeing service abroad.

By a system of strenuous exercises and by using milk as the greater part of his diet, Judge Blizzard has rebuilt a constitution worn by work that, fifteen years ago, seriously threatened his life, and he is now a stronger and more rugged man and capable of performing much more labor than he has been since he was thirty years of age.

GEORGE M. FORD, state superintendent of free schools, was born at Kasson, Barbour County, West Virginia, January 7, 1871. He attended the rural schools, the Fairmont State Normal School and the West Virginia University, graduating from the latter institution in 1892 with the degree of A. B., and in 1896 with the degree of LL. B. Since his graduation he has practiced law at Princeton, Mercer County, and at Welch, McDowell County, and has held school positions as follows: Principal of Terra Alta Public Schools, principal of Grafton High School, principal of Benwood graded and high schools, principal of the Concord State Normal School, head of the department of economics and American history, Marshall College; superintendent of Bluefield schools, including the rural schools of Beaver Pond District, Mercer County; superintendent of Brown's Creek School District, McDowell County; teacher in the State Normal School at Glenville and superintendent of Dunbar Schools, Dunbar, West Virginia.

On December 22, 1897, he married Miss Annie L. Linn, of Keyser, Mineral County. She was born at Frostburg, Allegheny County, Maryland, both of her parents being natives of Scotland. The four children of their marriage are: Margaret Buchanan, Jomima Elizabeth, Annie Laurie Linn and Frederick Wayne.

He comes from a family that has taken an active part with combatant forces in every military conflict waged in this country, including the French and Indian Wars. He is a son of Frederick G. W. and Jomima Elizabeth (Hebb) Ford. His father was born near Petersburg, Virginia, now in Grant County, West Virginia, and his mother, in Barbour County, West Virginia. His father was a soldier of the Union during the Civil war. He served with Company F, Fifteenth West Virginia Volunteer Infantry, as second lieutenant, first lieutenant and as captain.

George M. Ford began his military career May 12, 1911, when he was commissioned captain in the Second Infantry, West Virginia National Guard. He organized that company and had command of it during the first encampment held at Kanawha City, as a part of the Third Battalion. During that encampment he earned his reputation as an expert rifleman, and has made a high rank in every consecutive practice since then. In July, 1912, the Third Battalion was called to Paint Creek in Kanawha County, for service in the momentous strike troubles that had begun a short time before. He commanded his company in the Cabin Creek mining district during this strike.

On December 1, 1914, he received a commission as major in the Adjutant General's Department, but resigned June 19, 1916, to again accept a captaincy in the Second Infantry, West Virginia National Guard, answering the call of the President for Mexican border service. He was assigned to the command of Company M, and was stationed at Camp Wilson, San Antonio, from September, 1916, until he was mustered out of this service March 24, 1917, at Huntington. On April 3, 1917, he answered the call of the President for World war service. The designation of his regiment was changed to the One Hundred and Fiftieth U. S. Infantry and attached to the Thirty-eighth Division. His company was stationed at Marytown on the Norfolk and Western Railway until September, 1917, and in that month his regiment was mobilized with the Thirty-eighth Division at Camp Shelby, Mississippi, remaining there in training during the winter and following spring. In September, 1918, Captain Ford took command of the Third Battalion of the One Hundred and Fiftieth Infantry and was transferred to France, going by way of Camp Mills, New York, to Liverpool and Southampton, landing at La Havre October 23, 1918. On November 3rd the infantry regiments of the Thirty-eighth Division were broken up and made replacement troops, and he was relieved of the command of his battalion and ordered to report to the Ninetieth Division, then in service on the front line in the Argonne. He reported at the village of Sassey sur Meuse and was assigned to the Three Hundred and Fifty-fifth Infantry and immediately reported to Col. Edmund M. O'Leary at Mouzey, and was assigned to the command of B Company, then lying at LaBlanc Fontaine, one-half kilometer south of Stenay. On the night of November 9th, while under bombardment, Captain Ford was gassed at Verdun. Following the armistice he went with the Army of Occupation. His division headquarters were at Berncastelle on the Moselle River, regiment headquarters at Daun. In January, 1919, he was transferred to the Thirty-seventh Division, then under orders for return to the United States, and with this division he sailed from Brest the latter part of March, 1919, landing at Newport News April 2, 1919. He was honorably discharged from the United States Army at Camp Lee, Virginia, April 25, 1919, and two days later resumed work in the classroom as teacher in the State Normal School at Glenville.

Captain Ford is affiliated with the Masonic Order, the Modern Woodmen of America and the Sigma Chi fraternity.

In the primary election of May, 1920, he was chosen as the republican candidate for state superintendent of free schools. He was successful in the November election and entered upon the discharge of his duties, as state superintendent of free schools, on March 4, 1921.

At the annual meeting of the State Educational Association which convened in Huntington November 3rd to 5th, 1921, Superintendent Ford was elected president of the association, without opposition, for the ensuing year.

CAPT. SIMON C. BOORD. A distinctly modern profession, at the same time an indispensable asset to commercial organizations and individual business men, is that of the certified public accountant. One of the best known in this profession in West Virginia is Capt. Simon C. Boord, of Fairmont, who is an especially well known expert on all phases of cost accounting and the coal and lumber industries.

Captain Boord was born at Farmington, Marion County, West Virginia, February 8, 1883, son of William and Alcinda (Snoderly) Boord. His parents were also born in Marion County, each representing pioneer families in this section of the state. The mother now lives at Watson, West Virginia, where the father died in June, 1920.

Captain Boord spent his early life on a farm, but at the age of nine years, in 1892, his parents moved to Watson, where his father was in the service of the Gaston Gas Coal Company, now the Consolidation Coal Company.

Captain Boord attended public schools at Watson, the Fairmont State Normal School, and also began his working career with the Gaston Gas Coal Company at Watson. Later he was employed by the Fairmont Coal Company at Fairmont, then by the Federal Coal & Coke Company at Grant Town, West Virginia, and subsequently with the United States Coal & Coke Company (a subsidiary of the United States Steel Corporation) at Gary, West Virginia. Later he was employed as auditor for the Wisconsin Steel Company's coal and coke operations at Benham, Kentucky.

Captain Boord received most of his training in public accountancy from the Walton School of Commerce, Chicago, Illinois. In 1915 he located at Fairmont, and has since, with the exception of a portion of the war period, carried on an extensive practice as a public accountant. In 1917 he passed the C. P. A. examination and was given a license to practice as a certified public accountant. He has handled a large amount of difficult accounting problems for glass, coal and lumber corporations in this state.

In April, 1918, Captain Boord entered the government service as a civilian in the cost accounting branch of the Construction Division of the army, with headquarters at Washington. He had charge of all traveling cost accountants in that division, and was a member of the committee appointed by Chief of Division to revise and rewrite the Cost Accounting Manual. November 7, 1918, he was commissioned captain in the Quartermaster Corps and assigned to the Organization and Method Section of the administrative branch of the Construction Division, in which he continued until his discharge on December 26, 1918, after which he resumed his professional work at Fairmont.

In a professional way Captain Boord represented the Northern West Virginia coal operators in their hearing before the Federal Trade Commission on their petition for an increase in the selling price of their coal. He also represented the Northern West Virginia operators in their hearing before the Bituminous Coal Commission appointed by President Wilson. Captain Boord is a member of the National Association of Cost Accountants, and is a past president of the Association of Certified Public Accountants of West Virginia. He served three years as a member of the National Guard of this state, and is now a reserve captain in the Quartermaster Corps. He is a member of the American Legion, West Virginia Department. Captain Boord is affiliated with Fields Lodge No. 832, A. F. and A. M., at Poor Fork, Kentucky, is a member of the Kentucky Consistory of the Scottish Rite and Kosair Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Louisville.

FRANK BUTLER TROTTER, A. B., A. M. During an extended period Frank Butler Trotter has been identified with the University of West Virginia at Morgantown, of which he has been president since 1916. In this time he has been known and highly regarded not only for his learning, skill, executive ability and assiduity as an educator, but also for the urbanity of his manners, his literary taste and talent, and as a brilliant member of local social circles. It is the judgment of his co-laborers in the field of education in the retrospect of what he has accomplished that he has impressed himself upon the life and institutions of the community in a manner alike creditable to himself and productive of lasting benefit to the people of the state.

President Trotter was born in Washington County, Ohio, February 27, 1863, a son of James and Elizabeth (Stock) Trotter. His paternal grandfather, Robert Trotter, a native of Ireland, immigrated to the United States in 1821 and settled first in the State of New York. Subsequently he went to Crawford County, Pennsylvania, and later removed to Ohio, locating first in Columbiana County and removing thence to Washington County, where he spent the remainder of his life. James Trotter, father of Doctor Trotter, was born in Crawford County, Pennsylvania, March 14, 1827, and died at Aurora, West Virginia, May 26, 1914. He was but a boy when his parents removed from Pennsylvania to Ohio. The mother of Doctor Trotter was born in Columbiana County, Ohio, the daughter of Henry and Minerva Stock, who were of German descent.

Frank Butler Trotter was a boy of thirteen years when his parents removed to West Virginia. His early education was acquired in the common and private schools of Preston County, West Virginia, and he began teaching in the public schools of that county when he was in his twentieth year. He received his Bachelor of Arts and Master of Arts degrees from Roanoke College, Virginia, and did graduate work at Harvard. After teaching in public and private schools for a period of six years he became professor of Latin and modern languages at Wesleyan College, Buckhannon. He was first professor of Latin at West Virginia University, then dean of the College of Arts and Sciences, and from 1914 to 1916, acting president. He was elected president in 1916 and has occupied that position to the present.

While the strenuous times of the World war occurred during Doctor Trotter's administration, causing unsettled conditions generally, the university has grown in every respect, not only in the student enrollment, faculty membership and buildings, but also in additions to the curriculum, athletics and student activities. He is now rounding out his seventh year of service to the state. Within that time appropriations have increased from $360,000 in 1914 to nearly $3,000,000 in 1921. The enrollment has increased from 796 in 1915 to 2,248 in 1921, and the faculty has been enlarged from 122 in 1916 to 174 in 1921. Four new buildings have been added to the institution and three more are assured at this time. The university has become widely known throughout the state and greatly popularized among the people. The highest educational standards have been maintained and an unflagging responsibility assumed for safeguarding the character and inculcating the right ideals of the students.

Doctor Trotter has succeeded in connecting the university with the state as a whole and has extended the advantages of education to every citizen in even the most remote communities. This has been accomplished mainly through the high school, extension departments, teachers' institutes and the students themselves. Doctor Trotter has an extensive acquaintance throughout the state and a broad knowledge of schools and school conditions. This knowledge was acquired partly through his position at Buckhannon and partly through his former connection with the university as a member of the committee on classification and grades. As a guardian of the people's treasury, Doctor Trotter has shown remarkable ability to economize and to get full, faithful service out of his staff. Putting himself in the parents' place, he has assumed the responsibility of safeguarding the character of each and every student enrolled on the books of the institution. He has insisted upon the highest standards of scholarship and has demanded the best conditions of morality. A leading and active member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, Doctor Trotter was a delegate to the General Conference of that denomination during the years 1900, 1912 and 1916. He is a member of the Phi Beta Kappa and Phi Gamma Delta fraternities. Doctor Trotter, though a thorough educator, is much more than a professional drudge. His comprehensive education, his wide acquaintance with literature and his social qualities have made him a favorite in society. He is an entertaining speaker, with a rich flow of humor, which makes him much sought for on occasions of public hospitality.

On August 22, 1895, Doctor Trotter was united in marriage with Miss Lillian List Steele.

FREDERICK ERNEST DELBRIDGE is secretary of the various Masonic bodies in the City of Clarksburg, Harrison County, with official headquarters in the local Masonic Temple. He was born at Bristol, England, August 2, 1868, and is a son of William and Ann (Luke) Delbridge, who came to the United States when he was a child of three years and who established their home at Weston, Lewis County, West Virginia, whence they later removed to Shinnston, Harrison County. The son Frederick E. received his youthful education in the public schools of Shinnston, and as a youth he worked three years as an assistant to his father, a stonecutter by trade and vocation. He then turned his attention to learning telegraphy, and as a skilled telegraph operator he was employed several years in the Clarksburg office of the Western Union Telegraph Company. He resigned this post to accept his present position as secretary of the various Masonic organizations in Clarksburg. The fine Masonic Temple in which he maintains his office was erected in 1913 by the Clarksburg Masonic Building Company, a corporate organization formed by local members of the Masonic fraternity. Mr. Delbridge has shown marked ability in handling the manifold details of his administrative work, which involves his service as secretary of the following named organizations: Hermon Lodge No. 6, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, which was chartered in 1867 under the dispensation of the Grand Lodge of West Virginia, but the original Virginia charter of which was obtained in 1814, its membership in 1921 being 636; Clarksburg Lodge No. 155, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, which received its charter in 1919 and which now has a membership of 200; Adoniram Chapter No. 11, Royal Arch Masons, with West Virginia charter granted in 1873, but with original charter by the Grand Chapter of Virginia under date of December 15, 1871, its membership in 1921 being 574; Clarksburg Commandery No. 13, Knights Templars, which was chartered May 10, 1900, and which recorded in 1921 a membership of 465. In the local jurisdiction are also two Scottish Rite bodies that receive similar secretarial service on the part of Mr. Delbridge, these being Mizpah Lodge of Perfection No. 5, chartered October 21, 1913, and having in 1921 an enrollment of 1,087 members; and Clarksburg Chapter No. 5, Knights of the Rose Croix, which, after working two years, received its charter October 20, 1921, its membership being 736. In addition to the local Masonic Club, of which Mr. Delbridge likewise is secretary, his individual affiliations run the full gamut of both the York and Scottish Rites, in the latter of which he has received the thirty-second degree, besides being a member of Nemesis Temple of the Mystic Shrine in the City of Parkersburg. He has been a close student of the history and teachings of the time-honored fraternity and finds great satisfaction in his various Masonic affiliations, as well as his administrative service. He and his wife hold membership in the Presbyterian Church in their home city and are popular in the representative social circles of the community.

In 1909 Mr. Delbridge wedded Miss Bessie M. Shuttleworth, a member of one of the oldest and best known families of Harrison County, which has been her home from the time of her birth.

HON. EDWIN MAXWELL. One of West Virginia's most gifted native sons was the late Hon. Edwin Maxwell, who as lawyer, judge and legislator impressed his abilities on the early state government and a wide range of important affairs for a period of half a century. His home for many years was at Clarksburg, a community that cherishes his memory and in which his son Haymond has attained most marked distinction as a lawyer and judge.

Edwin Maxwell was born at Weston, Lewis County, July 16, 1825, son of Levi and Mary (Haymond) Maxwell. His father was a successful farmer of Lewis County. His mother was a daughter of Colonel John Haymond, of West Virginia. Edwin Maxwell was the oldest of four children, the others being Rufus, John and Mary Jane.

While a youth on his father's farm his associations with nature and practical work gave him lessons invaluable in later years. From an early age he showed an independence and initiative that enabled him to rise above circumstances of a very modest education and achieve his own opportunities for greatness. He never had the advantages of a college training, but the love of books and knowledge was innate. With exceptional natural qualifications for the law he began to study under his uncle, Lewis Maxwell, and in 1848, at the age of twenty-three, was admitted to the bar. Five years later, in 1852, he located at West Union in Doddridge County, and subsequently served that county two terms as prosecuting attorney. At the beginning of the Civil war he espoused the Union cause, and in 1863 was elected on the Union ticket to the first State Senate of West Virginia. He was one of the very resourceful and able leaders in that party until after the close of the war. In 1866 Governor Boreman appointed him attorney-general of the state. In the fall of 1866 he was elected judge of the Supreme Court of Appeals, and he was with this court until December 31, 1872, and in that time many cases of great importance involving the interpretation of the early statutes of the state came before him for decision. In 1880 Judge Maxwell was republican candidate for judge of the Supreme Court of Appeals, and in 1884 was candidate of the republican and greenback parties for governor. In that campaign he was referred to as "OLD HONESTY." In 1888 he was elected to the State Senate and in 1892 to the House of Delegates. His last political honor came in 1902, when he was in his seventy-eighth year. He was elected a member of the House of Delegates, and while at his post of duty at Charleston he contracted pneumonia and died February 5, 1903. A period of forty years had intervened from his first service in the Legislature of West Virginia and his last legislative service. He imparted his wisdom in legislative ability to the making of some of the soundest laws of the state. For fifty-four years he ranked as one of the foremost lawyers of the state, and his associates have repeatedly testified to his comprehensive knowledge of the law, and, above all, to the dignity and depth of his character.

In 1872 Edwin Maxwell married Loretta Shuttleworth, who died in 1905. Her father, Colonel John Shuttleworth, was one of the prominent citizens of West Virginia. The two sons of Edwin Maxwell and wife were Edwin Maxwell, Jr., and Haymond Maxwell.

Judge Haymond Maxwell, son of Edwin and Loretta (Shuttleworth) Maxwell, had the prestige of his father as an example, and since completing a liberal education has rapidly achieved honors both in his practice as a lawyer and on the bench. He was born at Clarksburg, October 24, 1879, was educated in the public schools, completed his literary education in West Virginia University in 1900, and received his law degree from the same source in 1901. He immediately began practice at Clarksburg, and in 1905 was elected on the republican ticket to the House of Delegates. May 7, 1909, eight years after he entered practice, he was appointed judge of the Criminal Court of Harrison County, serving until December 31, 1912. In 1912 he was nominated and elected judge of the Circuit Court for the district comprising Harrison and Lewis counties, and at the close of his first term of eight years he was reelected, in 1920.

Judge Maxwell in 1905 married Miss Carrie Virginia Maxwell, daughter of Porter and Columbia (Post) Maxwell, of Harrison County. Their five children are: Edwin, Haymond, Jr., Carrie Virginia, Emily Frances and Porter Wilson Maxwell.

SMITH BLAIR has devoted himself with singular fidelity and efficiency to his duties as cashier of the Bank of Jacksonburg for over fifteen years. This is one of the prosperous banking institutions of Wetzel County. It was organized in 1903, being opened for business January 1, 1904, under a state charter. This bank has a capital of twenty-five thousand dollars, surplus and profits of fifteen thousand dollars and average deposits of two hundred and twenty-five thousand dollars. The president is L. E. Lantz. The Board of Directors comprise L. E. Lantz, S. J. Kilcoyne, of Mobley, W. R. McIntyre and S. J. McIntyre, of Alvy, A. L. Chambers, G. B. Meredith and W. T. Price, of Smithfield, A. G. Higginbotham, of New Martinsville, F. M. Willey and John M. Lowe, of Jacksonburg, and W. B. Lowe, of Coburn.

Smith Blair, the cashier, was born at West Union in Doddridge County October 4, 1882. His father, Jackson V. Blair, is one of the prominent lawyers of long standing at West Union. He was born in Harrison County, West Virginia, in 1853, and as a young man removed to Doddridge County, where he taught school and married. In 1872 he began the study of law at West Union under Judge Stuart, was admitted to the bar, and has practiced with great success for over forty years. He once made the race for Congress against Blackburn B. Dovener as a democrat. He is an active member of the Baptist Church and a thirty-second degree Scottish Rite Mason and a member of Osiris Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Wheeling. He was judge advocate on Governor Fleming's staff. Jackson V. Blair married Miss Ella M. Smith, who was born at Smithton in Doddridge County in 1860. She was the mother of eight children: Julia, wife of P. M. Ireland, an attorney of the West Union bar; Smith; William Eldridge, of Detroit, Michigan; Nan Morgan, wife of George C. Crouse, of West Union, who has charge of the leasing department in West Virginia for the Hope Natural Gas Company; Jackson V., Jr., a revenue officer in the income tax department at Huntington, West Virginia; George Neely, in the bonding department of Le Fever & Company, stock and bond brokers at Akron, Ohio; Francis K., employed by the Portland Atlas Cement Association at Parkersburg; and Marion, a high school student at West Union.

Smith Blair was educated in the public schools of West Union, in Bethel Military Academy at Warrenton, Virginia, and finished his preparatory course in West Virginia University at Morgantown. He left Morgantown in 1901, and during 1902 kept up some special studies in the high school at West Union. In the same year he became clerk in a store at Pine Grove, and subsequently entered the Bank of Pine Grove as teller. With several years of banking experience he was chosen cashier of the Bank of Jacksonburg in 1905, and has held that post continuously and almost throughout the existence of the institution.

As a banker he was able to do much work to assist the Government at the time of the war, particularly in the sale of Liberty Bonds. He is a democrat, a member of West Union Lodge No. 56, A. F. and A. M., has attained thirty-two degrees in the Scottish Rite in West Virginia Consistory No. 1 at Wheeling, and is a member of Osiris Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Wheeling.

At Leesburg, Virginia, in 1908, Mr. Blair married Miss May Caldwell Powell, daughter of William L. and Fannie (Caldwell) Powell, her mother still living at Leesburg. Her father was a farmer there. Mrs. Blair is a graduate of Marshall Seminary of Winchester, Virginia. They have two children: Smith, Jr., born July 3, 1913, and William Powell, born February 14, 1915.

HON. SAMUEL B. MONTGOMERY, of Kingwood, grand keeper of records and seals of the Knights of Pythias of West Virginia, has for years represented the voice and leadership of liberalism and progressivism in West Virginia. It is doubtful if there is a better known man in the state, taking all classes of population into consideration.

The experiences of his own life admirably qualified him for the breadth of sympathy and knowledge of humanity which are among his prominent characteristics. A native West Virginian, he was born in Barber County May 15, 1876, and two years later his parents established their home at Independence in Preston County. His people were poor but of very sturdy mountaineer stock. Four generations of the Montgomerys have lived among the hills of West Virginia. The remote ancestor of this family was Rogers de Montgomerie, a Norseman who accompanied the army of William the Conqueror to England in the eleventh century. A subsequent member of the family settled in Ireland and was made an esquire and given a grant of land. Two of Rogers de Montgomerie's descendants arrived at the port of Philadelphia in 1729, one of them settling at Baltimore, and from him sprang the West Virginia branch of the family.

The father of Senator Montgomery was Adam Montgomery, who with his brother Michael and cousins John, Samuel and Asberry joined the Seventh West Virginia Infantry at the time of the Civil war. John was captain of Company H, and this company took part in the engagements at Antietam, Fredericksburg, Chancellorsville, Gettysburg and the Wilderness and in others of less importance, and they helped make the regiment famous as the Fighting Seventh. At Antietam, Asberry was killed and Adam Montgomery was wounded so badly that he was discharged. The effects of his war service were so severe that he was hardly able to resume the duties and burdens of civilian life afterward, and he had been a partial invalid for years when he died May 16, 1889, at the age of forty-four. On December 11, 1863, Adam Montgomery married Susan Digman, who was descended from sturdy mountain stock of strong character, and she was a fitting helpmate for such an upright man as her husband. They became the parents of eleven children: John, Sarah, Sophronia, Nancy, Mary, Samuel B., Berta, William, and three that died in infancy.

This brief record of the family indicates some of the circumstances that surrounded the childhood and youth of Samuel B. Montgomery. At Newburg he attended common schools and select schools, but at the age of eleven was earning money selling papers, as delivery boy, and at other forms of common labor. When he was thirteen his father died, and thereafter his responsibilities were increased as the mainstay of his widowed mother and the younger children of the household. This enforced daily grind deprived him of certain other advantages, but it also developed in him a devotion to duty to the fatherless and the helpless and taught him the principles of loyalty to those who toil, and to this class of citizenship he has been insistent in his sympathy and aid during his mature manhood. He gave up all thought of further education when his father died, and six days of labor in a week was hardly long enough to provide the necessities for his mother's household of younger children. With his older brother he was soon working in the yards of the Newburg Orrel Coal & Coke Company, beginning as coke drawer, then as day laborer on tipples, later as boss of a gang of Italians, and also mule driver with the Monongah Coal & Coke Company, now the Consolidation Coal Company. In these occupations he acquired his first impressions of the hardships of the miners for whom he was destined to spend his after life in an effort to improve, and about that time he joined his first labor union, the United Mine Workers of America.

The year following his acceptance into this union he went into the service, in 1896, of the Baltimore & Ohio Railway as a brakeman on the Parkersburg Branch and later on the Cumberland Division. Sickness caused him to leave the railroad service, and his next work was as an attendant at the Second Hospital for the Insane at Spencer, where he subsequently became night watchman.

When only twenty years of age he commenced his political career. He grew up in a republican atmosphere, though his father had been a Union democrat. He cast his first presidential vote for William McKinley, and in 1896 he made his first political speech for Major McKinley. This speech was delivered at Evansville in his home county, and it made such a good impression that the local management put him on its program as a speaker throughout the rest of the campaign. In 1898 he supported as a delegate in the Roane County Republican Convention the candidacy of Governor Atkinson for the United States Senate. That fall he campaigned over the county in behalf of Gen. Romeo H. Freer and the rest of the republican ticket. Returning to Preston County in 1899, he located at Tunnelton and was on the republican delegation from the county the next year to the state convention. He spoke in Lewis, Taylor and other counties that fall, and was himself elected to the office of justice of the peace for the Kingwood District. This was his first political office. In 1902 he was elected mayor of Tunnelton, serving during 1903, and was again elected in 1908, having in the meantime been a member of the town council in 1905-06. Mr. Montgomery resigned as justice of the peace in 1903, when President Roosevelt appointed him postmaster of Tunnelton.

In the state campaign of 1904 he was the successful nominee of his party for state senator from the Fourteenth District, composed of Tucker, Preston, Mineral, Grant and Hardy counties. Though opposed by the county, state and federal leadership he was elected by a large majority, exceeding that of the national ticket.

As a member of the Senate Mr. Montgomery acquitted himself well, and his efforts helped in the enactment of laws which made the state richer and its government better. He voted in the Senate for the 2 cent fare law, the eight hour telegraphers' bill, and for the bill submitting the prohibition amendment to the people; was a fearless exponent of all reform and labor measures. The well-known Montgomery statutory Attorney Bill, credited to his authorship, diverted the fees of foreign corporations from the office of the secretary of state to the state treasurer, saving not less than $20,000 a year to the state. He fathered the Corrupt Practices in Elections Act and fought it to victory over the protests of its opponents. He framed and succeeded in having a bill passed fixing a penalty for trespassing and cutting timber on lands without the owner's consent, a measure opposed by the railroads and other corporations. Besides supporting the prohibition amendment measure he pushed through the Senate, with the aid of the Protestant Ministerial Association, the bill known as the Sunday Closing Act, the most drastic anti-liquor legislation yet passed, and he voted for an amendment to the license law prohibiting the shipment of liquor from wet into dry counties. He raised his voice in great earnestness against the guard system around which had grown up the coal police, warning the Senate that a grave error was being committed and that dire results would follow—a prediction verified four years later when the miners revolted against the execution of the law, with great consequent loss of life, entailing the establishment of martial law and a heavy expense required before peace was restored. Senator Montgomery aided in the passage of a law against the sale of narcotic drugs, a law to raise the salaries of school teachers, and another bill making it an offense to work minors of both sexes under the age of fourteen years in mines and factories during the free school term. He voted for the state wide primary election law, and was the only republican in the body who cast a ballot for the initiative, referendum and recall. In 1905 and again in 1907 he led the fight in the Senate for a production tax on oil and gas, and was one of two members of his party who appealed to the Senate in those years to submit an amendment to the State Constitution granting the franchise to women. While in the Senate Mr. Montgomery served on the committees of mines and mining, and labor, and was embodied to preside over the Senate during the regular session of 1907 and the special session of 1908.

His record in the Senate was such as to cause him to be singled out by the corporations for defeat in the next campaign. Nevertheless he was a delegate to the Republican State Convention and helped write the party platform. In December following President Roosevelt appointed him a special agent in the Department of Commerce and Labor. He resigned to study law and labor problems in the University of West Virginia, and began practice at Kingwood. In 1912 he was chosen a delegate at large to the Republican National Convention in Chicago. He had declared himself for Colonel Roosevelt's nomination in 1910, and as the West Virginia member of the Platform Committee with Governor Herbert Hadley of Missouri, George A. Knight of California, and William Draper Lewis of Pennsylvania he contested with the reactionaries for control of the committee and attempted to have adopted the progressive program that was subsequently written into the progressive party platform. He was elected chairman of the Republican Executive Committee of Preston County that summer, but championed the Roosevelt and progressive party both with tongue and pen throughout the following campaign.

In October, 1912, he was elected permanent chairman of the Citizens' Organization of West Virginia, a body delegated with the duty of making a sociological survey in line with a proposal in the House of Delegates following the coal miners' strike on Paint and Cabin Creeks. As chairman Mr. Montgomery went before the people of the state in the election that fall and declared for the abolishment of the mine guard system, for the abolishment of child labor, for a workmen's compensation law, for legislation prohibiting water power monopoly, for a state pension for widowed mothers in destitution, for the initiative, referendum and recall and for the legal right of miners to belong to a union. Proposed amendments to the Constitution providing for the establishment of the minimum wage, the initiative, referendum and recall, and state pension for widows were defeated by a close vote. The legal right of a miner to belong to a union was recognized by the state government, and a law greatly restricting the granting of water power privileges was enacted.

While engaged in the practice of law at Kingwood, Mr. Montgomery was appointed state commissioner of labor for West Virginia by Governor Henry D. Hatfield, and served through the administration of Governor Cornwall, his term ending February 28, 1921. As labor commissioner he succeeded J. H. Nightingale. Under his department came the inspection of factories and the enforcement of the Child Labor Law, and he was also ex-officio commissioner of weights and measures. During the World war he had additional duties as director of the U. S. Public Service Reserve, which had the mobilization and distribution of labor employed on war contracts. He had the decision in declaring what were essential industries for the successful prosecution of the war, and in conjunction with the War Labor Board the closing down of plants deemed unnecessary in war times. He was frequently called to Washington, and as the representative of West Virginia in Labor Councils was asked to consultations at the White House and the Department of Labor, and every labor conference called by the President included an invitation to Mr. Montgomery. He also acted as representative of the secretary of war and navy in inspecting all workshops where war contracts were let as to hours of employment and general health of employees. During the war the enforcement of the Federal Child Labor Law was intrusted to the commissioner, and his permits were accepted by the Child Labor Bureau without question.

His range of duties went greatly beyond these formal responsibilities. He took an active part in the speeding up program, and because of his ability as a public speaker and knowledge of labor economics and his influence among the crafts he was one of the men most in demand at Liberty Loan drives and mass meetings to increase production, and in conferences between employer and employe to bring about team work in cooperation. During his four years as commissioner with special reference to the war period there was not a serious industrial disturbance, and this in no small measure was the result of his tact, diplomacy and stand for a square deal.

In 1920 Mr. Montgomery made the race for governor of West Virginia. He was a candidate in the primaries of the republican party, and later he campaigned independently, his nomination receiving the endorsement of the non-partisan league.

The magnetism of Senator Montgomery's personality is at once apparent. On the speaker's platform he radiates the sincerity of his conviction, and is known throughout the state as a brilliant political and fraternal speaker. His address on West Virginia and its future before the West Virginia Editorial Association, his discourse on the "writ of injunction and the right of free speech" before the State Federation of Labor, and his lecture on "John Wesley" are perhaps the best known among his formal literary and oratorical efforts.

For many years Mr. Montgomery has taken a prominent part in fraternal work. He joined the Knights of Pythias November 26, 1901, as a charter member of McKinley Lodge at Tunnelton, and began a rapid advancement as an honor man in the order. He reached the summit of Pythian distinction at Elkins when in September, 1910, he was installed as grand chancellor. His splendid efforts in that office were rewarded by his selection as grand keeper of records and seals at the Wheeling meeting on August 18, 1911. When he took over the work of this office in 1911 there were 173 lodges in the state, with a membership of 13,505. In the fall of 1921 West Virginia had 268 lodges, with a total enrollment of 40,000. Mr. Montgomery is a member of Shiraz Temple No. 29, D. O. K. K. As a Pythian orator he is in great demand all over the Supreme Domain. Among his ablest Pythian efforts, which he has been called on to repeat on many occasions, was his Fraternal Memorial address delivered in the Methodist Episcopal Church at Fairmont, West Virginia. Sunday, June 21, 1914, under the auspices of Marion Lodge, Knights of Pythias, he delivered the oratorical address, April 26, 1919, in the State Armory, Charleston, West Virginia, commemorating the 100th anniversary of American Odd Fellowship and the 100th anniversary of Washington Lodge No. 1, I. O. O. F., of Baltimore, Maryland, which was established April 26, 1819, and which was the beginning of American Odd Fellowship. He is affiliated with Kingwood Lodge No. 107, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, Woodmen of the World, Invincible Council No. 147, Junior Order United American Mechanics at Tunnelton, the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks No. 308, Grafton, West Virginia, and is a member of Kanawha Lodge No. 1444, Loyal Order of Moose, Charleston, West Virginia. He has served three terms as vice president of the Laymen's Association of the West Virginia Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church of the Oakland District. He is a member of the Beta Theta Pi Chapter of West Virginia University, and belongs to the American Academy of Social and Political Science of Philadelphia, the Southern Sociological Congress of Nashville, the National Conservation Congress, the National Geographic Society of Washington and the National Popular Government League.

On February 29, 1896, Senator Montgomery married Miss Grace K. Orr, daughter of the later Maj. and Mrs. U. N. Orr. Mr. and Mrs. Montgomery have one son, William Newton, born July 8, 1900. On his eighteenth birthday he enlisted in the marines, joining the Eighteenth Company, Fifth Regiment of the Second Division, and three months later going to France. He served near enough the front to hear the big guns of the contending armies, and after the armistice he went with his command into Germany and along the Rhine, stationed near Coblenz and Rodenbach. After eight months of duty he was honorably discharged and given an excellent service medal without a demerit. He is now a sophomore in West Virginia University at Morgantown. The only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Montgomery is Susan, a graduate of Kingwood High School, also a graduate of Dean Academy at Franklin, Massachusetts, and now a student in West Virginia University.

A. C. BLAIR, M. D. Member of one of the old and prominent families of Ritchie County, son of a distinguished lawyer, A. C. Blair early in his career chose the medical profession as his calling and for thirty years has practiced with notable success in the county, his home being at Harrisville.

Doctor Blair was born July 27, 1863, son of R. S. and Rachel (Core) Blair. His father was born near Parkersburg, West Virginia, in Wood County, February 21, 1835, son of David and Elizabeth (Beeson) Blair. David Blair was born in Blair County, Pennsylvania, in 1794, and was an early settler in Wood County, West Virginia. In 1817 he married Elizabeth Beeson, of a prominent family of Uniontown, Pennsylvania. David Blair was cashier of the First State Bank of Parkersburg. He died at Portsmouth, Ohio, of cholera, in April, 1835. The late Robert S. Blair was left an orphan when about four weeks old, was reared by his aunt, Ann Gardener, acquired a common school education, was apprenticed to learn the saddler's trade and subsequently received an appointment to the Virginia Military Institute, from which he graduated. On returning to Harrisville he studied law in the office of Cyrus Hall, and for a long period of years he was known as one of the ablest lawyers of the Ritchie County bar, in which he is succeeded by his son, R. S. Blair, Jr. The father served as prosecuting attorney of Ritchie County, being elected on the democratic ticket. He was an active member of the Methodist Church. His wife, Rachel Core, was born in Tyler County, West Virginia, August 29, 1842. They had four children: Dr. A. C. Blair; Robert S., Jr.; Miss Elizabeth C.; and Harry C., who saw service in the World's war and is now practicing medicine at Reeder, Wetzel County.

Dr. A. C. Blair grew up at Harrisville and attended school there and the Bethel Military Academy in Virginia. After returning home he took up the study of medicine, and in 1891 graduated M. D. from the College of Physicians and Surgeons at Baltimore. Doctor Blair has devoted thirty years to the work of his profession and has every reason to be satisfied with his reputation as a professional man and as a quiet and influential citizen of Harrisville.

December 21, 1903, Doctor Blair married Miss Vernie E. Curtis. They have four children: Corena R., born October 30, 1904, a student in high school; Robert J., born November 4, 1906; Lulu M., born April 9, 1908; and Nannie A., born August 28, 1910. The family are members of the Methodist Church and Doctor Blair is a democrat. He owns a fine home on Main Street in Harrisville and also has a farm of ninety-four acres.

Mrs. Blair was born in Randolph County, West Virginia, April 29, 1880, daughter of Milton J. Curtis, who was born in Randolph County October 22, 1838. Her mother was Mary Williams, who was born in Highland County, Virginia, September 30, 1843, daughter of Mary (Rowe) Williams. Thomas Curtis, father of Milton J., was born in Baltimore, Maryland, and was an early settler in Randolph County, West Virginia, where he became a merchant.

ROBERT S. BLAIR. The name Blair has been one of the most prominent in the bar of Ritchie County for over half a century. The present legal representative of the name, Robert S. Blair, Jr., has practiced there for thirty years or more, and has maintained the high reputation accorded to his honored father.

Mr. Blair was born in Harrisville November 19, 1865, son of R. S. and Rachel C. (Core) Blair. His mother was a daughter of George A. Core. R. S. Blair, Sr., was born at Parkersburg February 24, 1835, son of David and Elizabeth (Beeson) Blair. David Blair's father came from Ireland. Elizabeth Beeson was a daughter of Jacob Beeson and a granddaughter of the pioneer settler at Beesontown, now Uniontown, Pennsylvania. R. S. Blair, Sr., was left an orphan at the age of three weeks, and was reared by his grandmother Beeson and his aunt, Ann Gardener. At the age of twelve he was apprenticed to learn the saddler's trade, and subsequently General Jackson secured him an appointment to the Virginia Military Institute, where he remained four years. He graduated under Stonewall Jackson. After leaving there he came to Harrisville, clerked in a store, and while in the office of Judge Cyrus Hall studied law and was admitted to the bar. For many years thereafter he had an extensive practice in all the State, Federal and other courts. He died January 21, 1892. He was a democrat all his life. R. S. Blair, Sr., and wife had four children: Dr. A. C. Blair, born July 27, 1863, in practice at Ellenboro, Ritchie County; Robert S., Jr., born November 19, 1865; Catherine E., born November 21, 1867; and Dr. H. C. Blair, born June 22, 1886, now at Reeder, West Virginia.

Robert S. Blair, Jr., grew up at Harrisville, attended the public schools there, Bethel Military Academy in Virginia, the University of West Virginia, and graduated in law from the University of Virginia and was admitted to the bar at Charlottesville. For a time he was with the legal department of the Crescent Iron Works of Virginia, and then joined his father as a partner about six months before his father's death. During the past thirty years Mr. Blair has carried on an extensive practice in all the courts of his section of the state. He has satisfied his ambitions within the strict limits of his profession, but has also at different times been active in the democratic party and in 1916 was the democratic nominee for the State Senate, being defeated by only thirty-one votes in a district normally republican by 1,500.

In December, 1896, Mr. Blair married Mary E. Wolfe. They have one daughter, Mary R., born January 22, 1916.

DANIEL CARSON LOUCHERY, M. D. To the credit of Dr. Daniel Carson Louchery of Clarksburg is a record of forty-two years of active practice as a physician and surgeon, and an earlier record of a prominent educator.

Doctor Louchery and Doctor Fleming Howell, now of Oakland, Maryland, are the only survivors of the original organizers of the Harrison County Medical Society, about 1887 or 1888. Other men prominent in the early history of the said society were Dr. A. L. Hupp, Dr. D. P. Morgan, Doctor Hill of Bridgeport, Dr. William Late and Dr. A. O. Flowers, who was the first doctor admitted after the society was organized.

Daniel Carson Louchery was born on a farm near Fairmont, West Virginia, June 2, 1845, only son and child of Daniel and Rhoda (Miller) Louchery. Daniel Louchery was born in Pennsylvania, March 29, 1816, and died June 27, 1845. His father, James Louchery, was a native of Maryland, and was the son of a Revolutionary soldier. The name Louchery was originally "Loughrey", of Scotch Presbyterian stock. Rhoda Miller, the mother of Doctor Louchery, was born in Marion County, West Virginia, May 31, 1824, and died September 4, 1866. She was the daughter of David and Nancy (McGee) Miller, also of Scotch ancestry. Right after the death of her first husband she was married to John Riley, and by that union had four children.

Daniel Carson Louchery grew up with his mother on a farm, and had poverty to contend with in his youth and his advantages were largely of his own seeking. He attended the subscription schools at Boothsville, West Virginia and one year at Doctor White's Academy at Fairmont. In 1864 he enlisted in the Union Army, serving until the close. He was mustered out June 10, 1865. After the war he continued his education until he was qualified for teaching. On December 25, 1866, he married Mary Catherine Lynch. He married only a few months after the death of his mother. Mrs. Louchery was born in Harrison County November 4, 1849, daughter of John P. and Zipporah (Farris) Lynch. Mr. and Mrs. Louchery attended school together for two years after their marriage, and for one year she was his pupil while he was teaching. Doctor Louchery completed his literary education in Southwestern Normal School at Lebanon, Ohio, and for one term had attended the West Virginia Agricultural College and was also a student in Ohio University at Athens. Partly in the intervals of his own student life he did his effective work as a teacher for twelve years. The last five years of that period he was superintendent of city schools at Clarksburg. During 1870-71 he was county superintendent of schools of Harrison County.

Doctor Louchery acquired his medical education in the University School of Medicine of Maryland at Baltimore, where he graduated March 6, 1880. For twenty-two years he was engaged in the practice of medicine at Salem, West Virginia, and since 1901 has been located at Clarksburg. For many years his practice has been in special lines, particularly eye and ear diseases, and in preparation for his specialty he attended many clinics and post graduate courses in New York and Philadelphia. He was a student in the Manhattan Eye and Ear Infirmary at New York, also attended the Polyclinic, The New York Eye and Ear Infirmary, New York Post Graduate Hospital and the Philadelphia Polyclinic. Doctor Louchery is a member of the West Virginia State Medical Society, the American Academy of Ophthalmology and Otolaryngology and a member of the American Medical Association. He is a republican and a member of the Methodist Church, and has been a lay delegate to the West Virginia Conference.

Doctor and Mrs. Louchery had four children: Mrs. Zeppa L. Clark; Edna E., wife of Doctor Ogden; Charles W., a prominent Clarksburg attorney whose career is separately noted in this publication; and Lucy Virginia, who died at the age of sixteen.

CHARLES W. LOUCHERY. The Harrison County bar is made up of men of recognized ability in the law, some already long experienced and eminent, and others who, although not old in the profession, have many times demonstrated their possession of the qualities and unmistakable talent that are part of the equipment of every successful lawyer. One of the latter class, who has a substantial record and extensive practice, is Charles William Louchery, a representative citizen as well as prominent attorney of the City of Clarksburg.

Mr. Louchery was born at Salem in Harrison County, West Virginia, March 9, 1888, and is a son of Dr. Daniel Carson and Mary Catherine (Lynch) Louchery. Doctor Louchery was born in Marion County, West Virginia, June 2, 1845, his father, Daniel Louchery, was born in either Greene or Fayette County, Pennsylvania, and his father, James William Carson Louchery, at that time spelled Loughrey, was the son of a Revolutionary soldier. The great-grandfather of Charles W. Louchery was born in Maryland, and in early manhood settled in Western Pennsylvania, then moved to what at the present time is Marion County, West Virginia. For generations the Louchery family has been known and held in high regard throughout this section of country.

Daniel Louchery, the grandfather, removed with his family to Harrison County before his marriage. Daniel Carson Louchery for some years after the close of the war between the states, in which he served as a soldier in the Union Army, taught school and later became superintendent of the schools of the City of Clarksburg and county superintendent of schools for Harrison County. In the meanwhile he had studied medicine in the School of Medicine in the University of Maryland, and after qualifying as a physician, practiced at Salem for some years and then came to Clarksburg, where he is still engaged in active practice. He married Mary Catherine Lynch, who was born in Harrison County, a daughter of John Perry Lynch and a granddaughter of Hiram Lynch, all of Harrison County. Doctor and Mrs. Louchery have had four children: Zeppa, Lucy, Edna and Charles William, Lucy being deceased. Mrs. Louchery is intelligently interested, like her husband, in public affairs, and both are identified politically with the republican party, and both are faithful members of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

Charles W. Louchery had public school advantages at Clarksburg, then entered the West Virginia Wesleyan College and was graduated from the seminary department in 1907. Three years later he received the degree of Bachelor of Arts from the West Virginia University at Morgantown, and from the same university the degree of LL. B. in 1911. His preparation for the law went still further, and in 1913 he received the degree of LL. B. from the University of Wisconsin, at Madison, and following this he entered upon the practice of law at Clarksburg. Well grounded in every branch of the law, he has successfully handled a number of important cases before the courts and is retained as counsellor by business concerns that have learned the wisdom of at all times having at command the sound judgment and trained legal faculties of an able and honorable attorney.

Mr. Louchery married May 24, 1917, Miss Mildred Belle Lambert, who is a daughter of Charles E. and Belle (Johnson) Lambert, well known residents of Clarksburg. Mr. and Mrs. Louchery have one son, Daniel Lambert Louchery. They have a wide social circle, and Mr. Louchery belongs to the fraternal order of Elks. An earnest citizen consistently concerned in the welfare of his city, county, state and country, he is not slow to recognize the claims made on his time, attention and means, but politically has never consented to allow his republican friends to present his name for public office.

WILLIAM F. STIFEL. To know aught of the history, civic and industrial, of the City of Wheeling, West Virginia, implies high recognition of what the name of Stifel has here signified in connection with normal development and progress. He whose name introduces this paragraph is president of J. L. Stifel & Sons, which concern here conducts an extensive manufacturing enterprise as printers of cotton goods—a business that was founded by his father in 1835 and that is one of the most important industries of the city at the present time. He is president also of the Wheeling Fire Insurance Company, the only fire insurance corporation in West Virginia.

J. Louis Stifel, father of William F., was born and reared in Wurtemberg, Germany, where he learned the trade of calico printing, and where he became manager of a large manufactory in this line. He came to the United States in 1833, and in 1835 became one of the pioneer manufacturers at Wheeling, then little more than a village in the western part of Virginia. In 1837, at Steubenville, Ohio, he wedded Barbara Becht, a native of Darmstadt, Germany. On coming to Wheeling Mr. Stifel established a small calico-printing shop at the corner of Main and Ninth streets, and six years later he purchased the property at this location. There he erected and equipped a larger plant, and with the passing years the industry has constantly expanded in scope and importance. The sons, Louis C. and William F., were thoroughly trained in all departments of the business, in which they became partners after the close of the Civil war. The honored father retired from active connection with the business in 1878, and he was one of the venerable citizens and honored pioneer business men of Wheeling at the time of his death, in 1882. The two sons continued to be associated in the control of the business until Louis C. met a tragic death in a street-car accident in 1899. In his calico-printing and indigo work the father at first conducted all operations by hand, and at the time of his retirement in 1878, his calico-printing plant was the largest establishment of its kind in the Central States. Mr. Stifel was a strong Union man in the period of the Civil war, and was a member of the convention whose action brought out about the separation of the present State of West Virginia from Virginia, incidental to that war. He was a man of prominence and influence in Wheeling, liberal and public-spirited, and served as a member of the Board of County Commissioners. He was one of the organizers and original directors of the National Savings Bank of Wheeling, which later was consolidated with the Wheeling Savings Bank, and he served a number of years as president of the institution. He was concerned in the organization of the Benwood Iron Works, now a part of the Wheeling Steel Corporation's holdings, and he continued a stockholder in the same until his death, besides which he was a director of the Belmont Bridge Company and a stockholder in the company that gave to Wheeling improved railroad facilities. Mr. Stifel never returned to Germany, was a most loyal and appreciative American citizen, and he brought his father to this country after the death of the mother, the venerable father having passed the remainder of his life at Wheeling. Mr. Stifel and his wife were earnest members of the Evangelical Protestant Church, and he was one of the founders of the church of this denomination in Wheeling, besides being one of the most liberal contributors to the erection of the original church edifice, which is now the Presbyterian Memorial Mission, on Eighteenth Street, the fine modern edifice of the church itself being at the corner of Twenty-second and Chapline streets. Mrs. Stifel passed to the life eternal in the year 1875. Of the children the eldest was Louis C., of whose death mention has already been made; William F., of this review, was the second son; Amelia became the wife of Frederick Linke and died at Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania; Matilda, the wife of Louis Demmer, likewise died in that city; Charles F., formerly engaged in the tanning business at Pittsburgh, is now living retired in that city; George E. is a merchant at Wheeling; Dr. Albert F., who was graduated in a leading medical institution in Germany, was one of the most able and popular physicians and surgeons in the City of Wheeling at the time of his death, when but thirty-eight years of age, and his two sons likewise are physicians of ability, Richard being engaged in practice at Cleveland, Ohio, and John at Toledo, that state.

The original firm title of J. L. Stifel & Sons is retained in the continuing of the industrial enterprise founded by J. L. Stifel, and Edward and Henry Stifel, sons of the late Louis C., as well as Arthur, son of William F. Stifel, are now interested principals in the industry. Edward Stifel went to Germany and gained practical experience in the same factory with which his grandfather had been connected as a youth. Henry also attended school and gained business experience likewise in Germany. Arthur Stifel was graduated in Cornell University and also in a textile school in the City of Philadelphia.

William F. Stifel has been a resident of Wheeling from the time of his birth, and in all the relations of life has well upheld the prestige of the family name. He has been connected with the business founded by his father since he was a lad of sixteen years, and the concern now gives employment to 200 persons, while the average shipments of bleached fabrics and dyed prints are several car-loads daily, the output being sold to jobbers and clothing manufacturers. The present modern plant was erected in 1899, and is one of the most important industrial institutions in the city and state. Mr. Stifel is one of the original stockholders and directors and the present president of the Wheeling Fire Insurance Company, specifically mentioned on other pages, and he is a director of the Wheeling Steel Corporation, the Wheeling & Belmont Bridge Company, the Superior Coal Company, the Wheeling Sanitary Manufacturing Company, and the Fostoria Glass Company, Moundsville, West Virginia. He was reared a democrat, but in his young manhood was strongly opposed to the secession movement that culminated in the Civil war. He has been one of the liberal and progressive citizens of his native city and has done all in his power to further its civic and material advancement and prosperity. He was born in a house that stood on the site of his present beautiful home, and the date of his nativity was August 12, 1840.

As a young man Mr. Stifel wedded Miss Emma Schandelin, of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, and her death occurred thirty-two years later, in 1908. She is survived by two children, Arthur and Flora, the latter being the widow of P. K. Witmer, of Des Moines, Iowa. In 1912 Mr. Stifel married Miss Etta McFadden, a sister of Richard McFadden, of Moundsville, this state, in whose personal sketch, on other pages, is given record concerning the family.

THE WHEELING FIRE INSURANCE COMPANY is one of the old and substantial institutions of West Virginia, dates its inception back more than half a century, has a splendid record of service and is the only fire insurance company in the state. It was incorporated in 1867, as the German Fire Insurance Company, and with a capital of $100,000, operations having been instituted on the 5th of July of that year. Of the original capital all was paid in, and safe and conservative policies have attended the enterprise during the long years of its progressive history. In 1905 the capital of the corporation was increased to $200,000. Its premiums from the time of organization to 1921 aggregate $5,830,030; losses paid, $2,857,688; dividends in stock, $90,000; cash dividends, $76,000. The insurance now in force aggregates $46,600,000, and the company is licensed to do business in eighteen different states of the Union. The present handsome and modern building of the company was erected in 1907, and represents a valuation of $85,000.

In the course of its long and successful record the Wheeling Fire Insurance Company has had but two presidents. John Oesterling, the first president, continued the incumbency of this office until his death in 1883, when he was succeeded by William F. Stifel, who has since continued the executive head and who is the subject of the personal sketch preceding. Fidelity Riester was secretary of the company more than forty years, and after his death, September 16, 1919, was succeeded by the present incumbent, O. E. Strauch, who entered the service of the company in 1907 in the position of cashier, from which he was advanced in turn to that of assistant secretary and then secretary. William V. Fischer, the present assistant secretary and an insurance man of broad experience, has been associated with the company since 1918.

JACOB FREDERICK STRAIGHT, who maintains his residence and business headquarters in the City of Fairmont, Marion County, is a successful coal operator and dealer in coal lands in this section of the state, and is a scion of the fifth generation of the Straight family in this county, with whose civic and material development and progress members of the Straight family have been identified since the early pioneer days.

Mr. Straight was born at Barrackville, Marion County, January 3, 1877, and is a son of William L. and Mary (Ice) Straight. William L. Straight was born on a farm on Paw Paw Creek, this county, and he was seventy-four years of age at the time of his death in 1913. He was a son of Jacob, who was a son of Peter, the latter having been a son of Jacob Straight, the pioneer, who was killed by the Indians on the Fort Hill farm on Straight's Run, about four miles from the present city of Fairmont. Mary (Ice) Straight was born at Barrackville, and, like her husband, continued a resident of Marion County until her death, she having passed away in 1913, at the age of sixty-seven years. She was a daughter of William Bayles Ice and Dorothy (Straight) Ice, her father having been born on Buffalo Creek, near Barrackville, on the farm taken up by his father, Adam Ice, who was the first white child born west of the Alleghany Mountains in what is now West Virginia. He was a son of Abraham Ice, one of the very first settlers in the present Marion County.

Jacob F. Straight acquired his youthful education in the public schools of Barrackville, and from the age of ten years til he was about twenty years old he resided in the home of his paternal uncle, Edgar P. Straight. He continued his education by attending the State Normal School at Fairmont several terms, and thereafter he was graduated in the Mountain State Business College at Parkersburg. In 1900 he began work as clerk for the Fairmont Coal Company, at which he continued his association until 1909, when he resigned the position to which he had been advanced, at of chief clerk of the billing department. He then formed an alliance with William E. Watson and, under the name of the Rosebud Fuel Company, they purchased a coal-mining plant at Rosebud Station on the Short Line Railroad in Harrison County. Two years later, in 1911, they purchased also the mining property of the Monroe Colliery Company, adjoining the original property, and the combined output of the two mines averaged about 600 tons daily. In 1913 Mr. Straight became identified with the organization of the Fairmont & Cleveland Coal Company, with mines at Leesville, Marion County, known as the Parker Run Mine, and continued his connection with this corporation until January 1, 1919, when he sold the greater part of his holdings to William E. Watson, who is now president of the Fairmont & Cleveland Coal Company, the Rosebud Fuel Company's property having been sold in 1917 to the J. M. McDonald Coal Mining Company of Cincinnati, Ohio. Mr. Straight acted as secretary and treasurer of the Fairmont & Cleveland Coal Company from its organization until January, 1919, when he sold his interest therein, as noted above. At the present time he is giving the major part of his time and attention to the buying and selling of coal lands in the Fairmont and adjoining districts. Since January, 1919, he has been director of the Fairmont Trust Company. His capitalistic resources when he came to Fairmont did not exceed $1,000, and he is today rated as one of the substantial and successful business men of this city. He still owns all of the land which came to him as a heritage from his parents. He is a member of the Fairmont Chamber of Commerce, is affiliated with the local lodge of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks and the Knights of Pythias of Fairmont, and he and his wife hold membership in the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

September 9, 1914, recorded the marriage of Mr. Straight and Miss Ethel Stump, of Philippi, Barbour County, her father, Marcellus Stump, being now a resident of Gilmer County and her mother being deceased. Mr. and Mrs. Straight have two children: Jacob F., Jr., born February 7, 1918, and William Marcellus, born February 9, 1919.

LEANDER TROXELL has been a resident of Weston forty years, came to manhood here, was in the railroad service and nearly twenty years ago entered the office of the county clerk as deputy, is now elected head of that office, and by is long official service and his private character is one of the best known men in Lewis County.

Mr. Troxell was born in Washington County, Maryland, June 2, 1868, son of John P. and Ellen (Jenkins) Troxell. His father was born in Mercersburg, Pennsylvania, December 1, 1832, and his mother in Warfordsburg in the same state January 24, 1833. John P. Troxell grew up on a farm, had a limited education in private schools, and at the age of fifteen began learning the tailor's trade. He followed that trade as a business and occupation for forty years. His home was in Hancock, Maryland, until he removed to Weston, West Virginia, in 1882. Here in addition to merchant tailoring he conducted a general store. He was a very popular business man and citizen, was a vestryman for many years in the Methodist Episcopal Church, filled all the chairs in the Knights of Pythias and was instrumental in having a lodge of that order established at Weston. Of his eleven children four are still living: S. J. Troxell, of Fort Worth, Texas; Leander; Miss Rose; Ella, wife of A. B. Berry, of Morgantown, West Virginia; Emma, and who is now deceased, was the wife of A. L. Dyer.

Leander Troxell was about fifteen years of age when the family moved from Maryland to West Virginia. He finished his grammar and high school education at Weston and then entered the service of the Baltimore & Ohio Railway Company. For a number of years he was billing clerk and left that work to become deputy county clerk in 1903. He was deputy for twelve years, and was thoroughly qualified by his familiarity with the records and efficiency in the routine duties of the office when he was elected county clerk in 1914. In 1920 Mr. Troxell was honored by election for another term of six years. At the end of his present term he will have served in the county clerk's office for twenty-four years.

June 12, 1890, Mr. Troxell married Miss Mary Wheatley, who is a graduate of the Clarksburg High School. They have five children: Mildred, a graduate of the Weston High School; Horner, a graduate of high school and of the University of Pittsburgh; Robert, a high school graduate, and now in business with the firm of T. P. Wright & Company; while the two younger children are John and Charlton. Mr. Troxell is a member of the Episcopal Church, is affiliated with Weston Lodge No. 43, Knights of Pythias, and Mrs. Troxell is a member of the Eastern Star.

ROBERT SIDNEY REED has been successfully engaged in the practice of law in the City of Fairmont, Marion County, since 1914, and is one of the representative members of the bar of his native county. He was born at Boothsville, this county, June 3, 1886, the eldest of the children of Robert L. and Eva (Briscoe) Reed. After profiting by the advantages of the public schools of his native town Mr. Reed entered the State Normal School at Fairmont, in which he was graduated in 1908. In 1911 he received from the University of West Virginia the degree of Bachelor of Arts, and in the year 1913 he was graduated in the law department of the institution, with the degree of Bachelor of Laws. After his graduation he was for one term a teacher in the State Normal School at Glenville, and he was identified with business enterprise for somewhat more than a year thereafter. In 1914 he was admitted to the bar, and he has since been actively engaged in the practice of his profession at Fairmont. He is a member of the Marion County Bar Association, the West Virginia Bar Association and the American Bar Association. He is affiliated with the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, the Phi Kappa Psi college fraternity and the democratic party, of the principles of which he is a loyal advocate.

Boyd H. Reed, brother of the subject of this sketch, was born at Boothsville September 29, 1888, was graduated in the State Normal School at Fairmont, and is now engaged in business at Morgantown, Monongalia County. The maiden name of his wife was Kelsey Brown.

Mr. Reed is a representative of the third generation of the family in Marion County, his father having been born in this county February 23, 1844, and having here died November 3, 1916. He was a son of Joseph and Minerva (Lowe) Reed. Joseph Reed was born in Fayette County, Pennsylvania, in 1817, and was the original representative of the family in Marion County, West Virginia. He was attending school at Smithfield, Fayette County, at the time when General La Fayette, in his visit to the nation which he had aided in gaining independence, called at the school and incidentally took young Reed by the hand and said to him: "You are too young to know who I am, but you will remember me in after life." Joseph Reed was about twenty years of age when he came to Marion County, and, a tanner by trade, he here established and operated a tannery at Boothsville. He was a son of Reason and Elizabeth (Fordyce) Reed, both natives of Fayette County, Pennsylvania. Reason Reed was born June 23, 1792, and died in 1873. He was a tailor by trade, and the most of his life was passed in his native county. As a soldier in the War of 1812 he was with the American forces at Detroit, Michigan, when that city was surrendered by General Hull. He was a son of Hugh Reed, the family name of whose wife was Somers. Hugh Reed was a son of Joseph Reed, who, in all probability, was born near Altoona, Pennsylvania, the lineage tracing back to English origin. Reason Reed was born and reared in the Protestant faith but married a wife who was a communicant of the Catholic Church, to which he transferred his membership, he having been buried in a Catholic Cemetery at Uniontown, Pennsylvania.

Robert L. Reed, father of the subject of this review, was for fifty years a merchant in Marion County—first at Monongah and thereafter at Boothsville. He was a democrat in politics and at the time of the Civil war his sympathies were with the cause of the Confederate States. Both he and his wife were Protestants in religious faith. Mrs. Reed was born at Mineral Wells, Wood County, this state, April 1, 1861, and she now resides at Fairmont. She is a daughter of Warwick and Sarah (Blakeney) Briscoe, her father having been a clergyman of the Methodist Church and having been for many years a circuit-rider in what is now West Virginia, with headquarters at Charleston. He was a son of Isaac Briscoe, and the maiden name of his mother was Callahan. Mrs. Sarah Briscoe was a daughter of Joseph and Polly (Atkinson) Blakeney, and her mother was a representative of the same family as is ex-Governor Atkinson of this state. Minerva (Lowe) Reed, paternal grandmother of the subject of this sketch, was a daughter of Cephas and Eleanor (Hughes) Lowe and a granddaughter of Robert and Elizabeth (Swearingen) Lowe. Robert Lowe was born and reared in England and upon coming to America first settled in Maryland, whence, in 1808, he came to what is now West Virginia and settled in the present Marion County, which was then a part of Harrison County, Virginia. The wife of Cephas Lowe was a daughter of Thomas and Ann (Moore) Hughes. Thomas Hughes was born in Union County, New Jersey, in 1768, a son of Thomas, Sr., who was a native of Wales, whence he went to Scotland, from which country he came to America and settled on the present site of Rahway, Union County, New Jersey.

The above named Elizabeth (Swearingen) Lowe was born in Maryland, the daughter of Charles and Susannah (Stull) Swearingen. Charles Swearingen was born in Washington County, Maryland in 1735, and became a lieutenant-colonel in the Revolutionary war. He was a son of Van and Elizabeth (Walker) Swearingen, and a grandson of Thomas Swearingen and Jane (———) Swearingen. Van Swearingen was born in Somerset County, Maryland, in 1692 and died there in 1801, having lived in three centuries. The father of Thomas Swearingen was Gerret Van Swearingen, who was born in Holland in 1636. He immigrated to America in 1657, and settled in what is now New Castle, Delaware. Later he moved to the Western Shore of Maryland, and there married Barbara de Barrette, who was born in Valenciennes, France. In 1669 by an act of the General Assembly of the Western Shore of Maryland, they were naturalized as American citizens.

B. WALKER PETERSON, president of the Dollar Savings & Trust Company of Wheeling, represents a family that has been prominent in the City of Wheeling almost a century.

His grandfather, Dr. Daniel Peterson, was of old New England Colonial stock and served as surgeon's mate in Colonel Stark's Regiment of the Continental Army in the Revolution.

The father of the Wheeling banker was William F. Peterson, Sr., who was born at Roseawen, New Hampshire, in 1798, and moved to Wheeling in 1824. He was a merchant and was also one of the first life insurance agents west of the Allegheny Mountains. He did a large business as a dealer in land. He was a whig politically, and at the beginning of the Civil war became a republican. He was a member of the Congregational Church and the Masonic fraternity. William F. Peterson, Sr., died suddenly at Logansport, Indiana, in 1866. He married Sarah Gibson, who was born at Concord, New Hampshire, in 1815, and died at Wheeling in 1885. She was connected with the Emerson family of New England, whose most conspicuous member was Ralph Waldo Emerson. William F. Peterson and wife had seven children, but only two enjoyed sufficient length of life to win for themselves positions in the world. Besides B. Walker Peterson the other was W. F. Peterson, Jr., and these brothers were closely associated in their business activities as the firm of W. F. and B. W. Peterson for many years. W. F. Peterson, Jr., died at Wheeling at the age of sixty-eight.

B. Walker Peterson was born at Wheeling, October 26, 1832. He attended private schools in his native city, graduated from Bethany College in Brook County in 1870, with the A. B. degree, and was a member of the Theta Delta Chi college fraternity. Mr. Peterson was trained for the engineering profession, graduating in 1873 from the Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute at Troy, New York, with the degree Civil Engineer. In the same year Bethany College conferred upon him the degree Master of Arts. For fifteen years he engaged in his profession as a civil engineer, and for seven years of that time held the post of city surveyor of Wheeling. He also became interested in the manufacturing industry at Wheeling, and in 1897 succeeded P. B. Dobbins as cashier of the Dollar Savings Bank, as noted in the history of that institution elsewhere. For fifteen years Mr. Peterson has been president of the Dollar Savings & Trust Company. He is also president of the Warwood Tool Company, and president of the Ohio Valley General Hospital at Wheeling. He is an old-line republican, a vestryman in the Episcopal Church, a member of the Twilight Club of Wheeling, and is affiliated with Bates Lodge No. 33, A. F. & A. M., and with the Scottish Rite Consistory.

In October, 1885, at Cadiz, Ohio, Mr. Peterson married Miss Nannie Moffett, daughter of Fulton and Mary (Dewey) Moffett, both now deceased. They have two children. W. Fairfield Peterson, born March 5, 1890, is a graduate mechanical engineer from Sibley College of Cornell University and is now engineer for the Baltimore Dry Docks & Ship Building Company at Baltimore. He married Marjorie Miller, of Milwaukee. The daughter of Mr. Peterson is Nancy Dewey, born February 8, 1892, and the wife of Joseph DuBois Holloway. Mr. and Mrs. Holloway reside at Pittsburgh, and he is vice president and eastern purchasing agent of the Superior Tube Company.

STATUE OF ETHAN ALLEN, PUBLIC LIBRARY, WHEELING
Mr. Peterson bought and had placed in the Wheeling Public Library a beautiful replica of a statue of Ethan Allen, the original of which was executed by the sculptor L. F. Meade. This statue in the Public Library is of Carrara marble. On the front of the pedestal is the following inscription: "Ethan Allen, who in demanding and receiving the surrender of Ticonderoga in the name of the Great Jehovah and the Continental Congress sounded the keynote of the spirit of the Colonies and their subsequent union. So mote it be. Amen." On another side is the following dedication: "This ideal of one of the heroes of the war for independence is given to the Wheeling Public Library in memory of Dr. Daniel Peterson, Surgeon's Mate, Colonel Stark's Regiment, Colonial Forces, and his son, W. F. Peterson, Sr., who came to this community in 1824."

DOLLAR SAVINGS & TRUST COMPANY, a Wheeling institution, probably the largest in point of financial resources in the state, has a noteworthy history among West Virginia banks.

The old Dollar Savings Bank was the first institution of its kind in Wheeling, having been organized in 1837, with Nathan Day Scott as president and P. B. Dobbins, cashier. Other directors were E. Buckman, George Hook, C. P. Brown, James B. Taney, Alfred Paull, Peter Cassell, W. J. W. Cowden, George Zoeckler, Sr., William Goehring, A. T. Young and Bernard Klieves. The early success of the institution was largely due to the careful guidance of Mr. Dobbins, who lost his life in a railroad accident in 1897. He was succeeded by B. Walker Peterson, who soon after he accepted that post issued a circular that tells some essential and interesting history: "On the 11th day of April, 1887, the Dollar Savings Bank of Wheeling opened its doors for business and began its mission of encouraging thrift among the citizens by offering them an opportunity to put aside safely small sums of money earning interest, yet available at any and all times. It was the first institution of this kind in Wheeling, and its growth shows that its protectors not only recognized and supplied an urgent public want, but have so judiciously and liberally administered its affairs as to deserve its continued popularity and prosperity. In its career it has suffered but one misfortune in which the whole community shares—the loss by most untimely death of P. B. Dobbins, the founder, whose pet child this institution was and under whose fostering care and strong guidance it has grown to its present sturdy health and proportions. His memory will ever be cherished in the most high and affectionate esteem. And the rule established and exemplified by him in the Dollar Savings Bank, in treating all, from the smallest to the largest depositor or borrower, with unvarying and equal courtesy and consideration, will be strictly adhered to in all its future dealings."

The Dollar Savings Bank enjoyed not only inward growth, but from time to time has consolidated with it other vigorous financial institutions. One of these was the old Wheeling Title & Trust Company, organized in 1889, with Henry M. Russell as president and Thomas O'Brien, Sr., as secretary, the latter soon being succeeded by Louis F. Stifel, who remained as secretary of the Trust Company and later of the Trust Department of the consolidated banks until his death in February, 1913. He was a man of great business and financial ability, had the faculty of making and keeping friends, and was an able adviser to the customers of the Trust Department.

The Dollar Savings Bank was consolidated with the Wheeling Title & Trust Company in May, 1903, at which time the present name of the Dollar Savings & Trust Company was adopted by the latter company. In January, 1918, the City Bank of Wheeling, which was founded by Henry K. List and continued by his family, was consolidated with the Dollar Savings & Trust Company, bringing to the institution added resources of great value.

At the end of the first year the old Dollar Savings Bank had on deposit $176,000. Twenty-five years later its deposits aggregated more than $4,000,000, while in May, 1921, the total deposits were considerably over $9,000,000. At that time the resources of the institution totaled more than $12,000,000.

As the business and resources of the bank increased its building quarters were from time to time remodeled and enlarged and finally, on August 1, 1911, the company entered its new home, an exclusive bank building, of classic style of architecture, regarded as one of the handsomest and one of the best equipped banking homes in the Ohio Valley.

A number of Wheeling's men of most substantial achievements, business integrity and character have served the Dollar Savings & Trust Company as officials or directors. The executive officers in 1921, when the bank celebrated its tenth anniversary in its new home, were: E. W. Peterson, president; N. B. Scott and Bernhard Klieves, vice presidents; Robert Hazlett, vice president and secretary; W. H. Tracy, assistant secretary; H. E. Laupp, trust officer; A. S. List, chairman of the Board of Directors. Other directors were: W. H. Abbott, Dr. G. Ackermann, J. A. Blum, J. C. Brady, D. A. Burt, Charles H. Copp, H. E. Fields, Dr. W. S. Fulton, Kent B. Hall, J. B. Handlan, Andrew S. Hare, Edward Hazlett, Robert Hazlett, Nelson C. Hubbard, D. C. List, Jr., George Maxwell, Charles Menkemeller, Lee C. Paul, T. S. Riley, Joseph Speidel, Jr., W. E. Weiss, N. P. Whitaker, R. R. Kitchen and John J. Jacob.

COLUMBUS T. BARTLETT, former county court clerk of Taylor County, has devoted twenty years or more of his active life to the sales and other interests of the wholesale grocery business in West Virginia.

His grandparents were Thomas T. and Jemimah Bartlett, who settled at Webster in Taylor County prior to the Civil war, their home being on the banks of the little run alongside which the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad was constructed after they established their home there. They finally moved to Barbour County, and the grandfather died at his home on Pleasant Creek at the age of eighty-four. His children were: Mary, who married William Lake; Matilda, who became the wife of Lloyd Chenoweth; Virginia, who married Green Carter; Elizabeth, who married Shadrach Cole; Eppa G.; David; Benjamin; Joseph and Josephine, twins, the latter becoming the wife of W. H. Davis; and Sarah, who married C. M. Davis.

Eppa G. Bartlett, father of Columbus T., was reared at Webster, was a merchant for a short time at Simpson, for many years operated a sawmill for the manufacture of lumber in Taylor and Barbour counties, and finally returned to his farm on Pleasant Creek in Barbour County, where he died in 1894, at the age of fifty-two. He married Henrietta Bartlett, daughter of Hamilton and Catherine (McKinney) Bartlett. She died in Fairmont in September, 1918, at the age of seventy-one. Their children were: Columbus T.; Camden H., of Fairmont; Lee T., who died unmarried in 1900 and is buried at Simpson; Hattie, Mrs. J. Bert Exline and a resident of Belington, West Virginia.

Columbus T. Bartlett was born on Pleasant Creek, near the Taylor-Barbour County line, but since early boyhood has been a resident of Taylor County. He finished his education in West Virginia College at Flemington under the direction of that able educator Professor Colgrove, and then for several winters taught school. He left that to engage in what has proved the chief business of his life, the wholesale grocery trade. For six years he was traveling salesman for the Joseph Speidel Grocery Company of Wheeling, and left that firm to join another well known grocery house, the Hornor-Gaylord Company of Clarksburg. He was on the road for this firm continuously thirteen years, until called away by the duties of public office.

In November, 1914, Mr. Bartlett was elected clerk of the County Court, and on January 1, 1915, succeeded Hayward Fleming in that office. His term of six years included the World war period, involving many extra duties in connection with the work of the Draft Board and other war movements. While he was in office one document for record was filed containing $2,720 in revenue stamps, marking a record in this county of that kind.

Soon after leaving office Mr. Bartlett returned to his old home at Webster, and has since resumed his service with the Clarksburg wholesale grocery house as an adjuster of accounts and claims. He has for years been an active worker in the democratic party, casting his first presidential vote for Cleveland in 1888. As a traveling man he became affiliated with the United Commercial Travelers, and formerly was a member of several fraternities, but his membership is now confined to Masonry. He is affiliated with Mystic Lodge No. 75, F. and A. M., at Grafton, the Royal Arch Chapter of the same city, and West Virginia Consistory No. 1 of the Scottish Rite at Wheeling.

May 30, 1885, in Taylor County, he married Miss Minnie St. Clair, who was born in that county February 27, 1865, daughter of Thomas B. and Drusilla (Shaeffer) St. Clair, the former also a native of Taylor County and the latter of Pennsylvania. The other St. Clair children were: James W., of Albany, Indiana; Loretta, of Harrison County, widow of Jackson Findley; Arlington, of St. Clairsville, Ohio; Oese, of Simpson; and Semel, of Martins Ferry, Ohio. Mr. and Mrs. Bartlett have three married daughters and a number of grandchildren. Grace, who married Robert Senior, of Toronto, Canada, is the mother of Jauneta, Robert Paul and June Genevieve. Ottilie Ruth married Clinton W. Fawcett, of Fairmont, and their children are Clinton Robert, Charles Thomas and James Howard. Gladys Dove, the youngest daughter, is the wife of Earl Waller, of Webster.

IRVIN ODA ASH. Talent and natural qualification for the work of teaching the young recruited Irvin Oda Ash into educational ranks at an early age, and though he is still a young man he has every reason, aside from the financial one which can never be a strong motive in the teacher's career, to remain steadfast in his devotion to perhaps the greatest service the individual can give to his generation.

Mr. Ash, who is superintendent of schools at Shinnston in Harrison County, was born near Middlebourne, Tyler County, West Virginia, March 8, 1887, and spent his early life on a farm. He is a son of Daniel Wesley and Rebecca (Woodburn) Ash, who were also natives of Tyler County. His father was a farmer, had a record as a Union soldier in the war, and died at the early age of forty-three, in 1888, when his son Irvin was an infant. The widowed mother is still living, and she made many sacrifices to properly rear her three children to mature years. These children are: Otto D., Alice M. and Irvin Oda.

Irvin Oda Ash acquired his early education in public schools, and taught his first term of school at the age of seventeen. His work continued in the rural schools for one or more terms each year until he had completed a service of five years. From what he had been able to earn and save from rural school teaching he continued his own education to higher levels. His high school education was acquired in his native county. From 1910 to 1914 he was a student in West Virginia University, from which he received his A. B. degree in 1914. He put in every vacation in some work that would replete his meager purse. After graduating he taught in the High School at Middlebourne two years, 1914-16, and he then entered the University of Nebraska, where he won his Master of Arts degree in 1917. He also profited by another year of post graduate study in the University of California. On returning to his home state Mr. Ash was principal of the Clay County High School, 1918-19, and was superintending principal of the schools of St. Mary's in 1919-21. Mr. Ash assumed his duties as superintendent of the schools at Shinnston in the fall of 1921.

He is a member of the West Virginia State Educational Association and of the National Educational Association. In 1916 he married Miss Nettie Bailey Lanham, a native of Ritchie County. She was reared in Tyler County, and for several years was a teacher in the public schools there, and is actively associated with her husband as a teacher in the Shinnston schools.

WILLIAM A. MEREDITH is one of the successful publishers of West Virginia, began his apprenticeship as a printer's devil in an office at Philippi, and from a printer's case his experience broadened into the larger field of editorial and business management. He is editor and publisher of the Shinnston News.

His family has been an honored one of this state for more than a century. His American ancestor, William Meredith, came from South Wales about 1800, and after residing a few years in Hagerstown, Maryland, came to what is now Marion County, West Virginia. William Meredith married Hannah Powell, and they had a son William, who married Harriet Clayton. Rev. Clinton B. Meredith, son of William and Harriet (Clayton) Meredith, married Marion Maxwell, a native of Harrison County, and daughter of Amos Maxwell. They are the parents of the editor and publisher at Shinnston.

Rev. Clinton B. Meredith is a native of West Virginia and one of the permanent ministers of the Methodist Episcopal Church. He has been in active work with the West Virginia Conference since 1881, and has a creditable record of service in several pastorates. He and his good wife now reside at Morgantown. They were the parents of ten children.

William A. Meredith was born in Ten Mile District, Harrison County, March 9, 1882. Like the other children, he attended school in the different localities where his father resided as pastor, and, therefore, had frequent changes of environment during his youth. He acquired a good common school education, and while his father was pastor of the church at Philippi he began his apprenticeship in a local newspaper office. He remained in Philippi when the duties of the church called his father elsewhere, and he continued work at the printer's trade until 1902. In that year he first became identified with the newspaper interests of Shinnston, as manager of the News. About five years later he bought this weekly newspaper, and continued its publication until 1910, when he sold out and, going to Salem, bought the Salem Herald. He had active charge of this other Harrison County newspaper until 1913, when he sold out and again bought the property of the Shinnston News, and under his management the paper has had a steady increase of circulation and influence. He also conducts a successful job printing business.

Mr. Meredith is a republican and has served as county committeeman of his party. He is a thirty-second degree Scottish Rite Mason and Shriner, and a member of the Methodist Church. In 1910 he married Miss Eva B. Robinson. Her father, Thaddeus Robinson, was a farmer in the vicinity of Shinnston. The three children of Mr. and Mrs. Meredith are: Madeline, William and Thaddeus.

BENJAMIN BASSEL JARVIS, a native of West Virginia, and the son of William L. Jarvis and Mary Martha (Stout) Jarvis, was born at the country home of his parents, situated on the waters of Brushy Fork, near the village of Quiet Dell, Harrison County, West Virginia, and was the youngest of a family of six children, namely: Celia T., Louise, Meigs Jackson, Arnold Brandley, Paul V. and Benjamin Bassel.

His grandparents on the paternal side were Jesse Jarvis, and Sarah (Werniger) Jarvis, of Jarvisville, Harrison County, West Virginia, and on the maternal side, James M. Stout and Celia (Bassel) Stout, of Quiet Dell, Harrison County, West Virginia.

Benjamin pursued the duties of a farmer boy in Harrison and Barbour counties for about sixteen years, with the exception of about three years, which were spent in the City of Vernon, Texas, between the age of five and eight years.

At the age of seventeen he entered the West Virginia Business College at Clarksburg, West Virginia, and upon the completion of a business course accepted a position as book-keeper for a lumber company, which occupation he followed for a few years, when he entered Broadus College at Clarksburg, West Virginia, and from there entered West Virginia Wesleyan Seminary at Buckhannon, West Virginia.

After leaving the Seminary he was engaged in the lumber business for about four years, after which time he entered the Law School at the West Virginia University at Morgantown, West Virginia, and graduated with the class of 1909.

On October the second, 1909, Benjamin Jarvis married Grace Caroline Biddle, of New Castle, Pennsylvania, the daughter of Frank W. Biddle and Elizabeth (Marquis) Biddle.

Shortly after their marriage they moved to Oklahoma City, Oklahoma, where they resided for about three years, and during this period he was in the employ as an accountant of a large lumber dealer, after which time he and his wife moved to Clarksburg, West Virginia, where he soon entered the practice of law. Outside of the practice of law he became interested in investments and promotions of coal, oil and gas companies.

Politically Mr. Jarvis is a democrat and a great believer of the Jeffersonian democracy. He is greatly interested in fraternities and clubs, being a Master Mason and member of Hermon Lodge No. 6 of Clarksburg, West Virginia, and member of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, Clarksburg Lodge No. 482, a member of the Greek letter fraternity, Sigma Chi, from Mu Mu Chapter, at the University of West Virginia, Morgantown, West Virginia, a member of the Clarksburg Country Club, and the Allegheny and Chest Mountain Clubs.

To Mr. and Mrs. Jarvis were born three children, namely: Jackson M., born in Oklahoma City, Oklahoma, December 27, 1911, Donna Louise, born August 10, 1913, and Elizabeth Biddle, born June 18, 1918, in the City of Clarksburg, West Virginia.

HARVEY G. VAN HOOSE is a practical mining man, operator and executive, with wide experience in the coal fields of East Kentucky as well as West Virginia. For some years past he has been president of the Winifrede-Thacker Coal Company, whose mine is located one mile west of Nolan, on the Norfolk & Western Railroad in Mingo County. Mr. Van Hoose resides at the mining property. This mine was opened in 1916, and he was organizer of the company.

Mr. Van Hoose was born in Ironton, Ohio, June 25, 1875, son of Moses D. and Mary (Adkins) Van Hoose. His father, a native of Lawrence County, Kentucky, was a pioneer in the coal developments of Eastern Kentucky. For many years, beginning in early manhood, he was associated with Big Sandy coal fields. He opened the Peach Orchard, one of the first mines opened in Eastern Kentucky, long before railroads were built through that section and when the coal was shipped in barges on the Big Sandy and Ohio rivers. The Peach Orchard Mine was opened by the Great Western Mining Company. After many years with the Peach Orchard property Moses D. Van Hoose removed to Knox County, Kentucky, and was with the North Jellico Coal Company, at first as mine foreman and then superintendent of mines. From Jellico he removed in 1906 to Herrin, Illinois, where until his recent retirement he continued to be associated with mining operations. He is now living at Herrin, at the age of seventy-two. His wife was born in Elliott County, Kentucky, and died in 1919, at the age of sixty-six. Both were active Methodists. Moses D. Van Hoose represented Lawrence and Boyd counties in the Kentucky Legislature in 1889-90, and was chairman of the committee on mines and mining and geological survey. He has been active in democratic politics and served as chairman of the county committee. He is a member of the asons and Odd Fellows. Their six children, four sons and two daughters, are all associated in some way with the mines and mining industry. William, the oldest child, is mine manager at Christopher, Illinois; Harvey G. is the second child; Jeff is mine manager at Herrin, Illinois; R. Lee is an operator at Cartersville, Illinois; Jennie is the wife of R. A. Bowling, commissary manager at Harlan, Kentucky; and Ruth is the wife of Earl Connor, mine electrician of Herrin.

Harvey G. Van Hoose acquired his early education in Lawrence County, Kentucky. He has been a constant student, his reading covering a wide range of technical, mining and general subjects. In 1912-13 he was a member of the first examining board of mine inspectors in the State of Kentucky for applicants for positions for mine foremen. His board was under the auspices of the University of Kentucky, which had established courses in mining. Mr. Van Hoose took these courses himself, and to his reading and studying he has added years of practical experience. He is a recognized authority on coal mines. At the age of 19 years he began work in mines as a trapper boy, and has held every position in and outside of mines up to president of mining companies. He was for a number of years, until 1915, general manager and treasurer of the Peach Orchard mine. In the latter year he was made superintendent of the Majestic Collieries Company, Majestic, Kentucky, where he remained five years. He then took over the active management of the Winifrede-Thacker Coal Company's mine in Mingo County.

In 1896 Mr. Van Hoose married Bessie Frank, daughter of Conrad Frank, of Ashland, Kentucky. Mr. and Mrs. Van Hoose kept their home at Ashland for many years. Their only son, Harold, acquired his early education in the schools of Ashland, was a member of the Students' Army Training Corps, and is now in the class of 1923 at Rush Medical College, Chicago. Mr. Van Hoose is a member of the Methodist Church at Nolan, is independent in politics, and is affiliated with the Blue Lodge, Chapter, Commandery and Mystic Shrine, Ashland, Kentucky.

MARTIN VAN BUREN CRIGGER is one of the mining executives of Mingo County, being superintendent of the Wygarb Mining Company's property on Tug River, two miles below Williamson. This mine was opened and has been in operation since 1904. L. E. Armentrout is president of the Wygarb Company.

Mr. Crigger was born at Speedwell, Wythe County, Virginia, April 29, 1835, son of Joseph H. and Mary Hicks Crigger. His father was born in Wythe County, Virginia, in 1853, and is now living in Fries, Grayson County, that state. Mary Hicks was a native of Illinois, and died in 1904, at the age of forty-seven. Joseph H. Crigger spent an active life as a farmer, is a Methodist, an enthusiastic student, and is affiliated with the Redmen and I. O. O. F. fraternities. He and his wife had two children, Martin and Carrie, the latter the wife of James L. LaRue, of Fries, Virginia.

Martin Van Buren Crigger, whom his friends always now as Van, acquired a public school education in Wythe County, Virginia. He has carried his education into mature years, being a reader and a student of mining and technical works. At the age of sixteen he began service for the Norfolk & Western Railroad Company and construction work in the coal fields. For three years he was a foreman, and was then employed as engineer at the power plant of the S. S. Coal and Coke Company at Gary, McDowell County. Three years later he went to Rawl, Mingo County, as electrician for the Crystal Block Coal and Coke Company, and at the end of three years was promoted to mine superintendent, and continued in that capacity for the Crystal Company for four years. At the end of that time he bought a farm in Jackson County, Ohio, but in a brief time had set aside his ambition for agriculture as a permanent vocation, and a year later returned with renewed enthusiasm to the coal mining industry. It was at that time that he became superintendent of the Wygarb Mine in Mingo County.

In 1908 Mr. Crigger married a former schoolmate, Miss Jennie Jones, daughter of George W. Jones, of Speedwell, Vol. III—8

Wythe County, Virginia. They have five children, four sons and a daughter: Hubert, Eugene, Van, Jr., Catherine and Price. Mrs. Crigger is a member of the Methodist Church. He is active in the fraternities of Elks and Masons, being a member of the Lodge and Chapter at Williamson, the Knights Templar Commandery at Huntington, Wheeling Consistory and Charleston Temple of the Mystic Shrine. In politics he is a republican.

REGINALD P. ROBOSON, vice president of the Davis National Bank at Piedmont, Mineral County, was born at Flintstone, Maryland, on the 14th of October, 1881, and is a son of Dr. Thomas P. and Virginia (Bell) Roboson, both likewise natives of Maryland, where the former was born at Flintstone and the latter at Piney Grove, a daughter of Josiah Bell. Doctor Roboson passed his entire life in Allegany County, Maryland, and was one of the oldest and most revered citizens and leading physicians and surgeons of that country for many years prior to his death, which occurred at Flintstone in 1913, when he was seventy-three years of age, his widow being now a resident of Cumberland, Maryland. Doctor Roboson gained his professional education in the medical department of the University of Maryland, and as a young man he was able to render an appreciable amount of professional service in connection with the Civil war, as a surgeon. He was in full sympathy with the cause of the Confederacy, was a democrat in politics, was affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and was a zealous communicant of the Protestant Episcopal Church, as is also his widow, members of the Roboson family having erected the first Episcopal Church in Allegany County, Maryland. Of the children of Dr. Thomas P. and Virginia (Bell) Roboson the following are living: Charles T., of Flintstone; Mrs. J. B. Humbird, of Cumberland; Mrs. L. D. Bridges, of Hancock, all in Maryland; Mrs. R. D. Witherspoon, of Mercersburg, Pennsylvania; William F., of Cumberland, Maryland; Miss Grace L., of that city; Reginald P., of this review; and Mrs. Hattie B. Wolford, of Flintstone. The Roboson family was founded in the Flintstone District of Allegany County, Maryland, in the early pioneer days, and the family there acquired ownership of extremely large tracts of land. Dr. Thomas P. Roboson was the only child of his parents, and in all of the relations of life he well upheld the prestige of an honored family name.

After having fully profited by the advantages of the public schools of his native town Reginald P. Roboson completed a course in a business college at Cumberland. After his graduation in this institution he assumed a clerical position in the Second National Bank of Cumberland, with which he continued his connection fifteen years and won advancement to a responsible executive position. Upon severing his association with this institution he came to Piedmont, West Virginia, was elected vice president of the Davis National Bank and assumed active direction of the same on the 1st of January, 1918. His thorough experience in banking and his progressive executive policies have done much to advance the interests of this solid and well ordered financial institution of Mineral County. He is a republican in politics, is affiliated with the Elks and the Knights of Pythias, and is a communicant of the Protestant Episcopal Church, in the faith of which he was reared. He was active in promoting the sale of Government bonds and furthering other patriotic measures in the World war period, and while under the draft he was duly registered and classified in A-1, he was not called into military service. Mr. Roboson's name is still enrolled on the list of eligible bachelors in Piedmont.

ALEXANDER R. SMALL is a successful and progressive contractor and builder in his native city of Martinsburg, Berkeley County, and in direct and collateral lines is a representative of well known pioneer families of this county.

Mr. Small was born at Martinsburg, West Virginia, on the 26th of September, 1837, and is a son of Wendell Seibert Small and Margaret Ann (Burr) Small. Wendell Seibert Small was born on a farm near Berkeley Station, this county, in 1842, a son of John Carson Small, who was born.

on a pioneer farm in Hedgeville District, this county, in 1801, it being virtually assured that the latter's father was born in Pennsylvania, of the stanch old "Pennsylvania Dutch" stock, he having been the pioneer representative of the family in what is now Berkeley County, West Virginia, where he reclaimed a farm from the wilds and where he passed the remainder of his life. John Carson Small here engaged in farm enterprise on land which he inherited from his father, and prior to the construction of railroads he used to drive with team and wagon to Baltimore, Maryland, to market his surplus farm products, several days having been required to make the trips back and forth. On his old homestead farm is now situated the production plant of the Security Lime & Cement Company, one of the important industrial concerns of this section of the state. John C. Small remained on his farm until his death, at the venerable age of eighty-nine years. He married Sarah Mong, who was born on a farm about three miles west of Martinsburg, in the year 1806, a daughter of John and Mary (Painter) Mong, the latter's mother having been a Seibert. The Small, Mong, Carson, Painter and Seibert families all figure prominently in the pioneer history of Berkeley County. Mrs. Sarah (Mong) Small died at the age of sixty-seven years. The names of her children are here recorded: Mary Ellen, Ann Rebecca, Lucinda Catherine, James Henry, Reuben Wiser, John Mong, Susan Virginia, Wendell Seibert, Sarah Jane, William Hunter and Emma Elizabeth. The religious faith of the family has been that of the Lutheran Church. James H., Reuben W. and John M. Small were loyal soldiers of the Confederacy in the war between the states.

Wendell S. Small was reared on the old home farm, and as a youth he learned the carpenter's trade, at which he became a skilled workman. After working for a number of years as a journeyman he engaged in contracting and building in an independent way, he having continued his association with this line of business enterprise until his death, in his sixty-eighth year. At Martinsburg, West Virginia, he was a member of Equality Lodge No. 44, A. F. and A. M., and was affiliated also with the Royal Arcanum. He was a devout communicant of the Lutheran Church while his wife was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Mrs. Small was born about one mile east of Shenandoah Junction, Jefferson County, a daughter of William and Mary Ann (Porterfield) Burr and granddaughter of James and Nancy (McGary) Burr. James Burr was a son of Peter and Jane (Calhoun) Burr. On the maternal side Mrs. Small was a granddaughter of William and Mary (Williamson) Porterfield. Mrs. Small died at the age of fifty-five years. Her children were five in number: Eugene is a carpenter and builder at Martinsburg; Nan Burr is in the Government employ at Washington, D. C.; Wendell S. is a rural mail carrier in Berkeley County; May is the wife of William H. Johnson; and Alexander R. is the immediate subject of this sketch.

Alexander R. Small gained his youthful education in the public schools of Martinsburg, and as a lad he began to assist his father, under whose direction he learned the carpenter's trade with much thoroughness. He continued his association with his father until he established himself independently in business as a contractor and builder, and he is one of the successful representatives of this line of enterprise in his native city. His basic Masonic affiliation is with Equality Lodge No. 44, A. F. and A. M., and he is affiliated also with the Lodge of Perfection, fourteenth degree, and with Tuscarora Lodge, Independent Order of Odd Fellows.

THOMAS JONATHAN JACKSON WOTRING has for over twenty years been a prominent figure in the citizenship of Morgantown, where he has enjoyed an extensive and busy practice as a civil and mining engineer.

He was named for his father's great commander in the Civil war, Stonewall Jackson, and was born in Frederick County of the Shenandoah Valley of Virginia, November 7, 1868, son of John Henry and Martha Virginia (Hall) Wotring. His great-grandfather was General Wotring, who commanded the German Army at Berlin, and for his activities in promoting a federation of German states, an object achieved many years later by Bismarck, he had to leave that country and came to America about 1812, settling North Carolina, where he invested his fortune in extensive land purchases. Some years later he moved to West Virginia and settled on Horse Shoe Run in Preston County where he bought upwards of 25,000 acres of land and where he lived the rest of his life. His son Abram Wotring was born in Preston County and devoted his active years to the cultivation of a large farm of about 500 acres. He married Elizabeth Felton, who was a great-granddaughter of L. Felton of England. John Henry Wotring was born in Preston County in 1844, and as a young man began work for his brother, then general superintendent of the North western Turnpike in the Shenandoah Valley. While thus engaged, in 1862, at the age of eighteen, he enlisted Company K of the Thirty-third Virginia Regiment, Stonewall's Brigade, and served until wounded at the second battle of Manassas. Thereafter he served as provost marshal of Shenandoah County until the close of the war. The year following the return of peace he operated a saw mill in Frederick County, and then for six years devoted his attention to his farm. In 1876 he was elected county treasurer of Frederick County, and filled that office two years, dying while still in office, in 1888.

His wife, Martha Hall Wotring, was born in Frederick County, Virginia, in 1844, daughter of James B. and Virginia (Rosenberger) Hall, and a granddaughter of Cal Hall, a native of Philadelphia and an early settler of the Shenandoah Valley. Caleb Hall was a half brother. Lyman Hall, one of the signers of the Declaration of Independence. James B. Hall was born in Frederick County, Virginia. Martha Hall Wotring died in 1918.

Thomas Jonathan Jackson Wotring grew up on his father's farm and found work to do there until 1892. That year he joined an engineering crew in field work Botetourt County, Virginia, at Roanoke, and by study and practice perfected his knowledge of the profession. In 1895 he returned to Frederick County, and in 1898 joined his mother, who the preceding year had located at Morgantown. Here Mr. Wotring engaged in the work of his profession and for five years from 1899 was engineer in the employ of the Standard Oil Company at Morgantown. Following that he was a mining engineer with the Ross Engineering Company, and for one year was with DeMolins Utz, general engineer. He then formed a partnership with Clarence Cox, under the name of Cox & Wotring, general engineer at Morgantown. Seven years later he bought out his partner, and since then Mr. Wotring has continued in profession under his own name, doing a general engineering work, largely in the service of mining corporations. He is a member of the American Society of Engineers and is a Lutheran.

REV. JONAS BARRETT CHAMBERLIN, who has given a successful service as a clergyman of the United Brethren Church but who has been identified with business enterprises in the period of his residence at Martinsburg, Berkeley County, was born at Winchester, Frederick County, Virginia. His father, Abraham Chamberlin, born in Hampshire County, that state, August 11, 1822, son of Jonas Chamberlin, born in Frederick County, Virginia, January 13, 1774. The latter's father, Jonas, was born in England and came to America in company with two of his brothers, one brother, Joseph, having settled in Pennsylvania and the other in Massachusetts, they had been members of an old and prominent family in Birmingham, England. Jonas Chamberlin, Sr., settled in Frederick County, Virginia, where he passed the remainder of his life. His religious faith, that of the Society of Friends, which opposed to warfare, having prevented him entering military service in the War of the Revolution. He was a graduate of Oxford University, and after coming to America he engaged in the manufacturing of silk hats for the gentry that period. Jonas Chamberlin, Jr., engaged in the manufacturing of scythes in Hampshire County, Virginia, where he continued to reside until his death, February 20, 1878. His wife (Ann Bane) was born in that county September 11, 1787, a daughter of English parents who were pioneers.

Thomas J. Wolring.

of Mineral County. By marriage the Bane family was connected with that of which General Morgan, the Revolutionary patriot and officer, was a member. Jonas Chamberlin and his wife were members of the Society of Friends. Mrs. Chamberlin died June 9, 1825. Their children were: Margaret, Mary, Joseph Morgan and Abraham.

Abraham Chamberlin received his early education under the direction of private tutors, and as a man of fine mentality and mature judgment he became influential in community affairs and was called to various offices of public trust. In the Civil war period he was sheriff of Hampshire County, Virginia, a position which he held at the time of the formation of the new state, of which he became one of the first county sheriffs under the new regime. He was interested in mercantile business, and he ever commanded unqualified popular esteem. His death occurred June 15, 1907. He married Elizabeth Ann Barrett, who was born in Frederick County, Virginia, where her parents, of English lineage, passed their entire lives. The death of Mrs. Chamberlin occurred May 20, 1901. Her children were four in number: Jonas Barrett, Mary (Mrs. Joseph Martin), Nancy Jane (Mrs. C. E. Liller) and Joseph. The parents were birthright members of the Society of Friends, to the gracious faith of which they adhered until the close of their lives.

Joseph Barrett Chamberlin attended the rural schools, a state normal school in Virginia and the Shenandoah Academy at Dayton, Virginia. In his youth he became a member of the United Brethren Church, and after due preparation was ordained a clergyman in the same at Winchester, Virginia, in 1893. Thereafter he held pastoral charges at Winchester, Virginia, and Martinsburg, West Virginia, and in Washington, D. C. In the meanwhile he took a special course in Columbian University (now George Washington University), at the national capital, with the intention of engaging in foreign missionary work, but impaired health frustrated his plans, and since establishing his permanent home at Martinsburg he has been identified with various business interests. He is treasurer of the Farmers & Mechanics Mutual Insurance Company, a director and a member of the finance committee of the Old National Bank of Martinsburg, and a trustee of the local Kiwanis Club.

At the age of twenty-five years Mr. Chamberlin was united in marriage with Miss Maude C. Earmon, who was born in Rockingham County, Virginia, a daughter of Newton and Corinne (Sheets) Earmon, the latter likewise a native of Rockingham County. Her father, Strother Sheets, was born in that county, March 10, 1821, and his wife whose maiden name was Frances Shirley, was born in Augusta County, Virginia, July 9, 1822, of Colonial ancestry. Mrs. Chamberlin passed to the life eternal on the 17th of November, 1917, and is survived by two daughters, Minnie G. and Carrie E.

HERBERT E. HANNIS, who was a lieutenant of field artillery during the great war, was born and reared in Martinsburg, and completed a liberal education in the law before the war, and when he left the service he returned home to practice and shortly afterward was elected prosecuting attorney of Berkeley County.

The Hannis family is descended from Andrew Hannis, a native of Scotland, who came to America in Colonial times and established his home in Philadelphia. He was buried in Christ Churchyard in that city. The name Hannis has been a prominent one in Philadelphia in all subsequent generations. The grandfather of the Martinsburg lawyer was Henry Stites Hannis, a native of Philadelphia. He owned and operated the Hannis Distillery in Philadelphia. He married a Miss Poole, of English descent.

Herbert E. Hannis, Sr., a native of Philadelphia, where he was reared and educated, at the age of eighteen moved to Martinsburg, where his father had acquired the Nadenbousch Distillery, and he took an active part in its management until his death in 1906. Herbert E. Hannis, Sr., married Susan Gardner, a native of Berkeley County and resident of Martinsburg. She represents the old Gardner and Showers families of Berkeley County, her father having been John Gardner.

Lieutenant Hannis was one of eight children, was educated under private tutors, and took both literary and law courses in Washington and Lee University. He received his degrees A. B. and LL. B. from that university, and supplemented his law course in Columbia University at New York.

Mr. Hannis in August, 1917, entered the United States service, was trained at Fort Benjamin Harrison in Indianapolis, was commissioned first lieutenant of field artillery, and was on duty for a time at Camp Funston in Kansas, at Camp Jackson, South Carolina, and from Camp Dix, New Jersey, went overseas and was with his command in all its activities in France until March, 1919. He then returned to the United States, was at Camp Upton on Long Island for a brief time, and was then assigned special work at Washington, D. C. In July, 1920, he resigned and received his honorable discharge, and returned home to find that his friends had nominated him as republican candidate for prosecuting attorney of Berkeley County. In November of that year he was elected to office, and now devotes all his time to its duties.

Mr. Hannis is one of the very popular public officials of Berkeley County. He is a member of several bar associations, the American Legion Post, and is affiliated with Martinsburg Lodge No. 778, Benevolent Protective Order of Elks, and Washington Lodge No. 1, Knights of Pythias.

ERNEST L. LUTTRELL. A lawyer of exceptional ability and well matured powers and experience, Mr. Luttrell has been a member of the Berkeley County bar, and while he has had official responsibilities during the greater part of the time since his admission he has also built up an extensive general practice. His offices are in the Shenandoah Bank Building at Martinsburg.

Mr. Luttrell was born on a farm thirteen miles northwest of Winchester, in Frederick County, Virginia. His father, Charles W. Luttrell, was born near Collinsville, in the same county, on December 3, 1855. The grandfather was Lewis Luttrell, a native of the same county, and the great-grandfather was John Luttrell, also a native and life-long resident of Frederick County, where his ancestors settled when they came from England in Colonial times. Lewis Luttrell grew up on the farm, inherited a portion of the old homestead, but subsequently sold it and farmed as a renter. He died at the age of sixty-nine. The maiden name of his wife was Elizabeth Dick, a native of Frederick County and daughter of Richard Dick, a farmer and woodsman of that section.

Charles W. Luttrell was reared on a farm. His ambition led him to make the most of his advantages in the local schools, and at the age of twenty-one he began teaching and was a factor in local educational circles for five years. From Frederick County he moved to Berkeley County, was clerk in a general store at Glengary and later at Ganotown, and in 1906 bought property at Nollville, where he was in the mercantile business until January, 1921. At that date he sold out and is now retired at Martinsburg. He served as postmaster at De Haven in Frederick County, and was assistant postmaster at Glengarry and postmaster at Ganotown, both these appointments coming during Grover Cleveland's administration. In 1881 Charles W. Luttrell married Julia P. De Haven, a native of Frederick County. Her father, James De Haven, owned and operated a flour mill on Green Spring Creek in Frederick County. Charles W. Luttrell and wife had two children, Elston M. and Ernest L. The parents are active members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and the father has been on the official board of the church. Charles W. Luttrell is very conspicuous for his religious work, to which he has devoted much of his time and means. He is sincerely interested in every movement for the betterment of his fellow man.

Ernest L. Luttrell received a rural education during his early years, later attended Shepherd College, and from there entered West Virginia University, where he took a brief academic course and then continued in the law school until graduation in 1910. Mr. Luttrell has done all his practice as a lawyer at Martinsburg. In that city he became associated with A. B. Noll, and served four years as assistant district attorney under Mr. Noll and later four years under District Attorney W. W. Downey. Mr. Luttrell in 1919 formed a partnership with Decatur Rogers, and this firm is recognized as one of the strongest in Berkeley County.

In 1912 Mr. Luttrell married Ida Lillian Rice, who was born in Jefferson County, daughter of William M. Rice, a farmer near Shepherdstown. Mr. and Mrs. Luttrell had two children, Edna Marie and Ernest Glenville. Mr. Luttrell is affiliated with Equality Lodge No. 44, A. F. and A. M., with the thirty-second degree Scottish Rite Masons, is a member of Washington Lodge No. 1, Knights of Pythias, and the D. O. K. K. branch of that order, and is a member of the Loyal Order of Moose and the Patriotic Sons of America.

CHARLES G. SMITH was in the railroad service, later in the public utility business, but is best known in the City of Martinsburg, his home, as a merchant, being proprietor of one of the larger mercantile concerns there.

He was born at Harpers Ferry, West Virginia, a son of Joseph Cheston Smith and grandson of David and Maria (Spangler) Smith. His family connections have been in Maryland and West Virginia since pioneer times. The family history is an interesting one, including a number of prominent characters, and it is told in more complete detail in the individual sketch of Harry Fenton Smith, a cousin of Charles G., and also a resident of Berkeley County.

Joseph Cheston Smith, father of the Martinsburg merchant, was reared and educated at Frederick, Maryland. As a young man he came to Virginia, and during the war between the states was in the United States service, in the Quartermaster's Department. After the war he returned to his father's farm, on which Antietam Station is now located, farmed there for a few years and in 1871 located at Martinsburg, where he was in the employ of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Company, and continued in that service for about forty years. He died at Harpers Ferry in 1916. His wife was Louisa Spangler, a native of Harpers Ferry. Her father, Emanuel Spangler, was born in Scotland and one of three brothers to come to America. His brother John settled at Martinsburg. Emanuel Spangler was an expert mechanic. Prior to the beginning of the Civil war he was an employe at the Government Arsenal at Harpers Ferry, making locks for guns. After the arsenal was burned he was transferred to the arsenal in Bridesburg, a suburb of Philadelphia. At the close of the Civil war he returned to Harpers Ferry and lived there until his death. Emanuel Spangler married Elizabeth Russell, a native of England. Her brother was at one time prominently associated with Oberlin College at Oberlin, Ohio.

Charles G. Smith was the oldest of three children. His brother Harry S. became an electrical engineer, and in that capacity went to South Africa, where he died. The only daughter, Emma Brent, married Rev. John Sneidakar.

C. G. Smith was educated in Martinsburg, and at the age of sixteen entered the employ of the Cumberland Valley Railroad Company as a messenger boy and as an apprentice to learn telegraphy. During this period his salary was $6 a month. After a year he was made joint city ticket agent and manager of the telegraph office, and was in the service of the railroad for a period of ten years. After resigning he assisted in organizing the Edison Electric Illuminating Company, and was manager of that important public utility for five years. When he retired he bought a mercantile business formerly conducted by his father-in-law, consisting of a stock of general merchandise on North Queen Street. He had been in the business only a short time when he expanded his enterprise by purchasing the commissary of the Standard Stone and Lime Company's Quarry and also the commissary of the Crawford Woolen Company and another general store on South Queen Street. To this growing and flourishing business he has given strict attention and has made an unqualified success as a merchant. He is also a director in the old National Bank and chairman of its executive committee, also a director of the Berkeley Woolen Company of Martinsburg, West Virginia.

In 1906 Mr. Smith built the substantial residence now occupied by his family on South Queen Street. At the age of twenty-four he married Miss Minnie Belle Bowers, a native of Martinsburg and daughter of John A. and Lucy (Orem) Bowers. Mr. and Mrs. Smith have one son, Charles Granville, Jr., and their only daughter died in infancy. They are members of the Trinity Episcopal Church, of which he is a vestryman. He is affiliated with Robert White Lodge No. 67, A. F. and A. M., has been an official in the lodge for thirteen years, and is a member of Washington Lodge No. 1, Knights of Pythias, and of Martinsburg Lodge No. 778, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. He is also a member of the Martinsburg Rotary Club.

HON. JOSEPH HENRY McDERMOTT. The builders of empires have their counterparts in the men who establish, organize and develop vast commercial and industrial enterprises that make communities centers of thriving trade and carry their names to various other parts of the world. Such men must possess many qualities. Their insight into business conditions must be keen and far-reaching, their knowledge of men profound, and their ability to grasp opportunities, unlimited. Without commercial and industrial interests no community progresses, for such enterprises are the very life of a city. The investment and attraction of capital, the employment of labor, and the consequent opening of new avenues of endeavor to meet newly-created demands, all infuse blood into the veins of a section and endow it with renewed vigor and strength. Morgantown is an excellent example of the above statement, and one of the men who has been largely responsible for the desirable condition of affairs now existing in this thriving community is the Hon. Joseph Henry McDermott, a leading operator in the oil and gas industries, and a man whose connection with politics has made his name nationally known.

Mr. McDermott was born near Meadville, Crawford County, Pennsylvania, July 28, 1871, a son of Thomas and Samantha (Johnson) McDermott. Thomas McDermott was born in Canada, a son of John and Mary (Kennedy) McDermott, the former a native of Roscommon and the latter of Sligo County, Ireland. His father was a pioneer lumberman of Ontario, having a residence on Georgian Bay in that province, where John and Mary McDermott passed the remainder of their lives.

Thomas McDermott came to the United States for the purpose of becoming a Union soldier during the war between the states, and enlisted at Buffalo, New York, in 1865. Before he got to the front, however, hostilities had ceased, and after he had received his honorable discharge he engaged in the lumber business near Meadville, Pennsylvania, making staves which he shipped to Titusville, Pennsylvania, where they were converted into oil barrels. In 1876 he entered into contract work in the Bradford (Pennsylvania) oil fields for ten years, and was afterwards engaged in contracting in Butler County, Pennsylvania, and at Pittsburgh and Little Washington, that state, and then came to Mount Morris, West Virginia, whence he came to Morgantown in 1889. Going from Morgantown to Fairmont in his later years, he died at the latter city in 1911, after some years of retirement. His widow, who still makes her home at Fairmont, West Virginia, was born in Beaver County, Pennsylvania, the daughter of Samuel and Nancy (Laughlin) Johnson, she being a member of the old and prominent Laughlin family of Pennsylvania.

Joseph Henry McDermott attended the public schools of his native community, and at the age of fifteen years joined his father in the latter's business, continuing with him in all of his operations until the elder man's retirement, when the son assumed the responsibility of the entire operations. At the present time, however, he confines his gas and oil operations to the Monongalia County fields, with other interests in California. He is president and owner of the J. H. McDermott Company, president of the Moore Tex Oil Company, president of the New York and California Oil Company and president of the Armor Cord Rubber Company of Morgantown, operating in California, and holds financial interests in other companies.

In the domain of politics and public affairs Mr. McDermott ott is one of the leaders of the republican party of West Virginia and of the nation. In 1904 he was elected to the West Virginia Senate, serving in the sessions of 1905, 1906, 1907 and 1908, and was president of that body in 1907. He was a Taft presidential elector in 1908, receiving seventy-seven votes more than any other man on the entire republican ticket, either state or national. He was elected a member of the Republican National Committee for West Virginia in 1918, and re-elected in 1920, and continues a member of that organization. He has been active in state politics since the time of United States Senators Nathan Scott and Stephen Elkins, and managed the campaign of United States Senator David Elkins when the latter was living in France.

Mr. McDermott is a member of the Duquesne Club, of Pittsburgh; the Edgewater Country Club, of Charleston, West Virginia; and the Country Club, of Morgantown. He so holds membership in Union Lodge No. 4, Free and Accepted Masons, of Morgantown, and has received all the degrees up to the thirty-second, including the Scottish and York Rites and Knights Templars in West Virginia. He is member of the Mystic Shrine and one of the few living charter members of the Scottish Rite in this state.

Mr. McDermott served as quartermaster general with a rank of captain on Governor Atkinson's staff at a time when the staff was a part of the National Guard. Following Governor Atkinson's term as governor, Mr. McDermott was made a member of the brigade staff, with the rank of captain, and Governor Dawson appointed him one of five captains to serve as the governor's military advisory board.

Mr. McDermott married Miss Louise Jane McLane, the daughter of Dr. Charles H. McLane, a well-known physician and surgeon of Morgantown, and to this union there have been born two children: Jane and Joseph H., Jr.

HARRY BANK. As a man of affairs or as a patriotic citizen no one is better or more favorably known in McDowell County than Harry Bank, a department store owner who went into business there on an exceedingly modest scale and has kept that business growing and prospering in proportion to the general development of this locality.

Mr. Bank was born in Russia, April 15, 1872, of Jewish parents, Kamper and Sarah Bank. He acquired his education in old country schools, but did not know a word of English when he came to the United States at the age of seventeen. For three years he lived in Baltimore, and in that city he laid the foundation for his Americanism. While sitting in his days working and learning the methods of an American store, he spent hours at night studying to equip himself with a knowledge of English. Then, about 1891, Mr. Bank came to Kimball and made an unpretentious start as a general merchant. Being cautious, very reliable in all his dealings, he has built up a department store that handles the merchandise required in this community. Because of his high standing as a man of affairs and his thorough business integrity Mr. Bank has been widely sought as an adviser and co-operator in movements affecting the welfare of his section. He was appointed a member of the Governor's staff. Among other extensive interests in this section he is a director of the First National Bank of Kimball and a large stockholder in the Saffy Pocahontas Coal Company.

In 1895, at Baltimore, Mr. Bank married Miss Ida Michelson. They have four children, Sadie, Bernard, Marie and Etta. Sadie is the wife of Jack Leibman, of Welch.

Mr. Bank is a Scottish Rite Mason and Shriner and a member of the Elks. Everyone in this part of McDowell County respects the ability and relies implicitly upon Mr. Bank's high character and good judgment. He is a man who has come up through struggles, and few men with the advantages of birth and education in America have gone farther along the highway to real substantial success than is Kimball merchant.

JOHN H. BANE, cashier of the Clark National Bank at North Fork, McDowell County, took up business very early in his life, has had a wide and varied experience, and for nearly twenty years has been connected with banking.

Mr. Bane was born at Bell Springs, Pulaski County, Virginia, May 26, 1877, and is of old Virginia stock of English and Scotch descent. His parents, John H. and Elizabeth E. (Lloyd) Bane, were both born in Virginia, his father being a substantial farmer in that state. For many years he was a deacon in the Baptist Church. John H. Bane acquired a common school education, and was not privileged to attend school after he was fourteen. Following that he worked on the farm, clerked in a general store at Bell Springs, and divided his time between the store and the farm until he was about twenty. During the next two years he did clerical work in the general offices of the Norfolk & Western Railroad at Roanoke, and from there came to West Virginia and established himself in the retail grocery business at Welch. After about two years he disposed of the store and, returning to Virginia, engaged in the general mercantile business at Christiansburg. At the end of the third year he gave up his store to accept the position of assistant cashier in the First National Bank of Christiansburg. He was with that institution four years, and there laid the foundation of his training as a banker. He was next cashier of the First National Bank of Pineville, West Virginia, two years, and in 1914 came to the Clark National Bank at North Fork as cashier. He is also a director of the bank. During the war he was a leader in promoting the success of all the loan drives and also the drives for the Red Cross and Salvation Army in his community.

Mr. Bane married Miss Mary Myrtle Conner, of Floyd, Virginia, in 1911. Her parents, Rev. David D. and Alice M. (Pugh) Conner, are natives of Virginia and her father is a minister in the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Mr. and Mrs. Bane's children are Elizabeth Josephine, John H., Jr., and David E. The family are members of the Baptist Church and Mr. Bane for a number of years has been superintendent of the Sunday school and a deacon in the church. He is treasurer of the Masonic Lodge and Chapter at North Fork.

LESLIE C. FOWLKES has been a progressive factor in the business affairs of Keystone, McDowell County, for the past ten years, and the greater part of that time has been an executive officer in the First National Bank of Keystone.

Mr. Fowlkes was born September 1, 1888, on a farm near Chatham, Virginia, son of W. A. and Nannie (Yates) Fowlkes, also native Virginians. His father was a successful farmer in that locality, and for two years he had charge of all construction and maintenance work on roads and highways in his district. He was an active member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Leslie C. Fowlkes grew up in the country, attended common schools there and in Chatham, and completed a regular business course, including stenography and bookkeeping, in the Piedmont Business College of Lynchburg, Virginia.

Soon after completing his business college education, in 1912, Mr. Fowlkes came to Keystone, West Virginia, and for the first eighteen months divided his time between bookkeeping and stenographic work for Attorney Partlow and the bank. Since then all his time has been taken up by his duties in the bank, where for one year he was bookkeeper and in 1915 appointed assistant cashier. In July, 1917, he was made cashier, and during the period of the World war he had to perform all the detail as well as general business management in the absence of the employees who went into the service. The First National Bank of Keystone is one of the most prosperous institutions in McDowell County, has a capital of $50,000, surplus and undivided profits of $70,000, and deposits of over $500,000. The president of the bank is D. E. French, of Bluefield.

In 1915, at Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, Mr. Fowlkes married Miss Catherine Rish, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Rish, natives of Pennsylvania. They have two children, Leslie C., Jr., and John William. Mr. Fowlkes is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. In Masonry he is affiliated with Algoma Lodge at North Fork, Howard

Chapter at North Fork, the Knights Templar Commandery at Bramwell and Beni-Kedem Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Charleston. He is also affiliated with the Knights of Pythias and in politics is rather independent, though normally he votes the democratic ticket.

McHENRY TABOR, M. D. The earnest and skillful labors of Dr. McHenry Tabor as a physician and surgeon have been applied to the benefit of the important coal mining communities of McDowell County. He is held in the highest personal as well as professional esteem in the coal mining town of Crumpler, which is located on a branch of the Norfolk & Western Railway, connecting with the main line at North Fork.

Doctor Tabor was born at Camp Creek, Mercer County, West Virginia, August 15, 1885, and is of Old Virginia ancestry, more remotely of Dutch and Irish origin. His parents were George and Olive (Worrell) Tabor, the former a native of Tazewell and the latter of Carroll, Virginia. His father served in a Virginia regiment under General Wise during the war between the states. After this service he returned to his farm and later for fifteen years was in the general merchandise business. He was an active member of the Christian Church.

McHenry Tabor attended the common schools in Mercer County, finished his work in the State Normal at Athens in 1905, and took his medical course in the Medical College at Richmond, Virginia, where he graduated in 1910. For six months he was an interne in the City Hospital at Richmond, and then began his work in the West Virginia coal fields. For some seven or eight years he handled a very successful general practice at Glenalum, and in 1918 came to Crumpler in charge of the medical work for the Zenith mines of the United Pocahontas Coal Company. During the World war he made two attempts to get into the army service, but the authorities said that he could not possibly do a greater or more patriotic work than he was doing as a mining physician. Doctor Tabor is a member of the County, West Virginia State and American Medical Associations, is a Royal Arch and Knight Templar Mason and Shriner, and a member of the Episcopal Church.

In 1915, at Glenalum, he married Miss Elizabeth L. Mitchell, daughter of Daniel and Fannie (Loving) Mitchell, of Abingdon, Virginia. Her father was a banker and died in March, 1921, at the age of seventy-eight. Mr. and Mrs. Tabor have one daughter, Nancy Overton.

DRURY D. MORAN. One of the ablest, most successful and most forceful lawyers engaged in the practice of civil law in Wyoming County is Drury D. Moran, of Mullens. Quiet, determined and industrious, and at the same time a brilliant and original speaker, he possesses a convincing directness which makes him a remarkable advocate and a strong citizen. He has likewise been prominent in public life, as well as in business, and at present is at the head of several leading enterprises of Pineville and Mullens.

Mr. Moran was born on Pinnacle Creek, within five miles of the present site of Mullens, January 27, 1880, and is a son of Stephen H. and Hortense (Evans) Moran. Stephen H. Moran was born in Floyd County, Virginia, in 1855, and was seventeen years of age when he went to Raleigh County, West Virginia. When eighteen years old he went to Pinnacle Creek, was married at that time, and settled down to a life which was devoted to agricultural pursuits and contracting in timber. He became an extensive landholder, had one of the best farms in his region, and was known as the most extensive farmer in the upper end of the county. He handled large lumber contracts, buying and selling timber, and cleared the right-of-way through Wyoming County for the Virginian Railroad and for the Winding Gulf branch of that line. Mr. Moran was a democrat in politics. He was a man of the strictest integrity and a faithful member of the Primitive Baptist Church, in the faith of which he died in August, 1918. He was not old enough to see service in the war between the states, but two of his brothers fought as Confederate soldiers in that struggle and met death on the battlefield. Mrs. Moran survives her husband and resides on the old home place. Their children were as follows: Eli, who is carrying on operations on the old home farm; Drury D., of this review; John, who is a mill foreman at the Alph Pocahontas Mine; Meda, the wife of Bailey Mills, a miner at Beckley; Hulda, who died at the age of thirty-six years, as the wife of Thomas Shrewsbury, of Wyoming County; Vina, the wife of Joseph Wood, Wyoming County farmer; Martha, the wife of Wetzel Aderson, a miner; Mazy, the wife of Everett Green, an employee of the Virginian Railroad; and Ida, the wife of Perspence, of Wyoming County.

Drury D. Moran received his early education in the Wyoming County schools, following which he taught school for three years. In 1901 he joined Company M, Twentieth United States Infantry, studied and taught mathematics at Fort Sheridan, and in 1902 was sent to the Philippine Islands, where he was an instructor in mathematics. He received his honorable discharge at sea, while on his return to the United States, and on his return to West Virginia became a clerk in a grocery store at Mullens, following which he opened the first soft drink factory at that place. During the Taft administration he served as postmaster at Mullens, and then commenced the study of law. He was a student at the State University from 1913 to 1917 and in February, 1916, was admitted to the bar. He has since been engaged in a constantly growing practice, making a specialty of civil cases. His business connections are prominent and important, and he is president of the Wyoming County Bank at Pineville, vice president of the Wyoming Ice and Bottling Company at Mullens, and president of the Wyoming Theatre Company at Mullens.

Soon after his return from the State University, Mr. Moran became chairman of the Republican County Executive Committee of Wyoming County, and in the fall of 1918 was elected to serve in the West Virginia House of Delegates, where he was chairman of the military committee and member of the following committees: Judiciary, election and privileges, private corporations and joint stock companies, roads and internal navigation, claims and grievances and mines and mining. In the recent election he was the nominee of his party for the Circuit judgeship, but the democratic vote in Mingo County caused his defeat. Mr. Moran is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and he and Mrs. Moran belong to the Baptist Church. Early in the World war he was admitted to the Plattsburg Officers Training Camp, but while there was stricken with appendicitis, which incapacitated him for service.

On October 7, 1905, Mr. Moran was united in marriage with Miss Mattie L. Williams, a daughter of A. R. Williams, a well-known and successful agriculturist of Wyoming County.

STUART G. ALDHIZER is one of the younger bankers of the state, is cashier of the First National Bank of Kimba and his associates and friends regard him as one of the coming men in the financial affairs of his native state.

Mr. Aldhizer was born at Broadway, Virginia, October 1, 1894, of an old Virginia family and of Welsh and Irish ancestry. His parents, George S. and Alice A. (Moore) Aldhizer, were both natives of Virginia. His father was one of the early settlers of Broadway, made his start in the drug business, but eventually that became a side line in his varied enterprises as banker and manufacturer. He became president of the bank at Broadway, and operated flour and feed milling establishment. For a number of years he was a member of the council, but never accepted the office of mayor. He was a deacon in the Baptist Church and a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows.

Stuart G. Aldhizer had a common and high school education at Broadway, graduating from high school in 1911. His higher education was acquired in the Richmond College, a Baptist institution, now the University of Richmond, where he finished his course in 1915, but did not graduate, owing to the death of his older brother. In that year he became bookkeeper for the McDowell National Bank at Welch, West Virginia, and subsequently was promoted to teller.

He left his duties with the bank to enlist on December 15, 1917, joining the Aviation Corps at Kelly Field

L. D. Moran

Texas, and remained there in the ground school of instruction for eight months. He was then transferred to the Field Artillery at Camp Taylor, Kentucky, was in training eleven weeks, and on November 28, 1918, after the signing of the armistice, he accepted his discharge instead of a lieutenant's commission. Returning to Welch, he resumed his duties as teller in the bank, and seventeen months later came to Kimball as cashier of the First National Bank. He is also one of the directors of the bank, and his personal popularity is an important factor in the prosperity of the institution.

Mr. Aldhizer is a member of the Baptist Church, is a Royal Arch and Knight Templar Mason and Shriner and exemplifies a thorough progressiveness in all community affairs.

WILLIAM BARRICK. A finer example of the West Virginia mountaineer type, of perfect physical manhood, with a physical and moral courage that has never been daunted, resourceful, skillful, at all times adequate for his performance and duties, it would be difficult to conceive than that illustrated by William Barrick, manager of the Tidewater Coal & Coke Company of Vivian.

Mr. Barrick has lived in and around mines, and has done the practical work of the miner and the mining official since he was a boy. He was born in Mineral County, West Virginia, September 25, 1874, son of George G. and Nannie W. (Matthews) Barrick, the former a native of West Virginia and the latter of Richmond, Virginia. George G. Barrick was likewise a coal miner and one of the first in West Virginia, becoming associated with the Davis Coal & Coke Company. William Barrick acquired a common school education in Mineral County. At the age of fifteen he went to work with his father around the mines, and did a varied routine of duties, cleaning up around the track, car oiler, and in other capacities until he was made a regular miner. Then came advancement through all the grades of promotion in and around a coal mine, and he is master of practically every detail of mining technique. By 1897 he was mine foreman for the Thomas Mine in Tucker County and of the Davis Coal and Coke Company, serving in this capacity four years. Subsequently he was foreman for the Oakland Coal & Coke Company in Preston County. His next work was at Weaver, where he was foreman of the No. 1 Mine of the Maryland Smokeless Coal & Coke Company, and on being promoted to general mine foreman had six mines under his direction. When the Davis Coal & Coke Companies bought these properties he remained with the corporation as superintendent of mines. On leaving Weaver Mr. Barrick accepted an invitation to take charge of some coal operations at Raton, New Mexico, and on returning East spent about four years at Lowmoor, Virginia, and then joined the Berwind White Coal & Mining Company, the largest operators in West Virginia, as superintendent of operations. He was with this concern nine years, and in that time he opened and developed five coal properties in addition to those being operated when he joined the company. Since 1918 Mr. Barrick has been located at Vivian in McDowell County as superintendent of mines for the Houston Colliery Corporation and the King and Tidewater Coal & Coke Companies. Mr. Barrick, his associates say, is the only real native born West Virginian who has reached his high responsibilities in the coal industry as a result of his own unaided efforts. He has with him his two sons, and they resemble him in many particulars.

Mr. Barrick stands six feet one inch high, weighs about 200 pounds, and his carriage and appearance reveal him the perfect athlete he is. As a boy he was a great hunter, a perfect shot with the rifle, and his own sons have emulated his skill in these directions.

In 1896, at Thomas, West Virginia, Mr. Barrick married Mary Frances Conner, daughter of John and Minerva Conner. Her father was a farmer and carpenter. The six children of Mr. and Mrs. Barrick are William R., George M., Willard Virginia, Joseph Benjamin, Travis Earl and Frances Adelaide, while another daughter, Ruth, died at the age of ten months. William married Miss Ellen Straughan, of Bluefield, daughter of James A. Straughan, superintendent of coal mines at Hellier, Kentucky. William Barrick was a member of the Students Army Training Corps at Morgantown during the World war, and had orders for overseas duty when the armistice was signed. The son George attended the Greenbrier Military Institute and took a mining course at West Virginia University and was given a first class certificate as mine foreman and mine rescue and first aid. The son Joseph is a student in the Virginia School of Technology. Travis is attending Emory and Henry College of Virginia. The family are members of the Baptist Church and Mr. Barrick is a Royal Arch Mason and Odd Fellow. Mr. Barrick is the sort of man to attract attention and admiration everywhere, but particularly when he is observed at his post of duty. A brief acquaintance reveals the fact that he is one of the best educated men in this section of the state. This is largely due to the habit of reading which he derived as a boy from his mother, who was a school teacher and who influenced his choice of good books. Mr. Barrick's main hobby is baseball, and wherever he has had his duties in mining circles he has organized and maintained a ball club, and some of the teams with which he played and managed established a fine record in the different coal mining sections of West Virginia.

WILLIAM A. CREAGER learned banking in Cincinnati, and for a number of years has been associated with the First National Bank of North Fork, McDowell County. He is cashier of this institution, one of the largest and strongest in the county, with total resources of over $1,000,000. It has a capital of $100,000, and its surplus and undivided profits account nearly equals the capital.

Mr. Creager was born at Loveland, Ohio, March 22, 1873, son of Leamon and Mary Kelly (Alcoke) Creager, natives of Ohio. Through his father he is of Pennsylvanian German ancestry, while his mother was of old Virginia stock of English descent. Leamon Creager served in the Home Guards of Ohio during the Civil war, spent his active life as a farmer, and was never in politics to any extent.

William A. Creager acquired a common and high school education at Loveland. For several years he worked on a farm, clerked in stores, and on account of failing health went West, to Oregon. He was in Oregon when the Spanish-American war broke out, and he then joined the Second Oregon Regiment of Volunteers, with which command he went to Manila and for eleven months was in that city doing hospital work as acting steward.

Mr. Creager in 1907 entered the employ of the Fifth National Bank of Cincinnati in the transit department, and was with that institution for five years. With this thorough metropolitan experience in banking he came to North Fork, West Virginia, in 1912 as clerk and bookkeeper for the First National Bank. He was soon promoted to assistant cashier, and since March, 1916, has been cashier. He is an able banker, a conservative business man, and is regarded as one of the ablest citizens of his community.

September 1, 1921, at Tazewell, Virginia, Mr. Creager married Miss Jane A. Thompson, whose father is a prominent dentist of that place.

WILKIN B. STEVENS, M. D. Considered either as a business man or professional man there are few individuals in McDowell County who have a broader and heavier program of responsibilities than Doctor Stevens, whose home is at Eckman. Doctor Stevens came into this locality a number of years ago as assistant to H. D. Hatfield, then chief surgeon of Miners Hospital No. 1 at Welch. When Doctor Hatfield became governor of the State of West Virginia Doctor Stevens remained as his logical and well qualified successor, and he has since taken on numerous other duties. He is practically the official and unofficial head of all the medical and welfare activities of a large group of mining corporations, and is undoubtedly one of the most popular men with all classes in this section of the state.

Doctor Stevens was born at Milltown, Alabama, May 14, 1877, and his early life was in an environment where he was practically compelled to put forth his best efforts in order to secure preparation for the career he had chosen. His parents, Joseph H. and Martha Jane (Blackburn)

Stevens, were natives of Alabama, the former of English and the latter of German ancestry. Joseph H. Stevens was a farmer and cotton gin proprietor, and the latter industry was the chief support of his family. He was a very active member of the Christian Church. Wilkin B. Stevens acquired a common school education in Milltown, also attended the academy which took the place of a high school there. He was twelve years of age when his father died, and that threw upon his shoulders much of the work performed by his father, all of which he did in addition to going to school. He did all the bookkeeping for the cotton gin. By the time he was twenty-one he had finished a course in the Milltown Academy, and the following year he operated the cotton gin. Out of his savings he entered, in 1899, the Maryland Medical College at Baltimore, and was graduated M. D. in 1904. The following eighteen months he was assistant to Doctor Gundry in the Relay Sanitarium near Baltimore.

From there he came to Bramwell, West Virginia, to take up mining practice as assistant to Dr. W. R. Whitman in 1905. This work was in connection with the Booth Bowen Coal & Coke Company, Caswell Creek Coal & Coke Company, Buckeye Coal & Coke Company. On April 1, 1909, Doctor Stevens became assistant to Dr. H. D. Hatfield at Kimball. Doctor Hatfield was elected governor in 1912, and Doctor Stevens succeeded him in charge of all the work of the Pulaski Iron Company, Empire Coal & Coke Company, Bottom Creek Coal & Coke Company, Tidewater Coal & Coke Company, Kink Coal Company, Cirrus Coal & Coke Company. In addition to this he has since been delegated the medical work of the Houston Coal & Coke Company, Keystone Coal & Coke Company, the Carswell operation of the Houston Colliery Company. He is now at the head of a well organized medical and surgical staff, with five assistants, and he has personal supervision of the medical work for all the various properties. He not only has charge of the practical work but the medical supplies for all the various companies.

Doctor Stevens is a director of the First National Bank of Keystone and is president of the First National Bank of Kimball. He was one of the organizers and the first president of the latter bank. He is a Scottish Rite Mason and Shriner, an Elk and a member of the Baptist Church.

In Philadelphia in 1909 Doctor Stevens married Miss Rosetta Barlow Davidson, daughter of Samuel and Elizabeth (Hockinson) Davidson. Her parents were born in Pennsylvania. Doctor and Mrs. Stevens have three children, Joseph Blackburn, Richard Wilkin and Ethel Jane.

HON. GEORGE A. HEROLD, of Cowen, is in 1922 representative of Webster County in the House of Delegates of the West Virginia Legislature, and is one of the substantial business men and influential citizens of this section of the state, besides which his is the distinction of being a scion of one of the sterling pioneer families of that part of Virginia that now constitutes the commonwealth of West Virginia, the new state having not been formed until about a decade after his birth, which occurred on a farm in Nicholas County, August 23, 1855. Mr. Herold is a son of Anderson C. and Talitha (McClung) Herold, the former of whom was born in Pocahontas County, in December, 1825, and the latter of whom likewise was born in what is now West Virginia, the year of her nativity having been 1827. After their marriage the parents established their residence on a pioneer farm in Nicholas County, on Muddlety Creek, and there the father developed one of the best farm properties in the county, his substantial financial success having been furthered by raising and dealing in live stock. He was one of the honored and representative citizens of Nicholas County at the time of his death, in March, 1914, and his widow passed away in 1921, when in her ninety-third year, both having been most zealous members and liberal supporters of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and Mr. Herold having been unwavering in his support of the cause of the democratic party. Of their six children the eldest is Lanty W., who is a prominent farmer in Nicholas County and who has served as a member of the County Court; John M. likewise is a representative farmer of that county, as is also Henry W., who has achieved marked success in the raising of live stock of superior types and who has served as sheriff of his native county; George A., of this review, was the next in order of birth; Fielding D. remains on the old homestead and is a successful agriculturist and stock-grower; and Charles F. is a substantial merchant and farmer at Muddlety in Nicholas County.

George A. Herold was reared on the old homestead farm, and that he made good use of his early educational advantages is shown in the fact that for ten years he was a successful and popular teacher in the free and the select schools of his native county. For six years he was engaged in the general merchandise business at Hookersville, Nicholas County, as a member of the firm of Herold Brothers, and he then erected a store building at Herold, Braxton County, where he developed a prosperous mercantile enterprise, besides buying and shipping live stock and continuing his active association with farm industry. In the early '90s Mr. Herold disposed of his mercantile interests and removed to Webster County, where he has continued in the general merchandise business, besides which he is the owner of a valuable landed estate of 3,000 acres, located in Webster, Braxton and Nicholas counties. He was for ten years president of the First National Bank at Webster Springs, the county seat, and gave six years of loyal and progressive service as a member of the County Court. He has been an active factor in the councils and campaign work of the democratic party, and as a candidate on the party ticket he was elected representative of the county in the Lower House of the State Legislature in the fall of 1920, his work in this connection having been marked by characteristic loyalty and by earnest promotion of wise legislation of constructive order. While a member of that law-making body he introduced the enginies bill, health certificate before marriage, which carried in the House fifty-eight for, and twenty against. The Senate made a slight amendment and voted solidly for it with the exception of one vote. The committee on rules kept it off the special calendar before the lower body could concur with the Senate on the amendment until the Legislature closed, thereby defeating his bill. He is exceptionally proud of having introduced that bill. Mr. Herold and his wife are most zealous members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, to whose support he has been a liberal contributor, having given a donation of $1,000 to the Centenary Fund, and $2,000 to the Educational Fund. He has been specially prominent in Sunday school work for fully thirty years, during the major part of which period he has served as superintendent of the Sunday school.

Mr. Herold chose as his wife Miss Lillie Viola Hill, daughter of the late John Hill, of Nicholas County, and of the nine children of this union three are deceased; Rose P. is the wife of James N. Berthy, Jr.; Walter H. was the next in order of birth and resides in Webster County; Mamie R. is the wife of Joseph McQueen; Ernest H. is married, and he and his wife maintain their home at Cowen; and Mary Louise and Ruth Virginia remain at the parental home.

HARRY E. FLESHER, through almost half the life of the institution has been superintendent of the West Virginia Industrial School for Boys at Pruntytown. He began teaching when a boy.

The history of the school is sketched by Dr. Callahan elsewhere in this publication. However, it may be stated here that it was established by legislative act of 1889, and located at Pruntytown, Taylor County donating for the purpose, buildings and property that had formerly been used for the old county seat. The name Reform School was changed to the present title in 1913. The school was opened July 1, 1890, and the successive superintendents have been C. C. Showalter, David Shaw, J. C. Gluck, O. E. Darnall, and D. S. Hammond, who was succeeded in 1907 by Mr. Flesher, whose service covers a period of fifteen years. In recent years the state has pursued a more intelligent and liberal policy toward such institutions. Since Mr. Flesher became superintendent the farm area has been increased from that of 170 acres to two thousand, and the population of the school has almost doubled, it being now about four hundred. There is a ten-month school, with graded courses of study, conducted by trained woman teachers. An appropriation of $100,000 has been made available for a new central school building to be erected in 1923, and the construction of a superintendent's home makes available additional facilities for the boys. Farming is the primary industrial occupation of the school, but opportunities are being increased for mechanical training. There is no competition with free labor, except as it may come in the manufacture of material for state use. Nearly everything required by the boys is made in the school, including shoes, clothing, flour, plumbing, plastering and painting.

Harry E. Flesher was born near the village of Ellenboro, Ritchie County, March 28, 1872, and represents one of the very old families of the state. His great-great-grandfather, Henry Flesher, was a soldier in the Revolutionary war, and for his services located a grant of eight hundred acres of land in Lewis County. After settling there he was shot by Indians, but recovered. He was buried within what is now the city limits of Weston. He had numerous sons and daughters, the descent coming down through his son Adam and his grandson Isaac. Crayton Flesher, a son of Isaac and father of Superintendent Flesher, was one of four brothers who fought on the Union side in the Civil war, the others being Adam, Porter and Hamden. All survived except Hamden, who was killed in a battle in Pocahontas County, and his body now rests in the National Cemetery at Grafton. Crayton and his younger brother, Adam, as youths walked from Janelew to Parkersburg, where the former apprenticed himself as a carpenter and the latter as a saddler and harness-maker. They were journeymen at their trades when the Civil war came on. After the war Crayton Flesher was a farmer, merchant and building contractor in Ritchie County, and died in 1879. He married Harriet R. Taylor, daughter of J. T. Taylor, of Pleasants County, and she is still living at Williamstown. Her six sons were: Clinton W., an attorney at Gassaway, West Virginia; Harry E., Thornton E., a farmer near Marietta Ohio; Forest F., in the oil fields of Louisiana; Okey J., connected with the automobile industry at Jackson, Michigan; and Crayton O., who was drowned when a young man.

Harry E. Flesher was about seven years old when his father died, and he had to develop a sense of personal responsibility very young. He had little more than a common-school education himself when he taught his first term of country school at the age of fifteen, and he continued teaching while attending the Fairmont State Normal School, and sometime after completing his work there was formally graduated in 1897. From rural schools he took charge as principal of the high school at Keyser for eight years, and for two years was superintendent of schools at Kingwood, just prior to becoming superintendent of the state institution at Pruntytown.

He is a republican voter without participation in politics, is a Scottish Rite Mason and Shriner, a past noble grand of the Odd Fellows and past chancellor of the Knights of Pythias, and is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. He resides at all the church, Sabbath School and chapel services at the school. February 13, 1912, in Middlesex County, Virginia, he married Miss Martha Johnston Glenn, who was born and reared in that county, daughter of Richard M. and Ann Maria (Blake) Glenn. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Flesher are: Martha Glenn, born in 1913; Harry Edgar, born in 1914; Bettye Games, born in 1917; and James Lakin, born October 15, 1921.

WALTER ELBERT LEACH, county superintendent of schools in Taylor County, made a conscious choice of educational work early in his career, and in a measure was directed into that vocation through traditions of learning and schools inherent in his family. Mr. Leach has been identified with the educational activities of Taylor County now for nearly twenty years.

He was born in Pleasant District, Barbour County, January 16, 1834. The Leach family belongs to a period of pioneering in the Shenandoah Valley of old Virginia. Grandfather Enoch Leach left that valley and moved to Taylor County, West Virginia, was a farmer, possessed a fair education, and died in Calhoun County of that state. He reared two sons and four daughters. His son Elias Leach was eight years old when the family came to West Virginia and he served three years as a Union soldier, enlisting in Barbour County in the 17th West Virginia Infantry. He received promotion while in the army to captain. After the war he devoted his life to his farm, and died in 1911, at the age of seventy-four. He had served as a member of the County Board of Education, was a staunch republican, and member of the Methodist Church. He married Cinderella Gall, whose people were among the first settlers of Barbour County, their home being near Philippi, on farms. Mrs. Elias Leach is living at Webster, West Virginia. She was the mother of nine children, seven of whom reached mature years and five are living: Mrs. Margaret Felton, of Taylor County; Mrs. Elizabeth A. McNemar, of Taylor County; Mollie B., wife of Floyd Talbott, of Berryburg, West Virginia; Hollis D., of Wendel; and Walter E.

Walter E. Leach spent his boyhood near the hamlet of Pleasant Creek, and in the intervals of school attendance worked on the farm. He completed a high school course in Grafton and at the age of twenty-one began teaching in the country districts of Taylor County, and later attended the Fairmont Normal School. From 1905 he kept steadily at his work in the schoolroom until elected county superintendent, and in that time had been principal of schools in the communities of Simpson, Wendel and Webster. On his highly creditable record as an individual school administrator he made his race for office in 1918. He was nominated at the republican primaries and elected as successor of Roy J. Martin, taking office in July, 1919.

Mr. Leach began his administration with a substantial program for the securing of better buildings and better school equipment, and since then four new buildings have been erected and completely equipped. He has insisted upon teachers following out the course of studies adopted by the State Board of Education, has striven for better physical conditions, for better qualifications of teachers, and has done something toward encouraging common school graduates to continue their work in high school. Numerous teachers meetings are held for the discussion of practical subjects, and through two extension classes opportunities have been provided for the teacher to advance and improve and prepare for credits in the State Normal Schools. Mr. Leach is a thorough school man, and the subject of education is at once his vocation and his hobby.

He is affiliated with the Modern Woodmen of America, the Loyal Order of Moose, and he has been a member of the board of the Methodist Episcopal Church, his wife being also a Methodist. December 31, 1905, in Taylor County, he married Miss Emma B. Haddix, a native of Barbour County, and daughter of John W. and Savanna (Keller) Haddix. Mrs. Leach graduated from high school in her native county, and after attending the Fairmont State Normal School began teaching and is still carrying some work as an educator in Taylor County. Mr. and Mrs. Leach have two children, Wauldron Dowden and Blaine Harold.

CLOYD M. CRANE, representing one of the oldest and best known families of Preston County, has given his best years to commercial work, chiefly as a commercial salesman, and as such he is known all over an extensive territory adjacent to the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad. Mr. Crane lives at Terra Alta and is proprietor of the Highland Cottage, one of the much frequented summer homes of the mountain city.

Mr. Crane was born about three miles from Albright, upon the mountain, June 21, 1868, son of John Calvin Crane, one of the successful farmers and stockmen of that region. Cloyd M. Crane is a brother of Frank Crane, of Albright, and under his name more of the particulars are given concerning this family in Preston County from the beginning of its settlement.

Cloyd M. Crane left the farm at the age of seventeen, after having acquired a public school education, and after teaching a term of country school near Albright he became a clerk at Bruceton Mills for Isaac Armstrong & Son. A short time later he returned to Albright and with James Posten bought a general merchandise store. He continued this business for two years and then established another store at Elkins of the same character. Finally the Albright store was burned, and after disposing of the plant at Elkins Cloyd M. Crane became manager of a company store at Terra Alta. Later he went into Randolph County, where he was store manager for the McClure-Mabie Company, then for their successors, the Whitmer-Lane Lumber Company. It was from this service that Mr. Crane graduated into his career as a commercial salesman on the road. For two years he represented the Piedmont Grocery Company, opening up new territory along the Baltimore & Ohio between Piedmont and Grafton. During that time he was under the management of the well known sales manager M. J. Crooks. Leaving that firm Mr. Crane returned to Terra Alta, and from this point travelled on the road for the Pugh & Beaver Grocery Company until their Terra Alta house was sold to the Whittaker Grocery Company, and since then he has been one of the leaders on the sales force of that company.

For a number of years Mr. Crane has found both pleasure and profit in the business of accommodating the tourist traffic at Terra Alta. He has a generous home on top of the mountain, where he opened his doors to the friends and acquaintances who sought this beautiful spot for their summer vacations. Highland Cottage was built by William Kolhorst, but he failed in the enterprise, and Mr. Crane bought the uncompleted property, finished it and at times has enlarged it until the home and surrounding cottages now afford accommodations for seventy-five guests. The season here opens in June and continues until Labor Day.

Mr. Crane grew up in a republican home, cast his first presidential ballot for Benjamin Harrison, and has worked for his party without an undue degree of partisanship or exhausting himself as a campaigner. In 1912 he was nominated and elected to the House of Delegates, and in the session beginning in January, 1913, he was under Speaker George and his house colleague was Senator Coburn of Masontown. He was made chairman of one committee, was a member of the labor committee and was particularly interested in securing the election of a man from his section of the state for the United States Senate and also in securing some legislation upon the hotel question, and concerning the prohibition law of the state. Mr. Crane, to the best of his judgment, performed his duties for one term, and that satisfied his aspirations as a legislator. He was reared a Methodist, and is president of the Board of Trustees of the Terra Alta Church. He is affiliated with the Masonic Lodge and Chapter, the Commercial Travelers and several other fraternal orders.

In Preston County Mr. Crane married Miss Lona Feather, daughter of Michael E. and Mary (Albright) Feather, both representing some of the prominent family names of Preston County. Her maternal grandfather was Michael Albright. Mrs. Crane was born near Cranesville, one of three children, the other two being Bert C. Feather, of Pittsburgh, and Pearl, wife of Ed Harner, a farmer near Greensburg, Pennsylvania. Mr. and Mrs. Crane have two accomplished daughters. Jessie is the wife of Russell L. Smith, of Pittsburgh and has two children, Billie and Barbara Lee. Miss Willard Crane is a graduate of the Pittsburgh College for Women and is a teacher in a private school at Stamford, Connecticut.

WILLIAM HUBERT PENTONY. The people of Tunnelton know and respect William H. Pentony for the industry and faithfulness that have carried him through younger years of considerable struggle, for the success he has made as a merchant and business man, and his true citizenship at all times.

Mr. Pentony was born in Lyon District of Preston County, between Reedsville and Gladesville, March 28, 1875. His father, Thomas Pentony, was born in Ireland in 1842. As a young man he came to the United States, and in Preston County he married Matilda Jane Snider, whom he first met in Pennsylvania. Her parents were John S. and Susan (Fast) Snider, the former a farmer in West Virginia who lived in Taylor County until moving to the Lyon District of Preston County. Thomas Pentony died in 1898 and his widow on January 1, 1921. Of their children the only two now living are William H. and Lena, the latter the wife of Luther Helms, of Birds Creek, or Irish Ridge, Preston County.

William H. Pentony spent his early youth on the home farm and left there at the age of seventeen with only a common school education. Away from the farm his first employment was with the Watson Coal Company. For four years he was employed by that and other mining companies in the vicinity of Fairmont. Day labor furnished him a wage of a dollar and a quarter a day, and in 1898 he returned to Tunnelton, still depending upon day wages and frequently working for $1.15 per day. For one year he was also one of the proprietors of a livery business. For ten years Mr. Pentony continued as a worker in the local mines and in 1909 became associated with A. H. Halbritter, under the firm name of Halbritter & Company, and they bought the mercantile business of T. R. Shay. In April, 1917, Mr. Halbritter retired and since then Mr. Pentony has been the sole proprietor of what is now a very prosperous and well stocked establishment, one that has been developed from a small enterprise, its success being chiefly due to Mr. Pentony's concentrated energies as a merchant and his personal integrity. Mr. Pentony acquired his original capital for this business by borrowing a thousand dollars on some property he owned. That was his only source of credit. He has improved the corner where his business is located, is now one of the stockholders of the Tunnelton Bank, also a director in the same, was one of the organizers of the Racoon Valley Coal Company, and he owns farming land in Lyon District, including part of the place where he was born and reared, and owns one of the best pieces of residence property in Tunnelton. He is also a stockholder in the Glass Casket Company at Altoona, Pennsylvania.

Through his property management and business Mr. Pentony has contributed his services in a public way to the development of Tunnelton. He has not been in politics for office but some years ago, during the coal miners strike, he consented to serve as chief of police, and rendered valuable service in combating the general disorder that prevailed for a time. He is a staunch democrat, cast his first presidential vote a quarter of a century ago, and has attended congressional conventions. He helped nominate Junior Brown for Congress, and he was the first democrat to represent this district since the days of Willis L. Wilson. Mr. Pentony is a charter member of Tunnelton Lodge, Knights of Pythias, and during the twenty-one years since its organization he has missed only two meeting nights when possible to be there. He is also affiliated with Aurora Lodge, No. 43, F. & A. M., at Newburg, has taken the Perfection degree in Clarksburg, and the other Scottish Rite degrees at Wheeling.

At Tunnelton in April, 1903, Mr. Pentony married Miss Irma Maud Ashby, who was born at Austen, Preston County, August 15, 1883, daughter of Frank and Elizabeth (May) Ashby. Her parents were born near Fellowsville, Preston County, and her father was a Union soldier with a West Virginia regiment and was wounded while on duty. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Ashby were: Della, who married Henry Wright and is deceased; Minnie, wife of Clinton Stevens, of Hiora, West Virginia; William D. and Albert R., of Tunnelton; Pearl, who died in young manhood; Charles, of Hiora; Mrs. Pentony; and Elizabeth, wife of H. D. Zinn, of Tunnelton.

Mrs. Pentony was reared at Austen, Newburg and Tunnelton and acquired a public school education. Their home circle of children comprise six: Hilda Vivian, a student in the State University of West Virginia; Justus M., a sophomore, and Thelma C., a freshman, in the Tunnelton High School; Thomas D., John F. and Blanche Eleanor.

JOSEPH FRANK SMITH, who is more familiarly known by his second personal name, is successfully conducting a hotel in the Village of Cowen, Webster County, and is also the owner and operator of a well improved farm in this locality. He was born in Pleasants County, West Virginia, August 4, 1866, and is a son of George L. and Margaret E. (Frink) Smith, both natives of what is now Preston County, this state, where the former was born in 1842 and the latter in 1841, each having been reared on a pioneer farm in that county. After their marriage the parents remained on a farm in Preston County until their removal to Pleasants County, where George L. Smith purchased a farm, and he and his wife passed the remainder of their lives on this homestead, he having accumulated and developed a valuable farm estate of 285 acres and his prosperity having represented the results of his own energetic and well ordered activities. He and his wife were zealous members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and he was specially active in the work of its Sunday school. Mr. Smith was a stalwart republican in politics, and was loyal and public-spirited as a citizen, he having served as a member of the school board of his district. He survived his wife by many years and was about fifty-six years of age at the time of his death. Of their seven children there are living at the time of this writing, in the spring of 1922: Joseph F., of his sketch, the youngest of the number; William H., a prosperous farmer near Cleveland, Ohio; and Mary, who is the widow of James Riggs and resides at St. Marys, Pleasants County, West Virginia. All of the other children attained to maturity.

The home farm on which he was born was the stage of his youthful activities of Joseph Frank Smith, and his early educational discipline included that of the high school at St. Marys. He initiated his independent career when he was but sixteen years of age. He was employed in connection with the construction of the railroad line from Parkersburg to Kenova, where he served as superintendent of the work, and he continued his association with this line of railroad development about eight years. He purchased a lot in Buckhannon, erected a house on the same and finally sold the property at a distinct profit. After severing his connection with railroad construction he purchased the Summit Hotel at Cowen, and later he purchased a tract of timber land. He cut and manufactured the timber on this land, made development on the tract and eventually sold the same for farm usages, his financial returns from the various activities and the sale having been very appreciable. He is now the owner of the oldest farm in this section of the county, and has made the same one of the model places of this part of the state, the while he has here become a leader in the breeding and raising of Hereford cattle, improved Duroc-Jersey hogs, Shropshire sheep and White Leghorn poultry. His landed estate in Webster County comprises 300 acres. His original hotel at Cowen was destroyed by fire, and he then purchased the Central Hotel, which he has since successfully conducted. In connection with farm industry and business activities Mr. Smith has stood exponent of progressiveness, and the same may be said of his attitude as a citizen, for he is always ready to lend co-operation in the furtherance of measures and enterprises projected for the general good of the community.

Mr. Smith has had much of leadership in connection with the councils and campaign activities of the republican party in Webster County, and has served as chairman of its executive committee for this county. When he was made the party nominee for county sheriff he was defeated by only thirty-two votes, in a county that at that time gave a normal democratic majority of 400 votes. In the Masonic fraternity Mr. Smith is affiliated with Camden Lodge No. 107, A. F. and A. M.; Sutton Chapter No. 29, R. A. M.; Sutton Commandery No. 16, Knights Templars; and Osiris Temple of the Mystic Shrine in the City of Wheeling.

In 1894 Mr. Smith wedded Miss Dora E. Vance, who was reared and educated in Webster County. They have three children: Hosea A. is a graduate of the University of West Virginia; Ruth K. graduated from the State Normal School at Fairmont, and is, in 1922, in the extension department of agriculture in connection with the University of West Virginia at Morgantown; and Joseph F., Jr., is a student in Augusta Military Academy at Fort Defiance, Virginia. Mr. and Mrs. Smith are active members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, of which he is serving as a member of the official board.

MOUNDSVILLE PUBLIC LIBRARY. The Moundsville Public Library is an institution of which the progressive little City of Moundsville, Marshall County, is justly proud. It was established in 1917 by the Teachers' Club, under the leadership of Mrs. Frank T. Fulton, to whose initiative and zealous efforts, as an organizer and later as president of the Library Board, the success of the institution is largely due.

In addition to the Teachers' Club various other organizations have given moral and financial aid to the library, especially the Woman's Club and the Tuesday Arts Club, both of which have made annual donations to the institution from its inception, and are still lending their support, the Woman's Club being the first organization in the city to promise encouragement and a definite sum to the promoters.

Through the efforts of the Library Board several hundred dollars have been subscribed annually by generous citizens, these last mentioned donations making by far the most important source of income to supplement the fund raised by a city tax levy which is now imposed for library purposes.

The library now has a collection of 3,000 volumes, in the assortment of which especial attention is given to the needs of young people, while the general service is of excellent order. Mrs. Ida Hankins is the loyal and efficient librarian, ever working to make the library play its proper part in the community life of the city. The library is open daily from 2:30 to 9 P. M., and is the center of much of the cultural life of Moundsville and Marshall County.

REV. WILLIAM GOTTLÖB ULFERT. As head of one of the large congregations in Wheeling and the exemplar of exalted ideas of Christianity, perhaps no one has done more in a constructive way in organizing and promoting the essential influences of the Christian Church in that city than Rev. Mr. Ulfert, pastor of St. John's Evangelical Protestant Church.

Rev. Mr. Ulfert was born at Landsberg, Brandenburg, Germany, May 18, 1854, son of William G. and Ida (Wilski) Ulfert. His father died in Germany in 1888, and his mother at the age of eighty-two. William Gottlob Ulfert had a broad and liberal training, attending college at Landsberg, and at the age of twenty-four graduated from the University of Berlin, where he studied theology, philology and oriental languages. For one year he was a private preceptor on the island of Rugen, and he also taught a year in his home college at Landsberg.

In 1880 Rev. Mr. Ulfert came to the United States and on May 22, 1880, was ordained as an Evangelical minister. In August of that year he took his first pastorate at Aetna, Pennsylvania, and on November 1, 1884, was installed as pastor of St. John's Evangelical Protestant Church at Wheeling. His ministry here is now approaching its fortieth anniversary, and these four decades have represented a remarkable progress and material prosperity in the church and constant and unremitting duties on the part of the pastor, whose life has been to a singular degree a great consecration to the ministry of service.

St. John's Church is an historic institution of Wheeling. Some of the old German settlers of that city organized it in 1835, the first services being held in North Wheeling. In 1836 the building on Eighteenth, near Jacob Street was erected and was in use until 1869. This old building is still standing, now being used as a mission house for the First Presbyterian Church. In 1871 their church on the site of the present Baltimore & Ohio passenger station was finished, and was the home of the congregation just forty years. When they gave up this place of worship at the request of the railroad company, ground was secured at the northwest corner of Chapline and Twenty-second streets, where the beautiful new church and parsonage were erected at a cost of $120,000.00. The church auditorium has a seating capacity of six hundred, and there are also suitable office, choir, Sunday School and lecture rooms, and ample kitchen and dining room facilities in the basement. The auditorium is handsomely and richly furnished, containing beautiful memorial windows. The services of the church alternate in the English and German languages. Many of the elders of the congregation still prefer to listen to God's word associated with the recollections of their youth. The greater part of the active members today are descendants of the original congregation. In 1884, when Rev. Mr. Ulfert became pastor, the congregation was comparatively weak in numbers, but for a number of years past it has been one of the strongest congregations in the city. Its communicants now represent 550 families, besides about 200 single persons not included in the family enumeration. The loyalty of the membership is a source of constant inspiration to the pastor. One of the prominent ministers of Pittsburgh, Rev. William K. Geese, received his early religious training as a boy in St. John's Church.

Rev. Mr. Ulfert is an honored member of the Evangelical Protestant Church of North America, affiliating with the branch having headquarters at Pittsburgh. He is a thirty-second degree Scottish Rite Mason and is chaplain of Wheeling Lodge No. 5, F. & A. M.

January 18, 1883, he married Miss Marie Heinrich, who came to Wheeling as a child with her parents, Rev. Charles and Emma Heinrich. Her father for some years was pastor of St. Paul's Church in Wheeling. Mr. and Mrs. Ulfert have two children: William Karl Ulfert, a Wheeling physician and surgeon, and Martha, wife of Dr. William Elmer Hodgson, of McKeesport, Pennsylvania.

JAMES HENRY BOWMAN grew up in the industrial life of the Wheeling District, as a boy was a glass worker, and is now engineer of the Wheeling Corrugating Department of the Whitaker-Glessner Company.

Mr. Bowman was born at Wheeling January 25, 1888. James Bowman, his father, was born near Greggsville in Ohio County, West Virginia, in 1839, and has spent all his active life as a coal miner. He retired in 1917 and since 1889 his home has been at Bridgeport, Ohio, across the river from Wheeling. He is an independent in politics and is a loyal and faithful member of the Church of God. James Bowman married Susan Ann Peyton, who was born in West Virginia. They became the parents of eight children. Jessie, the oldest, is the wife of John Dunfee, lives at Bridgeport and has a daughter, Ethel, born in 1904. The second child, Atha Virginia, was first married to Everett J. Stead, by whom she has a daughter, Virginia, born in 1911, and she is now the wife of John Roberts and lives at Cleveland, Ohio. The third of the family is James Henry Bowman. The fourth, John, a hot mill worker living at Bridgeport, married Catherine Burgman, and their three children are, Elaine, Ruth and John. Mina, is the wife of Ralph Roan, chief draughtsman for the General Electric Company at Huntington, West Virginia, and their three children are, Donnas, Theonan and Theodore. Glenna, the sixth child, is the wife of Albert Prince, but has no children. The two youngest of the family, both unmarried and at home, are Andrew, chief clerk in the Construction Department of the Whitaker-Glessner Company, and Mabel, cashier of the Better Store at Wheeling.

James Henry Bowman acquired his education at Bridgeport, completing the sophomore year in the high school there. At the age of twelve he began working during the summer vacations in the Crystal Glass factory at Bridgeport. When he left high school, at the age of fourteen, he continued steady employment in this glass factory until he was eighteen, becoming an expert in the trade. As a means of self advancement he has completed and received two diplomas for engineering courses with the International Correspondence School of Scranton, Pennsylvania, and also completed a course of business management with the same school. In 1906 Mr. Bowman entered the employ of the American Sheet and Tin Plate Company, the Etna Works at Bridgeport, and for eighteen months was employed in matching and pair heating. For about a year he was with the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company as car repairer, brakeman and fireman. From July, 1909, to March 1910, he was with the Imperial Glass House at Bellaire. At the latter date Mr. Bowman entered the service of the Whitaker-Glessner Company as tracer in the engineering department, and since September 22, 1919, has been engineer of the Wheeling Corrugating Department. His official duties are with the Wheeling plant at the east end of Seventeenth Street.

Mr. Bowman is a republican, a Presbyterian, is affiliated with Bridgeport Lodge No. 181, F. & A. M., and also with Penny Tent, Knights of the Maccabees. He is a stockholder in the Bridgeport Savings & Loan Company, and he owns a home at 611 Main Street there.

December 14, 1911, at Bridgeport, Mr. Bowman married Miss Neva Jane Burke, daughter of Frank and May (Pool) Burke. Her mother lives at Bridgeport. Her father was a police officer in that city and was accidentally killed by a freight train in 1912. Mr. and Mrs. Bowman have two children: Eleanor Marie, born July 19, 1915, and Richard Thomas, born September 28, 1918.

GEORGE TALBOTT BUCHANAN is postmaster of Wellsburg, having been assistant postmaster under his father, the late Talbott H. Buchanan. Four generations of the Buchana family have been represented in the Northern Panhandle of West Virginia.

They are Scotch Highlanders, Robert Buchanan coming here and locating on a farm in Brooke County when his son Robert, grandfather of the Wellsburg postmaster, was a lad. They acquired land in Independence Township, and Robert lived there until his death at the age of seventy. His son Thomas lived out his life on the same farm. Talbott F. Buchanan was born on the old homestead in 1864, and was his home until he sold the place in the early '80s and moved to Wellsburg. Here he was in the wholesale grocery business under the firm name of Brown and Buchanan until the death of Mr. Brown about 1895. Soon afterward Talbott H. Buchanan became deputy sheriff. He was deputy at the time of the noted trial of Van Baker. Baker was the first man ever sentenced to life imprisonment for Brooke County. Later Talbott H. Buchanan engaged in the insurance business, and soon after the election of President Wilson was appointed postmaster of Wellsburg and filled that office until his death on Easter Sunday, 1917. The site of the present Post Office was secured during his administration. He was a vestryman and warden of Christ Episcopal Church, and his widow is very active in church affairs. He married Julia Burley of Moundsville, also an old Scotch family prominently connected with the West Virginia families. She is living in her fifth year.

George Talbott Buchanan, only child of his parents, was born at Wellsburg May 28, 1890. He acquired a public school education, and was about twenty-three years of age when he became assistant postmaster under his father. His father was succeeded by Henry Zilliken, who died on Christmas Day, 1917, and in May, 1918, George T. Buchanan was appointed his successor, receiving his commission under Wilson's second administration. The Wellsburg Post Office building was completed ready for occupancy in December 1916, costing about $80,000.00. The appropriation for the Federal Building at Wellsburg was secured while the late W. P. Hubbard was in Congress. The Post Office has fifteen employees, with four rural carriers. Mr. Buchanan is also official custodian of the building. Soon after his appointment as postmaster he was called to the colors, on August 3, 1918, and was in service at Camp Lee and Fort Moultrie, South Carolina. He had an active part in all the loan drives, though the Victory Loan was made while he was in the army. His office well upheld its share of responsibility in the sale of stamps.

July 23, 1919, Mr. Buchanan married Jane Simpson. She was born at Pittsburgh, but as a child was taken to Hamilton, Canada, where her father, George A. Simpson, for number of years has been sales manager for the Canada Steel Company. Mrs. Buchanan is an active member of church and social clubs at Wellsburg. Mr. Buchanan is past master of Wellsburg Lodge No. 2, F. & A. M., affiliated with West Virginia Consistory No. 1 of the Scottish Rite, Osiris Temple of the Mystic Shrine and a member of the local team of nine members doing the work of two of the degrees of the Scottish Rite. He is a vestryman and treasurer of Christ Episcopal Church.

ORLO A. LUCAS is the vice president and general manager of the Fulton Manufacturing Company, which conducts one of the leading industrial enterprises at Richwood, Nicholas County. He was born at Morley, Michigan, October 17, 1888, and is a son of Alexander and Ida J. (Dodge) Lucas, both likewise natives of Michigan, where the former was born at Carlton Center, Barry County, September 6, 1855, and the latter, at Saginaw, December 21, 1865, the respective families having been founded in the Wolverine State in the pioneer period of its history. Alexander Lucas, son of Thomas and Sarah Lucas, was reared on a pioneer Michigan farm, and as a youth he became identified with railroad operations, with which he continued to be actively associated for a period of twenty-three years. He then engaged in farm enterprise in an independent way, and since his retirement he and his wife have maintained their home in the beautiful little City of Coldwater, judicial center of Branch County, Michigan, where his wife is an ear ness member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Of their four children the first born, Myron H., is deceased; Orlo A., of this sketch, was the next in order of birth; Miss Reva C. remains at the paternal home; and Lester M. is, in 1922, a student in the University of Michigan.

In the public schools of Michigan Orlo A. Lucas continued his studies until his graduation from the high school, and thereafter he continued his residence in his native state until July, 1905, when he established his residence at Richwood, West Virginia, where he became a stockholder and executive officer of the Fulton Manufacturing Company, of which he is now vice president and general manager, his experience in this connection having covered the various practical details of the manufacturing. H. H. Steele is president of the company, and W. B. Headley is its secretary and treasurer. The board of directors includes the executive officers and also Mrs. H. H. Steele and Herbert J. Beadle.

Mr. Lucas is actively affiliated with the Masonic fraternity, in which he is a member of Richwood Lodge No. 122, A. F. and A. M.; Richwood Chapter No. 37, R. A. M.; Sutton Commandery No. 16, Knights Templars; Beni-Kedem Temple, Mystic Shrine, in the City of Charleston; and the West Virginia Consistory of the Scottish Rite at Wheeling, in which he has received the thirty-second degree. He is a past noble grand of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and is a republican in political proclivities. His wife holds membership in the Methodist Episcopal Church.

Mr. Lucas married Miss Mary S. Meadows, of Richwood, and they have two sons, C. Arnett and John E.

HARRY G. CAMPEE, M. D., initiated the practice of his profession by becoming a member of the medical and surgical staff of the miners' hospital that is now West Virginia State Hospital No. 1 at Welch, McDowell County. He continued his effective service as house surgeon at this hospital for a period of two years, and then engaged in the general practice of his profession at Welch, where he has developed a professional business and established a reputation that mark him as one of the representative physicians and surgeons of McDowell County. In 1912 he graduated from the Baltimore Medical College, which is now the medical department of the University of Maryland, and after his receiving his degree of Doctor of Medicine he soon came to Welch, as noted above. He has taken post-graduate courses in the medical schools of the University of Pennsylvania, Johns Hopkins University and the University of Maryland, and while thus at the University of Pennsylvania he devoted his entire time to the study of anatomy. He is a specially skilled and resourceful surgeon and gives special attention to surgical practice. He is serving in 1921-2 as county coroner and as a member of the West Virginia State Board of Medical Examiners. The doctor keeps fully in line with the advances made in medical and surgical science, is a close student and is affiliated with the American Medical Association, the Southern Medical Association, the West Virginia State Medical Society and the McDowell County Medical Society. He is a Knight Templar and Scottish Rite Mason, and is affiliated also with the local lodge of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. Both he and his wife are members of the Presbyterian church. Doctor Campee is recognized as one of the leading surgeons of this part of the state, and his private offices are the best equipped in McDowell County.

At Norfolk, Virginia, in 1914, Doctor Campee was united in marriage to Miss Lena Harrell, daughter of J. J. and Elizabeth Harrell, both natives of North Carolina. Doctor and Mrs. Campee have no children.

Of English and German lineage, Doctor Campee was born at Salem, Virginia, June 29, 1884, and is a son of John H. and Mary Elizabeth (Morgan) Campee, the former a native of Virginia and the latter of what is now West Virginia. John H. Campee, a scion of a family early founded in Virginia, became a successful farmer and merchant, served as county magistrate and was influential in community affairs at Salem, Virginia, where he continued his residence until his death. He was a zealous member of the Presbyterian church, as was also his wife. He was a captain in the Eleventh Virginia Regiment of the Confederate service in the Civil war, took part in many engagements, was severely wounded in one of his knees, an injury from which he never fully recovered, and after being captured he was held a prisoner of war at Washington, D. C., and at Johnson's Island in Lake Erie. In later years he vitalized his interest in his old comrades by means of his active affiliation with the United Confederate Veterans.

Doctor Campee continued his studies in the public schools of Salem, Virginia, until he had profited fully by the advantages of the high school, and he then entered medical college, as recorded in a preceding paragraph. Of his career since that time adequate outline has already been entered in this review.

GUY E. MASTIN has found in his native county ample opportunity for the achieving of worthy success and prestige in connection with business enterprise of important order, and is the efficient cashier of the Virginia Bank of Commerce, one of the leading financial institutions in the City of Princeton, Mercer County. He was born in this county on the 15th of April, 1886, and is a son of William E. and Louisa N. (Karnes) Mastin, the former of whom was born in North Carolina and the latter in Mercer County, West Virginia, where the Karnes family has long been one of prominence. William E. Mastin was not only a successful farmer, but he gave fifty-three years of most effective service as a teacher in the public schools. During the entire period of the Civil war he was in the mail service of the Confederate government. His commission as a mail carrier is retained by his son Guy E., who values the same as a family and historic heirloom. His service as a carrier of mail was attended by much danger and hardship incidental to the war, and he made a remarkable record of faithful and successful service. He was eighty-two years of age at the time of his death, and his wife survived him six years. His father and grandfather were natives of Ireland, and after coming to America the grandfather served as a soldier not only in the War of the Revolution but also the War of 1812.

Guy E. Mastin attended the public schools of Mercer County until he was fourteen years old, when he became clerk in a general store. After serving four years in this capacity he assumed a clerical position in the Princeton Post Office, in which he eventually won promotion to the position of assistant postmaster. He continued his connection with the Post Office for a total period of fourteen years and then, in 1917, became cashier of the Virginia Bank of Commerce, in which office his personal popularity and executive ability have been potent in furthering the upbuilding of the institution. He is affiliated with the Knights of Pythias and the Loyal Order of Moose, is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and his wife holds membership in the Presbyterian Church. Her father, Rev. R. E. Redding is now pastor of the Presbyterian Church at Ocean, Virginia.

In 1911 was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Mastin and Miss Fannie Redding, then a resident of Greenhrier County, West Virginia, and they have two children, Naomi and Frances.

Statements already made in this context show that Mr. Mastin is eligible for affiliation with the Society of the Sons of the American Revolution, and in connection with the service of his paternal great-grandfather as a Revolutionary soldier it is interesting to record that that doughty warrior was in the same boat with General Washington in the historic crossing of the Delaware River. The father of Mr. Mastin served as a fifer in the Mexican war.

Mrs. CHARLOTTE M. EVANS, a resident of the Pruntytown community of Taylor County, represents three prominent family names of the county. She is a descendant of the Windle and Fleming families, while her husband's people were among the first pioneers to conquer the wilderness of West Virginia.

Her paternal grandparents were Thomas J. and Charlotte (Muse) Windle. The former, a native of Pennsylvania and of Quaker stock, came to Upshur County near Buckhannon about 1857, and finally moved to Taylor County, he and his wife being buried at Simpson. He was a noted stock drover as well as farmer, buying stock over a large section of the state. His children were Lewis H.; Mary, who became the wife of James B. Fleming, of Taylor County; Annie, living near Webster, widow of Marshall Lake; Thomas H., who died in Braxton County; and John M., of Greenbrier County.

Lewis H. Windle, father of Mrs. Evans, is now a retired farmer in the Webster community of Taylor County. He was born in Philadelphia May 1, 1843, and was fourteen years old when his parents settled in Upshur County. He finished his common school education there, and in the first year of the Civil war joined the Union Army in the First Virginia Volunteers. He was in the command of General Goff and also in Rosecrans' Corps. He was in the battle of Philippi and other campaigns in West Virginia and later in the heavy fighting in old Virginia. After the war he became a butcher, was then connected with coal mining, but the last thirty years of his active career were devoted to the practical side of farming.

The first wife of Lewis H. Windle was Olive Fleming, daughter of Minor S. Fleming and member of the distinguished Fleming family whose record is given more completely on other pages of this publication. When she died she left three children: Mrs. Charlotte M. Evans; Zonia May, who died at Grafton, wife of Scott Dawson; and Gussie, who is the wife of Charles Withers and lives on the Minor Fleming farm near Simpson. For his second wife Lewis Windle married Nancy Mason, daughter of Benjamin Mason, but there were no children by this union.

Charlotte M. Windle was born in the Rural Dale locality of Upshur County, but from infancy was reared near Flemington in Taylor County, where she acquired her public school education. At the age of nineteen she was married to John S. Evans.

This branch of the Evans family was founded by Samuel Evans, who was born in Wales about 1700, and at the age of twenty came to the American colonies, accompanied by his father, Richard Evans. He settled near Hagerstown or Frederick, Maryland. By two marriages he was the father of twenty-two children, his son Richard being killed while fighting the British in the Revolutionary war. His son Edward, born about 1730, in Maryland, and died about 1820, also had a military record of great interest to his descendants. He was one of Washington's soldiers in the Braddock campaign of 1755. Through the influence of Washington he was granted in 1772 for his service a tract of land in Monongalia County. He was at Fort Augusta in 1765, and Suffer's history mentions him as a volunteer in the Revolution. He was among the Monongalia militia paid off at Fort Pitt. He settled in Monongalia County probably in 1779 or 1780. At that time Edward Evans was one of those who received a portion of land allotted by General Washington in pursuance of a proclamation of Governor Dunmore in December, 1772. In 1780 he made a declaration that he was a member of the "Old Virginia" regiment in 1756, this confirming his allotment. The records of old Augusta County show the allotment and give further proof of his service in the French and Indian war. His old powder-horn, carried through the war for independence, is now owned by R. E. Campbell of Georgetown, Ohio, and bears the monogram "E. E." and date September, 1775.

The children of the pioneer Edward Evans were: Eleanor, who married Robert Patton; Hugh; Catherine, who became Mrs. Jeptha Wilkins; Samuel, who married Harriet Wilson; and Priscilla, who became the wife of John Wilkins. The son Hugh was born in 1769 and died in Preston County in 1873, when well past the century mark. He was at one time sheriff of Preston County. He married Sarah Thomas. Of their seven children Samuel, born in 1800 and died in 1889, married Sarah Means, and of their eight children the last survivor was Isaac Evans of Fetterman.

Hugh Evans, also a son of Samuel and Sarah (Means) Evans, was born in 1830 in the Evansville community of Preston County, and became a resident of Fetterman in Taylor County. He was in the Government service as a butcher during the Civil war, but his active years were devoted to farming. He was sheriff of Taylor County, and widely known as a citizen. He died at the age of forty-two. His first wife was Mary Ann Shroyer, daughter of Jacob and Sarah (Miller) Shroyer, and the only child of that union was John S. Evans. By his second wife, Mary Jean Jones, he had a daughter, Mary, now Mrs. Cleophus Woodford, of Grafton.

John Shroyer Evans was born at Fetterman in Taylor County January 26, 1856, and secured his early education there and at Knottsville. After his marriage to Miss Charlotte Windle March 13, 1887, he concentrated his efforts upon the farm where Mrs. Evans now lives. Stock and dairy farming was his chief work, and he improved one of the most attractive places along the Grafton-Pruntytown Pike. He died at his home here July 21, 1910. He had served on the local Board of Education, was trustee of the Fetterman Methodist Episcopal church and was a democrat in politics. John S. Evans was thrice married. First, in 1878 to Dora, daughter of James Allen and Mary Ellen (Ford) Bartlett. She died in March, 1880, but this union was blessed with one daughter, Myrtle. On May 9, 1882, he married Susan, daughter of John and Sallie (Curry) Sinsel. Her death occurred in November, 1883. His daughter Myrtle completed her home school education and became the wife of O. L. Scranage. Their present home is on a portion of the home farm, and Gladys, their eldest daughter, is now a student of West Virginia University.

Mrs. Evans has given her life to her children and her home. Her daughters are leaving their mark and influence on West Virginia education, and her only son besides carrying on the activities left by his father has a record of service in the World war. Mary, her oldest daughter, was educated in the Broadus Institute, West Virginia University, and is a graduate of the Fairmont State Normal, and is now principal of the West Virginia Industrial School for Boys. Lulu is a graduate of the Grafton High School and the Fairmont State Normal, attended summer sessions of West Virginia University, and is one of the teachers in the First Ward school of Grafton. Sallie Evans, after graduating from the Grafton High School and getting her A. B. degree from the State University, taught four years, and then married Frank E. Lyon, of Michigan, and is now living in Ontario, Canada. Harriet, a graduate of the Grafton High School and of Marshall College of Huntington, was a teacher in Grafton three years before her marriage to C. B. Shingleton of Clarksburg, West Virginia. Their present home is in Charleroi, Pennsylvania, and they are the proud parents of one baby daughter Charlotte Ann. Alma supplemented her high school course at Grafton with two years in the University, taught a year in rural schools and then became teacher of French and Latin in the Harrisville High School. Olive Ada, a graduate of the Grafton High School and the West Virginia Wesleyan College, had a year and a half of teaching experience, and is now the wife of L. F. Dameron, of Huntington. Annie Laurie, the youngest daughter, completed the high school course at Grafton in 1921 and is now taking nurses' training in the Allegheny General Hospital, Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania.

Hugh Evans, the only son, grew up at the old home farm and early took an interest in the dairy and stock. He was educated in the Pruntytown public school and had a commercial course at Grafton. At the beginning of May, 1918, he volunteered, was assigned to Company A of the 401st Engineers, was trained at Richmond, Virginia, and Fort Oglethorpe, Georgia, and from Long Island went overseas on the transport Leviathan, the converted liner Vaterland. After landing at Brest the 401st Engineers were sent to Charms, then to Le Mans for equipment, and were engaged in construction of pontoon bridges just behind one of the advanced lines when the armistice was signed. The regiment was under the direct command of Major General Alexander, commander of the Forty-second or Rainbow Division. Hugh Evans became a sergeant in his company. His farthest east was in Belgium, forty miles from Brussels. February 22, 1919, he sailed from St. Nazaire, France, on the U. S. S. Mongolia, arriving at New York March 7th, was at Camp Merritt where the contingent was broken up, and he was sent to Camp Meade for discharge. He left Camp Meade March 29th, and arrived at Grafton late the same day since the war he has been handling the responsibilities of the home farm. He is vice commander of Taylor County Post No. 78 of the American Legion.

GENERAL THOMAS BARTLETT, funeral director, head of the Bartlett and Bolin Company of Grafton, has spent the greater part of his active life in commercial lines, and has been a resident of Grafton over a dozen years.

He was born in Pleasant Creek District, Barbour County, October 9, 1878. His grandfather, Thomas Bartlett, was a native of Taylor County, and spent his last years on Pleasant Creek in Barbour County. His wife was Jemimah Bartlett, and their children were: Effie G.; David; Benjamin; Matilda; Jhenowith; Mrs. Elizabeth Cole; Sarah, who married C. M. Davis; Virginia, who married Greenberry Carter; Mary, who married William Lake; Mrs. Josephine Davis and Joseph, wins.

Joseph Bartlett, father of the Grafton business man, and now a retired farmer at Bridgeport, was born near Webster, West Virginia, February 10, 1857. He married Laura J. Smith, daughter of Jehu Smith. Their children are: General Thomas; Ithamer J., of Fairmont; W. Howard, of Bridgeport; Ethel, wife of Herman Shotts, principal of the high school at Masonstown; Mrs. Eva Stewart, of Bridgeport; Zada, at Bridgeport; Bruce E. and Orbit J. of St. Albans.

G. T. Bartlett spent the first fourteen years of his life on his father's farm in Pleasant Creek District, after which the family lived a few years near Simpson in the Court House District and then near Webster in the same district. His increasing strength was utilized on the farm while getting an education in the local schools, and he also attended the Fairmont State Normal two years and did one year of preparatory work for the law in West Virginia University. For three years he was one of the well qualified teachers in the Knottsville and Flemington districts, and abandoned school work to become an employee of the Fairmont Coal Company, beginning at the bottom and performing such duties as mule-driving, car-greasing and coal-dumping. He barely escaped with his life in a mine accident, and abruptly left the work to seek a position in the New England State at Watson. The following year he learned many of the fundamentals of merchandising. About that time the Fairmont Coal Company absorbed the John A. Clark Coal Company, and Mr. Bartlett was transferred to manager of the company store at Chiefton. Altogether he gave his service to the company for seven years, and left to engage in the furniture and undertaking business at Bridgeport. He was there a year, and then established himself in a similar line at Grafton. About twelve years later the furniture department was discontinued, and the Bartlett & Bolin Company now employs all its resources for undertaking.

Mr. Bartlett is a graduate of the Eckels Embalming School of Philadelphia. In the thirteen years since he entered the profession many changes have been introduced in the technique and facilities, ranging from horse-drawn hearses to a complete automobile equipment. In 1914, at 314 Walnut Street, Mr. Bartlett erected a modern business house, 24 by 80 feet, a three-story brick building, including chapel and other facilities for expert service in this line. Mr. Bartlett is a past president of the Funeral Directors Association of West Virginia, and has appeared on the program at a number of its sessions.

He has likewise been a factor in the business organizations of Grafton, beginning with the old Board of Trade, and is a director and vice president of the Chamber of Commerce. Fraternally he is a past chancellor of Friendship Lodge, Knights of Pythias, past noble grand of Grafton Lodge No. 11, I. O. O. F., and in Masonry is affiliated with St. John Lodge No. 24, F. & A. M., at Shinston, Grafton Royal Arch Chapter, is present eminent commander of DeMolay Commandery, K. T., a member of Osiris Temple of the Mystic Shrine, and is also taking the Scottish Rite work at Wheeling. He is a member of the Moose and Red Men, a director of the Rotary Club, and was reared a Baptist.

While living at Chiefton he married, on January 12, 1902, Miss Maud B. Saurborne, who was born at Camden on Bailey, West Virginia, February 21, 1885, and is a graduate of the Weston High School. Mr. and Mrs. Bartlett have two children, Mildred, born October 15, 1904, and G. Thomas, Jr., born October 6, 1913.

HON. JOSEPH MORELAND. One of Morgantown's best loved citizens, one of the state's ablest lawyers, was the late Judge Joseph Moreland. He practiced law over forty years, and in addition to his attainments as a lawyer he filled a number of offices of trust and responsibility and was particularly interested as an official in the welfare and progress of the university. His modest deportment, his kindness of heart and his true benevolence marked him as a gentleman, while his strong intellect, directed in the channels of law and education, gained him eminence as one of the distinguished men of his day and locality. Though death closed his active career some years ago, his influence even yet is potent among those with whom he was associated.

Judge Moreland was a native of Fayette County, Pennsylvania. His family had settled there two generations before his birth. His first American ancestor was Alexander Moreland. William Moreland, son of Alexander, was an American soldier in the war of the Revolution, and after the close of that struggle was a member of the Crawford Expedition against Sandusky. For his military services he was given a grant of land below Connellsville in Fayette County, on the Youghiogheny River.

John Moreland, son of William and Agnes (Huston) Moreland, became owner of the family homestead near Connellsville. On that property in 1842 he manufactured the first coke ever made in Fayette County. Barges were used for the shipment of the coke, and on account of his interest in water transportation John Moreland was familiarly known by the title of captain. In 1850 a fleet of his barges was sunk in the Ohio River at Wheeling. That put an end to his enterprise as a coke manufacturer, an industry for which he could see no future. No other attempt was made to manufacture coke in Fayette County for eight years. Capt. John Moreland married Priscilla Rogers, daughter of William and Nancy (Halliday) Rogers, and great-granddaughter of Lieut. John Rogers, who lost his life while a soldier of the Revolution.

The late Judge Joseph Moreland was a son of Capt. John and Priscilla Moreland, and was born near Connellsville, Fayette County, May 26, 1842. He was attending the old Monongalia Academy at Morgantown in 1861 when the outbreak of the Civil war caused him to return to his home in Pennsylvania. In 1866 he graduated from Washington and Jefferson College in Pennsylvania, and the following year returned to Morgantown with his widowed mother. Here he read law in the offices of Brown and Hagans, and after admission to the bar remained in Morgantown and practiced law here until his death. He early attracted notice as a hard working, earnest and thoroughly well informed lawyer, and his reputation eventually extended beyond his home district into many of the courts of the state. In the course of his active career he had some prominent associates. At one time he was a member of the firm Willey and Moreland, later of Hagans and Moreland, and subsequently formed a partnership with S. F. Glascock and for several years the firm was Moreland and Glascock. Later Judge Moreland was associated with his son in the firm of Moreland and Moreland, and finally was head of the firm of Moreland, Moreland and Guy. Judge Moreland frequently referred to his partnership with the distinguished West Virginia statesman, Hon. Waitman Willey, from 1873 to 1884, as a relationship of the greatest personal congeniality as well as professional success. During his long and successful career Judge Moreland handled some of the most notable cases in the records of the local courts. Under all circumstances he was regarded as a worthy opponent by the ablest lawyers with whom he was associated, and many times he gained the admiration of the bar for his adroit handling of a case that he accepted only from a sense of professional duty and that could add nothing to his reputation or his purse.

Judge Moreland passed his seventieth birthday still active as a lawyer and giving little evidence of failing ability. He continued at work until his death in 1913. Outside of his profession he was not a seeker of public honors, but public responsibilities naturally attach themselves to a man of his character and standing as a lawyer. For a long number of years he gave Morgantown an efficient administration as mayor, and for a number of terms was on the City Council. In 1887 he was appointed to fill an unexpired term as prosecuting attorney. He frequently was appointed special judge, and in 1882 Governor Jackson appointed him a member of the Board of Regents of the University of West Virginia. His interest in education and the welfare of the University made the duties of this office particularly attractive to him, and he capably served the University as Regent for many years.

Judge Moreland was a member of the Sons of the American Revolution, was affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, Delta Tau Delta college fraternity, and had numerous other relations with professional, civic and social bodies. He was public spirited and charitable, and was many times sought as an advisor and leader in movements affecting the public weal. Personally Judge Moreland was unassuming in manner, sincere in friendship, steadfast and unwavering in his loyalty to the highest ideals emblem of some of the finest qualities that distinguish the of character. A host of friends regarded him as an citizen in both his public and private relationships.

From his personal friendships and home life he undoubtedly derived his chief happiness, regarding these always as the durable satisfactions of life. On October 26, 1875, Judge Moreland married Miss Mary E. Brown, daughter of Thomas and Eleanor Suter (Smith) Brown. Her paternal grandfather, James Brown, was an Irishman who came to America about the close of the Revolutionary war. Her maternal grandfather, Alexander Smith, was a prominent banker and merchant of Georgetown, Maryland, later the District of Columbia. Thomas Brown, father of Mrs. Moreland, was a lawyer by profession, and practiced with his brother William G. Brown at Kingwood, West Virginia. William G. Brown at one time was a member of Congress from West Virginia. Mrs. Moreland possessed many personal qualities and charms that enriched the life of her home and the many friendships that flourished there. Her death in 1910 was widely mourned. Judge and Mrs. Moreland had two children. The daughter, Eleanor Brown Moreland, born May 31, 1877, is a teacher of science in the Elkins High School.

The son, James Rogers Moreland, who has taken for his guide the honorable example of his father, was born at Morgantown December 9, 1879. He was educated in the public schools, the West Virginia University, where he graduated A. B. in 1901, and the following year received his law degree. Admitted to the bar in June, 1902, he was for over ten years an active associate with his father in practice, first in the firm of Moreland and Moreland and then in that of Moreland, Moreland and Guy, and since the death of Judge Moreland he and the other surviving partner, Mr. Robert E. Guy, continue their association. This firm has a large and important practice, and the members of the firm are accounted among the leaders of the bar of Monongalia County. While his chief ambition is to acquire himself creditably in the law, Mr. Moreland has acted from a sense of public duty and for some years was a member of the City Council of Morgantown, and in 1914 enjoyed the unique honor of being elected as a democrat to the House of Delegates from Monongalia County. He was the first democrat elected on the county ticket of Monongalia County since 1876.

In addition to his law practice Mr. Moreland has a number of business and financial interests, being a director of the Bank of the Monongahela Valley of Morgantown, as was his father before him, and is otherwise largely interested in the coal development and business interests of the community. He is a member of the Monongalia County Bar Association, the West Virginia State Bar Association, and has served three times as president of the West Virginia State Society of the Sons of the Revolution. He is a member of the Kappa Alpha college fraternity, Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Rotary Club of Morgantown. He is an elder in the Presbyterian Church, superintendent of its Sunday school and for two years president of the Monongalia County Sunday School Association.

September 1, 1904, Mr. Moreland married Miss Ethel Fimicum, daughter of Albert D. and Sarah (Lyle) Fimicum, of Hopedale, Harrison County, Ohio. Four children have been born to their marriage: Joseph Albert, born August 11, 1907; James Rogers, Jr., born May 10, 1910; William Alexander, born April 21, 1916; and Robert L. born February 6, 1921.

Mrs. Moreland takes a great interest in social, educational and political problems. She is at present a member of the West Virginia Child Welfare Commission, chairman of the Department of Applied Education of the West Virginia Federation of Women's Clubs, chairman of the Child Welfare Department of the West Virginia League of Women Voters and vice chairman in charge of the women's work of the Democratic State Executive Committee of West Virginia.

ROBERT GILLESPIE DAKAN has developed at Rosbys Rock, Marshall County, a large and prosperous general merchandise business, in which he is now associated with his sons Joseph E. and George B., under the firm name R. G. Dakan & Sons. Mr. Dakan was born at Glen East this county, November 3, 1861, and is a son of John M. & Eliza (Terrell) Dakan, the latter's father, Amos Terrell having been an influential citizen of his day in Pleasant Valley, Marshall County. John M. Dakan passed his entire life in Marshall County and was eighty-two years of age at the time of his death. His father, William Dakan, came from Pennsylvania and became a pioneer settler in Marshall County, the Terrells likewise having come from the Keystone State, and the wife of Amos Terrell having been a member of the old and prominent Braddock family of Pennsylvania. Amos Terrell reclaimed and developed one of the excellent farms of Marshall County, and was one of the expert hunters of wild game in this section in the early days having died at the age of seventy-eight years. John Dakan learned and followed the carpenter's trade, and later engaged in farm enterprise, besides conducting a general store at Rosbys Rock. For a number of years he conducted a hotel at Weston, Lewis County, and he passed the closing years of his life in the home of his son Robert. Of this sketch, his wife having preceded him to eternal rest by about three years and having been about eighty years of age at the time of her death. John M. Dakan was left an orphan in early youth, and he depended upon his own resources in making his way in the world. He was a man of sterling character and ever commanded unqualified popular esteem. Of his children eight attained to years of maturity and of the number two sons and four daughters are living in 1921, the elder of the two sons being Joshua, a resident of Limestone, Marshall County.

Robert G. Dakan gained his early education in the common schools of his native county and as a boy began to assist in his father's store. In 1878 he went with his parents to Weston, and there he assisted in his father's hotel until 1880 when he returned to Rosbys Rock and became clerk in the general store of William Lutes, whose daughter he later married. He has continued his active association with the mercantile business at this place during the long intervening years, and now has the distinction of being the oldest merchant on the Fourth Division of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, between Wheeling and Grafton. In 1882, when Mr. Dakan purchased the business of his father-in-law, he was one of three stores at Rosbys Rock, the other two having been conducted by S. J. Elliott and L. G. Martin, both the other stores having eventually been purchased by Mr. Dakan, who consolidated the stocks of goods with that of his original establishment. He has been a successful buyer and shipper of grain and live stock, besides which he has associated with Mr. Cox, of Cameron, in the buying and shipping of wool upon an extensive scale, the firm having shipped more than 300,000 pounds in the season of 1921, and an average annual expenditure for wool being $100,000. For several years Mr. Dakan was a member of the firm of Dakan & Sivert, which conducted a store at Moundsville. T mercantile trade of R. G. Dakan & Sons at Rosbys Rock has grown to large volume and extends over a wide radius of country tributary to this thriving village. The two sons were admitted to partnership in 1917. Mr. Dakan has been prominent in the local councils of the democratic party, and was his party's nominee for sheriff of the county, but was unable to overcome the large republican majority. For the past twenty years he has served as delegate to the state conventions of his party in West Virginia.

At the age of twenty-one years Mr. Dakan married Miss Elizabeth J. Lutes, and of their four children the eldest son, Henry G., died at the age of thirty-two years, he having had active charge of his father's farm at the time, and his widow and four sons being still on the farm, the sons being Harold, Robert, Lawrence and Howard. Bessie, eldest of the children, is the wife of C. E. Bonar, of Lisbon, Ohio; and Joseph E. and George B. are partners in their father's mercantile business. Joseph E. married Rhea Gorby, and they have one son, Joseph E., Jr. George B. married Miss Eliza Kull, and they have one son, George Bruce, Jr.

John A. GRIER, M. D. While for a quarter of a century he has been ever responsive to the heavy demands made upon his time and energy in his profession as a physician and surgeon, Dr. Grier has contrived time to serve the community of Sistersville in various relationships that involve the performance of duty with scarcely proportionate honor and insignificant financial reward.

Doctor Grier has an interesting relation to the name and founding of Sistersville. His grandmother was Delilah Wells, who was born and spent all her life at Sistersville. She and her sister Sarah owned two adjoining farms, on which was laid out the town of Sistersville, named in their honor. Delilah Wells married Robert Grier, a native of Pennsylvania, where his family was established in Colonial times on coming from Scotland. Robert Grier moved to Monroe County, Ohio, when a comparatively young man, was a farmer, and later one of the first merchants at Sistersville, where he also owned and operated a grist mill. He and his wife reared five sons and one daughter, all now deceased.

Prather Grier, father of Doctor Grier, was born in Monroe County, Ohio, in 1834, and as a young man removed to Parkersburg, where he married. He owned a large amount of land in the river bottoms near Parkersburg, and made farming his chief vocation. He died at Parkersburg in 1883. In politics he was a democrat and was an influential member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Prather Grier married Sarah West, who was born in Monroe County, Ohio, in 1834 and died at Parkersburg in 1884. She was one of the most zealous members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, at Parkersburg. She became the mother of four children: Mary, who died at the age of thirty-six, wife of Frank Clark, who is a farmer in West Virginia, opposite Racine, Ohio; Charles W., in the real estate and automobile business at Roswell, New Mexico; Dr. John A.; and Frank C., who died at the age of twenty.

John A. Grier was born on his father's farm in Wood County, near Parkersburg, February 26, 1870. He attended the public schools of his native county, spent one year in the Morgantown preparatory school, and in 1892 graduated Bachelor of Science from West Virginia University. He received his M. D. degree in 1894 from the College of Physicians and Surgeons at Baltimore, and has since gone back to Baltimore a number of times for post-graduate courses and clinical experience. While in university he was a member of the Phi Kappa Psi college fraternity. Doctor Grier began practice at Ravenswood, West Virginia, but in 1896 located at Sistersville, where for many years he has had an exceptionally heavy practice in medicine and surgery. His offices are in the Review Building on Wells Street. Doctor Grier for the past eight years has been health officer of Sistersville, served four years as coroner of Tyler County, and for twelve years has had a prominent part in the educational advancement of the community, serving as president of the Sistersville School Board and is president of the Sistersville School and Public Library.

Doctor Grier is a democrat, is past master of Phoenix Lodge No. 73, A. F. and A. M., past high priest of Sistersville Chapter No. 27, R. A. M., and is a thirty-second degree

Scottish Rite Mason in West Virginia Consistory No. 1 at Wheeling, and is a member of Nemesis Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Parkersburg. He is president of the Masonic Temple Association at Sistersville. Doctor Grier, who has never married, is a member of the Tyler County, West Virginia State and American Medical Associations, the Sistersville Country Club, and during the war was interested in all the drives, and spent much time instructing Red Cross classes.

EZBAI W. TALBOTT has been a river man nearly all his active life, had steamboat runs over all the great rivers of the Mississippi basin, but for a number of years past has been permanently located at Sistersville, where he is proprietor of the Wharfbat.

Mr. Talbott was born in Missouri, but is a member of an old family of the Upper Ohio Valley. His grandfather, Richard Talbott, was born in Brooke County, West Virginia, and spent most of his life there, having a farm. He died at Proctor, West Virginia. Richard Hardesty Talbott, father of E. W. Talbott, was born in Brooke County in 1824, was reared there, established his home in Wellsburg as a young man, and became a steamboat official. In 1848 he removed to Pike County, Missouri, near the Mississippi River, and owned a large farm there. In 1866 he returned to West Virginia, established his home in Marshall County on a farm, and in 1866 moved to the vicinity of Sistersville, buying a farm across the river in Monroe County, Ohio. He lived on this farm until his death in 1883. He was a democrat in politics and a member of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church. Richard H. Talbott married Mary Wells, who was born at Wells Bottom in Marshall County, West Virginia, in 1834, and died at Sistersville in 1908. She was the mother of eight children: Rolla, a farmer who died in Pike County, Missouri, at the age of thirty-two; Charles P., who died on the homestead farm in Monroe County, Ohio, at the age of fifty-three; John R., a farmer at North Jackson, Ohio; Ezbai W.; Frank M., now living on the old homestead in Monroe County; Dora Virginia, wife of Frank D. McCoy, a retired merchant at Sistersville; Mary, who became the wife of George Durham, for many years a cashier of the Tyler County Bank of Sistersville, and who died at Garden City, New York, where his widow still lives; and Lucian Hardesty, owner and operator of a public garage at Sistersville.

Ezbai W. Talbott was born in Pike County, Missouri October 29, 1860, and was six years of age when the family returned to West Virginia. He attended the public schools of Sistersville, Duff's Business College in Pittsburgh, and the high school at New Martinsville, West Virginia. Leaving school at the age of twenty-one, Mr. Talbott became a mate on steamboats plying on the Ohio, Mississippi and Missouri rivers, and later took out papers as a captain. For many years he was on the river as a steamboat man, well known in river transportation circles, but most of the time kept his home at Sistersville, though he also lived at other places along the river. In 1908 Mr. Talbott bought the Wharfbat at Sistersville, and this has been his chief interest ever since. He also became part owner and manager of the Sistersville Ferry Company, owning the ferry between Sistersville and Fly, Ohio, and he is still financially interested in this company. Mr. Talbott is a director of the First-Tyler Bank & Trust Company of Sistersville.

A well thought of and public spirited citizen, he was a member of the Sistersville City Council six years. He votes as a democrat, is a member of the Knights of Pythias, and owns one of the modern homes of the town, at 419 Wells Street.

In 1897, in Monroe County, Ohio, Mr. Talbott married Miss Nettie May Witten, daughter of James and Frances (Bridgeman) Witten, now deceased. Her father was one of the famous river pilots of his day, and conducted a number of the well known river steamers up and down the Ohio and Mississippi from Pittsburgh to New Orleans. Mr. and Mrs. Talbott have two daughters, Mary Frances, wife of Sam Fisher, part owner of the Paden City Glass Company and a resident of New Martinsville, and Miss Camilla, who graduated from a college at Jenkinstown, Pennsylvania.

SAM HISSAM is one of the older residents of the Sistersville community. In early life he was a teacher in Tyler County, then in the railway mail service, until oil development on his farm gave him private interests requiring his supervision. Mr. Hissam is still an oil producer and active farmer, and has shared in the public responsibilities of the county and is now postmaster of Sistersville.

The Hissam family is of English ancestry and has been in America since Colonial times. His grandfather, Thomas Hissam, was a native of Westmoreland County, Pennsylvania, where he grew up, learned the trade of shoemaker but also followed farming. In Westmoreland County he married a Miss White, who was born on the ocean during a four months voyage while her parents were coming from Ireland. Shortly after his marriage Thomas Hissam moved to Tyler County, West Virginia, and lived out his life here as a farmer and worker at his trade. His son, William Hissam, was born in Tyler County in 1824, and spent all his life as an industrious farmer and was one of the respected members of his community. He died in 1907. He was a democrat and a leader in the Christian Church. His first wife was Elizabeth Weekly, who was born in Tyler County in 1834 and died in 1906. His second wife was Frances Malson, a native and life-long resident of Tyler County, and they reared a family of five children. Elizabeth Weekly Hissam was the mother of five children: Elijah C., a farmer who died at Coryopolis, Pennsylvania, in 1919, at the age of sixty-three; Samantha, who died at East Liverpool, Ohio, wife of Sam Winning, a cooper by trade, who died at Sistersville; Margaret, who died at Cornwells in Ritchie County, West Virginia, in 1879, wife of Harvey M. Weekly, a farmer still living in Ritchie County; Harvey B., employed in a rubber factory in Akron, Ohio; and Sam.

Sam Hissam was born on a farm a mile south of Sistersville October 5, 1865, and secured his early advantages in the rural schools, attended several summer normal schools at Sistersville and Middlebourne, and at the age of twenty-one was given his first opportunity to teach in a district school in Tyler County. Altogether he taught seven terms of country school, for one term was principal of the Middlebourne graded school, and another term was teacher of the grammar room at Sistersville. After passing the civil service examination Mr. Hissam in 1895 was appointed a substitute in the railway mail service, in 1896 was given his first regular appointment, and turned over his school to the then county superintendent, Thomas P. Hill, who finished out the term. Mr. Hill is now an attorney at Middlebourne. Mr. Hissam's first assignment was on the run between Wheeling and Garrett, Indiana, but two years later he was transferred to the Pittsburgh and Kenova Railway post office, and was on this run until he resigned May 25, 1907.

For a number of years Mr. Hissam had owned a farm of a hundred and forty acres at Dry Run in Tyler County. This came within the area of oil prospecting, and after oil was developed on the farm Mr. Hissam sold the property in 1907, though retaining his oil royalties. A number of wells were drilled there and one is still producing. In 1907 Mr. Hissam bought another farm of two hundred and fifty acres on Middle Island Creek, six miles south of Sistersville, and he still owns and operates this property. In connection with farming he was for about two years rather extensively engaged in the lumber business, buying tracts of standing timber in Tyler County and having it cut, logged and sawed. He was in this business from 1917 until the fall of 1919.

In 1910 Mr. Hissam was elected commissioner of the County Court, and filled that office six years with credit. August 29, 1919, he was appointed postmaster of Sistersville, his name standing first on the list of the classified civil service. In 1905 the Town Council of Sistersville appointed him assessor, an office he filled one year, and at the same time was deputy county assessor.

Mr. Hissam is a democrat, is an elder in the Christian Church of Sistersville, a member of Sistersville Lodge No. 333, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, Kiwanis Club and the Sistersville Country Club. He owns a modern home on Cemetery Road. During the war he was a participant in every drive, being a member of the committee for the first Liberty Loan drive in Union District, and district chairman of all the other loan campaigns. He was chairman of the Little Buffalo School District for the Y. M. C. A. drive, was captain of a team for the Red Cross campaigns, was a member of the Tyler County Council of Defense, and a Four Minute speaker. He and Mrs. Hissam used their car almost constantly in some of the many phases of patriotic endeavor during this period.

March 28, 1889, at Sistersville, Mr. Hissam married Miss Eunice M. Calhoun, daughter of John C. and Jane (Clark) Calhoun. Her father, now deceased, was a steamboat engineer for many years. Her mother lives with Mr. and Mrs. Hissam. Mr. and Mrs. Hissam have an interesting family of eight children. The oldest, Paul B., was a soldier boy, and his record is given a paragraph by itself. Grace is the wife of Ira W. Moore, an oil field worker in Tyler County; Bernice is the wife of Garnett H. Hadley, an oil field worker living near Sistersville. Eugenie is the wife of Neil E. Riges, a glass worker at Sistersville. Ellen is a student in the Sistersville High School, while the younger children are Benjamin L., born March 1, 1908; George R., born June 9, 1911, and Sam, born June 12, 1915.

Paul B. Hissam, who was born June 4, 1894, enlisted in January, 1917, before America entered the war with Germany. He was first sent to Fort Leavenworth, then to Camp Jackson and Camp Wadsworth, South Carolina, then to Camp Upton on Long Island, and in July, 1918, embarked for overseas, going to France by way of England. He was in the Field Signal Corps with the Second Army Corps, and was brigaded with the British on the San Quentin and Cambrai sectors. He remained there until the armistice was signed, and was returned home in April, 1919, and mustered out with the rank of corporal at Camp Dix, New Jersey. He now lives at Falcon, Kentucky, being assistant foreman for the Petroleum Exploration Company.

HUGH H. STEELE is an influential figure in connection with the industrial and general business activities of the thriving little City of Richwood, Nicholas County, where he is president of the Fulton Manufacturing Company, manufacturers of clothebins and butter dishes.

Mr. Steele claims the old Keystone State of the Union as the place of his nativity, his birth having occurred at Hammond, Tioga County, Pennsylvania, on the 27th of June, 1879. He is a son of Frank and Emmer (Hammond) Steele, both likewise natives of Pennsylvania, where the former was born at Mountain Lake, Bradford County, January 22, 1855, and the latter was born March 10, 1855, at Hammond. The Hammond family has been one of prominence in Pennsylvania since the day of William Penn, and in its honor the native place of the subject of this sketch was named. Frank Steele became successfully engaged in the lumber business at Hammond, Pennsylvania, and developed a prosperous enterprise also as a carpenter and builder. He and his wife still reside at that place, both being members of the Baptist Church, and he is a republican in politics.

Of their five children two died in early childhood. Of the three surviving children Hugh H., of this review, is the eldest; Robert is a successful physician and surgeon engaged in practice in the City of Chicago; and Marguerite, who holds a position in one of the Government offices in the City of Washington, has supplemented her high-school education by attending Georgetown University.

After profiting by the advantages of the public schools of his native state Hugh H. Steele completed a course in business college, and at the age of sixteen years he initiated his connection with railroad work, with which he continued to be identified ten years. He then took a position with the Locke Insulator Company at Victor, New York and later he held a responsible position in the general offices of the Dodge Clotheshpin Company at Codersport, Pennsylvania, where he remained thus engaged until 1912. He then came to Richwood, West Virginia, and took a minor office position with the Fulton Manufacturing Company with which he won advancement to the office of secretary and of which he has been the president since June 22, 1921. He has played an influential part in the upbuilding of the substantial business of this corporation, and is one of the vital and progressive citizens and business men of Richwood. His political allegiance is given to the republican party, he has received the thirty-second degree in the Scottish Rite of the Masonic fraternity, and he and his wife are zealous members of the Presbyterian Church at Richwood, in which he is serving as a deacon.

On the 16th of January, 1906, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Steele and Miss Breunle, who likewise was born and reared in Pennsylvania, and the one child of this union is a daughter, Eileen C., who was born December 5, 1907, and who is, in 1922, a student in the Richwood High School.

CHARLES LESTER BROADWATER is one of the most prominent figures in the educational affairs of West Virginia today. He is a comparatively young man, now in the prime of his usefulness, and has been teaching and engaged in educational administration for twenty years.

Mr. Broadwater, who is principal of the Tyler County High School at Middlebourne, was born near Harrisville in Ritchie County, West Virginia, September 26, 1883. The Broadwaters are an old Colonial Virginia family, coming from Broadwater Parish, Sussex County, England, about 1630. The first immigrant, Charles Broadwater, who received a patent of 40,000 acres of land in Virginia, brought over a shipload of immigrants. His patent is on record at Richmond, Virginia. In 1754 one Charles Broadwater furnished a horse for the Braddock campaign. This same Charles was elected vestryman in the Episcopal Church and at the same time that George Washington was elected to a like office, 1765. The vote is recorded in the Episcopal History of Virginia for twelve vestrymen, Washington being fifth with 265 votes, and Charles Broadwater being sixth, with 254 votes. Mr. Broadwater is represented by ancestors in the Revolution and the War of 1812. The great-grandfather of Charles L. Broadwater served at the defense of Fort Mifflin when the British attacked it in 1814. He emigrated from Virginia to Western Maryland on account of dislike of slavery. He was the ancestor of the West Virginia Broadwaters. His grandfather was Peter Broadwater, who was born in Garrett County, Maryland, in 1823, and as a young man moved to Ritchie County, West Virginia, where he married and became a farmer. He was accompanied by two brothers, who also became West Virginia farmers, one, Jefferson, settling near Pennsboro, and the other, Ashford, in McKim Creek in Tyler County. The first wife of Peter Broadwater, who died near Harrisville in 1860, was Love Taylor, a lifelong resident of Ritchie County. His second wife, grandmother of Charles L. Broadwater, was Fannie Malone, who was born near Harrisville, the daughter of James Malone, at one time a representative in the Virginia House of Burgesses.

Charles Broadwater, father of Charles L., was born near Harrisville October 27, 1857, and has spent all his life in that community, an industrious and respected farmer. He is still on his farm between Harrisville and Ellenboro. He is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church and a Republican in politics. Charles Broadwater married Miss Liza Wagner, who was born near Harrisville and died in 1887. Her two children were: Charles L. and Ellis A. The latter was born in 1885 and died on the homestead farm in 1907. The second wife of Charles Broadwater was Emily B. Patton, a native of Ritchie County, where she died in 1901. She was the mother of four children, the oldest being Annie, wife of J. Fred Starr, a painter and carpenter at Harrisville. The second, Hayward S., now in the hardware business at Mannington, was a non-commissioned officer in the Intelligence Service of the Three Hundred and Twentieth Infantry, Eightieth, or Blue Ridge, Division, spending a year in France, and took part in the battle of Arras with the English and in the St. Mihiel and Argonne campaigns. He was also a sharpshooter, and was mustered out with the rank of corporal. The third child, Fannie, is the wife of George Moore, a farmer near Harrisville, and Bernard B. now lives with his father. Charles Broadwater in 1904 married for a third wife Miss Lizzie Maxwell, a native of Preston county.

Charles Lester Broadwater spent his youth on his father's farm and his early advantages were supplied by the rural schools of Ritchie County. In 1907 he graduated in the academic and normal courses from Marshall College at Huntington, paying his expenses through Marshall College and through his subsequent university career by his own earnings. In 1913 he received his A. B. degree from West Virginia University, and was a member of the Sigma Chi fraternity there. He was also president of the senior class. Later, by several terms of residence study, Mr. Broadwater won the Master of Arts degree from Columbia University of New York City in 1918.

He taught his first school at Smithville in Ritchie County in 1900. For four years he was in rural school work in Ritchie County, and from 1907 to 1911 was principal of the high school of New Martinsville, and from 1913 to 1918 was principal of the Mannington High School. Mr. Broadwater has been principal of the Tyler County High School since 1918. This is a high school of the first class, has a teaching staff of eleven, and a scholarship enrollment of 193.

Mr. Broadwater's unusual qualifications were strongly urged during his candidacy for the republican nomination for state superintendent of schools in 1920. He is a member of the National Education Association and the State Education Association. He is president of the Northwestern Teachers Association of West Virginia, 1921-22.

During the World War Mr. Broadwater was chairman of the Speakers Bureau of the western end of Marion County, chairman of the Four Minute men of Mannington, and employed all his personal talents to support the Government and the local campaigns for the various causes. He is a republican, a member of the Official Board of the Methodist Episcopal Church at Middlebourne, and since 1911 has been a member of Wetzel Lodge No. 39, A. F. and A. M., at New Martinsville. He is also a member and was manager in 1913, of the West Virginia University Dramatic Club.

August 23, 1913, at New Martinsville, he married Miss Helen V. Williams, daughter of Evan A. and Emma (Moore) Williams, residents of Middlebourne, where her father is a dairyman. Mr. and Mrs. Broadwater have three children: Charles L., Jr., born November 26, 1914; Daniel W., born May 9, 1917; and Eugene S., born December 7, 1918.

ORRIN BRYTE CONAWAY, a Middlebourne attorney and prosecuting attorney of Tyler County, represents an American and English lineage embracing men and women of the highest distinction for four centuries or more.

Conaway is a form of spelling adopted by the founder of the Virginia line, though other branches of the America family have followed the more usual spelling, Conway. Another variant of the name is Conweye. The derivation is from "Con" a Celtic word meaning head or chief, and "wy" a river. The original form of the name was therefore Conwy. In North Wales there is a river and a town called Conwy. Sir Edward Conway was knighted in 1596 for prowess in Spain, where he was deputy governor. He was Baron Conway of Ragley, Warwick, and Viscount Conway of "Conwa Castell" in Wales. Sir Edward married Dorathe, heiress of Sir John Tracy. Lord Conway of Ragley was a friend of Penn and of Henry Moore, a Platonist who spent much of his time in Ragley, which he called a center of devotion and a paradise of peace and piety. Lady Conway was said to be a sister of the Earl of Nottingham.

Lancaster and Spottsylvania counties, Virginia, have always been strongholds of the Conways. Edwin Conway or Conaway, as he wrote his name, came to Virginia in 1640 from Worcester County, England. Sometimes he also spelled his name Conneway. He appears in the Northampton Records in June, 1642, as "Mr. Edwyn Conway, Clarke (clerk) of this Com." He married in England Martha Eltonhead of Eltonhead. His second wife was a sister or near relative of the well known John Carter of the Carter family, and descendants of this line of Conways have it all their own way when seeking admission to patriotic societies. In the various generations the family held in turn every office in the gift of the people. Edwin Conway was the third clerk of Northampton County, and while he wrote a bad hand "it was not so bad as Thomas Cooke's, another clerk." Edwin died in Lancaster County in 1675.

Edwin second, born in 1654, married two wives, Sarah Fleete and Elizabeth Thompson. From Edwin and Elizabeth descended James Madison, president of the United States. Nellie Conway or Eleanor Rose Conway, as some historians name her, was of the fourth generation from Edwin. She was a daughter of Francis Conway and married at the age of eighteen Colonel James Madison, and their son was president of the United States. She died at Montpelier in 1829, lacking two days of being a hundred years old. Martha Thompson, who married James Taylor, was mother of Frances Taylor, who married Ambrose Madison, grandfather of the President. This is the Taylor family which gave another president to the United States.

Eltonhead Conway, daughter of the Virginia pioneer, Edwin, married Henry Thacker, who was clerk of the Virginia Council. The Thackers were large land owners in Virginia, and Colonel Edwin Thacker, born in 1695, was a Burgess sheriff of Middlesex County and a vestryman of Christ Church.

Colonel Edwin Conway, of the third generation, was prominent in state and church, a member of the House of Burgesses for many years. He was born in Lancaster County and married Anna Ball, half sister of Mary Ball, mother of Washington. The marriage papers of Anna Conway, daughter of Colonel Edwin, are preserved in Virginia Archives and are interesting documents. The father's consent to her marriage is given in a paper of some length and its seal displays the arms of the family. Of this coat of arms some one has written: "It indicates a branch of Lord Conway's family, replanted and grown to another tree and requiring Arms of its own for legal purposes."

Another family of Conways not descended from Edwin of Lancaster was also in Virginia. The two families have a common origin. Edwin of Lancaster descended from the Lords Conyway who traced back to that Edwin Conyway who married Anna, daughter and heiress of Richard Burdett of Warwick. One of the King's Commissioners for Virginia, 1609-20, was Sir Edward Conway, and associated with him was Captain Thomas Conway. They were probably brothers. Two of the name, and brothers, who settled in North Carolina were related to the Marquis of Hertford. The Pennsylvania branch of the family claims William Conway, born in the Valley of the Clyde, Wales, and who came to America before 1770, was a soldier in the Revolution and married Ruth Adams, a native of Pennsylvania. Of this line were Dr. Thomas Conway and William, who married Isabella Armour, of Irish descent. New England also had its Conways. One, William Conway, born in Camden, Maine, in 1802, was a sailor for forty years.

The Conways in all generations have been staunch patriots. Among those in the Revolution were Lieutenant Joseph, a near relative of Nellie Conway Madison; Lieutenant James and General Henry, who received for services to the State of Virginia 4,666 $\frac{2}{3}$ acres of land. New Jersey's representative in the war was Lieutenant Colonel John Conway.

Among marriage connections of the Southern branch of the Conways are the families of the Fitzhughs, Blackwells, Stanards, Spanns and Daniels. The distinguished author Moncure Daniel Conway, who at the age of eighteen wrote a pamphlet entitled "Free Schools in Virginia" that was pronounced a masterly argument and undoubtedly influenced the establishment of such schools in the state, was a native of and represented a prominent branch of the Conway family in Stafford County, Virginia, and his mother was a daughter of John Moncure Daniel, who served as surgeon general in the War of 1812 and was a granddaughter of Thomas Stone, one of the signers of the Declaration of Independence. Some branches of the Conways claim royal descent from Edward I through the Byrds, Beverleys and Nevilles. One Conway will direct that forty shillings be paid "Mr. David Currie if he will read my burial; I would not have a funeral sermon."

There must have been just one black sheep in the Conway family, since in a will one member is cut off by his father with the traditional shilling. The coat of arms of the Conway family, preserved in several documents in the Virginia State Archives, is recorded: "Sable on a band argent, cotised ermine, a rose, gules, between two amulets of the last." Crest: "A Moor's head, sidefaced proper, banded round the temples, argent and azure." The motto: "Fide et amore."

The Conways have been in Tyler County, West Virginia, for several generations. Eli Conway was born in that county, and spent his life there as a farmer. He married Perthena A. Ruffner. Their son, Charles I. Conway, was born in Tyler County in 1844 and died in 1894, and during his active life was both a merchant and farmer. He married Elizabeth Virginia Stealey.

Orrin Bryte Conway, fifth of the ten children of his parents, was born in Tyler County June 21, 1879. He attended the public schools, graduated in 1900 from West Virginia Wesleyan College at Buckhannon and subsequently entered West Virginia University at Morgantown, from which he received his A. B. degree in 1903 and his LL. B. degree in 1906. Since his graduation Mr. Conway has been industriously engaged in professional work at Middlebourne. He has served as mayor of that town, and is now in his third term as prosecuting attorney of Tyler County.

Mr. Conway is member of the Phi Kappa Psi college fraternity, and has served on the Official Board of the Methodist Episcopal Church. March 8, 1911, at Middlebourne, he married Maude K. Carpenter, daughter of J. S. and Frances (Kramer) Carpenter. Mr. and Mrs. Conway have had two children: Helen K., born January 11, 1912, and died February 8, 1920, and Orrin Bryte, Jr., born February 14, 1918.

ALBIN H. SMITH is a native of Tyler County, where during his young manhood he taught school, later graduated in pharmacy, for a number of years has been in the drug business and is now proprietor of the leading drug store of Middlebourne.

He was born at Wick in Tyler County July 23, 1889. His grandfather, Henry Smith, was born in Pennsylvania in 1814, and was an early day farmer in the Frew community of Tyler County where he lived until his death in 1896. Finton A. Smith, better known to his friends as "Bose," is a resident of Frew, where he was born March 9, 1854, and his home all his life has been at Frew and Wick. He is a skillful house painter by trade, and has performed that essential service for many years, including much work in Middlebourne and vicinity. He is a republican in politics. Finton A. Smith married Miss Maggie Robinson, who was born at Wick April 20, 1863. They became the parents of five children: Olive, wife of J. Kenneth McCoy, a druggist at Fairview in Marion County; Albin H.; Gertrude, who died at the age of nine years; Miss Floy, a graduate nurse in charge of a ward in the Ohio Valley Hospital at Wheeling; and Frank H., an apprentice druggist under his brother.

Albin H. Smith was educated in the rural schools to the age of seventeen. He taught one year at Blue and for three years in his home district at Frew. In 1912 he graduated with the degree Ph. G. from the Valparaiso University School of Pharmacy. He then returned to West Virginia and clerked in a drug store at Fairview in Marion County until stricken with typhoid fever three weeks later. After recovering he was for three years a drug clerk in the Opera Drug store at Sistersville, then for three months in George Phillips' store at St. Marys in Pleasants County, and after that did relief work in Fayette and McDowell counties until 1915. In that year Mr. Smith removed to Middlebourne, and for four years was associated as an employee with the drug store of Charles D. Eastman. He then bought a half interest in the store and in December, 1920, became full proprietor and is now at the head of a prosperous business.

Mr. Smith is a republican, a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and is affiliated with Middlebourne Lodge No. 34, F. and A. M. In June, 1915, at New Martinsville, he married Miss Nina White, daughter of Hamilton and Florida (Hall) White. Her parents now live at Sistersville and her father is a veteran Union soldier. Mr. and Mrs. Smith have three children: Harold Eugene, born March 4, 1916; Charles A., born in 1917; and Maurice F., born August 24, 1919.

JOE WILLIAMS is founder and publisher of the Pleasant County Leader, the second oldest but the largest newspaper in point of circulation and influence in Pleasants County and in fact one of the best edited journals in that section of the state. Mr. Williams has been a citizen of invaluable influence in St. Marys, is a former representative of Pleasants County and was also postmaster of St. Marys for a number of years.

His family were pioneers in Greenbrier County, West Virginia, going into that mountainous section from old Virginia. His grandfather, Joseph Williams, was born in 1800, owned arm, but spent a large part of his time hunting. He died in Greenbrier County in 1884. His wife was a Miss Brown, a native of the same county, who died in Kansas. James M. Williams, father of the St. Marys editor, lived all his life on one farm in Greenbrier County, where he was born in 1837 and died in 1909. He was a soldier in the Union Army. At first he was a scout attached to the forces of General George Crook. Later he joined Captain Andrew W. Mann's Company of State Guards from Greenbrier County, being enrolled in the Company December 1, 1864, and discharged July 1, 1865. This service was a particularly hazardous one in the No Man's Land between the Union and Confederate lines, and he had a full share in that strenuous campaigning. He was a republican in politics and a member of the Baptist Church. James M. Williams married Lavina McMillan, who was born in 1838 and died in 1905, spending all her life in Greenbrier County. They became the parents of seven children: John R., who died on the Williams homestead at the age of thirty, having taught school for a number of years; Vellie Frances, wife of Moffat May, a farmer, stock raiser and lumber dealer living near White Sulphur Springs, West Virginia; Luella, wife of Rev. S. A. Mondy, a clergyman of the Methodist Church near Macon, Georgia; Joe; Mrs. Maggie Burns, who died on the old home farm; Emma, a farmer at Myrtle Creek, Oregon; Mrs. Cassie Christian, whose husband operates a part of the Williams homestead.

Joe Williams, who was born January 20, 1873, lived on the farm to the age of eighteen and acquired his early education in the rural schools of Greenbrier County. For two years he worked for N. S. Bruffey in a store at Falling Spring in Greenbrier County, and then as clerk for W. H. Overholt at the same place about two years. During 1894-95 he attended Michaels University at Logansport, Indiana, taking a business course, and in the fall of 1895 began in connection with journalism at Sistersville as an employee of J. H. McCoy on the Daily Oil Review.

On September 12, 1898, Mr. Williams moved to St. Marys and established the Pleasants County Leader, of which he has since been proprietor and editor. He owns the Leader Building and the entire plant, and has one of the best equipped newspaper offices in this section of the state, including linotype machines, cylinder press, etc. It is a republican paper, circulating throughout Pleasants and surrounding counties, and as an extensive mailing list to all the oil sections of the county.

Mr. Williams was postmaster of St. Marys from 1905 to 1913. He was reappointed by President Taft, but the democratic Senate refused to confirm him for a third term. He was city treasurer in 1914-15, and in November, 1918, was elected on the republican ticket to represent Pleasants County in the state Legislature. He was one of the very useful members in the sessions of 1919-20. As a member of the educational committee he helped frame the present school code. He was chairman of the committee on executive offices and libraries, and a member of the committees on election and privileges, insurance and Virginia debt.

Mr. Williams affiliates with the Presbyterian Church, is a past master of St. Marys Lodge No. 41, F. and A. M., a member of Sistersville Chapter No. 27, R. A. M., Mountain State Commandery No. 14, K. T., Nemesis Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Parkersburg, and St. Marys Chapter No. 31 of the Eastern Star. During the war he made the Pleasants County Leader an effective source of influence and publicity for the Government and every patriotic cause associated with the winning of the war, and was personally active in the various drives in his locality. Mr. Williams owns a modern home at 501 First Street and is also owner of a baseball park at St. Marys.

In 1899 he married Miss Eloise Bachman, daughter of Captain Martin and Margie E. (Miller) Bachman, now deceased. Her father, who was a lumber manufacturer at St. Marys, served as a captain in the Union Army during the Civil war. Mr. and Mrs. Williams have four children: Nellie, born August 19, 1902, is in the junior class at West Virginia University; and the three younger children, all attending high school, are Doris, born in June, 1905; Joe, born in August, 1906, and Mazie, born in May, 1908.

MAJOR ULYSSES A. KNAPP had completed his law studies when America declared war on Germany, and when his class graduated and a degree was assigned him by West Virginia University he was attending the First Officers Training Camp. The two succeeding years he was in active service, spending a year in France, and after his discharge he began practice at Fairmont, where he has already achieved recognition as a very able and thorough lawyer.

Major Knapp was born on a farm in Fayette County, Pennsylvania, November 9, 1886, but is related to several old West Virginia families. His grandparents were Henry and Margaret (Markley) Knapp. Henry Knapp was born in New York State and as a young man removed to West Virginia and married Margaret Markley, a native of Barbour County, this state, and daughter of Christian and Margaret (Shockey) Markley. Charles F. Knapp, father of Major Knapp, was born in Barbour County, West Virginia, November 19, 1853, but in early life removed to Pennsylvania. He married Nancy A. Thomas, who was born in Fayette County Pennsylvania, October 10, 1854, daughter of George and Nancy (Umbel) Thomas, both natives of Pennsylvania. George Thomas was born in Maryland, son of Jacob Thomas and grandson of Alexander Thomas. Alexander Thomas was a native of Wales and founder of his branch of the family in America. After his marriage Charles F. Knapp settled on a farm in Fayette County, Pennsylvania, but in 1897 removed to Fairmont, West Virginia, where he and his wife now reside.

Ulysses A. Knapp was about ten years of age when his parents located at Fairmont. Here he acquired a common school education and at the age of thirteen he went to work in the Bank of Fairmont, remaining there two years. He was then in the engineering department of the Consolidation Coal Company, but in intervals of employment, and paying his way through his earnings, he attended the city schools and the Fairmont Normal School. After his university preparation he entered West Virginia Law School, and graduated in 1917 as president of his class.

Major Knapp reported to the First Officers Training Camp at Fort Benjamin Harrison at Indianapolis, May 13, 1917. He received his commission as captain August 15th, and was assigned to the command of Company H of the Three Hundred and Twenty-ninth Infantry, Eighty-third Division. He was kept in the home camp, training and in other duty until June 12, 1918, when he sailed for overseas, landing at LaHavre July 1st, and was in command of the Second Battalion of the Three Hundred and Twenty-ninth Regiment from August 15 to November 26, 1918. He was attached to the general headquarters as rifle instructor of the Third Corps School at Clamecy, Nievre, from November 27, 1918, to April 1, 1919, and was range officer and assistant range officer of the D'Auvons Range at LeMans from April 1, 1919 to July 1, 1919. He was commissioned major of infantry May 14, 1919. July 19th he sailed from Brest, landing in New York City July 29th, and received his honorable discharge at Camp Sherman, Ohio, August 16, 1919.

While still in the service and while at home on leave of absence Major Knapp was admitted to the West Virginia bar, in April, 1919, and soon after leaving the army he began practice at Fairmont.

Major Knapp is a very popular citizen and is affiliated with the democratic party. In 1920 he won the democratic nomination as a candidate for the House of Delegates. When L. C. Musgrove, candidate for prosecuting attorney, withdrew from the campaign, he was unanimously chosen by the County Committee to fill the vacancy on the ticket, and made a very active and spirited campaign against the heavy odds that ended in a general republican landslide that year. Major Knapp is a member of the American Legion, the Order of Elks, Knights of Pythias and Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and also belongs to the Kiwanis Club and the Phi Sigma Kappa college fraternity.

JOHN L. HISCOM. Many residents of Tyler and Pleasants counties recall when John L. Hiscom was one of the most popular school men in these sections, and his last school work was done at St. Marys. When he left the school room he took up the lumber business and now has the only business of the kind in Pleasants County, and has an extensive trade both retail and wholesale. In other ways Mr. Hissom has been a man of leadership and influence in this section of the state.

His ancestry is English, but members of the family have been in this country since Colonial times. They first settled in old Virginia, where Mr. Hissom's grandfather, David, was born. As a young man he went to the Ohio Valley and for many years lived on a farm in Monroe County, Ohio, but spent his last days in Tyler County, West Virginia. He was a veteran of the War of 1812. His wife was a Miss Bowen, a native of Ohio. Their son, William S. Hissom, was born in Monroe County in 1828, and for many years conducted his farm in that county, but in 1888 moved to Tyler County, West Virginia, and continued farming there until his death in 1900. He was active in the Methodist Episcopal Church and a democrat in politics. He married in Monroe County, Sarah A. Hubbard, who was born at Johnstown, Pennsylvania, in 1832, and died in Tyler County in 1890. Their children were six in number: Manford C., a farmer in Clarington, Ohio; Oscar E., a steamboat mate who died at East Liverpool, Ohio, in 1916; John L.; Alvin D., a farmer in Tyler County; Hattie Elizabeth, who died in Tyler County, wife of Robert O. Cathers, a farmer; and Ephraim T., a farmer who died in Tyler County in 1900.

John L. Hissom was born in Monroe County June 28, 1862, and was reared and educated there. He attended rural schools, a normal school at Woodsfield, and in the winter of 1884 taught his first winter term in Mount Zion School in his native county. The following four years he was in the Mount Aetna School in the same county, after which he came to West Virginia, and during 1889-90 presided over the Star School in Tyler County, for one term was principal of the school at Friendly, and for six terms was teacher of Oak Grove. His first teaching in Pleasants County was one term at Pleasants Ridge, and then for three years he was principal of the graded schools at St. Marys. For a year after he retired from educational work Mr. Hissom was editor of St. Marys Oracle, the oldest paper in Pleasants County.

Then, in 1903, he established his present business as a retail and wholesale dealer in lumber, and carries a complete and well selected stock of lumber and building materials, owning his offices and yards at Barkwill and Court streets. Mr. Hissom is also a stockholder in the Pleasants County Bank and is a stockholder and secretary of the United Telephone Company at St. Marys. He owns considerable real estate, including his modern home on Court Street and a farm in Tyler County.

Mr. Hissom acted for two years as a member of the City Council at St. Marys. He is a democrat, a steward in the Methodist Protestant Church, is a past grand of St. Marys Lodge No. 22, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and a member of the Knights of the Maccabees. It should also be said to his credit that during the war he used his financial means to support the Government and took part in the various local patriotic drives. Moreover, one of his sons was fighting the German Kaiser in France.

In 1885, in Monroe County, Mr. Hissom married Miss Eva Wright, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Wright, now deceased. Her father was a farmer. Mrs. Hissom died in Tyler County in 1889, and was survived by two daughters: Miss Nellie T., who died at the age of thirty-one, and Nora D., wife of Jack B. Horner, a mill worker at Washington, Pennsylvania. In 1891, in Tyler County, Mr. Hissom married Miss Lottie J. Craig, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Daniel Craig, now deceased. By this marriage Mr. Hissom has two sons, William C. and Olin S. William, who was born June 20, 1892, was educated in the schools at St. Marys and is associated with his father in business. He married Ethel Adams, a native of Pleasants County, and their three children are Kathryn, born January 17, 1913; Billie, born September 10, 1915, and Charles, born July 4, 1919. The second son, Olin, was in France twelve months with the Expeditionary Forces, participated in the Argonne Drive, and was mustered out with the rank of sergeant. He now is connected with the lumber business.

WILLIAM EDWARD CLOVIS. During the past seven years Mr. Clovis has devoted his entire time and energies to a very successful and prosperous automobile business as an authorized agent for the Ford car in Pleasants County. His career altogether has been one of well directed effort in different lines. He has been a teacher, is former sheriff of Pleasants County, and probably is as well known over the county as any other citizen.

His family has been in West Virginia for several generations. The name Clovis was transplanted to Pennsylvania in Colonial times from Southwestern Virginia. His great-grandfather, Conrad Clovis, was born in Pennsylvania, and from that estate moved his family to Hebron, West Virginia, where he lived out his life as a farmer. The grandfather of William E. Clovis was Solomon Clovis, who was born in Monongalia County, West Virginia, in 1818, but spent nearly all his life in Pleasants County and was a cabinet maker by trade. He died in 1876 and is buried at Hebron. His wife was a Miss Wick, a native and life long resident of Pleasants County. Amos Clovis, their son, was born near Hebron August 13, 1854, and since 1885 has been a resident of Maxwell in Pleasants County. He was a merchant in early life, and since then has been a leading farmer and still owns two farms at Maxwell. He is a republican and an active member of the Church of Christ. Amos Clovis married Martha Jane Fleming, who was born near Fairmont, West Virginia, July 15, 1856. William E. is the oldest of their children. Dr. Elijah Ellsworth is one of the state's prominent physicians and is now superintendent of the State Tuberculosis Sanitarium at Terra Alta. Cora Elizabeth is the wife of Homer F. Simonton, Circuit Court clerk of Pleasants County. Harry T. is an oil refiner at St. Marys, and the youngest, Maurice Lawrence, is in the drug business at Huntington.

William Edward Clovis was born at Hebron, Pleasants County, November 7, 1876, and acquired a rural school education there. He finished his education in the Fairmont State Normal, which he attended altogether for five terms. He was granted an opportunity to teach school at the age of eighteen, and the first year he taught in the Jonestown School of his native county. Then for two years he had charge of the French Creek School, one year in the Ruckman School on Cow Creek, and his last year was spent in his home school at Nine Mile. After leaving the schoolroom Mr. Clovis was deputy county assessor one year. For some time he cherished an ambition to become a physician, and with that in view he entered the College of Physicians and Surgeons at Baltimore, but on account of ill health had to give up those plans after the first year. From 1901 to 1908 Mr. Clovis conducted a mercantile business at Adlai in Pleasants County. In the fall of 1908 he was elected sheriff, and on January 7, 1909, removed to St. Marys and was the chief law officer of the local courts through the four year term ending in 1914. During 1913-14 Mr. Clovis was a member of St. Marys Hardware Company, but in the meantime he had taken the agency for the Ford cars, and since 1914 has made this his primary business. He is the authorized agent in Pleasants County for the Ford automobile, trucks and tractors, and has done the biggest business in that line of any automobile agency in this section of the state. It is estimated that he has sold at least ninety per cent of all automobiles bought in the county. During 1920-21 he erected a handsome public garage at the corner of Washington and Third streets. The garage is 80x80 feet, two stories, and built of brick and concrete. Mr. Clovis is also a director of the First National Bank of St. Marys.

He still retains a deep interest in educational progress and since July 1, 1919, has been president of the Board of Education in St. Marys. He is an elder in the Church of Christ, is a republican, and during the war was a "fourminute" speaker and a worker in behalf of all local patriotic causes.

April 16, 1899, at Gibson in Pleasants County, Mr. Clovis married Miss Mary Varner, daughter of George W. and Angella V. (Daniel) Varner, now deceased. Her father was a minister of the Church of Christ. Mrs. Clovis received a normal school education and prior to her marriage was a teacher in Pleasants County for four years. Mr. and Mrs. Clovis have five children, and have given all of them liberal educational advantages. Eunice Madge, the oldest, born March 4, 1900, is a graduate of the St. Marys High School and the Fairmont State Normal, and is now teacher of the fifth grade in the local public schools. Cora Edith, born October 23, 1901, graduated from the same schools as her sister and now has charge of the first grade in the St. Marys public school. The only son, George A., was born October 25, 1903, and is now a student in Marietta College in Ohio. The two younger children are Martha Virginia, born November 15, 1906, a student in high school, and Mary Edna, born November 21, 1910.

JOHN B. WATSON, M. D. For over thirty years Dr. Watson was performing his duties as a physician and surgeon, and most of that time has been a resident of St. Marys, his native town, in which he grew up and in which he has won the recognition of old time friends and associates, both in a professional capacity and as a high minded citizen.

Dr. Watson was born at St. Marys May 5, 1862. His grandfather, John Watson, was born in England in 1807 and as a young man came to America and settled on a farm near St. Marys, where he married Rosanna Barker, a native of Pleasants County. John Watson was a millwright, and he and his wife spent the rest of their years in and around St. Marys, where he died in 1894. The son, Andrew J. Watson, was born in Pleasants County in 1840 and was for a number of years identified with merchandising at St. Marys. In 1881 he removed to East Liverpool, Ohio, where he lived practically retired until his death in 1917. He was a democrat, and a member of the Methodist Protestant Church. His wife was Miss Charlotte Core, who was born in Harrison County, West Virginia, in 1838, and died at East Liverpool, Ohio, in October, 1920. Dr. Watson is the oldest of their large family of children; Mamie, who lives at East Liverpool, is the widow of William Good; Joseph C. was an oil well driller and died at East Liverpool in 1920; Mrs. Flora F. Griffin lives at Toronto, Ohio, where her husband is foreman in a pottery plant; William A. is foreman for the Newell Street Railway Company at East Liverpool; Iva is the wife of William Lawson a farmer, at East Liverpool; Charles is a motorman with the Newell Traction Company at East Liverpool; Virdie lives at East Liverpool, where her husband is employed in one of the pottery plants; and Andrew J. is a motorman for the Newell Traction Company.

John B. Watson spent his early life in Pleasants County and attended rural schools up to the age of thirteen and at that time began earning his own way. He was employed by his father in shaving staves and also worked in the timber until he was twenty-one. He came to manhood with a vigorous constitution but only a common school education. He began the study of medicine under his uncle, Dr. Joseph B. Watson, at St. Marys, and subsequently entered the College of Physicians and Surgeons at Baltimore, where he graduated in 1887. After graduating for nine and a half years Dr. Watson practiced at Lawrence in Upshur County, and since then has performed his professional work at St. Marys. His offices are on Second Street. Since 1920 he has been county health officer and is a member in good standing of the State and American Medical Associations. Dr. Watson is a democrat, has filled all the lay offices in the Methodist Protestant Church, and is affiliated with St. Marys Lodge No. 41, A. F. and A. M., St. Marys Camp No. 20 Knights of the Macabees, St. Marys Lodge No. 22, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and also belongs to the Knights of Pythias and the Tribe of Ben Hur.

In 1889, at Friendly, West Virginia, Dr. Watson married Miss Linnie F. Williamson. Two children were born to their marriage: Sue Mary, who died at St. Marys at the age of twenty-seven, was the wife of Dr. Jed C. Wilcoxon, a St. Marys dentist. The only son, Dr. J. Loomis Watson, graduated Doctor of Dental Surgery from the University of Pittsburgh and was in the Student Army Training Camp at Pittsburgh during the war. He is now practicing his profession at Pittsburgh.

Mrs. Watson is a daughter of Friend C. Williamson, who was born in Tyler County, West Virginia, in 1842, and lived there all his life. He had various business interests, and was an extensive dealer in fruit. The town of Friendly in Tyler County was named for him, and he was living in that community when he died in 1911. He was a democrat and was one of the leading members of the Methodist Protestant Church in his vicinity. He was also a Mason. Friend C. Williamson married Adelia Thorne, who was born in Jackson County, West Virginia, in 1844, and is now living at Friendly. Mrs. Watson was educated in the public schools of Friendly, and before her marriage was a milliner and dressmaker.

JAMES WILLIAM STUCK has practiced law as a member of the Doddridge County bar for over thirty years. With a general practice has gone a public-spirited participation in public affairs, and his record of efficient service in several important offices is an honor that his friends do not allow him to forget.

He was born at Central Station, Doddridge County, April 6, 1861, son of Lorenzo D. and J. Cinthe (Ruley) Stuck. His father, who was born near Uniontown, Pennsylvania, and was reared in that state, early in life entered the railroad service, and came to Doddridge County while helping build the Baltimore and Ohio through that county. He remained here and continued his service with the railroad company until about 1900. He died at the age of eighty-four and his wife, a native of Ohio, lived to be eighty. Their children were James William, Charles, Edward L. (deceased), Blanche and Nellie (deceased).

James William Stuck spent his early life at Central Station. After completing a high school education, he taught school for six years, and at the same time was diligently pursuing his law studies. He qualified for and was admitted to the bar in 1889. His first public honor came before he took up practice. In 1888 he was the republican party candidate for the House of Delegates from Doddridge County, and was elected and then reelected. These two terms of legislative service early in his professional career furnished him a valuable experience as well as an opportunity to look after the interest of his constituents in Doddridge County. In 1892 he was elected county prosecutor, and served in that office two years. For eight years Mr. Stuck served as a member of the Board of Directors for the State Deaf, Dumb and Blind Institute at Romney. He was first appointed to the board by Governor Aitchinson. Other offices of honor and trust have been conferred upon him, and at one time he was assistant Secretary of the First Senate.

For the past twelve years Mr. Stuck has given the Hope Gas Company much of his time, serving in the company's right of way and damage department. He married in 1882 Emma Benninger, daughter of Jacob Benninger, of Doddridge County. Six children were born to their marriage, and the five now living are: H. C., R. N., Ethel, Beulah and Georgia. The daughter Genevieve is deceased.

JUDGE WINFIELD SCOTT MEREDITH, judge of the Circuit Court of Marion County, has been an active member of the bar at Fairmont forty years. At the time he was admitted to the bar he was enjoying some congenial and useful relations as a teacher in the public and normal schools of the state, and in his case there was no waiting period bridging over his career as an educator and that of a lawyer. Judge Meredith has been a prominent factor in West Virginia affairs for many years.

Through four generations the Meredith family has been identified with the development of the northern section of the state. In the latter years of the eighteenth century there lived in South Wales a prosperous and hard working silversmith, Thomas Meredith. About 1800, seeking a change of fortune, he immigrated with his family to America, spending a short time at Hagerstown, Maryland, and then coming to what is now Marion County, West Virginia, locating on a farm in the Paw Paw District. He soon removed to another farm in Monongalia County, and for a number of years was busily engaged in its farming and stock raising activities. Becoming dissatisfied with that section of the state, he went on a homeseeking tour through Canada, and while there died without making permanent arrangements for a new home.

His son, William Meredith, was born in Wales, was three years of age when brought by his parents to America, and he grew up in West Virginia and as a young man cleared a farm on the Monongahela River near Smithtown in Monongalia County. Later removing to Marion County, he bought a farm of 300 acres on Pickett's Creek, and there lived, a man of industry and influence, until his death on February 13, 1869, at the age of seventy-two. For fifteen years he was justice of the peace, was deputy sheriff several years, and for one term president of the County Court of Marion County. His wife was Hannah Powell, daughter of John Powell and a native of Monongalia County.

The third generation was also represented by William Meredith, who was born near Smithtown in Monongalia County November 17, 1824, and lived to the advanced age of eighty-six, passing away in 1910. By trade he was a wagonmaker, and also successfully engaged in other enterprises. From 1866 to 1887 he was a lumber miller in Harrison and Ritchie counties, was a building contractor, a farmer, and held the office of justice of the peace in Wirt County. Governor Pierpont commissioned him a captain of militia. April 13, 1845, William Meredith II married Harriet Wilson. Her father, William H. Wilson, was a Marion County farmer and served as a soldier in the War of 1812.

Winfield Scott Meredith is a son of William and Harriet (Wilson) Meredith and was born in Marion County August 13, 1855. He grew up in the atmosphere of the Civil war, but had better than the average educational advantages. He attended Salem Academy in Harrison County, and graduated with the class of 1879 from the Fairmont State Normal School, subsequently taking post-graduate work there. He had been a teacher in the Normal school a year before he graduated, and for one year was principal of the public schools at Cherry Camp. One of his preceptors at the Normal School was Dr. J. G. Blair, who died in 1879, and Judge Meredith was elected by the board to conduct his classes until they were graduated. For three years Judge Meredith was principal at Palatine, now a ward of Fairmont City, and for two years was principal of the Mannington grade schools.

In the meantime he was diligently studying law, beginning under Judge James Morrow Jr., of Fairmont. He was admitted to the bar in 1881 and in 1888 admitted to practice before the West Virginia Supreme Court. Judge Meredith in 1882 was elected prosecuting attorney of Marion County to fill an unexpired term, and was then re-elected for a full term of four years. For many years he has been one of the recognized leaders of the republican party in his section of the state. In 1908 he was elected a member of the State Senate, taking his seat January 1, 1909, for a term of four years. That was the year of the memorable deadlock, when fifteen republican senators and fifteen democratic senators failed to agree as to the admission of some elected republicans. A republican caucus was in session fifteen days, Judge Meredith being its chairman, and when these republicans were threatened with arrest for not taking their seats and permitting the organization of the Senate, Judge Meredith and his followers avoided arrest by going to Cincinnati, where they remained about a week and then returned, after which the organization was completed with a republican as president of the body. Judge Meredith became chairman of the Judiciary Committee.

With this exception Judge Meredith was engaged in a growing and important private law practice until January 1, 1921, when he went on the bench as judge of the Circuit Court of Marion County. He was elected on the republican ticket in November, 1920. When he went on the bench Judge Meredith resigned as a director of the People's National Bank of Fairmont and severed all his official relations with other corporations.

Judge Meredith is a member of the West Virginia Bar Association and in 1918 was a delegate to the annual convention of the American Bar Association. During the World war he was active in Draft Board work, the Red Cross and Liberty Bond campaigns, and as a "Four Minute" man made numerous addresses all over the country.

In 1883 he married Dora Swisher, daughter of B. F. Swisher, of Fairmont. She died in 1886, leaving two sons: Dana S., who was born in 1884 and died in 1910; and Aubrey W., who was born in 1885 and died in 1915, having graduated from the Fairmont High School, attended the Fairmont State Normal, and in 1910 graduated LL. B. from West Virginia University and was coming into a successful practice as a lawyer at the time of his death. The second wife of Judge Meredith was a daughter of the late Sylvanus Hall, of Fairmont. She died leaving no children. In June, 1914, Judge Meredith married Frances Dent, who was born at Ironton, Ohio, daughter of H. C. Dent. They have one son, Winfield Scott Meredith, Jr., born January 6, 1916.

ISAAC TAYLOR PETERS, M. D., has the sterling characteristics and the technical knowledge and skill which make for maximum success in the exacting profession of his choice, and he is established in active general practice at Maybrey, McDowell County. In an important mine practice he is associated with his older brother, Dr. E. F. Peters, in whose personal sketch, on other pages of this work, is given adequate record concerning the family history.

Doctor Peters was born at Camp Creek, Mercer County, West Virginia, January 3, 1890, and is a son of Joseph and Mary Alice (Ellison) Peters, the father having been born in Virginia and the mother in West Virginia. Joseph Peters was a successful teacher prior to his marriage, and thereafter became a prosperous merchant and influential citizen of Mercer County, where he served many years as county assessor.

After leaving the public schools, Doctor Peters entered the Concord State Normal School, at Athens, West Virginia, 1906, and in this institution he was graduated in 1910. He taught one term of rural school and then was made superintendent of the schools of the North Fork and Elkhorn districts in McDowell County, an office of which he continued the incumbent two years. In 1918 he was graduated in the Medical College of Virginia, at Richmond, Virginia. In 1913, the New Medical College of Virginia consolidated with the University College of Medicine under the name of The Medical College of Virginia, Richmond, and has nothing to do with the school at Charlottesville. In his senior year he served as an interne in the Memorial Hospital at Richmond, and after receiving his degree of Doctor of Medicine he passed seven months as an assistant in the Johnston & Willis Sanitarium in that city, where he gained further fortifying experience. For the ensuing ten months he was associated in practice with Dr. R. V. Shanklin, at Gary, West Virginia, and since that time he has maintained a professional alliance with his brother, at Maybrey. He has in connection with his practice a well equipped operating room and also a limited number of beds for the immediate accommodation of patients who may require same prior to being taken to regularly constituted hospitals. Doctor Peters is an active member of the McDowell County Medical Society, and holds membership also in the West Virginia State Medical Society and the American Medical Association. He is a republican in political adhesion, is affiliated with the Blue Lodge, Chapter and Commandery bodies of York Rite Masonry, as is he also with the adjunct organizations, the Mystic Shrine and the Order of the Eastern Star, besides which he is a member of the Knights of Pythias.

In 1920, at Huntington, this state, was solemnized the marriage of Doctor Peters to Miss Lillian V. Davis, daughter of John L. and Dora (Rhodes) Davis, Mr. Davis being engaged in business as a real estate dealer, timber operator and contractor. The only child of Doctor and Mrs. Peters died in infancy.

STEPHEN T. BIRD, D. D. S., a prominent and popular Princeton dentist, has been in the practice of his profession there for over ten years, though for two years of this time he was absent on army duty. Few men attached to the Expeditionary Forces saw and participated in more strenuous scenes along the battle front than Doctor Bird.

He was born at Athens in Mercer County, July 8, 1883, and is of Scotch-Irish ancestry and of Old Virginia stock. His parents, J. S. H. and Elizabeth S. (Vermilion) Bird, were both born in Virginia. His father was a farmer, and in the Civil war became a Confederate soldier in a Virginia regiment under the command of General Breckenridge. He served until captured, and then remained at Fortress Monroe until the close of the war. After taking the oath of allegiance he returned home and resumed his work as a civilian on the farm. He kept in close touch with public affairs, for many years served on the school board, and was an active member of the Baptist Church.

Stephen T. Bird acquired a common school education at Athens, and supplemented this by attending the State Normal College there, graduating in 1904. The next two years he was a clerk for the Borderland Coal & Coke Company and the Thacker Coal & Coke Company, and in 1906 he began the study of dental surgery at Central University of Kentucky at Louisville, spending his vacations again in the service of the coal and coke companies. He graduated in 1909, and after one year of practice at Bluefield established his home and office at Princeton, in 1910, and has since achieved a splendid reputation for proficiency in his chosen calling.

His war record is one deserving special attention. Probably no man in West Virginia knows more of the realities of modern warfare than Doctor Bird. June 10, 1917, he received a commission as first lieutenant in the Dental Corps, but as a matter of fact he performed the duties of a dentist only while in the rest areas in France, and while on front line duty he was exposed to all the dangers and performed all the services required of regular physicians and surgeons at the battle front, chiefly in first aid. July 14, 1917, Doctor Bird was called to duty, being sent to Washington, D. C., and assigned to the Sixth United States Engineers of the Third Division. November 3rd he received orders for overseas duty and sailed December 3, 1917, arriving at St. Nazaire, France, December 24, 1917. He was with the Sixth Engineers in the Haute Marne sector on construction work for a month, and his regiment was then put on the British front on the Somme River with the Fourth British Army Division. Here it was that Doctor Bird had his first experience at the front giving first aid to the wounded, and for days was under constant fire. He continued with the British command until June 5, 1918, and then returned to the Marne and was assigned to the French Third Army Corps, and finally the Sixth Engineers were restored to their place in the Third American Army. On July 15, 1918, began the big battle as the Aisne-Marne defensive, when for three successive days the Germans made their last great effort to break through. The critical day was July 18th, and from then until August 14th the battle became known and was properly described as the Aisne-Marne offensive of the allies. All this time Doctor Bird was at the front, and the sights and scenes in which he participated are to him like a maze of horror, and yet they present an accurate picture of the realities of war. After the offensive Doctor Bird and his command were put in the rest area at Gondrecourt until September 4, 1918, were then moved over to the St. Mihiel sector and after three days participated in the Meuse-Argonne phase, there relieving the Seventy-ninth Division on September 29, 1918. Doctor Bird was in the Argonne fighting until October 1st, and was then returned to the rest area at Barleucq, where they remained until the signing of the armistice, November 11th. During the Argonne action Doctor Bird was wounded and for eleven days was in a hospital. A few days after the armistice was signed the Third Division started on its long hike into Germany and Doctor Bird was on the march from about November 15, 1918, to Christmas, when they reached their destination at Ochtersend. Here he remained until April 21, 1919, when he received an order to join the Thirty-second Division for home, and he went to Brest with the Second Battalion of the One Hundred and Twenty-fifth Infantry, sailed out of Brest May 3rd, arrived at Hoboken May 9th, and after a week in Camp Mills went to Camp Meade, where he received his honorable discharge and returned to Princeton. During the war Doctor Bird participated in field duty during five major operations of the allied armies.

Doctor Bird is unmarried, is a member of the Missionary Baptist Church, is a Royal Arch and Knight Templar Mason and Shriner, a member of the American Legion, a charter member of the Princeton Country Club, and professionally is affiliated with the State and American Dental Societies, and the Mercer, Mingo and McDowell Counties Dental Society.

HON. EDWARD COOPER, who represented the Fifth West Virginia District in Congress throughout the period of the World war, is a lawyer by training and early profession, but for over twenty years has devoted his time and energies to the business of coal operator, and is one of the best known in the Pocahontas field in Mercer County. His home is in the Town of Bramwell, located on the branch of the Norfolk & Western Railroad, near Bluestone Junction.

Mr. Cooper was born February 26, 1873, at Trevorton, Northumberland County, Pennsylvania, son of John and Maria (Padbury) Cooper. His parents were both born in England, and immediately after their marriage came to the United States, about 1863, during the Civil war times, and lived for a number of years in Pennsylvania. John Cooper had been foreman in coal mines in England, and he resumed the same work in this country. He was born in 1838. He was a regular miner in Pennsylvania, but was soon promoted to foreman. In 1872 he removed to West Virginia and began opening mines in the New River coal fields along the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad, first at Quinmont and later at Cooper, near Bramwell. Here he developed the first Pocahontas coal mines in West Virginia, and the first Pocahontas coal shipped from a West Virginia operation was mined and shipped by John Cooper. He was one of the successful coal operators of his time, and was also president of the Bank of Bramwell when he died in 1898. He was active in the cause of the republican party as a layman, and was one of the first masters of the Masonic Lodge at Bramwell and had attained the thirty-third supreme honorary, degree in Scottish Rite Masonry.

Edward Cooper was the second son in a family of six children, and has spent practically all his life in Mercer County. He attended a private school at Pocahontas, Virginia, for three years, and then entered Washington and Lee University, where he took three years in the academic course and spent two years in the law department, graduating in law in 1893. Mr. Cooper actively practiced at Bramwell for two or three years, but in 1898, at the death of his father, gave up his profession and took charge, along with his brother, Thomas H. Cooper, now deceased, of the coal properties at Cooper. His interests as an operator have become widely extended, and he has been a director in some of the most prominent mining corporations in the Pocahontas field, including Mill Creek, Coaldale, McDowell, Crystal, the Pocahontas Consolidated Company and the Flat Top Fuel Company.

Mr. Cooper for a number of years has been a leader in the republican party in his section of the state. He was a delegate to the Chicago National Convention in 1912, where he supported the nomination of Mr. Roosevelt. In 1914 he was elected a member of the Sixty-fourth Congress, and re-elected in 1918. As a business man of wide experience, a successful coal operator, he was able to do a great deal of valuable work for the Government while in Congress, and during the period of the war.

On October 5, 1895, Mr. Cooper married Frances Douglass Smith, of Lexington, Virginia, daughter of James R. and Fannie (Douglass) Smith. Mr. and Mrs. Cooper have two children, Edward, Jr., born October 19, 1897, and Frances Douglass, born October 5, 1902. Edward, Jr., volunteered in the Marine Corps at the declaration of war against Germany, and having been trained in the Culver Military Academy of Indiana he was at once made a drill sergeant, and was assigned to duty throughout the war period at Paris Island, South Carolina.

Mr. Cooper and family are Presbyterians. He is a Royal Arch and Knight Templar Mason and Shriner, a member of the Elks and the Moose, and belongs to the Shenandoah Club of Roanoke, Virginia, the Bluefield Country Club, Mercer County Country Club and the Falls Mills Hunting and Fishing Club, also the Pinechest Shooting Club of Thomasville, North Carolina. Mr. Cooper was for eight years a member of the town council of Bramwell, a position he now occupies.

HARRY BOWEN is a leading operator in the Pocahontas fields of Mercer County, his home being at Simmon Station, Freeman Post Office, half a mile from Bramwell. He has been active in the coal industry forty years and in later years has acquired widening interests in other affairs.

Mr. Bowen was born October 14, 1860, at Ashland, Schuylkill County, Pennsylvania, son of Jonathan P. and Hannah (Evans) Bowen, the latter a native of Pennsylvania. Jonathan Bowen was less than a year old when his parents landed in this country on coming from Wales. Jonathan Bowen went to work with his father in coal mines when a mere boy, and with the death of his father he became the real head of the family at the age of twelve years, supporting them by work as a miner, and from this humble station reaching responsibilities as mine foreman and superintendent while in Pennsylvania. In 1885 he removed to West Virginia, joining Mr. Booth as a partner in the Booth-Bowen properties, which had been opened in 1884 by Mr. Booth and were pioneer developments in the Pocahontas field. Jonathan Bowen was a Union soldier in a Pennsylvania regiment and for many years was a member of the Grand Army of the Republic.

Harry Bowen acquired a common and high school education in Schuylkill County, Pennsylvania, graduating from high school at the age of sixteen. His association with the mining industry began as utility boy, and he also worked in the blacksmith's shop, and finally became company blacksmith for the Reading Coal & Iron Company, a corporation with which he remained for seven years.

In February, 1887, Mr. Bowen came to West Virginia to take charge of his father's business, and has therefore been a resident of Mercer County thirty-five years. He still has the management of the Booth-Bowen mines and operations, and is also vice president of the Bank of Bramwell. Mr. Bowen is a Royal Arch and Knight Templar Mason, also a Scottish Rite Mason and Shriner, and has held all the chairs in the Blue Lodge and is a past high priest of the Chapter and past eminent commander of the Knights Templars. He is a member of the Bluefield Country Club and the Shenandoah Club of Roanoke, Virginia.

Mr. Bowen has achieved a gratifying share of material prosperity, and the inspiration for his work has been his home and family. He has reared and liberally provided for his own children, and is very proud of his seven grandchildren. In 1881, at Mahanoy City, Schuylkill County, Pennsylvania, he married Miss Harriet Hopkinson, daughter of Joseph and Elizabeth (Howard) Hopkinson. Her parents were both born in England. The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Bowen are Elizabeth, now deceased, Jonathan, Ethel, Joseph and Hedley. Jonathan married Miss Stanger and is living at Bramwell. Joseph, who married Elizabeth Pritchard, has four children, named Joseph, Ethel, William and Ann. Hedley, whose home is at Freeman, West Virginia, married Mary Blanton, and their three children are Harry, Hedley and Virginia.

CAPTAIN ROLLO J. CONLEY, a veteran of two wars, and for many years a prominent officer in the West Virginia National Guard, is a Fairmont lawyer, and has practiced his profession in that city since 1909.

Captain Conley is a member of an old Pittsburgh family, but was born during the two years that his parents lived in Fulton, Illinois. His birth occurred March 27, 1874. He is a son of Joseph X. and Marietta (Gay) Conley, a grandson of Joseph and Mary (McRoberts) Conley, and great-grandson of Hugh Conley. Joseph Conley was for many years in the drug business at Pittsburgh, where he died in 1854. Joseph X. Conley, who was born at Pittsburgh April 21, 1851, learned the drug business and for several years continued in that line in the West. On returning to Pittsburgh he resumed the same line of business. While in the West he married Marietta Gay, a native of Connecticut and daughter of Rev. William Gay, who for fifty-nine years was a Presbyterian minister.

Rollo J. Conley was educated in the city schools of Pittsburgh, in Slippery Rock State Normal School in Pennsylvania, and finally in the law department of West Virginia University. On leaving normal school he entered the railway mail service. He was in the employ of the Government fourteen years, and for the last several years devoted his leisure time to the study of law in the offices of Judge W. S. Meredith of Fairmont, rounding out his studies with a course in West Virginia University Law School. He was admitted to the West Virginia bar in 1909, and since that year has been gaining a steadily increasing practice in his profession, and has relations with a number of prosperous business undertakings. He is secretary-treasurer of the Willetts Clay Company, secretary-treasurer of the Hall Garage Company, vice president of the Acme Book Company, secretary of the Martin Brothers Drug Company, and director of the Fairmont Building and Loan Association.

Captain Conley has a highly creditable record as a soldier. At the time of the Spanish-American War he obtained a leave of absence from the mail service and enlisted in the Tenth Regiment, Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry. As a buck private he spent fifteen months in the Philippines, where he was on duty during the Philippine insurrection. On the return trip home his regiment was given shore leave in Japanese ports. Captain Conley in 1912 entered the West Virginia National Guards as a private in Company H of the First Regiment and after various promotions was made judge advocate general, with the rank of major. In 1918 Captain Conley resigned from the National Guard and accepted a commission as captain in the Quartermaster's Department of the National Army, and in that capacity spent one year in France. He returned home in August, 1919, and was mustered out. Captain Conley was one of a party of 150 members of the American Legion which visited the battlefields of France and Belgium during the summer of 1921. Everywhere they went they were feted, and were received with welcome by both high and low, being entertained by the municipal authorities of many cities, and also by King Albert of Belgium, President Millerand of France and Marshall Foch and others. Captain Conley is a past commander of Heintzelman Post No. 17 of the American Legion, and is judge advocate general of the West Virginia Department of Veterans of Foreign Wars.

Fraternally he is affiliated with Fairmont Lodge No. 9, A. F. and A. M., Fairmont Commandery, Knights Templar, Mountain City Lodge, Knights of Pythias, Fairmont Lodge of Elks, the Kiwanis Club and the Chamber of Commerce. He and Mrs. Conley are members of the Presbyterian Church.

November 21, 1899, Captain Conley married Georgia E. Hall, daughter of Sylvanus W. Hall of Fairmont. The four children of their marriage were: Virginia, born April 23, 1901, died July 12, 1901; Joseph, born August 28, 1902; Frank, born January 11, 1907; and Rollo Hall, born November 10, 1912.

HARRY CLAY HADDEN has made for himself excellent reputation and worthy success in connection with mercantile enterprise in the City of Princeton, Mercer County, where he is head of the firm of H. C. Hadden & Company, one of the representative establishments of the city.

Of Scotch and Irish ancestry, Mr. Hadden was born at Oakdale, Pennsylvania, in January, 1878, and is a son of Alexander A. and Agnes K. (Jackson) Hadden, the former of whom was born in Ireland and the latter in Pennsylvania. The Jackson family came from Scotland and settled at South Fayette, near Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, in an early day. Alexander A. Hadden was reared in his native land and came to the United States about 1875. He became a mine superintendent in the coal fields of Pennsylvania, and was an expert mine man. He died in 1910. His wife died in 1906.

After attending the public schools of his native town and also Oakdale Academy at the same place, Harry C. Hadden found employment, and in the meanwhile attended night school in Duff's Business College, Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, where he gave special attention to the study of bookkeeping and business English. After completing his course he studied surveying, and for eighteen months he worked as a surveyor. He then entered the employ of the Pittsburgh Coal Company and afterward the Boomer Coal & Coke Company, in which the late Marcus A. Hanna, of Cleveland, Ohio, was one of the interested principals, and in the interests of this corporation he came to Boomer, West Virginia, where the company controlled coal mines. In 1909 he came to Princeton and engaged in the general merchandise business on a modest scale. From this nucleus, with fair and honorable dealings and effective service to patrons, he has developed the substantial and well-ordered business of Hadden's Reliable Department Store, which in every sense merits its title of "reliable." Here are handled dry goods and kindred lines, as well as ready-to-wear apparel for women and children. The success which has attended the enterprise is the more gratifying to record when it is recognized that Mr. Hadden has depended entirely upon his own ability and efforts in making his way to the goal of prosperity. He is a loyal member of the Princeton Business Men's Club, is a charter member of the Princeton Country Club, is affiliated with the Blue Lodge, Chapter and Commandery of the York Rite of the Masonic fraternity, and also with the Mystic Shrine, and he and his wife hold membership in the Presbyterian Church, of which his first wife likewise was a zealous member.

In 1901 Mr. Hadden wedded Miss Frances J. Scott, of Monongahela, Pennsylvania, and she is survived by three children: Mildred, Harry and Josephine. In February, 1918, was recorded the marriage of Mr. Hadden and Miss Edna French Lipps, daughter of David M. Lipps, who was born in the State of Virginia. The one child of this second marriage is a son, Earl.

ROBERT LEE DUGAN. In the handling of ready-to-wear garments for both men and women, as well as furnishing goods of the most select lines, Mr. Dugan has established one of the most modern and attractive mercantile emporiums in the City of Princeton, and the effectiveness of its service is shown in the substantial and appreciative patronage accorded.

Mr. Dugan was born at Greeneville, Greene County, Tennessee, May 16, 1878, and is a son of Douglas and Sally (Buck) Dugan, both natives of Virginia. The father was engaged in the livery and transfer business at Greeneville, Tennessee, at the time of his death, when he was only thirty-five years of age and when his son Robert L. was a lad of eleven years.

Robert L. Dugan gained his early education in the public schools of his native place, and he was little more than a boy when he took a position as clerk for the Colonial Coal & Coke Company at Dorchester, Virginia. Two years later he entered the employ of the Louisville Coal & Coke Company at Goodwill, West Virginia, and after a year of service in this connection he passed a year in the employ of the Hiawatha Coal & Coke Company. He then came to Princeton and opened a general store, the stock of which included hardware and groceries, as well as dry goods and other general lines. After conducting this enterprise four years Mr. Dugan gave about seven years to the management of the dry-goods store which he here established. After selling this latter store and business he returned to Tennessee, where he purchased a farm and resumed his active alliance with the basic industry under the influence of which he had been reared. At the end of one year he found that he had mistaken his predilection for farming as a vocation, and he sold the farm property and returned to Princeton, where on the 16th of January, 1920, he opened his present fine mercantile establishment, the success of the business being conserved alike by his personal popularity in the community and the general recognition of the fact that the best of service is ever assured when he is at the head of a business enterprise. In September, 1921, E. S. McNear became interested in the business, but Mr. Dugan continues its executive head and resourceful and progressive manager.

Mr. Dugan is affiliated with the Blue Lodge, Chapter and Commandery bodies of York Rite Masonry, and also with the Mystic Shrine, is a loyal and valued member of the Princeton Business Men's Club, and he and his wife hold membership in the Missionary Baptist Church.

At Goodwill, this state, in 1905, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Dugan and Miss Mittie B. Brazie, daughter of

A. W. and Mittie Brazie. Mr. and Mrs. Dugan have no children. The paternal grandfather of Mr. Dugan was one of the old-time stage drivers in Virginia.

GEORGE W. LAZENBY. During the greater part of his business career George W. Lazenby has been a wholesale grocer, and is still active in that line as manager of the Princeton Wholesale Grocery Company. His friends speak of Mr. Lazenby as a genius in commercial lines, and one who by remarkable energy and foresight has built up a fortune when still only in the meridian of his years.

He was born in Bedford County, Virginia, October 19, 1873, and is of Virginia ancestry. The grandfather on his father's side was Irish and his great-grandfather in the maternal line was German. He is a son of H. L. and Elizabeth (Grounds) Lazenby, natives of Virginia. His father was a wheelwright at Hendricks Store, Virginia, also postmaster there for a number of years, and was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

George W. Lazenby secured a common school education in Bedford County. Since the age of seventeen he has been working for himself, and all his accumulations have been due to his own work and management. He learned business clerking in a general store at home for three years. Another three years he clerked in a general merchandise store at Bedford City. From there he removed to Bluefield, West Virginia, and for three years was associated with the Flat Top Grocery Company. Leaving that concern, he established a wholesale grocery business now known as the Jeffrey-Matthews & Company. His next location was at Graham, Virginia, where for a year and a half he was with Walter & Company, wholesale grocers. After this was consolidated with the Flat Top Grocery Company at Bluefield Mr. Lazenby transferred his headquarters to Princeton, where he organized the Princeton Wholesale Grocery Company. This is an incorporated company and does a business of more than $700,000 annually. Mr. Lazenby is treasurer and manager of the company.

In 1898, in Franklin County, Virginia, he married Miss Jennie Dudley, daughter of P. S. and Nellie P. (Newbill) Dudley, natives of Virginia. Her father is a farmer. Mr. and Mrs. Lazenby have seven children: Florence, Louise, Dorothy, George W., Jr., Dudley, and Keith and Kenneth, twins. All are still in the home circle. Mr. Lazenby and family are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. He is a Royal Arch Mason and Elk, and a member of the Princeton Business Men's Club.

R. EDWARD THORNTON has shown marked ability in the development of industrial enterprises of important order and is now a leading exponent of the real estate business at Princeton, Mercer County, with secure standing as one of the representative citizens of his native county.

Mr. Thornton was born in Mercer County in December, 1860, and is a son of William M. and Eliza J. (Hatcher) Thornton, both natives of Virginia, where the respective families were established in an early day, the lineage of the Thornton family tracing back to stanch Scotch-Irish origin. William M. Thornton became one of the prosperous farmers of Mercer County, and also did considerable work as a photographer. In the Civil war he was a gallant soldier of the Confederate service as a member of the Seventeenth Virginia Infantry, under command of Colonel French. In an engagement near Clarks, West Virginia, he received a minor wound in his left arm. He and his wife were earnest and zealous members of the Baptist Church, and Mrs. Thornton was deeply interested in educational matters and in furthering the social welfare of her home community.

The schools of his home district afforded R. Edward Thornton his preliminary education, which was supplemented by his attending the Concord State Normal School at Athens, Mercer County, and by a course in the Spencerian Business College in the City of Washington, D. C. Thereafter he taught three terms in the rural schools of Mercer County, and then turned his attention to the mercantile business, of which he became one of the most progressive and successful representatives in this section of the state, he having had at one time five stores in various towns in Mercer, Summers and McDowell counties. In 1898 he opened a clothing store at Bluefield, and later he sold this business to his brother, who still conducts the same. At North Fork and Athens and also at Princeton he established clothing and men's furnish-goods stores, and at Willowton and Lerona he conducted general stores. All of these enterprises proved successful under his vigorous and careful management, and in 1910 he sold all of these interests and has since been a leader in the handling of real estate in his native county. He is the owner of much valuable realty in the county, and in addition to controlling a general real estate business that is of broad scope and importance he incidentally developed a prosperous insurance business, which he sold in 1917. His operations are conducted under the title of the Thornton Land Company, and he has done much to advance civic and material development in Mercer County. Mr. Thornton is a progressive and loyal citizen, is an active member of the Princeton Business Men's Club, is affiliated with the Blue Lodge and Chapter of the Masonic fraternity, and he and his wife are active members of the Missionary Baptist Church. In 1884, at Wykel, Monroe County, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Thornton and Miss Launa Broyles, daughter of Augustus and Rebecca Broyles. Mr. and Mrs. Thornton have the enviable distinction of having one of the largest and finest families of children in West Virginia, their children being as follows: Samuel C., Minnie E., Cora D., Clark M., Frank R., Ray S., Fred L., King N., Mae B., Effie H., Edward B., Buna L., Harry R. and Ben Hatcher. Samuel married Mabel M. Carr and they reside at Princeton; Minnie is the wife of J. M. Hines, of this city; Cora is the wife of George E. Hilsheimer, of Princeton; Clark M., who is engaged in the practice of law at Princeton, married Katherine Duling and in the World war period he was a musician with the Headquarters Company of the Fifty-seventh United States Infantry at Camp Logan, Texas; Frank R., who is not married and a resident of Princeton, made a splendid record as a member of the United States Marine Corps in the period of the World war; Ray S. gained a commission as second lieutenant in the United States Army in the World war; Fred L. was in service with the merchant-marine of the navy and made one voyage to Brest, France, before the close of the war; and King N. was in a naval training school at the time when the war came to a close. In the patriotism and loyal service of his sons Mr. Thornton has further reason for pride in his remarkable family of children.

FRANK R. THORNTON. As a picture of actual warfare in France one of the most instructive experiences is the Marine Corps service record of Frank R. Thornton, one of the sons of R. E. Thornton of Princeton. It was for the purpose of presenting such a picture in this publication that the record was obtained in Mr. Thornton's own words, and so far as space permits it is published with only slight abbreviation.

He enlisted at Washington June 6, 1917, spent three months at Norfolk, and then did intensive training at Quantico, Virginia. He was transferred to the Seventieth Machine Gun Company, First Battalion of the Marines, and in October, 1917, qualified as a sharpshooter. This command left New York for overseas December 11th, and reached St. Nazaire, France, December 29th. For something over two months they were undergoing intensive drill and training on French soil, and on March 11th Frank Thornton was appointed acting signal sergeant. About that time his organization was changed from the First Machine Gun Battalion to the Seventy-seventh Company, Sixth Machine Gun Battalion, Fourth Brigade of the Marines, Second Division. They experienced their first real warfare in the third line trenches near Verdun on March 20th, and soon afterward Frank Thornton was detached to do liaison and dispatch running and subsequently for observation work in the front lines near Verdun. Then, on the last day of May, he and his comrades started for the big battle near Chateau Thierry and were thrown into the front line at Belleau Woods, northwest of Chateau Thierry.

The following description is in Mr. Thornton's own language:

"At this point the Germans were making a final effort to reach Paris, but the Marines stopped them and started them on the march toward Berlin. At this time all we signalmen were informed that from now on we would also be runners (considered the most dangerous work in all warfare). I continued to be a runner during the remainder of the war, being placed in every attack with the Marines. I was wounded twice and gassed slightly twice, but never left the front lines while the Marines were there. This was one of the hardest periods in the war for us. The first three days' fighting in Belleau Woods was done on empty stomach, our supply train failing to get our food to us, and none of us could have gotten any sleep for the first two or three nights. For fifteen days the battle raged without chance for rest or sleep of any kind, and for twenty days more, although the fighting was lighter, it was not to be compared with the first fifteen days.

"On June 10th my major ordered me to go with him into the front line to do a little observation work. While we were there the Germans came close to us and one of them threw a hand grenade at us, striking Major Cole (in my opinion the bravest and best officer that ever went over the top, and also an expert machine gun officer) killing him almost instantly and tearing him almost to pieces. He never gained consciousness.

"On June 11th we were ordered to get ready to make another big drive. We were to go to a certain place opposite the German lines, but in some way forty-eight of us were lost in the fog, found a break in the lines, and advanced about half a mile too far, which put us more than a quarter of a mile behind their lines. The Germans found their line was broken and closed in, cutting us off from our own troops. Too late we realized where we were. In a few minutes our own artillery began to send over a barrage. Luck seemed to be with us at this time; we were just below the embankment of the road leading north out of Lucy, and by lying flat close to the bank, all the shells that cleared the top of the bank went over us into the hollow below, none of us getting killed. To add to the discomfort of being placed under the shellfire of our own troops, the Germans found that we were there and began to fire at us with their machine guns. As soon as the barrage was over we decided to try to get back to our own lines, but the Germans had closed up the gap through which we entered. Again we were lucky, for the Germans who occupied the gap through which we had formerly passed as soon as they saw us coming toward them from the rear thought they had been trapped, and we went back with 101 of them to our own lines.

"Just after this I had one of the most exciting experiences during the war. I was sent on a run parallel to the lines, and while I was passing through a small patch of woods I caught sight of a German crossing an open place with an American officer whom he had captured. I could not bear to see a thing of this kind. I ran to the edge of the wood, took a pop shot towards him. I didn't try to hit him, for he was directly between me and the American officer. I was afraid I would hit the officer instead of the German. I fired the shot near the head of the German, and this had the right effect. He turned his head and saw me coming in a run toward him, threw up his hands and said 'camerad.' I took him prisoner, got his helmet and sent it home for a souvenir, also I got some post cards which he had, and saved them to this day. Although we took hundreds of prisoners after this, this one is the only one I captured single handed, and the officer I had succeeded in getting from this German was killed later the same day in battle. The battle raged for several days, but we always gained ground."

On July 5th they were relieved, more than half of the men of his organization having been either killed or wounded. Then on the 18th of July they were sent to the front near Soissons. "We were informed that the Germans had planned an attack to begin at 4:45. When they started over we met them and caused them to retreat. In the early part of the fight we captured all of their artillery except one piece. Our artillery had blown the bridges to pieces across the river, and when they arrived there and found the bridges gone they had to leave their guns and make their own escape the best they could. On this same day the Germans sent over hundreds of bombing planes, a more tormenting method of warfare than their artillery had ever been. We had advanced nine or ten kilometers before the day closed, and this victory was considered a complete success."

From early in August until the close of the war the First and Second Divisions were considered shock troops and were thrown to points of hardest fighting. Early in September this organization went to the Toul front and on September 11th occupied the front line against the positions the Germans had held for four years. "We realized that they were confident that they were so well fortified that it would be impossible for us or any other troops to take it, but all this added to the determination on the part of our troops to show them that we would not fail. One o'clock on the morning of September 12 started with one of the largest, if not the largest, barrage that was ever thrown over into the German lines. This lasted for four solid hours, and at 5 A. M., when our artillery began to lift the barrage, we started 'over the top,' following right behind our barrage, driving the Germans out of the trenches they had held and which they were so confident they could hold. By noon we had advanced nine kilometers and entered Thiaucourt, but we did not halt there. We kept on the march forward for several kilometers, repulsing several counter attacks made by the Germans to gain some of their lost ground, and we were engaged in a number of hotly fought battles."

Toward the close of September the Marines were sent to the Champaign front east of Rheims. "We repeated former battles here, and went 'over the top' on October 2d. This contest lasted for eight days, and here also we had some of the hardest fighting of the whole war. The allies had tried for days to get the Germans off Mount Blanc, but had failed. The Marines were called to help them out. (At this time the First and Second Divisions were considered the best shock divisions.) After some hard fighting we finally succeeded in driving the Germans from Mount Blanc, and on the 9th day of October we were relieved by the Thirty-sixth Division."

Then after another period of rest and replacement his command was ordered, on October 24th, to the Meuse-Argonne front, where on the 27th they relieved the Forty-second Division. "On the first day of November, 1918, at 3 o'clock P. M., we started our last big drive of the war, and the first day we advanced about twelve kilometers. We had hard fighting every day for the next eight days, but gained ground all the time, and finally reached the Meuse River. We were ordered to take the heights northeast of the Meuse River, and on November 10th, at 7 o'clock P. M., we went 'over the top' again. This battle, as we saw it, was the worst, and it seemed the most nearly unequalled for any battle of the whole war, for we knew that the armistice was going to be signed, but by order of the general commander of the Fifth Army Corps we 'went over the top.' After an all night fight with everything against us, as the advantage in position the Germans had, we being on a level plain while they were on the heights overlooking it, and a bright moon shining on us, we finally took the heights northeast of the river at the big sacrifice of about 300 killed and several hundred wounded."

After the signing of the armistice Frank Thornton was on the march into Germany, crossing the Rhine on December 13th, and remaining in German territory until July, 1919. On August 4th he arrived in New York harbor, participating in the parade of the Second Division in New York and later with the Marines in parade at Washington, where they were reviewed by President Wilson. On August 13th he received his honorable discharge and started for home.

This is a most impressive service record and can hardly be made more so by noting the official honors bestowed upon him. January 6, 1919, he was decorated with Croix de Guerre for bravery in Belleau Woods, and on March 21st received a similar clasp for his work on the Champaign front. Later he received from the American Government a "Good Conduct Medal," a "Victory Medal," and the "French Croixguerre."

A. J. DALTON. There are some individuals who are able to develop to the highest possible degree of efficiency the possibilities and potentialities of their characters, so that whatever they seek to attain is reached and successfully passed. To such men there is no such word as fail, and their characteristics are of such a nature as to create respect and inspire confidence. When circumstances place them in command of large interests they are able to direct them wisely and capably. In this connection mention is due A. J. Dalton, one of the largest coal operators of Huntington and a man of unerring business judgment, practical views and great energy, as well as unquestioned integrity. He is in control of extensive interests, in the handling of which he has shown an inclination to safeguard the welfare of all concerned with their operation.

Mr. Dalton was born June 5, 1874, in Pittsylvania County, Virginia, a son of Patterson and Mary (Adams) Dalton. Patterson Dalton was born in Virginia, and spent his entire life in Pittsylvania County, that state, where he applied himself to agricultural pursuits until his early death, June 3, 1874. He was a democrat and a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Mr. Dalton married Miss Mary Adams, who was born in 1827, in Pittsylvania County, and survives him as a resident of Altavista, Campbell County, Virginia. They were the parents of four children: Hester, who is the wife of Samuel T. Patterson, a farmer of Altavista, Virginia; Dinnie, the wife of Will Walton, also a farmer of that community; Berry, twin of A. J., who was a miner and died in 1896, at Thacker, West Virginia; and A. J.

A. J. Dalton was born two days after his father died, and as his mother was not left with any great amount of means he was denied the pleasures that are the natural right of youth and had none of the advantages of other lads. His schooling was confined to six months' attendance of the school at Pittsylvania, yet he was naturally so quick and intelligent that the training he received, meagre though it was, served as a foundation upon which he later built a superstructure of information through extensive reading, observation and self teaching. When he was only nine years of age he started to work on the farm of an uncle, C. T. Adams, with whom he remained three years, then entering the service of the L. & D. Railroad Company as water boy, at a wage of 75 cents a day. By this time he was a lad large and strong for his age, and after six months he succeeded in getting a position as laborer with a section gang, being thus employed for two years. At the age of fifteen years he came to Elkhorn, West Virginia, and after spending some time in working on the right-of-way for the railroads, obtained a position on the mine tipples. His next natural step was to become a miner in the coal mines, and as such dug coal for three years.

Mr. Dalton was always willing, energetic and intelligent, and through exercising his natural qualities he secured advancement to the post of slate boss of the mines, a position which he filled for six months. He then returned to railroad work, with the Norfolk & Western, braking for six months during the dangerous days of hand-brakes and link-and-pin couplers, long before the modern automatic devices were invented. He managed to pass through this apprenticeship without serious accident, and was promoted to locomotive fireman, and after six months went to Deadwood, South Dakota, where he fired on the Burlington Railroad for six months. While at Deadwood he also worked in the Homestead gold mines for a short time. Returning to Elkhorn, West Virginia, he was made assistant mine foreman, and was next promoted to foreman, later to superintendent of mines and still later to general superintendent of Lynchburg, Eureka, Powhatan, Elkridge and Peerless mines at Elkhorn. He remained in this capacity until 1913, when he removed to the Guyandotte field of Logan County, West Virginia, having acquired a lease on 29,000 acres. He went to that community to develop these coal lands, and is still engaged in developing and operating them.

At this time Mr. Dalton is president and director of the Main Island Creek Coal Company, operating twenty-three mines in Logan County, with a capacity of 3,000,000 tons a year; president and a director of the Omar Coal Company, at Omar, Logan County, with Omar mines Nos. 1 and 2, having a capacity of 360,000 tons per annum; president and a director of the Middle Fork Mining Company, operating mines Nos. 1 and 2 at Chancy, which have a capacity of 300,000 tons per annum; president and a director of the Procktor Coal Company, with mines at Armsdale, West Virginia, having a capacity of 360,000 tons a year; president and a director of the Procktor Eagle Coal Company, at Robinette, West Virginia, with a capacity of 120,000 tons a year; president and a director of the Mandanay Coal Company, also at Robinette, with a capacity of 60,000 tons a year; and president and a director of the Procktor Winfred Coal Company at Armsdale, with a capacity of 120,000 tons a year, all of the foregoing being in the Guyan Valley. He is also president and a director of the No. 5 Block Coal Company at McNeer, Logan County, capacity 180,000 tons per annum; president and a director of the Madison Coal Company in Boone County, this state, capacity 120,000 tons per annum; and president and a director of the Superior Eagle Coal Company at Jeffrey, Boone County, capacity 60,000 tons per year, the last three companies being situated on the Little Coal River. Mr. Dalton owns several of the above-mentioned coal companies outright, and has controlling interests in all the others. His offices occupy the third floor of the Robson-Prichard Building at Huntington.

Mr. Dalton is also president of four oil companies, of which three are operating in Kentucky and one in Wyoming. He is president of the Dalton-Kelly Real Estate Company of Huntington, president of the Dalton-Kelly Real Estate Corporation of Altavista, West Virginia, and president of the Huntington Coal Sales Company of Huntington. J. A. Kelly is a full partner in all of Mr. Dalton's business operations. Together they own a modern residence at the corner of Thirty-first Street and Third Avenue, a fine home surrounded by a five-acre lot. In addition thereto they are the owners of much realty at Huntington, and seventy-five acres of town lots at Altavista, where they also have a fine home.

Mr. Dalton is unmarried. He is a democrat in his political views, but has been too busy with his business affairs to enter public life, although he has been a supporter of worthy movements of a civic character and those which have tended toward the betterment of education, religion and citizenship. His religious faith is that of the Roman Catholic Church. As a fraternalist he is a life member of Bluefield (West Virginia) Lodge No. 159, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, and also holds membership in the Guyandotte Club and the Guyan Country Club, both of Huntington.

FRED LEWIS, who is giving most effective service as road engineer of Gilmer County, with office headquarters at Glenville, the county seat, was born in Randolph County, West Virginia, on the 7th of March, 1875, and is a son of Oliver H. P. and Elizabeth F. (Mills) Lewis, both likewise natives of that portion of Virginia that now constitutes the state of West Virginia. The father was born in Marshall County, on the 20th of March, 1836, and his death occurred April 30, 1917. The mother was born in Randolph County, December 15, 1848, and passed to the life eternal on the 4th of July, 1900. Oliver H. P. Lewis was reared on a farm in Randolph County, received the advantages of the common schools and an academy, and as a young man he gave excellent service as a teacher in the rural schools. He eventually became one of the substantial farmers of Gilmer County, and here served twenty years as county surveyor. He was a staunch democrat, and an active member of the Christian Church, while his wife was a member of the Methodist Protestant Church. Of the eight children six are living at the time of this writing, in 1922: Jessie is the wife of T. C. McQuain; Warren is a farmer near Cox Mills, Gilmer County; Fred, of this review, was the next in order of birth; Scipio is a farmer in Gilmer County; Miss Clemmie likewise maintains her home in this county; and Edna is now Mrs. Schulte, of Grove, Doddridge County. One child died in infancy and Sidney died at the age of twenty years.

The home farm in Gilmer County was the stage of the childhood activities of Fred Lewis, and as a boy he began to contribute his quota to its work. After having profited by the advantages of the public schools he entered the State Normal School at Glenville, in which he was graduated a member of the class of 1897. Thereafter he took a special course in civil engineering at the University of West Virginia, and after leaving this institution he did successful service in the surveying of railroads, as well as of coal and timber lands. Thereafter he served as assistant cashier of the Glenville Banking & Trust Company until 1920, when the County Court appointed him to his present office, that of road engineer of the county. In this office he is giving an administration that is doing much to further the improvement and proper maintenance of the roads of Gilmer County, and incidentally he is adding greatly to his professional prestige as a civil engineer. He was appointed to fill an unexpired term, and his service was such that he was appointed resident engineer in Gilmer County, having in charge of all construction work in the county for the State Road Commission.

Mr. Lewis is aligned loyally in the local ranks of the democratic party, is a past master of Gilmer County Lodge No. 118, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons; is a past noble grand of Glenville Lodge, Independent Order of Odd Fellows; and is serving as the first worthy patron of the newly established Chapter of the Order of the Eastern Star at Glenville, of which his wife likewise is a prominent member, she being also an active member of the Presbyterian Church at Glenville. June 11, 1902, recorded the marriage of Mr. Lewis and Miss Ann Wilson Norris, who was graduated in the State Normal School at Glenville and also attended the University of West Virginia, she having been a popular teacher in the public schools prior to her marriage. Of the five children of Mr. and Mrs. Lewis, one daughter, Ruby, born May 21, 1904, died in infancy. The names and respective birth dates of the four surviving children are here recorded: Mary Louise, September 5, 1905; Fred, Jr., February 12, 1909; Ann Wilson, March 5, 1914; and Elizabeth F., January 10, 1917.

WILLIAM J. ELLIOTT, cashier of the First National Bank of Princeton, has been identified with the mining district of the state for a number of years as an accountant with mining companies, and has had a progressive series of responsibilities in the industrial and commercial affairs of Mercer County.

Mr. Elliott was born in Ashe County, North Carolina, August 13, 1877, son of Monroe and Mary (Hamm) Elliott and of Scotch and Irish ancestry. His father was born in North Carolina and his mother in Virginia. His grandfather Elliott lived to the age of 103 years and his grandmother Elliott to 107. Several of the family, particularly on his mother's side, were in the Civil war as Confederate soldiers. His father's uncle, Nathaniel Price, was on General Wade Hampton's staff. Monroe Elliott was a farmer and Baptist minister, and closely identified with church and educational affairs.

William J. Elliott acquired a common school education through the limited facilities of log cabin schools in the farming district of Western North Carolina, and much of his study he accomplished at night by the light of a wood fire. In 1894 he graduated from a high school at Lansing, North Carolina, and for three following years taught school. In 1897 he spent two terms in a business college at Solitude, North Carolina, and with that qualification entered upon his business career as an accountant and bookkeeper. Coming to West Virginia at Maybrey, he became bookkeeper for the Shamokin Coal & Coke Company for two years and then for a year did bookkeeping for the Wareagle Coal & Coke Company, Papoose Coal & Coke Company, and the Margarett Mining Company. He spent another year with the Crystal Coal & Coke Company at Crystal, West Virginia, and was then appointed general superintendent in charge of the plant of the Hiawatha Coal & Coke Company, and held that position four years, in the meantime becoming interested in banking. He left the Hiawatha Company to become cashier of the Bank at Matoaka, and in 1917 was elected sheriff of Mercer County. Mr. Elliott gave the county a highly efficient service as a sheriff for four years. While in the office he became financially interested in and was elected a director of the First National Bank of Princeton, and on leaving office he became cashier.

Mr. Elliott married at Matoaka in 1907 Miss Ada Godfrey, daughter of James A. and Mary (Miller) Godfrey, of West Virginia. They have four children: Godfrey, Lucy May, Frances Nell and Mary Ruth. The family are members of the Presbyterian Church. Mr. Elliott is a Royal Arch and Knight Templar Mason and Shriner, and is affiliated with the Elks, Knights of Pythias and Loyal Order of Moose. He is a member of the Business Men's Club of Princeton and a charter member of the Princeton Country Club.

JOHNSON H. LILLY, one of the leading business men and citizens of Princeton, laid the basis of his business career as proprietor of a portable sawmill industry, but for a number of years past has been at the head of a real estate organization at Princeton that has played a prominent part in the constructive development of that city.

Mr. Lilly was born at Camp Creek, West Virginia, December 4, 1877, and is of French ancestry. His parents, Daniel and Mahala (Wood) Lilly, were both born in West Virginia. His father is a farmer and for many years has been a leader in the Primitive Baptist Church and is church clerk at the present time.

Johnson H. Lilly attended the common schools, and his subsequent achievement was the result of an active contact with the world of affairs and men. He began earning his own living at the age of eighteen, and for eleven years he was proprietor of and operated a portable sawmill plant. During that time he cut approximately 25,000,000 feet of lumber. When he gave up the sawmill business he located at Princeton, about 1906, and began the buying and selling of real estate. Out of these operations he has since organized and incorporated the Lilly Land Company, of which he is president and general manager, with H. E. DeJarnett as secretary and treasurer. This is an organization with all the facilities for a general real estate business, but their specialty is the subdivision of city property. Their operations in all departments have reached a value of more than $500,000.

In 1899, at Dunn, West Virginia, Mr. Lilly married Sarah E. Lilly, daughter of Lee H. and Elizabeth (Harvey) Lilly, of West Virginia. They are a family distantly related to that of Mr. Lilly. Her parents were farmers and her father was a soldier in the Civil war. The three children of Mr. and Mrs. Lilly are: Pearl, born in 1900; Ernest, born in 1905; and June, born in 1920. Mrs. Lilly is a member of the Primitive Baptist Church. Mr. Lilly was one of the organizers and is a charter member of the Princeton Country Club, is a member of the Princeton Business Men's Club, and has been a member of the board of directors of the Bank of Princeton since 1918.

SAMUEL R. HOLROYD, M. D., who is engaged in practice at Athens, Mercer County, is not only one of the leading physicians and surgeons of his native county but has also gained in his profession a reputation that far transcends mere local limitations. He has served as president of the West Virginia State Medical Society, and was for three years superintendent of the State Hospital at Spencer, the institution having had 700 inmates during the period of his administration, which was marked by efficiency and by earnest stewardship both professionally and in a humanitarian way. While he has not specialized in mental cases, he is a recognized authority in connection with the care and treatment of the insane and feeble-minded. During the period of the nation's participation in the World war

Doctor Holroyd was in active service in recruiting and examining physicians for service in the Medical Corps of the United States Army, and this work took him into all parts of West Virginia. He is now a member of the Board of Censors of the West Virginia State Medical Society, is an influential member of the Mercer County Medical Society and holds membership also in the American Medical Association.

Doctor Holroyd was born on a farm in Mercer County, West Virginia, June 18, 1868, and is a son of William and Sarah (Conklin) Holroyd, both of whom were born and reared in England, where their marriage was solemnized at Manchester in 1847. The father was a skilled woolen-mill operator and as such was engaged for a time in the City of Philadelphia. He then came to what is now West Virginia as a missionary clergyman of the Methodist Episcopal Church. He served as chaplain of a Confederate regiment in the Civil war, with commission as captain, and in Mercer County he and his noble wife established their home and reared their children. Rev. William Holroyd was a man of sterling character and fine mentality. He labored long and earnestly in aiding and uplifting his fellow men, and his influence rested as a benediction upon all with whom he came in contact. James F., a brother of Dr. Samuel R. Holroyd, was for forty-two years an able and revered instructor in the Concord State Normal School at Athens, and in the main building of the school is a tablet in his honor, the same having there been placed by the alumni of the institution. He was county superintendent of schools for Mercer County four years and for five years was librarian at the normal school at Athens, he having been the incumbent of this position at the time of his death, when venerable in years.

In 1888 Dr. Samuel R. Holroyd graduated from the Concord State Normal School at Athens, and in 1890 he graduated from the College of Physicians and Surgeons in the City of Baltimore, Maryland, with the degree of Doctor of Medicine. In 1906 he took a post-graduate course at Johns Hopkins University in the same city, and later he did effective post-graduate work in leading medical institutions and hospitals in New York City, Cleveland, Philadelphia, Cincinnati and Chicago. After his graduation he engaged in practice in his old home town of Athens, and here he has continuously maintained an office, although his work has involved his absence from this community at intervals of greater or less duration. He here resumed the active practice of his profession in October, 1921. The doctor has been especially zealous in the service of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, especially in the organizing of churches and the erection of requisite church buildings throughout this section of West Virginia. Incidentally he has served simultaneously as trustee of five different churches of this denomination, and he is now a trustee of the church at Athens. For eleven years he was a member of the board of directors of the State Hospital at Huntington, and in this capacity he gave close attention to the construction and equipment of the buildings of the institution. He was formerly vice president of the Bank of Athens, a position which he finally resigned. As a member of the County Board of Highways he assisted in laying out and constructing many of the roads of Mercer County, and he has served also as a member of the Board of Education at Athens for many years. A signally busy, conscientious and useful life has been that of this honored physician, who holds inviolable place in the confidence and esteem of all who know him. The doctor has a great fondness for fine horses and dogs, and he is the owner of White Ranger, the dog that won the American derby at Louisville, Kentucky, in 1921. Doctor Holroyd has passed all official chairs in the Blue Lodge and Chapter of York Rite Masonry, is now grand scribe of the West Virginia Grand Chapter of Royal Arch Masons, and he is affiliated also with the Knights Templars and the Mystic Shrine, as well as with the Elks and the Knights of Pythias. As a fancier of dogs he takes special pleasure in the fox chase, and his sane, vigorous and helpful attitude marks him as a man among men and as a citizen of prominence and influence in the community. His professional affiliations include also his membership in the American Psychological Association, and he is a charter member of the Princeton Country Club.

On the 26th of October, 1893, at Gap Mills, Monroe County, Doctor Holroyd wedded Miss Blanche Appling, daughter of R. C. and Sudie (Neal) Appling, the former a native of Virginia and the latter of what is now West Virginia. Doctor and Mrs. Holroyd have three children: Trevor is a salesman in the employ of the Emmons-Hawking Company of Huntington; Danise is the wife of Clyde Mitchell, of Spencer, this state; and Samuel R., Jr., remains at the parental home. Mrs. Holroyd is an earnest and zealous member of the Presbyterian Church, and she is the gracious and popular chataleine of their attractive and hospitable home at Athens.

WILLIAM L. THOMAS is president and manager of the Nicholas Hardware & Furniture Company, which controls a large and prosperous wholesale and retail business, the headquarters establishment being in the City of Richmond, Nicholas County, with branch stores at Adrian, Upshur County, and Heaters, Braxton County.

Mr. Thomas was born at Alton, Upshur County, this state, on the 1st of November, 1880, and is a son of Alexander B. and Teresa (Vance) Thomas, both natives of Virginia. The former was born in Nelson County, February 24, 1845, and the latter was born February 8, 1848. Alexander B. Thomas was young when he accompanied his parents on their removal to what is now Upshur County, West Virginia, where the family home was established on a farm on French Creek. There he reared to manhood under the conditions marking the middle pioneer period, and there his marriage occurred on November 26, 1863, his wife having been a child at the time of her parents' removal to Upshur County. After his marriage Alexander B. Thomas established his home on a tract of 100 acres of land at Panther Gap, Upshur County, only two acres of the land having been cleared. There he reclaimed and improved one of the fine farm properties of Upshur County, and on this old homestead he and his wife still reside, both being members of the United Brethren Church, and his political allegiance being given to the democratic party. Of the ten children Wellington, Hugh and John reside in Upshur County; Eliza is the wife of M. L. Wolfe, a farmer near Parkersburg, Wood County; Pearl is the wife of Doctor Simons, a representative physician in Upshur County; William L., of this sketch, was the next in order of birth; French resides at Clarksburg and Charles at Alderson, this state; Wirt is a resident of the State of Washington; and Isa is the wife of C. B. Talbott, who is manager of the Adrian store of the Nicholas Hardware & Furniture Company.

Reared on the old home farm and afforded the advantages of the public schools of his native county, William L. Thomas continued to be associated with his father in the work and management of the farm until he had attained to the age of twenty years, and for the ensuing seventeen years he was actively identified with railroad service, in which he rose from a subordinate position in the office of a station agent to be station agent at Richmond. He continued his incumbency of this position until he became one of the organizers of the Nicholas Hardware & Furniture Company, of which he is president and general manager. He is also a director of the Richmond Banking & Trust Company and secretary and treasurer of the Nicholas Lumber Company, in which he is majority stockholder. His vital progressiveness is further shown in his being a stockholder also of the Beaver Lumber Company. Mr. Thomas has had no ambition for public office or political activity, but is a loyal supporter of the cause of the democratic party. He is affiliated with the Masonic fraternity and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, of which latter he is a past noble grand. He married Miss Myrta McKinney, of Braxton County, and they have a winsome little daughter, Virginia E.

WILLIAM JOHN PRITCHARD learned mining in Wales, and for some years had the role of an ordinary miner in the Pennsylvania fields. His long and commendable career of industry has brought him a position among the leading operators and mine owners in the Pocahontas fields of Southern West Virginia.

Mr. Pritchard, whose home is at Bramwell, Mercer County, was born at Llandovey, Wales, in March, 1863, and his parents were also natives of the same country. Mr. Pritchard had a limited education in Wales, and was about eighteen when he came to America in 1881. For several years he was a coal miner in the Pennsylvania fields near Wilkes-Barre, and rose to the responsibility of mine foreman there. In 1889 he came to West Virginia and went to work for the pioneer in the development of the Pocahontas coal fields, the late John Cooper. Under Mr. Cooper he became mine foreman, and remained with him about three years. His next period of service was with the Algoma Coal and Coke Company as mine foreman, and was there superintendent until this company sold its properties.

Mr. Pritchard on leaving the Algoma Company became general manager of the Thomas Coal Company and opened their properties, and for a number of years has been general manager of all the Thomas coal interests, distributed among the Crystal Coal and Coke Company, Thomas Coal & Coke Company and Flat Top Coal and Mining Company. Mr. Pritchard also controls and is president of three important properties in Kentucky, the Superior Harlan Coal Company, Virginia Fuel Company and Algoma Block Coal Company. In West Virginia he is president of the Burnwell Coal and Coke Company and the Long Flame Coal Company.

After devoting his tireless energies for almost forty years to the heavy work of the coal industry Mr. Pritchard came to a serious breakdown in physical health, and at the present writing many of his responsibilities have been assumed by his son, W. E. Pritchard. Mr. Pritchard is a member of the Presbyterian Church, and is affiliated with the Masonic Lodge and the Bluefield Country Club. In 1888, at Wilkes-Barre, Pennsylvania, he married Miss Ann Harris Thomas, whose parents also came from Wales. Mr. and Mrs. Pritchard became the parents of seven children: Marjorie, who has two children by her first marriage, named William and Florence Becker, is now the wife of Newton Roberts, secretary and treasurer of the Thomas interests there. William Edward, the oldest son, is now acting manager for his father. He is a Royal Arch Mason, and by his marriage to Romaine Thornberry, of Wayne City, West Virginia, has two children, Romaine and William. Elizabeth is the wife of Joseph Bowen, of Simmons, West Virginia, and their children are Joseph, Ethel, William Henry and Ann. David Thomas Pritchard, who is a Knight Templar Mason and Shriner, married Glenna Pack, daughter of J. C. Pack, of Bramwell. The next child, Daniel Harris Pritchard, is unmarried, lives at Cincinnati, and is a Scottish Rite Mason and Shriner. Robert Campbell Pritchard is a Royal Arch and Knight Templar Mason, also a Scottish Rite Mason and Shriner, and married Mary Harmon, of Tazewell, Virginia. The youngest child is Thomas Harold Pritchard, unmarried.

FRED DOUGLAS PADBURY is chief clerk for the Pocahontas Fuel Company at Link Branch, McDowell County, the general superintendent of the mining operations here being Richard S. Whitehead, of whom individual mention is made on other pages.

Mr. Padbury was born at Cooper, Mercer County, this state, in the year 1893, and is a son of Joseph Henry and Fannie (Pickering) Padbury. Joseph H. Padbury was born in Shropshire, England, November 10, 1858, a son of Joseph and Martha (Worten) Padbury, the father having been an operator in an iron-rolling mill and having died when Joseph H. was a child of eleven months. Joseph H. Padbury attended school until he was fourteen years old, when he entered upon an apprenticeship to the trade of carpenter and joiner. He thus served seven years, according to the old English rule, and he continued to work at his trade in his native land until he was twenty-three years of age when, with the money which he won by defeating an English champion in a foot race, he defrayed the expenses of his voyage to the United States. He worked at his trade in New York City about nine weeks, and then came to Cooper est Virginia, and entered the employ of John Cooper, the pioneer in coal mining in the Pocahontas field. From 1883 to 1886 Mr. Padbury had charge of all building and general carpenter work for Mr. Cooper, who had married a sister of Mr. Padbury. In 1886 he returned to New York, and in the City of Brooklyn, that state, he followed his trade eight years. He then returned to Cooper, West Virginia, where he assumed charge of all construction and timber work about the Cooper properties. He is now the only living pioneer of the Pocahontas coal fields, he having been here at the initiation of mining operations. Mr. Padbury is prominently affiliated with the various bodies of the York and Scottish Rites of the Masonic fraternity, in the latter of which he has received the thirty-second degree, besides being member of the Mystic Shrine.

In 1886, in the State of New York, was solemnized the marriage of Joseph H. Padbury and Miss Frances Pickering, who likewise was born in England and who was thirteen years old when her father, Thomas Pickering, came to the family to the United States. Mr. and Mrs. Padbury became the parents of four children: Thomas Henry died at the age of thirty-three years; Walter Leslie married Myrtle Perdue and they reside at Graham, Virginia; Mary is the wife of George K. Norman, of Coldale, Mercer County; and Fred D., of this review, is the youngest of the number.

After completing three years' work as a student in the high school at Bramwell, Fred D. Padbury was for two years in the employ of the Pocahontas Fuel Company. He then completed an effective course in the Dunmore Business College, Staunton, Virginia, in which he was graduated in July, 1914. He then became pay-roll clerk for the Pocahontas Fuel Company at Maybrey, he having since been advanced to the office of chief clerk and being in line for at of superintendent.

January 28, 1918, Mr. Padbury entered the United States Army for service in the World war. He was first sent to Fort Leavenworth, Kansas, but about a week later was transferred to Camp Jackson, South Carolina, where he received four months' training. He passed the ensuing three months at Camp Wadsworth, that state, and July 7, 1918, he sailed with his command for the stage of war. He landed in Liverpool, July 21st, and from Southampton crossed to La Havre, France, whence he went to the front. He was at Somme during the entire conflict with the Hunniburg forces, and took active part in the constant fighting that continued until the signing of the armistice, he having been under fire for three months. November 15, 1918, he went with his command to a rest camp in France, and on the 1st of March, 1919, he sailed for home. He landed in Philadelphia on the 22d of that month, and two weeks later received his honorable discharge at Camp Dix. Mr. Padbury is affiliated with the Blue Lodge, Chapter and Commandery organizations of the Masonic fraternity, and he and his wife hold membership in the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

December 28, 1920, recorded the marriage of Mr. Padbury and Miss Willie Gertrude Sale, daughter of Elsie and Eunice Sale, of Mercer County, and they are popular figures in the social life of their home community.

WILLIAM W. WOOD, general manager of the Chattahoochee Mining Company's operations at the station called Hatfield, on the Norfolk & Western Railway's main line in Mercer County, is another of the men of this locality who has spent his entire career in the coal mining industry and who has been the architect of his own fortune. His career has been active and at times even a strenuous one, and out of his experiences, which have been varied, he has brought the conclusion that hard work pays and that straightforward dealing brings the best results.

Mr. Wood was born February 18, 1880, at Roanoke, Virginia, a son of W. G. and Anna P. (Thrasher) Wood, natives of Virginia. On the paternal side he traces his ancestry back in Virginia to the year 1697, when the first Wood of this branch of the family immigrated to the colonies from England, and on the maternal side he comes of good old Holland stock. W. G. Wood, a college graduate and man of superior intellect and education, follows the vocation of farming and is likewise prominent in public and political affairs, in which he has interested himself for many years. His integrity, honesty and impartiality have been so well established in the minds of his fellow-citizens that he is frequently called upon to act as arbiter in disputes, even when not holding office, and as counsellor and guide in business and domestic matters.

William W. Wood attended the country public schools and the National Business College, Roanoke, Virginia, and after his graduation from the latter, in 1901, started to work with the Houston interests, and thereafter for twenty years remained with the same concern at various places where operations were being carried on. For about six years of this time he served as superintendent for the Houston interests at the Matland shaft, and for about three years was superintendent at Keystone. When he left this concern, January 1, 1921, he moved to Bluefield, the site of his home at this time, and took charge of the Lowvolatle Consolidated on the New River, remaining in the same capacity until October 15, 1921. At that time, as Mr. Wood puts it, he "graduated as superintendent of the closed shop," and October 16, 1921, became general manager of the Chattanooga Mining Company's operations at the station called Hatfield, on the main line of the Norfolk & Western Railway, where he has remained to the present. Mr. Wood has operated all through the miners' troubles, and says he has "never had any strike."

In 1906, at Roanoke, Virginia, Mr. Wood was united in marriage with Miss Geneva Layman, daughter of William M. and Nannie (Weeks) Layman, natives of Virginia and agricultural people. Mr. and Mrs. Wood are the parents of one child, Anna B., who is attending school. They are consistent members of the Presbyterian Church, to the movements of which they subscribe generously. Mr. Wood is a Mason of high standing, having attained to the Knight Templar degree and the Mystic Shrine.

MANUEL F. TORREGROSA, M. D. A mining physician and surgeon at Ashland in McDowell County, Doctor Torregrosa is one of the brilliant young men in the profession in Southern West Virginia and has earned a very successful place and a large degree of esteem in the community where his professional labors have been performed during the past five years.

Doctor Torregrosa is a Porto Rican by birth and represents some of the old Spanish families of that island. He was born at Las Marias Island, Porto Rico, April 2, 1891. His parents, Manuel F. and Juanita (Rodriguez) Torregrosa, were also natives of Porto Rico. His father owned a large drug business prior to the Spanish-American war, but on account of war conditions and also a long illness of typhoid fever, he lost most of his property. After the war he was made inspector of customs and later chemist for the Island at San Juan. Subsequently he was in the drug business at Lajas and was also appointed a justice of the peace. He died in 1903.

Manuel F. Torregrosa began his education after Porto Rico came under the American flag. He attended the common and high schools, and in 1907, at the age of sixteen, came to the United States and entered William and Mary College in Virginia. He quickly proved himself one of the most thorough scholars and also one of the most popular students of the institution. As a result of his first year's work he won the Philo Bennett scholarship, endowed by William Jennings Bryan. During his second year, therefore, he paid his expenses at William and Mary with the proceeds of this scholarship. After two years of general college work he entered the University College of Medicine at Richmond and graduated M. D. May 29, 1913. After graduation he was an interne in the City Hospital of Richmond. Doctor Torregrosa after securing his diploma went back to Porto Rico, but in October, 1914, returned to the United States and for nine months was company physician for the W. M. Ritter Lumber Company at Hurley, Virginia. He was then engaged in general practice at Kent Stores, Fluvanna County, Virginia, until April, 1916, and following that was located at Williamsburg, Virginia. In December, 1916, he came to Eckman, West Virginia, with Dr. J. Clark Killey, and in October, 1917, began his duties at Ashland for the Ashland Coal & Coke Company. Ashland is an important coal mining town on a branch of the Norfolk & Western Railway running from North Fork. He has been a very busy man in this community, and his services to an essential industry were considered more important than anything he could do in the army, since his applications for active duty were rejected. Doctor Torregrosa is a member of the County, West Virginia State and American Medical associations, and is a member of the Phi Rho Sigma medical fraternity. He is also a member of Algoma Lodge, A. F. and A. M., of North Fork, Zenith Lodge No. 213, I. O. O. F., and Burks Garden Lodge No. 57, K. of P.

At Norfolk, Virginia, July 11, 1914, he married Miss Frances Timberlake, of Williamsburg, daughter of John Corbett and Missouri (Blossingham) Timberlake. John Corbett Timberlake, father of Mrs. Torregrosa, was a colonel in the Confederate army, serving through many hard-fought battles during the Civil war. He was taken prisoner and served one year in the Johnston Island prison and two years in Lake Erie prison. His name appears on a monument erected for Confederate officers at Gettysburg, Pennsylvania. Doctor and Mrs. Torregrosa are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

JULIUS A. DE GRUYTER. It would be difficult to name a man who has been busier and more useful in the affairs of Charleston during the last thirty years than Julius A. de Gruyter. His career to a noteworthy degree has been devoted to the public service—honest, competent and efficient. He is now in his second term as postmaster of Charleston, administering the business of the largest postoffice in volume of revenues in the State of West Virginia.

Mr. de Gruyter was born at Christiansburg, Montgomery County, Virginia, January 9, 1864. His father, M. F. de Gruyter, was a native of Holland, was educated in Heidelberg University of Germany, and after coming to this country he served in the Confederate war as a major on General Echols' staff. He married Julia P. Crockett, of Marmet, Kanawha County, where she was born, daughter of John B. Crockett, of Kentucky, and of the same ancestry as the famous David Crockett. John B. Crockett was a farmer and salt manufacturer in Kanawha County, and died at the age of eighty. M. F. de Gruyter was a commercial salesman, lived at Covington, Kentucky, for a number of years, with business interests in Cincinnati, and in the early '70s moved to Charleston. He finally lost all his property and died at the age of sixty-six. His widow lives with her son Julius at the age of eighty-seven. There were two other children: Josephine, who died at the age of forty-three, wife of L. E. Fuller; and Ferdinand J., who among other experiences prospected for gold in the Northern Alaska fields and who died at Charleston at the age of sixty-one.

J. A. de Gruyter acquired most of his education in the public schools at Charleston, and his work in the public service began soon after he left school. In 1885, at the age of twenty-one, he was elected city recorder, serving two terms. He was clerk of the council and police judge as well under Mayor James H. Huling and Mayor Joseph L. Fry. In 1889 he became superintendent of the Charleston water works. This plant had been put in operation in 1886. Mr. de Gruyter was a capable man to have the management of the water works for fourteen years, until 1903, and not only had charge of operations, but all extensions to the service. While still superintendent of the water plant he was elected mayor in 1895, and served two terms, four years. At the time he was first elected Elk City, now known as the West Side, was annexed to Charleston. His term as mayor was marked by some notable public improvements for that era, including the paving of several miles of street, the construction of sewers, and the building of the Charleston General Hospital.

On leaving the water works in 1903 Mr. de Gruyter established a fire insurance agency, and was in that business until 1915, when he was appointed postmaster of Charleston, through the influence of Senator William E. Chilton. He began his duties as postmaster in July, 1915, two years before the post office building of Charleston had been completed. Since Mr. de Gruyter took charge of the post office its business has increased 250 per cent, and amounts to over $400,000 a year, larger than any other city in West Virginia, and in proportion to the population it is one of the most profitable post offices in the United States. The post office now has 110 employees, including thirty city carriers and five rural carriers. Mr. de Gruyter's present term as postmaster expires in February, 1921. He has always been active in the democratic party in the state, and has been a delegate to a number of local and state conventions. He is a deacon of the First Presbyterian Church. Outside of his work his time and interest have been concentrated on his home life. Mr. de Gruyter at different times has donated to the Charleston Public Library an aggregate of about 200 volumes, including the bound volumes that represented his collection of the numerous copies of Puck for seventeen years.

In 1889 Mr. de Gruyter married Mary V. Noyes, whose father, W. A. Noyes, was an old time merchant of Charleston and member of an old family of the city. The four children of Mr. and Mrs. de Gruyter are: Elizabeth, Mrs. C. M. McVay; Julius A., Jr. state agent for the New York Life Insurance Company of Charleston; Julia L., wife of William J. Harvey; and Mary Noyes, twin sister of Julius living at home.

INGRIM MYERS. While he owns a large farm and directs diversified activities, Ingram Myers, of Pine Grove, has been actively identified with some phase of the oil industry since early youth. He has helped build hundreds of miles of pipeline, both in West Virginia and in the Far West. Mr. Myers is one of the most successful men of Wetzel County, and enjoys particularly high esteem at Pine Grove.

He was born near Centerville in Tyler County, West Virginia, October 1, 1872. His grandfather, Enoch Myers, was born in Maryland in 1797, and spent the greater part of his life as a farmer at Moscow Mills, near Cumberland, the state. Though in advanced years he joined the Union Army at the time of the Civil war. When he retired from his farm he removed to Pleasants County, West Virginia, and died near Willow Island in that county in 1879, at the age of eighty-two. His son, William Myers, was born near Cumberland January 7, 1837, was reared there and as a young man moved to Tyler County, West Virginia, where he spent his active life engaged in farming. He lived retired on his farm four miles north of Centerville until his death February 24, 1922. During the Civil war he was a captain of the Home Guards of Tyler County, and was called out to repel Morgan's raid, getting as far as West Union in Doddridge County. He was republican and a very active member of the United Brethren Church. Captain Myers married in Tyler County Nancy V. Thomas, who was born near Centerville in 1839, and died of the home farm December 16, 1911. They became the parents of a large family of children: Henry E., owner of a large body of land on which he does a successful business as a cattle man and sheep raiser five miles east of Centerville; Mary, who died at the age of eighteen; Susan, whose first husband was John Tustin, a farmer, and she is now the wife of Jacob Thomas, a farmer living three and a half miles north of Centerville; Robert, who died when three years of age; Agnes, wife of Albert Nichols, a farmer at Walker Station in Wood County; James Sheridan, a foreman for the Pittsburgh & West Virginia Gas Company, living a mile south of Jacksonburg; Emma J., widow of William Stone, who at the time of his death was deputy sheriff at New Martinsville, where she makes her home; Ingram; William S., a merchant at B. Moses, his home being a mile east of Middlebourne; Nease George, a farm owner, an oil gauger for the Eureka Petroleum Company, and now president of the County Court of Wetzel County, his home being at Porters Falls; Miss Fannie, at home; David Winfield, an oil and gas operator near West Union; and John W., who is superintendent of the Gladstone Oil & Refining Company and a resident of Shreveport, Louisiana.

Ingram Myers spent his early life on his father's farm and acquired his education in the rural schools of Tyler County. After he was fifteen he worked two years on the farm, and in 1899, at the age of seventeen, entered the service of the Eureka Pipe Line Company, beginning in the Eureka oil fields of Pleasanton county. In 1895 he was transferred as field foreman for this company to the Wetzel County field at Smithfield, and in 1902 the Eureka Company, a subsidiary of the Standard Oil, transferred him to California, where he superintended the laying of an eight-inch pipe line from Bakersfield to San Francisco, a distance of three hundred miles. After this work was finished he returned East, and for the Standard Oil Company laid a six-inch pipe line from Somerset, Kentucky, to Licking River, a distance of a hundred and ten miles. In 1904 he resumed work with the Eureka Pipe Line Company at Pine Grove as field foreman continuing until January 1, 1905.

On August 4, 1904, Mr. Myers was nominated for sheriff of Wetzel County on the republican ticket, and on the 6th of November had the distinction of being the first republican ever elected sheriff of the county. He was chosen by a majority of sixty-six over the democrat, D. H. Cox, who had formerly been sheriff. Mr. Myers served the constitutional term of four years, from 1905 to 1909, his official residence during this time being at New Martinsville. After leaving this county office he resumed his residence in Pine Grove, and is looking after his extensive interests as an oil producer, farmer and general business man. His farm comprises five hundred acres at the edge of Pine Grove, and he operates it as a diversified proposition, largely devoted to cattle growing. He is an oil producer in the Pine Grove and Porter's Falls fields of Wetzel County, is a stockholder and director in the First National Bank of New Martinsville, and besides his farm owns two hundred acres of coal lands in the county. His home is a modern residence on Main Street in Pine Grove.

Besides his official record as sheriff of Wetzel County Mr. Myers was for four terms mayor of Pine Grove, and a number of terms a member of the City Council. He is affiliated with Mannington Lodge No. 31, A. F. and A. M., Fairmont Chapter No. 6, R. A. M., Fairmont Commandery No. 6, K. T., Osiris Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Wheeling, and White Lily Lodge No. 49, Knights of Pythias, at Smithfield. During the war he was registrar of the Draft Board, helping to fill out questionnaires for recruited men, and was also a leader in the various drives in his district.

On August 12, 1902, at Pine Grove, he married Miss Kitty Vandeyne, daughter of Jonathan D. and Captolia (Carpenter) Vandeyne. Her mother lives at Reader, West Virginia. Her father, a farmer, died near Pine Grove in 1913. Mr. and Mrs. Myers had five children: Bessie, who died when two and a half years old; Mildred, born January 6, 1906; Webster, born July 19, 1908; Ingram, Jr., born August 1, 1911; and Charles Blaine, born November 8, 1915.

THOMAS LEE MORGAN is the druggist at Pine Grove, a successful young business man, of well balanced initiative, and his work and interests are closely linked with the general welfare of his community.

Mr. Morgan was born at Pine Grove September 21, 1886. He comes of a branch of the Morgan family that on leaving Wales settled in Pennsylvania in Colonial times. This branch of the Morgan name included the noted Indian fighter Levi Morgan, and of the same ancestry was General John Morgan of the Confederate Army. The grandfather of the Pine Grove merchant was John William Morgan, who was born on Morgan Run in Wetzel County in 1820, that Run being named for his father. John W. Morgan was a farmer there, but in middle life removed to Pine Grove and owned and operated a flour and saw mill. He died there in 1896. His wife was Miss T. Petrick, who was born near Shinnston and died at Pine Grove. Frank Ferdinand Morgan, father of Thomas L. Morgan, was born September 8, 1848, at the head of the North Fork of Fishing Creek, on Morgan Run in Wetzel County, grew up there, but as a young man removed to Pine Grove, where he married and where for many years he has engaged in farming. He still owns his place of four hundred acres in that vicinity. For several terms he was county surveyor of Wetzel County, and now does considerable business as a civil engineer for oil and gas companies in the Wetzel County fields. He has served a number of terms as councilman and mayor of Pine Grove, and for many years has been on the Official Board of the Methodist Episcopal Church. He is a democrat, is affiliated with Wetzel Lodge No. 39, A. F. and

A. M., and is a fourteenth degree Scottish Rite Mason in West Virginia Consistory No. 1 at Wheeling. His wife bore the maiden name of Martha Virginia West and was born on a farm near Pine Grove, September 23, 1861. To their marriage were born eight children: Cordelia, wife of Sam J. Dulaney, proprietor of a livery business at Pine Grove and former mayor of that city; Pearl, wife of Paul D. Galvin, an oil well driller and contractor living at Pine Grove; Vashti, wife of Ralph W. Hall, a druggist at Paden City, West Virginia; Thomas L.; Don Franklin, who was a druggist and died of influenza in 1918, at the age of twenty-eight; Liss, wife of Morris Francis, a clothing merchant at New Martinsville; Georgia, wife of Earl Clancy, a general merchant at Smithfield in Wetzel County; and Gladys, wife of Lesley Jolliff, a machinist at Pine Grove.

Thomas L. Morgan grew up at Pine Grove, graduated from high school in 1906, spent one year in the School of Pharmacy at Scio, Ohio, and in 1908 graduated Ph. G. from the Western University of Pennsylvania at Pittsburgh. While in college he was a member of the Phi Delta Chi fraternity. After graduating he spent one year in a drug store at Charleston, West Virginia, and then returned to Pine Grove and bought the business of his brother-in-law, R. W. Hall. He owns both the store and the building, and has developed the best drug business in the western part of Wetzel County. Among other business interests he is treasurer of the Sago Oil Company of Ohio and Secretary-treasurer of the Superior Red Ash Fuel Company of Bluefield, West Virginia.

Mr. Morgan is a member of the City Council of Pine Grove, is treasurer of the Methodist Episcopal Church, is a democrat, and is affiliated with Wetzel Lodge No. 39, A. F. and A. M., has attained the thirty-second degree in West Virginia Consistory No. 1, and is a member of Osiris Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Wheeling. He is also a past chancellor of Sylvan Lodge No. 130, Knights of Pythias, and is a member of the West Virginia Druggists Association.

In 1916, at Wheeling, he married Miss Eloise Williams, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Evan A. Williams, residents of Middlebourne, where her father is a dairy farmer. Mrs. Morgan is a graduate of Marshall College at Huntington with the A. B. degree. They have two children: Virginia Lee, and Franklin Evan.

GILBERT B. MEREDITH. While by no means an old man, in fact only in the prime of his usefulness, Gilbert B. Meredith has had a veteran's experience in the oil industry, and has been a worker in several of the prominent West Virginia fields and for leading oil and pipe line corporations for a third of a century. He is field superintendent for the Hope Natural Gas Company, with home at Smithfield.

Mr. Meredith was born at Alma in Tyler County May 7, 1872. Meredith is a Scotch name, but the family has been in America since Colonial times. His grandfather, David Meredith, was a native of Noble County, Ohio, was a minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church and when in middle life he moved to Tyler County, West Virginia, and carried on the work of the ministry there until his death at Alma in 1888. His son, Absalom P. Meredith, was born near Fairmont in Marion County in 1837, and was a boy when his parents moved to Tyler County, where he was married and where he followed farming at Alma until 1890. In that year he moved to another farm at Center Point in Doddridge County, and continued farming until his death in 1906. He was a republican, a very active member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and was affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. During the Civil war he served in the Union Army the last three years, enlisting in the Seventh West Virginia Infantry, in Company A. He was present at the second battle of Bull Run, at Gettysburg, and a number of other engagements and was once taken prisoner. Absalom P. Meredith married Miss Catherine Riley, who was born near Sistersville in Tyler County in 1839, and died at Weston in 1911. The children born to them were: Charles, a building contractor at Spencer, West Virginia; Laura, twin sister of Charles, is the wife of John Kelly, an employee of the Carter Oil Company, living at Pike in Ritchie County; Jennie A. is the wife of John W. Horner, a farmer near Pennsboro in Ritchie County; Gilbert B. is the next in age; James A., Supreme Judge of West Virginia, lives at Charleston, West Virginia; Rufus D., twin brother of James, is an oil well driller at Bartlesville, Oklahoma; Emma is the wife of Campbell Martin, manager of the Gasoline plant of the Carter Oil Company at Pike in Ritchie County; William H., a resident of Brownwood, Texas, and leaser for the Atlantic Refining Company; and Emery, an oil and gas well driller living at Newark, Ohio.

Gilbert B. Meredith grew up on his father's farm in Tyler County, and his education in the common schools ended when he was fourteen. He soon afterward went to work in the old Turkey Foot oil field of Hancock County. The first summer he was waterboy on the pipe line. This was followed by an experience as a general roustabout, and he remained in that field six years, and in 1892 started as a day laborer with the Eureka Pipe Line Company at Smithfield. Four years later he became a roustabout for the Flagg Meadow Gas Company, and when the interests of this company were taken over by the Hope Natural Gas Company in 1902 he was made a gang foreman, but soon worked up to the responsibilities of field superintendent, and has held that position for this corporation eighteen years. Under his supervision are a hundred and fifty employees. Mr. Meredith superintends the drilling of wells and the laying of pipe lines in the Wetzel District and is also in charge of a compressing station at Wallace. His business headquarters are near the Baltimore & Ohio Depot at Smithfield. He is also a director of the Bank of Jacksonburg, owns a modern home at Smithfield and is owner of some land in Texas.

Mr. Meredith is one of the influential republicans of this section of the state. Since 1920 he has been a member of the Republican County Committee and prior to that for four years was a member of the Congressional Committee of the Second District. He is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church and is affiliated with Mannington Lodge No. 31, A. F. & A. M., Fairmont Chapter No. 9, R. A. M., West Virginia Consistory No. 1 of the Scottish Rite at Wheeling, Osiris Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Wheeling, and is a past grand of Smithfield Lodge No. 308, Independent Order of Odd Fellows. During the war he cast all his influence and much of his working time in behalf of the Government to promote the sale of Liberty Bonds and assist in all the other patriotic drives in his community.

At New Martinsville he married Miss Alice E. Hassig, daughter of Jacob and Rebecca (Smith) Hassig, both deceased. Her father was a farmer in Tyler and Wetzel counties. Mr. and Mrs. Meredith have three children: Catherine, born November 14, 1902, a graduate of the Smithfield High School and now a teacher in the public schools of that city; Doyle W., born March 17, 1904, a junior in the Smithfield High School; and Bruce, born September 17, 1905, a sophomore in high school.

WILLIAM CARLIN is one of the most substantial citizens of Wetzel County. Through his active career he has been a farmer, surveyor and civil engineer, identified with oil development, owns valuable oil royalties, and has widely extended farm and land interests both in West Virginia and elsewhere.

Mr. Carlin's home is at Smithfield, and he was born near the present site of that town March 27, 1857. His father Patrick Carlin, was born in County Mayo, Ireland, in 1818, and came to the United States about 1844. He had first landed in the West Indies. Among early experiences he helped build a levee on the Mississippi River, then came up the Ohio to Wheeling, was married at Steubenville, Ohio, and for three years was employed in turnpike construction in Wetzel and Marshall counties. He then bought land and settled down to the life of a farmer in Wetzel County, and died at his home near Smithfield in 1868. He was a democrat and a devout Catholic. His wife was Catherine Kilcayne, who was born in County Mayo in 1829, and they had known each other in the old country. She was a girl in Ireland during the great famine of 1846, and she came to the United States about 1854. Her death occurred on the old homestead on Arches Fork in 1918. Of her children William was the oldest; Miss Mary lives on the old home farm on Arches Fork; Dora, living on her farm near Smithfield, is the widow of William Wyatt; Miss Sarah lives on the home farm; Patrick for many years has been a farmer and merchant at Arches Fork; John is an extensive farmer and cattle raiser near Smithfield.

William Carlin had some exceptionally good influences in his home, though his parents were far from being wealthy. Most of his education was derived from his mother's instruction. Altogether he attended free school in Wetzel County only eight months. His apt intelligence, the reading of good books and home study have brought him an education far above the average. It is said that Mr. Carlin has the best and largest private library of any citizen in Wetzel County. During his youth he was brought face to face with the serious responsibilities of life, and until he was twenty-eight he remained on the home farm, assisting in earning a living for the family. He was only eleven years of age when his father died. Mr. Carlin was early led to the study of surveying, being very proficient in mathematics, and since the age of twenty-seven has done a great deal of work as a civil engineer in Wetzel County. He has surveyed and mapped large sections of the county. In 1894 he became interested in the oil fields of Wetzel and Doddridge counties, beginning as a leaser and has since come into the possession of some valuable oil royalties.

Mr. Carlin's home is the most modern residence in Smithfield, in the southeastern part of that town. It stands on the edge of his large farm of eight hundred acres. Besides operating this farm he owns four other farms in Wetzel County, the total acreage being fourteen hundred acres, and he also has a half section of land in Borden County, Texas, and owns an interest in a tract of 43,000 acres on the San Juan River near Vera Cruz, Old Mexico. He was a stock holder in the Empire Bank of Clarksburg.

Mr. Carlin is a democrat, a member of the Catholic Church and Clarksburg Council No. 872, Knights of Columbus. He was on practically all the committees for the sale of bonds and raising of funds for the war, and used his own name and credit to the limit in behalf of the Government.

In 1885, in Wetzel County, Mr. Carlin married Miss Margaret Ann Wyatt, daughter of Andrew J. and Elizabeth (Morris) Wyatt. Her father was a Wetzel County farmer. To Mr. and Mrs. Carlin were born seven children: Leo, who attended the Fairmont State Normal School and holds the degrees A. B. and LL. B. from West Virginia University, was during the war in charge of the Trades Department for South America at Washington, is now a professor in the law school of West Virginia University and has re-written one of the standard law text books. Miss Dora, the second child, and Miss Cora are graduates of the Young Ladies Seminary at Parkersburg and live at home. Katherine and William are also still in the home circle. Patrick, who finished his education in the Fairmont State Normal School, was in the draft during the war and is now owner of a public garage at Smithfield. The youngest child is John Carlin.

WILLIAM S. JOHNSON was re-elected state treasurer of West Virginia in 1920, and his second term in office is a compliment to his sound business ability and the efficiency with which he has administered the great responsibilities of handling the financial affairs of the state.

To his present honorable position Mr. Johnson has come through a career that presents few extraordinary instances but has been a steady struggle on the part of a normally ambitious, self reliant and thoroughly honest character. He was born in Fayette County, where he still resides, in 1871, son of Miles and Caroline (Woodrum) Johnson. His early life was spent on a farm. As a boy he went to live with his grandparents. His grandfather, Rev. William Johnson, was a farmer and local Methodist minister, a wise, good man of splendid natural attainments, who afforded the very best of influences for the developing character of his grandson. The latter lived in the country and worked on the farm, attended school only two months each year, and the sum total of his school advantages was extremely limited. He had an ambition to teach, and by attending local teachers' institutes passed the required examination and was granted a first grade certificate. Mr. Johnson taught in Fayette County for about ten years. In 1902 he was elected county superintendent of schools of Fayette County, holding that office four years.

While still county superintendent he was elected in 1904 a member of the State Senate from Fayette County. He re-elected in 1908, and sat in the upper branch of the legislature from Fayette County for eight years.

Mr. Johnson was nominated by the republican party for state treasurer in 1916, and in 1920 had no opposition for re-nomination and began his second term March 5, 1921. It is doubtful if any preceding state treasurer has made as good a record for efficiency and faithful and expeditious handling of the affairs of this office as Mr. Johnson. He insisted from the first that the business of the office should be conducted on the principles demanded by any private corporation. His office force is organized and its work carried out with this idea steadfastly in view. He has inducted his personal ideas into the office personnel, and has introduced equipment and machinery for systematizing and expediting his work and saving labor. In the treasurer's office are such labor saving machines as a signograph for signing checks, bookkeeping and posting machines, adding machines, mimeograph machines, all of the electrically operated type, and a machine for cancelling state bonds and coupons.

The disbursements of the state treasurer's office run from $15,000,000 to $20,000,000 annually. The best evidence of business-like administration can be found in the record that not a cent has been lost to the state through the office and every cent handled can be accounted for. Mr. Johnson while state treasurer has been especially well known because of his aggressive fight against the antiquated depository law of West Virginia, a law copied from old Virginia more than half a century ago. The system has remained unchanged, an incubus on the efficient and business-like handling of state finances, and only the exceeding carelessness of a state treasurer like Mr. Johnson has avoided any losses that are inseparable from the risks involved in the law itself, in spite of all vigilance exercised by officials. Mr. Johnson while state treasurer has studied and collected data from practically every state in the Union and also from private corporations illustrating the best means of handling finances, and out of this wide study and experience he has prepared bills for proposed laws, thus giving the responsibility for the present system squarely to the Legislature.

At the annual convention of the State Auditors and Treasurers Association of the United States held in Atlantic City in October, 1921, Mr. Johnson was elected second vice president. He was also honored by being invited to deliver an address on the subject "How and by Whom should Public Funds Be Deposited."

Mr. Johnson is a member of the Methodist Church, and is affiliated with the Knights of Pythias, Elks and Moose. He married Miss Ernie Young, who was born and reared in Charleston. Mr. Johnson has his official residence at Charleston, but his home is at Mount Hope in Fayette county.

ARTHUR L. CHAMBERS was born and reared in Western Pennsylvania, as a youth went into the oil districts as a pumper and for a quarter of a century has been one of the possible men in the oil production activities of Wetzel county, West Virginia. He resides and has his business headquarters at Smithfield and is superintendent of the South Penn Oil Company.

Mr. Chambers was born at Butler, Pennsylvania, June 28, 1866. His father, James H. Chambers, was born at Millville, New Jersey, in 1809, was reared there, learned the trade of blacksmith, and followed that occupation all his active life. He was married at Orbisonia, Pennsylvania, and in 1848 left there and removed to Butler, where he lived until his death in 1881. He was a republican and a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. James H. Chambers married Susanna Miller, who was born in Eastern Pennsylvania in 1815 and died at Butler in 1881. A brief record of their children is as follows: John, a painter by trade who died at Allegheny, Pennsylvania, aged sixty-two; Mary, who died at Greenville, Pennsylvania, aged sixty-eight, wife of Perry Dehart, a farmer who also died there; Samuel, a farmer who died at a City, Pennsylvania, aged sixty-three; Florence, wife of George W. Campbell, an oil well worker at Baldwin, Pennsylvania; Jennie, of Van Buren, Indiana, widow of Andrew J. Campbell, who was a worker in the oil fields of that district; Charles, a farmer who died at Parkers Landing, Pennsylvania, at the age of thirty; Sarah, of Clarion, Pennsylvania, widow of Curtis W. Elder, a farmer.

Arthur L. Chambers, eighth and youngest of this family, acquired a public school education at Butler and also took an academic course in Grove City College of that state. He left college at the age of twenty and forthwith entered the Kossuth oil field of Clarion County as a pumper. He was there two years, then worked in a similar capacity in the Connoquessing field of Butler County, and was in that district until he came to Smithfield in January, 1897. The first two years he was a pumper for the South Penn Oil Company, then for three years field foreman, and since then has had the responsibilities of superintendent of the Wetzel District, in charge of all the practical operations involved in the production and lifting of oil to the surface. His offices are on Smith Avenue, and he has under his supervision eighty employees and has had as high as three hundred men working under him.

Mr. Chambers is a republican and a member of the Episcopal Church. Fraternally he is affiliated with Wetzel Lodge No. 39, F. & A. M., at New Martinsville, Fairmont Chapter No. 9, R. A. M., Fairmont Commandery No. 6, K. T., West Virginia Consistory No. 1 of the Scottish Rite at Wheeling, Osiris Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Wheeling, and is a past chancellor of White Lily Lodge No. 94, Knights of Pythias. He is a director in the Bank of Jacksonburg. His only living son was in the army during the war, and Mr. Chambers did more than his share of home work, especially in the Red Cross relief activities. He is deeply interested in educational affairs, and for six years was president of the Board of Education of Grant District, and during that time built new schools at Pine Grove, Jacksonburg, Mobley and Smithfield.

June 20, 1891, at Youngstown, Ohio, Mr. Chambers married Miss Cora Dillaman, daughter of George W. and Phoebe (Byers) Dillaman, now residents of Meadville, Crawford County, Pennsylvania, where her father is a farmer. The two children born to Mr. and Mrs. Chambers were Ersie Ray, who died at the age of four months and fourteen days, and Charles Roland.

Charles Roland Chambers was born April 4, 1895, and joined the National Guard at Fairmont before America entered the war with Germany. He was mustered into active service in April, 1918, was commissioned a second lieutenant, was in training at Hattiesburg, Mississippi, and went overseas, reaching France October 10, 1918. He was a casual officer stationed at Le Mons, and returned March 29, 1919. For two weeks he was held in hospital at Hoboken as a diphtheria carrier, and for four months was in the Walter Reed Hospital at Washington before his discharge. He is now a resident of Cameron, West Virginia, being a bookkeeper for the South Penn Oil Company.

J. FRIEND ALLEY is cashier of the Bank of Pine Grove, was in early life a teacher, and is prominently and widely known in the citizenship of Wetzel County, which he also represented a term in the State Legislature.

Mr. Alley was born at Pine Grove March 17, 1891, and at the age of thirty has achieved a substantial position in the affairs of that community. His great-grandfather, Jack Alley was the pioneer of the family in West Virginia. He was a minister of the Baptist Church and settled in Marshall County from Pennsylvania. The grandfather, Thomas H. Alley, was born in Marshall County in 1826, and the greater part of his life was spent near Pine Grove in Wetzel County, where he died in 1908, at the age of eighty-two. He married Mary Steele, a native of Greene County, Pennsylvania, who died at Pine Grove. Isaac B. Alley, father of the Pine Grove banker, is a resident of that community. He was born in Marshall County in 1859, and was a small boy when his parents moved to Pine Grove, where he was reared and married and where he has been known as a substantial farmer. He is now practically retired. He has served on the Town Council of Pine Grove, is a democrat, a member of the Methodist Church and Sylvan Lodge No. 130, Knights of Pythias. He married Louisa Headley, who was born in Wetzel County in 1864 and died at Pine Grove in 1894. The four children of their marriage were: Miss Jessie, at home with her father; Joe, a stationary engineer living at Pine Grove; J. Friend; and Mary Jane, wife of George W. Hawkins, a stationary engineer at Pine Grove.

J. Friend Alley was educated in the public schools of Pine Grove, and in 1915 graduated from the Elliott Commercial School of Wheeling. In the meantime, at the age of nineteen, he began teaching, for two years his work was in the rural schools, and for one year he was a teacher in the grade school of Pine Grove. After finishing his commercial college course in the fall of 1915 he entered the Bank of Pine Grove as bookkeeper. In November, 1916, he was elected a member of the House of Delegates from Wetzel County, and during the session of 1917 he was a member of the committees on prohibition and temperance, education, county, districts and municipal corporations, private corporations and joint stock companies, and agriculture. In December, 1916, Mr. Alley resigned from the bank and for a short time was bookkeeper for the South Penn Oil Company, but in 1917 returned to the Bank of Pine Grove as cashier, and has been to a large degree the responsible officer of the bank ever since.

The Bank of Pine Grove was established under a state charter in 1902. It was a very prosperous institution, the capital stock being $25,000.00, surplus and profits $6,000.00, and deposits averaging $200,000.00. The personnel of the officers are: H. A. Jolliffe, president; F. F. Morgan, vice president; J. Friend Alley, cashier; while the other directors are Joe Alley, H. H. Roome, L. M. Billingsley, B. L. Morgan, P. J. Garvey, J. L. Simpson, S. J. Dulaney, all of Pine Grove, and J. U. Jolliffe, of Weston.

As a bank official Mr. Alley was very active in promoting the filling of the quota of his community for patriotic purposes during the war. He spent much of his time in selling Liberty Bonds and helping the Red Cross drives. He is a democrat, a Methodist, and is affiliated with Wetzel Lodge No. 39 A. F. and A. M., Sylvan Lodge No. 130, Knights of Pythias, of which he is past chancellor, and Pine Grove Lodge No. 460, Independent Order of Odd Fellows.

June 25, 1919, at Pine Grove, he married Miss Alice Hawkins, daughter of Ralph R. and Sarah (Daugherty) Hawkins, the latter now deceased, and the former a resident of Pine Grove. He is a retired oil well pumper and now has a pension from the company that employed him many years. Mrs. Alley also finished her education in the Elliott Commercial College at Wheeling. They have two children, Norman Gregory, born April 17, 1920, and Jack Roger, born February 1, 1922.

CHARLES W. SINNETT is giving an excellent administration as postmaster of Auburn, Ritchie County, and is one of the well known and distinctively popular citizens of his native county, his birth having occurred at Washburn, this county, June 27, 1873. In Ritchie County he was also born his parents, John P. and Helen V. (Stanley) Sinnett. The father was here born in the year 1847, where he was reared on a farm, and though he was a mere boy at the time of the outbreak of the Civil war, his youthful loyalty to the cause of the Union prompted him to enlist in the Tenth Virginia Infantry, with which he continued in service until the close of the war. After his return home he continued his active alliance with farm enterprise until he turned his attention to lumbering operations as the owner of a sawmill. With this line of business he continued his associations for many years prior to his death. He and his wife were zealous members of the Indian Creek Baptist Church, he was a stalwart republican, and was a valued and appreciative member of the Grand Army of the Republic. Of the six children Charles W., of this review, is the eldest; Alberta is deceased; Mary E. is the wife of Floyd Jones; Eliza May is the wife of O. H. Waller; Clarence M., an oil-well driller by occupation, resides at Harrisburg, judicial center of Ritchie County; and Clinton L. resides at Burnt House, this county, he having been a member of the United States Navy and having been in the aviation service of the nation in the period of the World war.

Charles W. Sinnett remained on the home farm until he was nineteen years old, and that he had profited by the advantages of the public schools is evidenced by the effective service which he gave as a teacher in the rural schools for four terms. He became identified with the operation of a saw mill, and later was a partner in the operating of a flour mill also at Auburn, besides which he acquired skill as a worker at the carpenter's trade. In 1914, after civil-service examination, he was appointed postmaster at Auburn, which village he has maintained his residence since 1887, and his administration has fully justified his appointment to this office. He owns the building in which the Post Office is established, and has given the same a modern equipment so that the service facilities are of the best. He also owns and occupies one of the attractive homes of the village. Mr. Sinnett is a staunch republican, and in a fraternal way is a past chancellor of Auburn Lodge No. 47, Knights of Pythias, which he represented in the Grand Lodge of that state in 1909-10. His wife is an active member of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

In 1905 Mr. Sinnett married Miss Laura J. Watson, a daughter of this union six children have been born, all of whom are living except the youngest. The names and respective birth dates of the children are here recorded: Lois, January 1, 1906; Lora, April 11, 1908; Helen, October 27, 1910; John Willard, January 28, 1912; Harmon E., September 11, 1914; and May, who was born January 8, 1921, and died January 12, 1921.

JOHN L. RYMER is one of the leading merchants of the thriving village of Auburn, Ritchie County, where he is also vice president of the Auburn Exchange Bank, one of the substantial and well ordered financial institutions of the county. He was born in Gilmer County, this state, December 17, 1869, and is a son of W. W. and Phoebe J. (Patto) Rymer, the former of whom was born in Highland County, Virginia, in 1840, and the latter of whom was born in what is now Gilmer County, West Virginia, in 1850. The father was reared and educated in what is now West Virginia, his parents having first settled in Lewis County and later having removed to Gilmer County, where he was reared to maturity. After his marriage W. W. Rymer settled on a farm near Auburn, Ritchie County, and he is now one of the venerated and honored citizens of Gilmer County. He has been a member of productive industry and has been loyal to all civic duties and responsibilities, his political faith being that of the democratic party. Of the six children the subject of this review is the eldest; N. E. is serving, in 1921, as county clerk of Gilmer County; Miss Mary S. remains at the parental home; Howard E. is deceased; Dossie L. is the wife of Albee West, of Glenville, Gilmer County; and William I. has active management of the home farm of his parents.

While the activities of the old homestead farm demands upon much of the time and attention of John L. Rymer in the period of his boyhood and early youth, he did not fail to profit also by the advantages offered in the public schools, besides which he later took a course in the Mountain State Business College at Parkersburg. In his independent career Mr. Rymer has continued his appreciative alliance with farm industry, and is now the owner of a well improved farm of seventy-five acres near Auburn. He has conducted a well equipped general merchandise store at Auburn since the year 1910, and is one of the progressive merchants and loyal and liberal citizens of this village. He is a staunch democrat, and is past chancellor of Auburn Lodge No. 47, Knights of Pythias, his wife being a member of the Pythian Sisters and also an active member of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

In 1914 Mr. Rymer wedded Miss Dell S. Sommerville, Auburn, she being a native of Ritchie County. Mrs. Rymer graduated from the Mountain State Business College, and in 1912-13 she served with marked ability as cashier of the Auburn Exchange Bank, she having been at that time the only woman bank cashier in West Virginia. Mr. and Mrs. Rymer have no children.

HON. GEORGE WILLIAM MCCAULEY. One of the leading promulgators of corporation law of Eastern West Virginia is George William McCauley, of Moorefield, the greater part of whose career has been passed in Hardy County. Mr. McCauley is not only prominent in the ranks of his profession, but is likewise active and influential in the ranks of the democratic party and at various times has been chosen the incumbent of public offices, in which he has established an excellent record for faithful and capable service.

Mr. McCauley was born November 30, 1868, at Sedan, Hampshire County, the family moving when he was one year old to Hanging Rock (now McCauley Post Office), Hampshire County, West Virginia. He is a son of Elias and Susan (Baker) McCauley. His paternal grandfather, Addison McCauley, was a resident of Hampshire County for many years, and, it is believed, devoted himself uninterruptedly to agricultural operations in the vicinity of North River Mills. He married a Miss Millslage, and among their children were: Lemuel, George and Elias. Elias McCauley was born near North River Mills, Hampshire County, April 19, 1821, and secured a rural school education that enabled him to teach school prior to the outbreak of the war between the states. During that struggle he had a brief connection with a Confederate militia regiment, and the fact that he took no greater part in the war is probably due to his operation of a mill, at Sedan, the continuance of which was deemed desirable by the military chiefs. Some time after the war Mr. McCauley came to Hardy County and established the family home at what was then known as Hanging Rock, but which is now known as McCauley Post Office, named in his honor. He was first engaged in the milling business, following which he established a general merchandise store and gradually assumed other business connections, of growing importance, which he maintained for a number of years. In the evening of life he passed these responsibilities on to other shoulders, and died August 10, 1908, at McCauley. He was politically a democrat, with strong and well-defined convictions, but did not seek political favors, and his only public positions were those of postmaster, justice of the peace and member of the board of education. In his later years he united with the Presbyterian Church. He had no connection with fraternal orders. Mr. McCauley married Miss Susan Baker, who was born on Baker's Run, Hardy County, May 10, 1830, a daughter of Abraham and Mary Ann (Wise) Baker. Mrs. McCauley passed away at the home of the family at McCauley February 19, 1912. Those of their children to grow to maturity were as follows: Aaron Baker, whose life was spent at McCauley as a teacher, and who died at the home of his uncle, Aaron Baker, in Grant County, in 1897; Rebecca, who married John B. Russell and died September 6, 1906, at McCauley; Isabel Lee, who became the wife of Dorsey F. Brill and resides at Richwood, West Virginia; George William, of this review; and Sallie C., who married Benjamin B. Baughman and died at McCauley, February 9, 1917.

George William McCauley spent his boyhood in general work around the home place, in the mill and at the store. Fishing and frog-hunting constituted a part of his boyhood diversions, and his first educational training was gained in the four-month schools of his period, that being the length of the winter term. By the time he was seventeen years of age he had gained sufficient education to teach, acquired a certificate, and obtained a school in the country, near McCauley. During 1887 and 1888 he attended the Shenandoah Normal College, Virginia, in the meantime continuing to teach for six years in the counties of Hardy, Hampshire and Grant, as the possessor of a No. 1 certificate. He taught his last term in Grant and Hampshire counties, teaching a four-month term in each in the same year, and abandoned the schoolroom as a teacher in 1891.

At that time Mr. McCauley secured a position as manager of the Alliance Store at Rio, Hampshire County, and there continued for three years. During this time he conceived the idea of studying law and began reading Blackstone. In June, 1894, he gave up his position at the store, and in the fall of the same year went to Morgantown, where he took a course in law at West Virginia University, taking a two-year course in one and graduating as a member of the class of June, 1895. During his college days Mr. McCauley was a member of the Parthenon Literary Society, and participated in the debates and literary work of the weekly programs of the society. Returning to his home at McCauley he spent two or three months, but in August, 1895, came to Moorefield to engage in the practice of his profession. At that time the young lawyer was without a library, funds or any other asset save his right to practice, his knowledge of the law and his keen determination to win. It was then that he found a generous friend in the old lawyer of the town, Mr. Carr, who fathered him and allowed him to share his office with him for a time. It was thus he passed through the probationary stage, getting into practice slowly but surely, and finally gaining a reputation as a pleader that secured him public confidence. He was urged to become a candidate for the office of prosecuting attorney in 1896, against one of the old lawyers of the county and the then incumbent of the office. He yielded to the urging and won the election, succeeding Benjamin Dailey, and subsequently held the office for three terms, or twelve years, after which he declined to be a candidate. The condition of society during that time seems to have been healthful as far as crime was concerned, and there was no difficulty in convicting those who broke the liquor laws. Only two murders were committed during the period, and both slayers were sent to the penitentiary.

Retiring from the office of prosecuting attorney, Mr. McCauley resumed the private practice of law, but, it seemed, was not destined to keep out of public office, for in 1911 he was elected to the West Virginia House of Delegates and served under Speaker Wetzel in a democratic House. He was made chairman of the committee on federal relations and a member of the judiciary committee. Among his labors during that term was the introduction of a bill providing for a tax on oil and gas, which he succeeded in passing through the House, although it failed of passage in the Senate. He was re-elected for the terms of 1913-15, during which both Houses were republican, and Mr. McCauley took part on the floor of the House in the legislative matters proposed. He was a member of the judiciary committee. In 1917 he declined to be a candidate, but, at the request of Governor Cornell, ran for another term in 1919 and served in the House that winter. He felt that he had acquired all the honors possible as a member of that body after being given the nomination for the speakership by his party and being made minority leader of the House, and would not seek the place again voluntarily, but was urged so strongly that he finally consented and was elected in 1920, being made the minority leader of the democratic party in the House in 1921. He was in the minority all through his legislation service and could do no more than speak on the floor of the House and in the committee rooms. Mr. McCauley was a modest officer of the Democratic National Convention at Baltimore and witnessed the bringing about of the nomination of President Wilson. Convention work at home has not been followed up closely by him as a delegate, although he helped to nominate Judge Brown for Congress and saw him elected to that body from the Second District.

Mr. McCauley continues to be engaged in the practice of his profession and is attorney for the Baltimore & Ohio Railway Company, the Winchester & Western Railroad Company, the South Fork Lumber Company, the Winchester Lumber Corporation and Moore, Keppel & Company, large lumber concerns of Hardy County, and the South Branch National Bank, of which he is vice president and a member of the board of directors. During the World war he was a member of the Hardy County Draft Board. In 1897 Mr. McCauley united with the Southern Presbyterian Church at Moorefield, and after serving several years as a deacon was advanced to an eldership in the church, which he still retains. He has represented the Moorefield congregation in Winchester Presbytery several times, and was its commissioner in the General Assembly at Atlanta, Georgia, in 1913, and that at Durant, Oklahoma, in 1918.

On March 23, 1898, Mr. McCauley married at Washington, D. C., Miss Eleanor Clements, of the national capital, who was born and reared at Georgetown, D. C., and was educated in the Catholic convent at Frederick City, Maryland. She was a daughter of William Delesdernier and Eleanor (O'Donnoghue) Clements. For a number of years prior to her death, which occurred December 8, 1920, Mrs. McCauley was unable to take part in community affairs as carried on by the ladies of Moorefield because of physical disability, but remained loyal to the Catholic Church, the faith of her parents. Mr. and Mrs. McCauley had one son: William Delesdernier, born July 3, 1900, who is a student of law at West Virginia University, in which he was formerly an S. A. T. C. student.

WALTER LEE JOHNSTON, M. D., is established in the successful general practice of his profession in the thriving industrial City of McDowell, in the county of the same name. In addition to his specifically private practice as a physician and surgeon he is retained as official physician of the Roanoke Coal & Coke Company, the Arlington Coal & Coke Company, the Gilliam Coal Company and the Indian Ridge Coal & Coke Company. His practice is now of such broad scope that he has Doctor Steel as his assistant, and where patients require hospital service he has recourse to the Miners' State Hospital No. 1 at Welch, the Bluefield Sanitarium and St. Luke's Hospital at Bluefield. The doctor shows a fine sense of stewardship in his profession and maintains affiliation with the McDowell County Medical Society, the West Virginia State Medical Society and the American Medical Association.

Doctor Johnston was born at Princeton, Mercer County, West Virginia, April 27, 1872, and is a son of James Edward and Ellen Elizabeth (Wall) Johnston, the former of whom was born in Virginia and the latter in what is now West Virginia. James E. Johnston, a farmer by vocation, served as a loyal soldier of the Confederacy during the Civil war. He was a steward in the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, of which his wife likewise was a devoted member. The lineage of the Johnston family traces back to Scotch and Irish sources, and its first American representatives settled in Virginia in the Colonial period of our national history.

The public schools of his native county afforded Doctor Johnston his early education, and he was a lad of sixteen years at the time of his father's death. After completing his studies in the Princeton schools he was a student in the State Normal School at Athens until 1888, and for three years thereafter he was a clerk in a general store at Oakvale. He carefully conserved his earnings and utilized his savings in defraying the expenses of his professional education. He entered the College of Medicine of the University of Virginia, this department being in the City of Richmond, and there he was graduated as a member of the class of 1899 and with the degree of Doctor of Medicine. He has made McDowell the central stage of his professional service from the time of his graduation, and has gained high standing as an able and resourceful physician and surgeon and as a broad-minded and progressive citizen.

December 26, 1901, recorded the marriage of Doctor Johnston and Miss Nellie F. Keating, daughter of John J. and Ann (Canfield) Keating, both natives of Pennsylvania. Mr. and Mrs. Keating reside at Eckman, West Virginia, and he is successfully engaged in the wholesale grocery business. Doctor and Mrs. Johnston are communicants of the Catholic Church and in politics he is a staunch democrat. The only child, Walter Broughton Johnston, is, in 1922, a student in the high school at North Fork.

HARRY A. HENTHORN is secretary for Morris Watts and shipping agent for the Pocahontas Coal Sales Company in the coal business, with headquarters at Gilliam, McDowell County, and is one of the vital and popular young men here concerned with business enterprise.

Mr. Henthorn was born at Toronto, Jefferson County, Ohio, March 25, 1893, and is a son of Jesse and Mary (Allen) Henthorn, both likewise natives of the old Buckeye State, where the father has long been successfully engaged in road and bridge construction work as a contractor.

After attending the public schools of Monroe County, Ohio, Harry A. Henthorn continued his studies in a normal school in the same county. For three years thereafter he was a successful teacher in the schools of Monroe County, and he then came to Wheeling, West Virginia, and entered the Elliott Commercial College, in which he completed a thorough course, which included stenography, typewriting and general commercial instruction, besides which he took a secretarial course, his graduation having occurred in 1914. After leaving this institution he became pay-roll clerk for the Glenalum Coal Company at Glenalum, Mingo County, and three months later became secretary to Mr. Watts at Eckman, McDowell County, where he remained five years, since which time he has held his present responsible position at Gilliam, this county.

The political allegiance of Mr. Henthorn is given to the democratic party, he is affiliated with the Masonic fraternity, and he and his wife hold membership in the Baptist Church.

December 21, 1915, in Monroe County, Ohio, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Henthorn and Miss Eska Ekkeberry, daughter of Albert Ekkeberry, a substantial citizen of that county. The two children of this union are Harry A., Jr., and Beatrice Pearl.

JOSEPH C. LAWSON, M. D., is one of the veteran and honored representatives of his profession in Ritchie County, where for nearly forty years he has been engaged in active general practice at Auburn, with a parallel record of able and effective stewardship in his profession and as a citizen. The Doctor was born in Harrison County, Virginia, May 11, 1852, about a decade prior to the time when his native county became a part of the new state of West Virginia. He is a son of Theophilus and Elizabeth (Bailey) Lawson, the former of whom was born in Harrison County, January 15, 1823, and the latter in Taylor County, September 16, 1830. Theophilus Lawson was a son of Elias and Mary (Teter) Lawson, who were born in the eastern part of Virginia and who migrated in an early day to what is now Harrison County, West Virginia, where they settled on a pioneer farm near Bridgeport. On this old homestead Theophilus Lawson passed the period of his boyhood and early youth, and he continued as one of the substantial exponents of farm enterprise during his entire active career, both he and his wife having continued to reside in Harrison County until their deaths and both having been earnest members of the Methodist Protestant Church. Mr. Lawson was a strong Union sympathizer in the Civil war period, and was one of the early members of the republican party in his community. Of the eight children all but one attained to maturity, and of the number four are living, in 1921, Dr. Lawson of this sketch being the eldest of this number; Rachel is the wife of Jacob Marple; E. W. is a substantial capitalist and banker at Kansas City, Missouri; and Mary B. is the wife of Arthur A. Cather, of Clarksburg, West Virginia. Dr. Silas B., Ida A., Kittie and John B. are deceased.

Dr. Joseph C. Lawson was reared on the old home farm and his youthful ambition led him to carry his early studies far beyond the curriculum of the local schools, as he gave his attention to the study of Latin, higher mathematics and other branches. In preparation for his chosen profession he entered the historic old Jefferson Medical College in the City of Philadelphia, and after receiving therefrom his degree of Doctor of Medicine he was engaged in practice at Bridgeport, Harrison County, near the old home, until 1884, when he established his permanent residence at Auburn, Ritchie County, which has been the central stage of his earnest and able professional labors during the long intervening period. He is one of the oldest and most revered members of the Ritchie County Medical Society and is also a member of the West Virginia State Medical Society. The Doctor is a stockholder in the Auburn Exchange Bank, is a trustee of the local Methodist Protestant Church, is a past master of the lodge of Free and Accepted Masons at Auburn, past chancellor of the local lodge of the Knights of Pythias, and is affiliated also with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. His political allegiance is given to the republican party.

June 14, 1887, recorded the marriage of Dr. Lawson and Miss Araminta Bush, who was born in Gilmer County but reared in Ritchie County. Of the six children of Doctor and Mrs. Lawson one died in infancy; Willie graduated from Broadus Institute and is now the wife of Rev. L. E. Oldaker, a clergyman of the Methodist Protestant Church; Adrian H. was afforded the advantages of the State Normal School at Glenville, and he represented his native state as a gallant young soldier in the World war, in which connection he was in active service in France for one year; Leon K., a graduate of the State Normal School at Glenville, is, in 1921, a student in the University of West Virginia; Kathleen, who likewise attended the normal school at Glenville and also Fairmont State Normal School; and Carleton is a graduate of the Morgantown, West Virginia, High School.

HENRY J. STRALEY, cashier of the Auburn Exchange Bank in the village of Auburn, Ritchie County, was born in Lewis County, this state, on the 19th of May, 1872, and is a son of L. H. and Martha M. (Langford) Straley, both likewise natives of that county, the father having been born at Janelew, January 24, 1846, and the mother at Weston, the county seat, February 28, 1853. The parents were reared on farms in their native county, received the advantages of the common schools, and their marriage was solemnized January 1, 1871. Thereafter they resided on a farm on Freemans Creek, Lewis County, until 1890, when they sold the farm and removed to a farm on Cove Creek, that county. In 1911 they sold this place and removed to Harrison County, Ohio, where the father passed the remainder of his life, his death having occurred October 22, 1921, and where the widowed mother still maintains her home. L. H. Straley was a man of sterling character, achieved success in connection with farm industry, was a staunch democrat and was affiliated with the Masonic fraternity. His religious faith was that of the Baptist church, of which his widow likewise is an earnest member. They became the parents of nine children, all of whom survive the honored father, and of the number the subject of this sketch is the eldest. The second son is F. Sylvester; Tilden L. resides at Adena, Ohio, and is a carpenter by trade and vocation; James C., who is superintendent of the public schools of Madelia, Minnesota, is a graduate of the University of Wisconsin and also of the Kansas State Normal School at Emporia; Walter K. is in the oil fields of California; John M., now a resident of Columbus, Ohio, served as a second lieutenant in the United States Army at the time of the World war; Jessie is the wife of Rev. J. A. Young, pastor of the Baptist Church at St. Marys, West Virginia; Guy, who graduated from the high school at Scio, Ohio, is now a prosperous farmer; and Willa is the wife of J. E. Eminger, of Clendenin, Kanawha County, West Virginia.

Henry J. Straley was reared to the sturdy discipline of the farm and remained at the parental home until he attained to his legal majority. In the meanwhile he had profited fully by the advantages of the public schools, and at intervals he continued his effective service as a teacher for fourteen years. In the meanwhile he was actively identified with farm enterprise, to which he continued to give his attention until April, 1918, when he assumed his present position, that of cashier of the Auburn Exchange Bank, the other two executive officers being J. T. Hall, president, and J. L. Rymer, vice president. Besides these officers the directorate of the bank includes also J. E. Legett, Chester Williams, F. H. Gray, A. N. Watson, John R. Powell, James Reed, M. S. Gaston. The capital stock of the institution is $25,000.

Mr. Straley gives his political allegiance to the democratic party, he and his wife are members of the Baptist Church, he is a past chancellor of Auburn Lodge No. 47, Knights of Pythias, and is affiliated also with Harmony Lodge No. 59, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons.

September 29, 1897, recorded the marriage of Mr. Straley and Miss Ida J. Goff, who was born in Ritchie County, May 30, 1872. Mr. and Mrs. Straley have six children: Vera, Velma, Willa, Hazel, Harry and Heber. The eldest daughter is a graduate of the Mountain State Business College in the City of Parkersburg.

WILLIAM H. DAVIS. Sometimes the greatest prosperity of a populous city depends upon specific industries for which its location may particularly favor it, manufacturing building up one section, shipping another, the cultivation of the vine or the growing of fruits another, or mining contributing to still another, all of these attracting wealth and bringing independence. One of the leading factors in bringing prosperity to the City of Morgantown has been the location here of the tin plate plant of the United States Steel Corporation, of which plant William H. Davis is the efficient and energetic manager. Mr. Davis is likewise prominently identified with the financial interests of the city, being president of the Commercial Bank of Morgantown, and as a citizen has evidenced his public spirit in his support of movements which have attracted the attention and interest of citizens of enlightened and progressive views.

Mr. Davis is a native of Wales, and was born December 18, 1864, his parents being the late William R. and Sarah (Crates) Davis, both natives of the same country, where the mother died. William R. Davis was a coal miner by vocation, and in his native land was a foreman and superintendent of mines. In 1864 he came to the United States, and after coming to this country spent the most of his life in the West, being the owner of a farm near Osage City, Kansas. He died at the home of his son William at Elwood, Indiana, at the age of seventy-eight years.

The educational advantages of William H. Davis were somewhat limited in his youth, as he was called upon to go to work when he was only fourteen years of age in the tin plate mills of Wales. This experience was of the utmost value to him, as he learned the business from the bottom up, and mastered all the details of each stage of the manufacture of this product as he won advancement from position to position. In 1892, following the passage of the McKinley Tariff Bill, Mr. Davis came to the United States and went to work in the tin plate mill of Reed and Leeds at Elwood, Indiana, the first independent plant in the country. After spending a few years as a roller he was made foreman, and several years later, when the mill was taken over by the United States Steel Corporation, was made superintendent of the corporation's Gas City (Indiana) plant. Later he was transferred to the Cleveland, Ohio, plant, and made manager, and subsequently went to the Parrell, Pennsylvania, plant, in the same capacity. In May, 1917, he was made manager of the Morgantown plant, a position which he still retains. All of these plants belong to the United States Steel Corporation. Mr. Davis is one of the best informed men in his line in the country, and is an executive of ability and forceful personality.

In 1917 Mr. Davis was one of the organizers of the Commercial Bank at Morgantown, and was a member of its first Board of Directors, which, at its first meeting, elected him to the presidency of the institution, a position which he has retained to the present. He has directed the affairs of the bank in a thoroughly capable manner, combining conservatism with progressive tactics in a way that has contributed materially to the bank's prosperity. He is a member of Morgantown Lodge No. 4, Free and Accepted Masons; is a thirty-second degree Mason, and a member of Osiris Temple, Ancient Arabic Order Nobles of the Mystic Shrine, of Wheeling, West Virginia; and likewise holds membership in the Elks Lodge at Sharon, Pennsylvania, and the Masonic and Country Clubs of Morgantown. He is a Presbyterian in religion, and in politics gives his allegiance to the republican party.

On December 25, 1893, Mr. Davis married Miss Alice Williams, daughter of John Williams, of Elwood, Indiana, and they have three children: Inez, Wilton H. and Mary Alice.

HON. MICHAEL K. DUTY, lawyer and business man of Pennsboro, has by his varied public service become one of the best known citizens of West Virginia. He has been in both Houses of the Legislature, has been mayor of Pennsboro, and was at one time county superintendent of schools of Ritchie County.

Michael K. Duty was born on a farm in Tyler County, West Virginia, December 8, 1855, son of A. W. and Hannah E. (Jones) Duty, also natives of Tyler County. They were reared on farms in that county, and the father was a competent teacher and later a very successful business man, conducting a store at Centerville for many years. A. W. Duty was a Union soldier, being sergeant major in the 14th West Virginia Infantry. While in the war he was captured and spent six and a half months in Andersonville Prison. For thirty years he held the post of magistrate in his home county, was an active republican and a member of the United Brethren Church. A. W. Duty and wife had six children, five of whom are now living. Michael K.; J. W. Duty, an oil worker in Harrison County and who has held the office of magistrate; Ellen J., wife of Joseph Geesey, living in Ohio; E. T. Duty in the oil business at Highland, Ritchie County; and D. D. Duty, postmaster of Wellsville, Ohio.

Michael K. Duty spent his early life at Centerville, West Virginia, attended the common and high schools there and later the State Normal School at Fairmont. Then followed a number of years of experience as teacher and school administrator, and for twelve years he was principal of the public school at Pennsboro and served one term as county superintendent of schools. Mr. Duty graduated in law from the University of Arkansas, and as a lawyer he has practiced in several counties of West Virginia and is still active in his profession. He is owner of the line of railroad between Pennsboro and Pullman. He is a stockholder in the Citizens National Bank and has a large amount of property interests including town real estate and farm lands.

Mr. Duty was elected and served five terms as mayor of Pennsboro. In 1912 he was elected a member of the House of Delegates, serving in the Thirty-first and Thirty-second Legislatures. In 1916 he was elected to represent the Third District in the State Senate, and was an active member in the Thirty-third and Thirty-fourth Legislatures. In the session of 1919 he was chairman of the Virginia debt committee, and was member of the important committees on judiciary, railroad, prohibition and temperance and others.

In Masonry Mr. Duty is well known over the state through his two terms as grand lecturer of the West Virginia Grand Lodge. He is a thirty-second degree Scottish Rite Mason and he is a past master of Harmony Lodge No. 59, A. F. and A. M., and member of Odell S. Long Chapter No. 25, R. A. M. In December, 1897, Senator Duty married Miss Lora Crumrine. They reared one child in their home, Delsie Woostle, now the wife of Clyde Maxwell.

JAMES B. WILSON, M. D. Born and reared on a farm near Pennsboro, after completing his medical education Doctor Wilson returned to his home community to practice, and for nearly thirty years has been one of the competent physicians and surgeons in this locality.

His birth occurred on a farm three miles south of Pennsboro February 11, 1866. He is a son of Leroy P. and Virginia S. (Rinehart) Wilson, the former born in Ritchie County in 1832 and the latter at Oakland, Maryland, in 1839. The mother is living at the age of eighty-three. Leroy Wilson had a common school education, excelled in mathematics, and for a number of years followed surveying, though his main business was farming and cattle raising and dealing. He was a man of unusual business ability and a leader in public affairs in Ritchie County. He was elected as a democrat to several local offices, was president of the Board of Education and president of the Ritchie County Fair Association. He was especially prominent as a student of Masonry, and for a time was district deputy grand lecturer of the Grand Lodge. He was a past master of Harmony Lodge No. 59, A. F. and A. M., for nine years and was a thirty-second degree Scottish Rite Mason. Leroy Wilson was the father of twelve children, ten of whom are living. Archie J. is a merchant at Harrisville; Molly, died when about six years of age; Dr. James B.; Miss Agnes, a graduate of the Fairmont State Normal School and a teacher; Anna, wife of S. H. Hamilton, of Pennsboro; B. F. Wilson, who is located at Bowling Green, Kentucky, in the oil business; Minnie, deceased, was the wife of S. M. Hoff, of Huntington, West Virginia; Zilpha, who is a graduate of medicine and is now the wife of a Presbyterian minister in the State of Washington; Susan is the wife of A. L. Davis of Charleston, West Virginia; Lee is in the oil business, with home at Wichita Falls, Texas; J. Marsh is an oil field worker; and Okey lives in Texas and is in the oil industry.

Dr. James B. Wilson spent his early life on the farm, acquired a common school education and was a teacher for several terms. He began the study of medicine in the University of Maryland, and in 1893 graduated M. D. from the University of Louisville, Kentucky. He then returned to Pennsboro, and has had a large practice in that part of Ritchie County ever since. He is a member of the County, State and American Medical Associations, and is local surgeon for the Baltimore & Ohio Railway.

Doctor Wilson is a director of the First National Bank of Pennsboro and is owner of considerable real estate in that town and Clarksburg. He is a democrat and, like his father, is interested in Masonry, serving three terms as master of Harmony Lodge No. 59, A. F. and A. M., and is also affiliated with the Royal Arch Chapter, Knight Templar Commandery and Shrine. He and Mrs. Wilson are members of the Presbyterian Church. Doctor Wilson's first wife was Alice Sherwood of Baltimore, Maryland. By this marriage he has a son, Sherwood, who is a graduate of high school. Doctor Wilson for his second wife married Olive Bond, of Clarksburg, West Virginia.

BENJAMIN F. MCGINNIS has been one of the busy professional and business men of Pennsboro for a number of years. He was an attorney by education and practiced law for a number of years, but for the past five years his chief duty has been as cashier of the Farmers and Merchants Bank of Pennsboro. This is one of the older banking institutions of Ritchie County, beginning business in 1898.

Mr. McGinnis was born on a farm in Ritchie County in 1883, son of Benjamin and Alice (McCullough) McGinnis. His father was born in Greene County, Pennsylvania, in 1835, had a common school education, in 1852 came to West Virginia and after his marriage settled on a farm in Ritchie County, near Ellenboro. His wife was born in Doddridge County, West Virginia, and is now living in the village of Ellenboro. She is an active member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Benjamin McGinnis was a Union soldier throughout the four years of the Civil war, and was an active member of the Grand Army Post. He took a prominent part in republican politics, was elected county assessor in 1868, was chosen a member of the West Virginia Legislature in 1872, in 1884 was elected a member of the County Court, and in 1902 was again elected to the Legislature. He died in 1914. There were three children: Benjamin F.; Miss Sadie E.; and John W., a graduate of Marshall College Normal School at Huntington and a farmer in Ritchie County.

Benjamin F. McGinnis spent his early life on the farm near Ellenboro, attended school there, and in 1908 graduated from West Virginia University Law School. In the meantime he had taught two years in country districts of his home county. Mr. McGinnis had a successful general practice as a lawyer at Pennsboro until business interests crowded him out of the profession. During 1915-16 he built the McGinnis Hotel at Pennsboro, and in 1917, about the time America entered the war with Germany, became identified with the management of the Farmers and Merchants Bank as cashier. He is also a director of the bank and a director of the First National Bank of Pennsboro. Mr. McGinnis is a republican, a member of the School Board at Pennsboro, a Knight Templar and thirty-second degree Scottish Rite Mason, being a member of Wheeling Consistory No. 1, also a member of Odell S. Long Chapter, R. A. M., of which he is a Past High Priest, and belongs to Nemesis Shrine, A. A. O. N. M. S., of Parkersburg, West Virginia. He and Mrs. McGinnis are members of the Methodist Church, and he is a trustee of the church. Mr. McGinnis married Miss X. A. Price, of Morgantown, a graduate of the high school of that city. They have four children: Frederick D., now in high school, Benjamin A., Virginia E. and Mary Louise.

C. B. SUMMERS was born and reared on a farm in Ritchie County, has always been more or less interested in farming, though his chosen career is banking, and he is the experienced and well qualified cashier of the First National Bank of Pennsboro.

Mr. Summers was born near Pullman in Ritchie County, October 13, 1885, son of Elijah and Agnes M. (Lowther) Summers, the former born near Pullman and the latter in Tyler County, West Virginia. They were reared on farms, had common school educations, and after their marriage in Tyler County Elijah Summers returned to his farm near Pullman and lived there until his death. The mother is still living. They have been active members of the Methodist Protestant Church and Elijah Summers was a republican and filled an unexpired term as a member of the County Court. He was the father of five children: Iva, wife of Alf Starr, of Birmingham, Alabama; C. B. Summers; Hazel, formerly a acher, now a stenographer at Birmingham, Alabama; O. B. Summers, who is married and lives on the home farm; and George L., a mechanic in the Ireland Garage at Pennsboro.

C. B. Summers during his youth on the old homestead at Pullman attended the common schools and later graduated from the Mountain State Business College at Parkersburg. For several years he lived at Parkersburg and Racine, Ohio, spending two years as an employee of the First National Bank and for four years was connected with a firm of produce dealers. On returning to Ritchie County he entered the First National Bank of Pennsboro, and had a working experience in every department until he was appointed cashier in 1921. The First National Bank of Pennsboro is one of the substantial institutions of the county, has resources of over half a million, and the officers are: A. O. Wilson, president; Bert Crawford and R. W. Elder, vice presidents; Okey E. Nutter, live vice president and former cashier; the directors being B. Wilson, B. F. McGinnis, M. M. McDougal, J. J. Kendall and C. B. Summers.

Mr. Summers besides his banking interests owns a half interest in 375 acres of land near Pullman. He is a republican, member of the Knights of the Maccabees, and is a past and present secretary of Pennsboro Lodge No. 175, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and also a member of the Encampment. Mrs. Summers is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. He married July 4, 1911, Miss Agnes Deane. Their two daughters are Deane and Madeline.

ROBERT TALBOTT, of Fairmont, Marion County, is executive head of Robert Talbott & Company, owners of the Agnes Coal Mine, two and one-half miles distance from Fowlesville, in Monongalia County, and is one of the successful coal operators of West Virginia.

Mr. Talbott was born in the City of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, May 20, 1852, and is a son of Dennis and Julia Sullivan Talbott, both natives of Ireland, where their marriage was solemnized and whence they came to the United States in 1851. In this country Dennis Talbott was first employed in connection with railroad construction, and eventually he became a contractor in this line of work. After the close of the Civil war he came to West Virginia to fulfill a contract in connection with the construction of the old Cumberland Valley Railroad, and in the meanwhile the family home was established at Martinsburg, his state. He did not long remain in West Virginia, and upon his return to Pennsylvania he established his residence at Boiling Springs, near Carlisle, he having been for two years engaged in carrying out a railroad construction contract in that section of the state, and the next two years having been given to a contract on the Tuscarawas railroad in Ohio, now a part of the Baltimore & Ohio system.

Robert Talbott gained his early education in the schools of the various places where the family resided in connection with the father's contracting business, and even as a boy began to work with his father. After the completion of the above mentioned contract in Ohio he began to take charge of operations as a boss on the construction work, and finally he became the virtual director of operations, though his father continued to retain an interest in the business. For a term of years the family remained together, and the father and sons were associated in the contracting business, the parents moving about from place to place, as contracts were taken, until they grew venerable in age. After leaving Ohio the Talbotts completed a contract on the Johnstown & Cambria Railroad (now a part of the Pennsylvania system), and about this time Robert Talbott formed a partnership with James A. Bennett, under the title of Bennett & Talbott, contractors. The first contract of the new firm was for the construction of two miles in the Pennsylvania Railroad branch from Brownsville to Uniontown, Pennsylvania; the next work was in the building of a branch line from Redstone, Pennsylvania, to the plant of the H. C. Frick Coal Company; and subsequent contracts in turn were on a Pennsylvania Railroad branch at Mount Pleasant and the construction of two miles of road for the same corporation at Greensburg, that state. In 1884 the firm completed a contract for the construction of a portion of a branch of the Fairmont, Morgantown & Pittsburgh Division of the B. & O. Railroad. Thereafter operations were directed to the building of coke ovens at various points in Pennsylvania. The firm next took up a contract in the construction of the tunnel at Outcrop, Pennsylvania, and later did similar tunnel construction near Cumberland, Maryland, and Punxsatawney, Pennsylvania, for the Buffalo & Rochester Railroad, and at Whitehall and Thomas, that state, for the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, the next contract being for a tunnel for the latter road at Patterson's Creek Cut-off, near Cumberland, Maryland. Next was carried out a grading and tunnel contract at Flushing, Ohio, and the next four years were given to the building of tunnels and to other construction work at Otisville, New York. In 1909 the firm returned to West Virginia and entered upon important contracting work for the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad. The firm built the tunnel at Tunnelton and two tunnels and two bridges at Magnolia Cut-off. The original firm is still in existence, Mr. Bennett maintaining his home at Greensburg, Pennsylvania, and Mr. Talbott at Fairmont, West Virginia.

In 1917 Mr. Talbott entered the coal-operating industry by purchasing a farm in Grant District, Monongalia County, and there opening a mine. In May of the following year he sold this mine and then opened another mine on the same tract, this being known as the Agnes Mine and being successfully operated by the firm of Robert Talbott & Company. Later Mr. Talbott purchased a half interest in the North Fairmont Coal Company, but he has disposed of this interest. He is a director of the Home Savings Bank of Fairmont and is one of the vigorous and substantial figures in the industrial activities of this section of West Virginia. He is a communicant of the Catholic Church, and is a democrat in politics. Mrs. Robert Talbott is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

Mr. Talbott married Miss Carrie M. Hood, who was born on the farm which her husband purchased in Grant District, Monongalia County, and which is still owned by him, her father, John S. Hood, having there followed farm enterprise for many years. James Paul, eldest of the children of Mr. and Mrs. Talbott, is now (1922) twenty-seven years old and is a member of the firm Robert Talbott & Company; Robert M., aged twenty-four years, became a member of the Coast Artillery and was on the battle front with the American Expeditionary Forces in France at the time the signing of the armistice brought the World war to a close, he being now associated with Robert Talbott & Company; Agnes G. is a student at the West Virginia University.

Moses H. Davis has been one of the most useful and public spirited citizens of Ritchie County for half a century. His business has been chiefly farming, but his interests have extended from the farm to some of the business affairs of his county, and he has capably served in a number of offices of trust, being one of the members of the County Court at this time.

Mr. Davis represents an old West Virginia family, but was born in Shelby County, Ohio, July 18, 1848, son of James B. and Jane (Hoppins) Davis. His father was born in Harrison County, West Virginia, in 1816, while his mother was a native of Shelby County, Ohio. James B. Davis was reared in Harrison County, and as a young man removed to Shelby County, Ohio, where he married and where he followed the wagon maker's trade at Jackson Center. His wife died there in 1852. Both were members of the Seventh Day Baptist Church. They were the parents of the following children: Abner J., Granville and William Henry Harrison, all of whom are deceased; Eli, who became a soldier in the Union Army and was killed in action on October 19, 1864; Elizabeth J., widow of Lewis F. Randolph, of Rhode Island; Moses H.; and Jesse, who died in infancy.

Moses H. Davis lived at Jackson Center, Ohio, until he was about nine years of age. In 1857 his father returned to West Virginia and settled at New Milton in Doddridge County. His father lived to venerable years, passing away July 2, 1902. M. H. Davis was reared in Doddridge County in the midst of the woods, acquiring only a common school education. At the age of fifteen he began learning the tanner's trade, working seven years as an apprentice, and altogether he followed that as a business for twenty-seven years. In the meantime, in 1870, the year he married, he located in Ritchie County, and continued working at his trade at White Oak for several years. Later he bought a farm, and farming has constituted the bulk of his business activities ever since. He owns 380 acres, representing the labor and investment of his best years. Since 1902 Mr. Davis has made his home in Pennsboro.

March 24, 1870, he married Miss Mary E. Young, who died January 3, 1922. They became the parents of six children, as follows: Nettie, wife of O. F. Wren, and they have three children; Jennie D., wife of Ellis Prunty, and they have eight children; Claude C., who was a teacher and now a farmer in Braxton County, married Ada Berry and has four children; Elosia, widow of Scott Maxwell, and one son was born to them; R. M. Davis, a coal operator of Morgantown, West Virginia, married Fannie Wilson, and they have two children; and Blanche, wife of John Doyle, and they are the parents of one son. The family are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

Mr. Davis is a director of the Farmers and Merchants Bank of Pennsboro and is a stockholder in the Penn Window Glass Company. As a republican he has been prominent in his party and in all matters affecting the progress of his county. He has served as a member of the Board of Education as city councilman and city treasurer of Pennsboro, and has sat as a member of the County Court of Ritchie County since 1918.

VICTOR F. COOPER has been a member of the Ritchie County bar for fifteen years, is one of the able business lawyers of the county, and has taken a growing interest in the affairs of his community at Harrisville.

Mr. Cooper was born on his father's farm in Gilmer County, West Virginia, May 4, 1873, son of Charles S. and Mary J. (Hall) Cooper, natives of the same county, where they were married November 7, 1867. His father was born April 29, 1844, and his mother was born March 10, 1845, and died July 21, 1886. She was a member of the Baptist Church at Auburn. Charles S. Cooper was a resident of Gilmer County at the time of his death. He acquired a common and subscription school education, and after his marriage began clearing away the woods from a tract of land and eventually improved and cultivated a farm of one hundred and seven acres. He was a member of the Roseville Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and a democrat. Of eleven children, nine are living: Miss Cora, a graduate of the State Normal School at Glenville, who also took work in the State University and has been a successful teacher; Malana, a graduate of the Glenville State Normal School and was a teacher until her marriage to Homer Adams; Victor F., who is the third in age; Homer E., a graduate of Columbia University, receiving his Ph. D. degree from that University and is an instructor in the University of Pittsburgh; Everett R., a graduate of the Glenville Normal and of the College of Physicians and Surgeons at Baltimore, now practicing medicine at Troy, West Virginia; Edna, wife of Porter G. Nutter, of Gilmer County; Sidney W., a civil engineer in Missouri; Eric J., living on the home farm with his father; and Grover C., a graduate of the Glenville State Normal, formerly a teacher and now a mail clerk on the B. & O. Railway. Those deceased were Okey J., who was a merchant at Newberne, West Virginia, and Price W., a graduate of West Virginia University, who died in the Philippines, where he was a teacher.

Victor F. Cooper lived on the farm until he was twenty-one, and while there he helped in the clearing and improving as well as the routine work of the fields. He acquired a common school education, taught school, graduated from the Glenville State Normal, and for four years was superintendent of free schools in Gilmer County. He is also a graduate of the Law School of West Virginia University, and since his admission to the bar in 1907 has been in practice at Harrisville. Besides general practice, he is attorney for the People's Bank of Harrisville, is local attorney for the Baltimore & Ohio Railway, and attorney for the Farmers and Merchants Bank of Pennsboro, the Auburn Exchange Bank and the Pennsboro Wholesale Grocery Company.

On September 15, 1908, Mr. Cooper married Miss Phranze Zink. She is a graduate of the Peabody Normal College and of the West Liberty State Normal School of West Virginia and has been a very successful teacher and is now teaching one of the departments in the Harrisville schools. Mr. and Mrs. Cooper have two children: Marcella and Victor Z. Mrs. Cooper is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. He is affiliated with Gilmer County Lodge No. 118, A. F. and A. M., and is a past chancellor of Auburn Lodge No. 47, Knights of Pythias.

TODD W. KEITH, M. D., a physician and surgeon at Harrisville, was born just forty years ago on a farm near that town and friends and acquaintances of his youth and manhood have learned to appreciate his services and character either as a teacher or as a medical man.

He was born November 13, 1882, son of Adam and Elizabeth (Alkire) Keith, the former a native of Noble County, Ohio, and the latter of Ritchie County, West Virginia. Adam Keith grew up on a farm in Noble County, had a public school education, and after his marriage in Ritchie County settled on a farm two miles from Harrisville. They lived there for a number of years and then sold and bought their farm a mile and a half north of Harrisville, where they are still living, active members of that community. They belong to the Methodist Protestant Church and the father is a democrat and Odd Fellow. There are six children in the family: Todd W., Clyde, a traveling salesman living at Point Pleasant, Roka, wife of Walter Curry, living near Harrisville; Wanda, wife of John Pointer; Jemima, wife of Wesley Taylor; and Emma.

Dr. Todd W. Keith spent his early life on the farm, and while there attended the common schools. He is a graduate of the State Normal School at Huntington, and in the meantime he had taught, and he continued teaching some time after completing the normal course. Doctor Keith finished his literary education by two years in West Virginia University, and took his medical course at the University of Louisville, Kentucky, where he graduated M. D. in 1916. He began practice at Selbyville in Upshur County, but since June, 1920, has enjoyed a growing and successful practice at Harrisville. During the World war he volunteered his services in the Medical Corps, was commissioned a first lieutenant, and was stationed for duty at Camp Meade. He is a member of the County, State and American Medical Associations.

Doctor Keith married Della Huldeman, a graduate of the Harrisville High School. Doctor and Mrs. Keith have one daughter, Lucile. They are members of the Methodist Protestant Church. He is a democrat, and is affiliated with the Rock Cave Lodge of Masons.

J. W. COLE, superintendent of the Harrisville public schools, has been an earnest worker in the cause of education in West Virginia for nearly a quarter of a century, and his record is a commendable one both as a teacher and as a school administrator.

He was born at Cameron, West Virginia, November 25, 1875, son of John and Mary J. (Cole) Cole. His parents were both natives of County Down, Ireland, his father born November 12, 1829 and his mother on December 25, 1836. They were reared and married in Ireland, and in 1855 came to America and settled in Washington County, Pennsylvania, near Hickory. Somewhat later but before the Civil war they removed to Marshall County, Virginia, now West Virginia, buying a farm at Sand Hill. Later that was traded for the present homestead located four miles south of Cameron, where Mrs. Mary J. Cole is still living. In the course of years they developed a model farm from the one hundred and one acres in the homestead. Both parents were active members of the Presbyterian Church, and the father voted as a republican. Their ten children all reached mature years: Sarah, who is a successful physician in Kansas and owns and operates a sanitarium; Mary J., wife of W. L. Barr, of Olathe, Kansas; Miss Elizabeth; Miss Hannah, a trained nurse; Miss Anna, of Harrisville; William J., at home; David A., deceased; Miss Alberta, at home; J. W.; and Miss Ida, at home.

J. W. Cole spent his early life on the farm in Marshall County and supplemented his common school education in the West Liberty Normal School, where he graduated, and ater graduated A. B. from West Virginia State University at Morgantown. Mr. Cole taught his first school in 1898. He taught seventeen terms, and prior to assuming his duties as superintendent of schools at Harrisville in 1920 he had been superintendent of schools in Fayette County and principal of the high school four years in his home town of Cameron, and also one year at Flemington, West Virginia.

Mr. Cole on April 9, 1911, married Elsie B. Lowden, who is also a successful educator. She took her normal work in the Slippery Rock Normal School of Pennsylvania. She taught before her marriage, and she is now teaching one of the grades in the Harrisville schools. Mr. and Mrs. Cole have three children: Mary E., born January 30, 1912; Walter J., born September 8, 1913; and John W., born January 1, 1916. Mr. and Mrs. Cole have their membership in the first Presbyterian Church at Cameron, and he is affiliated with the Cameron Lodge No. 17, A. F. and A. M., and Cameron Lodge No. 36, Independent Order of Odd Fellows. His political support is given to the republican party.

SAMUEL BOARDMAN BROWN. Distinguished as author, educator and scientist, Samuel Boardman Brown, A. M., who is a member of the faculty of the University of West Virginia and known to scientists the country over, for twenty-nine years has filled the chair of geology in this great institution of learning. To the scientific knowledge and researches of Professor Brown the university owes its priceless collection of fossils and minerals, that under his astute arrangement and classification reveal without orders the whole geological history of West Virginia.

Samuel Boardman Brown was born March 5, 1860, in Preston County, West Virginia, with which section of country his people have been identified for generations. His parents were Granville and Elizabeth (Watson) Brown.

This branch of the Brown family was founded in America by one William Brown. In 1726 William Brown received from Lord Fairfax a grant of 312 acres of land near Dumfries, Prince William County, Virginia, which land, situated six miles from Manassas, remained in the possession of his descendants until 1825, almost 100 years. His eldest son, William Brown (2), in 1756 married Elizabeth Buckner, and to that union were born four children, one of whom bore the name of Thomas.

Thomas Brown, son of William and Elizabeth (Buckner) Brown, was born in Prince William County, Virginia, September 7, 1760. He served as a soldier in the Revolutionary war, and in recognition of his services drew a pension after 1832 during the rest of his life. In 1785 he married Anna Ash, and in 1805 he purchased a large tract of land, comprising 578 acres, situated near Kingwood in Preston County, Virginia. He was survived by children.

Samuel Byrne Brown, son of Thomas and Anna (Ash) Brown, was born in Prince William County, Virginia, in 1793. He served as a soldier in the War of 1812. In 1820 he married Permella Zinn, and they reared a family of children, one son bearing the name of Granville. Samuel B. Brown spent the rest of his life in Preston and Monongalia counties, mainly following agricultural pursuits.

Granville Brown, son of Samuel Byrne and Permella (Zinn) Brown, was born near what is now Gladestown, Preston County, January 6, 1832, had educational privileges and taught school. When the war between the states came he volunteered for service in the Union Army, and was commissioned first lieutenant of a company in the Fourth West Virginia Infantry, later transferred to the fourth West Virginia Cavalry, and was mustered out in 1865 from the Seventeenth West Virginia Infantry. He had two brothers, William and Lyeurgus, who also served with the West Virginia troops, and a cousin, Bailey Brown, as the first Virginia soldier to give up his life in defense of the Union, being killed in action at Fetterman, near Craiton, May 22, 1861, on the day preceding the settlement of the question of the secession of West Virginia. Granville Brown married Elizabeth Watson.

Samuel Boardman Brown spent his early years on his father's farm in Preston County, and attended the neighborhood schools, later had other educational advantages in preparation for college and then entered the West Virginia University, from which he was graduated with the degree of A. B. in 1883. In the same year he took courses in natural history at Washington, D. C., and in Harvard College, coming under the instruction of such competent men as Professors Shaler and Davis. For two years afterward Professor Brown conducted a private school at Martinsburg, West Virginia, in which he taught mathematics and languages, and he recalls with some pride the fact that one of his pupils was Hon. Newton Baker, who afterward became a man of national importance as Secretary of War.

In 1885 Mr. Brown was elected principal of the Glenville (West Virginia) Normal School, where he continued until 1890 when he resigned in order to accept a still more congenial position as assistant professor of geology in the University of West Virginia, in 1892 taking his present chair as a member of the faculty. Before that time and ever since he had given much time to geological research, making geology his specialty among the sciences, with all of which he is more or less familiar, and he has a large amount of literary output on this subject to his credit. He has written numerous papers and scientific pamphlets in relation to the geology of West Virginia, and wrote that portion pertaining to the minerals and productions of the book entitled "West Virginia's Agricultural Resources and Possibilities," published under the authority of the West Virginia State Board of Agriculture for distribution at the Jamestown Centennial. Professor Brown is the author also of a text book on geography that is in use throughout the state. He is a valued member of the American Association for the Advancement of Science, and probably would find himself with little leisure remaining if he responded to every urgent request for scientific papers or addresses.

On June 17, 1890, Professor Brown married Miss Luella Butcher, who is a member of an old Virginia family of note and military prominence. She is a daughter of James Evan Butcher, and a granddaughter of John Anderson Butcher, who served in defense of Norfolk, Virginia, in the War of 1812. He was a member of Captain Davidson's company, to which Samuel Byrne Brown also belonged. The family belongs to the Episcopal Church. Professor Brown owns valuable city property at Morgantown and is a director in the Second National Bank.

OLIVER A. FLESHER is one of the prominent young business men of Harrisville, Ritchie County, a druggist, a graduate pharmacist, and member of an old family of West Virginia.

He was born on a farm near Hebron in Pleasants County September 23, 1883, son of William H. and Mary J. (Williamson) Flesher, the former a native of Lewis County and the latter of Pleasants County. William H. Flesher when a boy moved to Tyler County, acquired a common school education there, and after his marriage settled on a farm in Pleasants County. When he sold the farm he moved to Pennsboro, was in the livery business and remained there until his death. He and his wife were active members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and he was affiliated with the Masonic Order and was a republican. Of the twelve children of the family six are living: Eli, of Pennsboro; Louisa, wife of N. A. Steele, of Clarksburg; John W., of Parkersburg; G. S., of Cairo; Oliver A.; and Alice, wife of Ferdinand Wery, of Clarksburg.

Oliver A. Flesher spent the first eight years of his life on the farm, and he acquired his early education in the schools of Pennsboro and Cairo. He is a graduate pharmacist from the University of Pittsburgh, and he followed his profession as a prescription clerk for various establishments until 1909. In that year he bought his present drug business at Harrisville, and as a pharmacist he is one of the most skillful representatives of his profession in Ritchie County. He is a good business man and owns a large store building and well equipped establishment.

February 7, 1917, Mr. Flesher married Orpha Adams, of Harrisville. They are members of the Baptist Church, and he is one of the trustees. Mr. Flesher is a past master of Harrisville Lodge No. 98, A. F. and A. M., and is a member of Odell S. Long Chapter No. 25, R. A. M. In politics he is a republican.

CALVIN F. BROWN, who is giving a very efficient administration in the office of postmaster of the City of Harrisville, judicial center of Ritchie County, was born on his father's farm on Hughes River, one and one-half miles east of Harrisville, and the date of his nativity was June 5, 1873. He is a son of John M. and Eliza (Collins) Brown, the former of whom was born in Lewis County, this state, in 1840, and the latter of whom was born in Indiana. The father was reared on a farm in his native county, where his early education was obtained in subscription schools, and he was a gallant young soldier of the Union in the Civil war, in which he served three years, as a member of Company M, Sixth West Virginia Volunteer Infantry. He received an injury which partially disabled him the remainder of his life. After the close of the war John M. Brown married and settled on a farm, but he also continued to follow his trade, that of miller, during the remainder of his long, useful and worthy life. He was a staunch republican, served two terms as assessor of Ritchie County, was affiliated with the Grand Army of the Republic and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and both he and his wife were consistent members of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Of the three children Iona, now deceased, became the wife of John M. Wagoner; May is the widow of John L. Harris; and Calvin F., of this sketch, is the only son.

Reared on the home farm and afforded the advantages of the public schools, Calvin F. Brown early learned the miller's trade under the direction of his father. In addition to following this trade he has been employed in the oil fields of West Virginia, first as a tool-dresser and later as a driller of wells. He served four years as deputy sheriff of his native county, under Sheriff John Hulderman, whose daughter Laura he wedded on the 16th of April, 1904. His service as postmaster of Harrisville has been marked by a fine stewardship and a desire to give to the local public the best possible service. Mr. Brown is a republican of inflexible loyalty, a past master of Harrisville Lodge No. 98, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, besides being affiliated with Odell S. Long Chapter No. 59, Royal Arch Masons, and with the local camp of the Woodman of the World. His wife is a member of the Methodist Protestant Church. Mr. Brown is the owner of a valuable tract of sixty-two and one-half acres of land, lying partly in the corporation limits of Harrisville. Mr. and Mrs. Brown have three children: John H., Mary E. and Lester C.

JOSEPH N. SHARPNACK, the efficient and popular county clerk of Ritchie County, was born in Wirt County, this state, on the 12th of August, 1868, and is a son of William H. and Catherine C. (Smith) Sharpnack, the former born in Wetzel County, this state, (then Virginia), April 15, 1842, and the latter in Venango County, Pennsylvania, in 1844. She was a child when her father, Sinclair Smith, came with his family to Wirt County, West Virginia, where she was reared and educated and where her marriage was solemnized. William H. Sharpnack represented West Virginia as a valiant young soldier of the Union in the Civil war, he having continued with his regiment until the close of the war and having then returned to West Virginia, where he gave many years of effective service as a teacher in the public schools, his pedagogic activities having continued until his death in 1912, and his wife having previously passed away in 1906. Both were earnest members of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Mr. Sharpnack was a stalwart republican, and he served a number of years as postmaster at Freeport, Wirt County. He was actively affiliated with the Grand Army of the Republic. Of the two children of the family Joseph N., of this review, is the elder, and Minnie C. is the wife of R. C. Marshall, of Cairo, Ritchie County.

Joseph N. Sharpnack received the advantages of the public schools, and thereafter he worked in a store in his native county. In 1897 he took a position as clerk in a general store at Cairo, Ritchie County, and later he served as cashier of the Bank of Cairo. In 1910 he removed to Harrisville, the county seat, and initiated his service as deputy county clerk, of which position he continued the incumbent until 1914, when he was elected county clerk, an office in which he has since continued his careful and effective service, he having been re-elected in November, 1920. He has purchased an attractive residence property since removing to Harrisville, and the same constitutes the family home. He is a republican in politics, is affiliated with the Blue Lodge and Chapter of the Masonic fraternity at Pennsboro, this county, and his wife is an active member of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

In 1904 Mr. Sharpnack wedded Miss Mabel C. Mitchell of New Matamoras, Ohio, a daughter of Joseph and Mary L. (Schwartz) Mitchell. Her father was an ex-soldier of the Ohio regiment during the Civil war, and was prominent in the politics of Washington County. He died in 1907. The mother of Mrs. Sharpnack still survives, her residence being in New Matamoras. Mrs. Sharpnack is a popular figure in the representative social activities of Harrisville.

SYLVESTER O. PRUNTY has made in his profession a record that marks him as one of the representative members of the bar of Ritchie County, where he is established in active general practice at Harrisville, the county seat. He was born on a farm in this county, July 17, 1878, and is a son of Marshall N. and Flora (Lawson) Prunty, both likewise natives of the county, with whose civic and material development and progress the respective family names have been long and prominently identified. The parents received the advantage of the common schools, and the mother attended also the State Normal School at Fairmont. Marshall N. Prunty was for many years engaged in successful farm enterprise near Oxford, this county, and he and his wife now reside in the village of Pullman, likewise in Ritchie County. He is a democrat, and he and his wife hold membership in the Methodist Episcopal Church. Of the eight children all but one are living: F. O. is a contractor and also engaged in the oil and general production business at Blackville, Oklahoma; Anna, the wife of John Long, a locomotive engineer, and they reside at Fairmont, West Virginia; Jessie is the wife of H. B. Lowther, a civil engineer, and they reside at Salem, this state; May is the wife of Everett Nay, of Pullman, Ritchie County; Raymond is a farmer in this county; Marshall E. is a mining engineer at Fairmont; and the subject of this sketch is the oldest of the number.

Sylvester O. Prunty passed his childhood and earlier youth on the home farm and in the meanwhile profited fully by the advantages of the public schools of his native county. Later he graduated from the Regent School, White Plains, New York, and in preparation for his chosen profession he completed a course in the law department of the Ohio Northern University, in which he was graduated with the degree of Bachelor of Laws. After his admission to the bar he was engaged in practice in the village of Cairo, Ritchie County, four years, and he then, in 1911, transferred his residence and professional headquarters to Harrisville, the county seat, where he has since built up a large and representative law business. He served two terms as mayor of Cairo, and for three terms was mayor of Harrisville, his administration in this city having been signally progressive and effective. He is a leader in the local councils and campaigns activities of the republican party in Ritchie County, and is now a member of the Board of Education of Harrisville. He is affiliated with the Masonic fraternity and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. Mr. Prunty is a director of the People's Bank at Harrisville, is a stockholder in the First National Bank of this city, and he is a stockholder also in each of the following named corporations: Kansas & Gulf Oil Company, Central Mexican Oil Company, Imperial Ice Company, Parkersburg, the National Woolen Mills in that city and other corporations. He has real estate holdings not only at Harrisville but also in the City of Washington, D. C.

HARRY SANDERS, senior member of the representative real estate and insurance firm of Sanders & Miller, in the City of Morgantown, Monongalia County, was born at Madsville, this county, and is a representative of old and honored families of the county, the Sanders, Millers and Houstons. John Sanders was the founder of the family in Monongalia County, where he purchased land and established a homestead at Madsville, Cass District, on the Monongahela River, about five miles below Morgantown. He here made settlement about the opening of the nineteenth century. He was born in the State of Delaware, and represented that commonwealth as a patriot soldier in the war of the Revolution. He enlisted in Captain McClement's company, Second Delaware Regiment, commanded by Col. Henry McNeil, and saw much of active field service in the great conflict for national independence. John Sanders became one of the prominent and influential citizens of what is now Monongalia County, West Virginia, developed a fine farm property and was prominent in community affairs of a public order, having served as tax collector for a number of years. In 1823 he visited Richmond, the capital of the then great main of Virginia, on official business, and then returned to Delaware to attend to some personal business, his death having there occurred in that year, while he was at the home of kinsfolk of his wife. In 1800 he married Esther Griffin, daughter of Samuel and Mary Griffin, she having been born in Kent County, Delaware, February 2, 1781, and having died at the old Sanders homestead at Madsville January 2, 1815. Her father, Samuel (III) was of the third generation in direct descent from Samuel (I), who came to America, probably in the latter part of the seventeenth century, and settled in Delaware, where his death occurred in 1759.

John Sanders (II), son of John and Esther (Griffin) Sanders, was born on the old homestead farm at Madsville, in 1805, and there his death occurred in 1872. His first wife, Elizabeth, was a daughter of Purnell and Mary (Tumbleston) Houston. Purnell Houston was born in Somerset County, Maryland, February 1, 1755, and was a youthful soldier in the war of the Revolution. In 1790 he came to what is now Monongalia County, West Virginia, and settled on a pioneer farm near Pentress, where his death occurred March 3, 1835, his wife having passed away January 1, 1830. Elizabeth (Houston) Sanders was born February 23, 1802, and remained in the old homestead at Madsville until her death. John Sanders (II) later married Sarah Hunt, and she likewise died at Madsville.

James Sanders, son of John and Elizabeth (Houston) Sanders, was born on the ancestral homestead at Madsville, December 2, 1832, and there his death occurred February 19, 1917. In his youth he learned the tanner's trade, and for more than twenty-five years he owned and operated a tannery at Madsville, besides which he was for a number of years engaged also in the timber business. He served as president of the Board of Education of Cass District, was a staunch democrat and he and his wife were earnest members of the Methodist Episcopal Church. He married Sarah Jane Miller, who was born July 26, 1839, and whose death occurred November 29, 1916. She was a daughter of Amherst and Sarah (Lock) Miller. Amherst Miller was born in 1805, a son of James and Sarah (Messenger) Miller and a descendant of William Miller, who came from England and settled at Northampton, Massachusetts, where he passed the remainder of his life. The Sanders, Millers, Locks and Houstons were all represented by patriot soldiers of the Continental Line in the war of the Revolution.

Harry Sanders, son of James and Sarah Jane (Miller) Sanders, was born at Madsville April 16, 1876. He received the advantages of the public schools of his native county and early began to assist in the work of his father's farm and tannery. He thus continued until he was nineteen years of age, and thereafter he was for two and one-half years a student in the University of West Virginia. He left this institution in 1900 and engaged in the real estate and insurance business at Morgantown, where later he formed a partnership with Charles E. Miller, the firm of Sanders & Miller having since maintained recognized leadership in the real estate and insurance business in the city and county. The members of this progressive firm organized the Morgantown Security and Development Company, and of the same Mr. Sanders is the president.

Mr. Sanders is an active member of the Morgantown Chamber of Commerce, and is a trustee of Athens Lodge No. 36, Knights of Pythias, in which he has passed the various official chairs. He is a zealous member of the First Methodist Episcopal Church at Morgantown, and is a member of its official board.

December 25, 1901, recorded the marriage of Mr. Sanders and Miss Mildred Lenora Hewitt, daughter of Abram S. and Mary (Crage) Hewitt, of Madsville, and of the three children of this union the names and respective birth-dates are here entered: Sarah Frances, September 16, 1902; John Vernon, June 22, 1904; and William Albert, February 10, 1912.

THOMAS GOOCH TICKLE, M. D., is one of the able and representative physicians and surgeons of the younger generation in McDowell County, with residence and professional headquarters at Lick Branch, where he is official physician and surgeon for the Pocahontas Fuel Company. Further distinction is his by reason of the loyal service which he gave in the great World war.

Doctor Tickle was born at Bluefield, Mercer County, West Virginia, January 29, 1891, and is a son of Stephen and Mary (Gooch) Tickle, he having been two years old at the time of his father's death. Stephen Tickle was a native of West Virginia, as is also his widow, and he became one of the leading merchants and influential citizens of Bluefield, in which city he continued to reside until his death. He was affiliated with the Masonic fraternity and was a zealous member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, as is his widow. Doctor Tickle is of Scotch and English lineage and is a representative of families founded in Virginia in the Colonial period of our national history.

In 1910 Doctor Tickle graduated in the high school in his native city, and thereafter he completed a two years' academic course in the University of West Virginia. He then entered the College of Physicians and Surgeons at Baltimore, Maryland, and in this institution he was graduated in 1916, with the degree of Doctor of Medicine. For six months thereafter he served as an interne in St. Luke's Hospital at Bluefield, West Virginia, and he then returned to Baltimore, where for six months he held the position of assistant superintendent of the Gundry Sanitarium. The ensuing eighteen months found him engaged in general practice at Keystone, West Virginia, where he served also as physician and surgeon for the Keystone Coal & Coke Company. When the nation became involved in the World war Doctor Tickle subordinated all personal interests to the call of patriotism and on the 18th of August, 1917, enlisted and was sent to Fort Oglethorpe, Georgia, where he remained six weeks and where he gained commission as first lieutenant in the medical corps. Thereafter he passed about six months at Camp Wadsworth, South Carolina, and in June, 1918, he arrived with his command at Brest, France. He went to the front as a member of the First Army Corps of the American Expeditionary Forces, and as surgeon with the Fifty-third Pioneer Infantry took part in the historic St. Mihiel and Argonne campaigns, his command having been constantly on the move and having endured the maximum tension of the great conflict. After the signing of the armistice Doctor Tickle was transferred to the Goundie Court Replacement depot, and about three weeks later became a surgeon at the camp at Tours, where, on the 22d of February, 1919, he received his commission as captain. About four months later he was sent to Marseilles, and August 18th of that year he arrived in the port of New York City. He received his honorable discharge at Camp Lee, September 4, 1919. After his return to Bluefield, West Virginia, he went to Bramwell, this state, where he remained five months, as assistant to Doctor Tanner, physician for the Pocahontas Fuel Company, Booth-Bowen Coal & Coke Company and the Buckeye Coal & Coke Company. From Bramwell Doctor Tickle removed to Lick Branch, where he has since been physician and surgeon for the Pocahontas Fuel Company, with a well equipped office and operating room, besides a dispensary. His hospital patients are sent to State Hospital No. 1 at Welch, St. Luke's Hospital or the sanitarium at Bluefield, in consonance with their wishes.

Doctor Tickle is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, has become a member of the Mercer County Medical Society and the West Virginia State Medical Society, is affiliated with the Phi Sigma Kappa and the Kappa Psi college fraternities, and is an appreciative member of the American Legion.

RICHARD S. WHITEHEAD is superintendent for the Pocahontas Fuel Company in mining operations in McDowell County at Lick Branch station on the Norfolk & Western Railroad, the postoffice being Switchback.

Mr. Whitehead was born in Nelson County, Virginia, April 29, 1877, and is a son of Kincaid and Frances Ann (Lovin) Whitehead, both likewise natives of Nelson County. Dr. Kinkaid Whitehead was little more than a boy when he entered the Confederate service in the Civil war, as a member of a Virginia regiment. He was wounded in the right arm, and as a result was captured and held a prisoner at Point Lookout until the close of the war, he having been eighteen years of age when he entered the army. After the war he studied dentistry, and he long held prestige and honor as one of the leading dentists in Nelson County, Virginia.

Richard S. Whitehead attended the public schools of his native county until he was fourteen years old, when he began work for himself, he having depended upon his own resources since that early age. He came to Switchback, West Virginia, and entered the service of the Pocahontas Fuel Company. He was door boy or trapper at the mine, was oiler, track man, driver, miner, mine foreman, and finally, by loyal and efficient service, won promotion to his present responsible position with this industrial corporation. After remaining five years in the employ of the Pocahontas Fuel Company Mr. Whitehead was for eight years in the employ of the Pulaski Iron Company. He then returned to Switchback and resumed his connection with the Pocahontas Fuel Company. He has worked his way from the bottom, has gained thorough knowledge of all details of coal mining and is an efficient and valued executive, besides having the confidence and good will of the employes working under his supervision. He is a democrat, and he and his wife hold membership in the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

At Graham, Virginia, in 1897, Mr. Whitehead wedded Miss Hattie Wimmer, who was born and reared in Tazewell County, that state, a daughter of Isaac and Martha Wimmer. Mr. and Mrs. Whitehead have a fine family of eight children, namely: Raymond Clyde, Oliver Francis, Rosa C., Madeline, Jack, Ruth, Ethel and Thomas. Raymond, Oliver and Rosa are married, the home of Raymond being at Bluefield and his vocation being that of a miner.

JAIKUS COLLINS is a resident and business man of Bramwell, Mercer County. His interests have been centered in this section for nearly thirty years. He came here with a widely diversified experience in the coal and iron industry, and for many years he has been one of the prominent coal operators and is treasurer and active director of the Pocahontas Operators Association, chosen on account of his efficiency in handling all matters affecting the operators in this field.

Mr. Collins was born in Clayton, Alabama, December 14, 1859, son of Hartwell and Louisa (Williams) Collins, natives of Alabama and of English ancestry. The maternal grandfather was Buckner Williams. Hartwell Collins always regarded Alabama as his home state, but before the Civil war he was in the wholesale hardware business in New York City. When Alabama seceded he sold out and returned and joined the Confederate army, and was all through the war as quartermaster of the Twenty-ninth Alabama Regiment. He then returned to New York and resumed business, where he continued until the "Black Friday" of 1873 inaugurated the country-wide panic. He then returned to Alabama. He was a prominent Mason.

Jaius Collins has his early education interwoven with on account of the war and the financial panic noted above. He attended subscription and private schools at Clayton and Midway, Alabama, and began contributing to his own maintenance at the age of twelve. Beginning at fifteen, he served three years as clerk in the office of the registrar in chancery. At eighteen he became bookkeeper for S. Waxelbaum and Brother at Macon, Georgia, being with that firm four years. Shortly after he reached his majority Mr. Collins became auditor for the Tennessee Coal & Iron Company at Ensley, Alabama, and his work has been in that same general line now for forty years. After four years with the Tennessee company he was for five years auditor for the Ensley Coal, Iron & Railway Company at Sheffield, Alabama. In 1893 he came to the West Virginia coal fields, serving as auditor three years of the Collins Colliery Company of Glen Jean, and then removed his headquarters to Bramwell as general manager for the Greenbrier Coal & Coke Company of McDowell and the Louisville Coal & Coke Company of Goodwill. He is still an active official in these corporations, being treasurer, and is financially interested in other corporations. He was one of the organizers of the Pocahontas Operators Association, with headquarters at Bluefield, and has been the active representative of these operators in handling several strikes in the Pocahontas fields.

Mr. Collins is a democrat, and at one time was candidate for the State Senate on that ticket. He is treasurer, vestryman and junior warden of the Episcopal Church at Bramwell, is a life member of Bluefield Lodge No. 269, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, and a member of the Bluefield Country Club.

In 1902, at Bramwell, he married Miss Blanch Dudley, daughter of Andrew J. Dudley. They have two children, Jaius, Jr., a student in Washington and Lee University at Lexington, Virginia; and Virginia C., attending the Knott School at Cooperstown, New York.

WALTER R. THURMOND is a son of Joseph S. Thurmond of Alderson, and for the past ten years they have been active in the development and operation of some of the important coal properties of Logan County. The principal operations are on Rum Creek and are conducted by the Argyle Coal Company and the Thurmond Coal Company, of which companies Walter R. Thurmond is general manager and treasurer.

The grandfather of Walter R. Thurmond was Capt. W. D. Thurmond, who came from Amherst County, Virginia, to Fayette County, West Virginia, in 1844, and opened up a home and farm in the midst of the woods. Captain Thurmond was the actual discoverer of coal in the New River field. He uncovered a vein of coal near the surface while plowing in his garden. Subsequently he acquired quite a large acreage of coal land in that vicinity, which is now operated under lease by the Berwind interests. This land is in the heart of the famous New River coal field. Captain Thurmond held a captain's commission in the Confederate army under General Echols, and was on scouting duty in Virginia and West Virginia. Capt. W. D. Thurmond was born in 1820 and died at the age of ninety in 1910.

Joseph Samuel Thurmond, long prominent in the politics and the coal industry of West Virginia, was born in Fayette County, May 9, 1855. He grew up on the home farm, attended the common schools and also Shelton College at Saint Albans when that school was conducted by Dr. P. E. Reynolds, who afterwards became president of West Virginia University. Joseph S. Thurmond taught for several years in the public schools of Fayette County, later became a civil engineer and farmer and still later entered actively the coal mining industry. For years he carried heavy responsibilities in the development of the New River field and subsequently in Logan County, being president of the Thurmond Coal Company and the Argyle Coal Company mentioned above. Joseph S. Thurmond is one of the democratic leaders of the state, served as the first mayor of the Town of Thurmond, was elected to the House of Delegates from Greenbrier County in 1914, was re-elected in 1916, was chosen speaker of the House at the following session, and was again elected in 1918.

Joseph S. Thurmond married Betty Rippetoe, daughter of Rev. A. N. Rippetoe of Nicholas County, West Virginia. She died in 1900, and of her four sons and two daughters Walter R. is the oldest.

Walter R. Thurmond was born at the old Thurmond homestead in Fayette County, April 30, 1881. He acquired his early education in the local schools, and in 1898 entered the preparatory department of the University of West Virginia, graduating Bachelor of Science in 1905. Soon after leaving university Mr. Thurmond became an engineer in the New River coal field, and in 1912 he and his father began the operations in Logan County, and since that date he has had active charge of the Thurmond Coal Company and the Argyle Coal Company. Mr. Thurmond was president of the Logan Coal Operators Association in 1921, and was recently re-elected to that post. He is chairman of the Logan County Democratic Committee and a member of the Democratic Executive Committee of the state.

E. Reece Baker

In 1907 he married Innis Dils, daughter of I. A. Dils, of Fayette County. They have two children: Sarah Elizabeth, now in the first year of high school, and Fred Wait, in the sixth grade of the grammar school. Mr. and Mrs. Thurmond are members of the First Baptist Church of Logan and he is clerk of the church.

E. REECE BAKER is one of the representative business men and progressive citizens of Morgantown, Monongalia County, where he is a leading general contractor and is also president of the General Woodworking Company. He is a native son of West Virginia and is a representative of the third generation of the family in Monongalia County. His father, James Clark Baker, was born in the Pierpont settlement in Union District, this county, in 1850, and was there reared to the sturdy discipline of the farm. James C. Baker became a prosperous farmer in Grant District, this county, where he remained until 1899, when he removed with his family to Morgantown, the county seat, where he has since continued in successful business as a contractor and builder. His wife, whose maiden name was Cornelia Bell Potter, was born at Laurel Point, Grant District, this county, in 1852, and they have three children: Rex, a carpenter by vocation and a resident of Morgantown; E. Reece, the immediate subject of this sketch; and Rap P., in the employ of the Bell Telephone Company at Morgantown.

E. Reece Baker was born on the home farm at Laurel Point, Grant District, this county, May 22, 1884, and his initial experience of practical order was in connection with the activities of the farm. He profited by the advantages offered in the public schools of the locality, and in 1903 he left the farm and initiated an apprenticeship to the carpenter's trade of one year, in the employ of Elridge Tucker, a contractor at Morgantown. He then went to work for R. A. McCreery as foreman, and remained with him about five years. In his early period of apprenticeship, when he became associated with Mr. Tucker, Mr. Baker received five dollars a week for his services. In 1912 he engaged independently in contracting and building, and his ability and effective service soon gained to him secure standing as one of the leading contractors in this line at Morgantown. Here he has erected many of the finest residences in the city, among them the modern houses of George C. Baker, A. R. Whitehill, David Reger, Dell Roy Richards and others. He erected also the Cox & Baker Block on High Street, the public-school building at Maidsville, this county, and many other structures attest his skill and effective working policies in his prosperous business.

Mr. Baker is affiliated with Morgantown Union Lodge No. 4, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, and in the Scottish Rite of Masonry he has received the thirty-second degree, beside holding membership in the Mystic Shrine and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. He is a vital and progressive member of the local Kiwanis Club, and he and his wife hold membership in the First Methodist Episcopal Church.

Mr. Baker wedded Miss Nona Dell Mercer, who was born at Fairmont, this state, a daughter of William O. Mercer, and the three children of this union are: Nellie Myrle, James William and Raymond Guy.

VALENTINE HATFIELD. A leading representative of the coal mining industry in Mingo County is found in the person of Valentine Hatfield, a man of extended and varied experience who is looking after the land and timber holdings of the United Thacker Coal Company, and likewise known as a prominent and influential citizen of Burch, also known as Rockhouse. Mr. Hatfield was born in what is now Mingo County, but then Logan County, West Virginia, in April, 1868, a son of Ellison and Sarah Ann (Staten) Hatfield, and a member of an old and honored family of Virginia.

Ellison Hatfield, a native of Virginia, as was his wife, fought valiantly as a private in an infantry regiment of Virginians during the war between the North and South, his commanding general being Robert E. Lee. With the fall of the Confederacy and the subsequent cessation of hostilities he returned to his home, bearing the marks of six wounds on his body and also with a record for faithful, brave and loyal service, which included his capture by the enemy at the battle of Gettysburg. Leaving his native state after his marriage, he repaired to Logan County, West Virginia, and there continued to be engaged in agricultural pursuits during the remainder of his life. He was every active in the work of the Baptist Church and was a man universally respected and esteemed in his community.

Valentine Hatfield attended the common schools of Mingo County, but his education was somewhat curtailed, as he was still a youth when he assumed life's responsibilities on his own account, being but eighteen years of age at the time of his marriage. Adopting the calling of his father, that of an agriculturist, he applied himself assiduously to this line of activity and became the owner of a goodly property. Some years ago he became identified with the United Thacker Coal Company, subsequently acted as their purchasing agent in the acquirement of many of the properties of this concern, and for the past fifteen years has been superintending the interests of this concern in this region in regard to the land and timber requirements of the company. This company has extensive holdings in the Pigeon Creek community, where it is known as an important enterprise, giving employment to large numbers of men.

In November, 1886, in Mingo County, Mr. Hatfield was united in marriage with Miss America Hatfield, who, although of the same name and living but eight miles up Pigeon Creek, belonged to another family, a daughter of Madison and Nancy (Ferrell) Hatfield. Mr. Hatfield was an agriculturist and a Confederate veteran of a Virginia regiment. Eight children were born to this union: Madison, who died May 4, 1906; Joe, an attorney of Williamson, who married Retta Damron; James Elva, a physician, who married Helda Fola; Matilda, who married Lon Mahon, a general merchant of Rockhouse; E. Couse, who married Pearl Cary; Verdie, who married Thomas Varney, a carpenter of Rugland, West Virginia; Sarah, who married G. U. Curry, a carpenter of Burch; and Edna, who married Charles Osborn, a civil engineer with the United Thacker Coal Company. Mr. Hatfield, while not being a seeker after public honors, has been willing to discharge his responsibilities as a citizen, and has served as a justice of the peace and as a member of the Mingo County Court. He has an excellent record as a official, a business man and a citizen, and is held in high esteem by his fellow citizens.

LEE OTIS HILL, M. D., is established in the general practice of his profession at Camden on Gauley, Webster County, and the scope and representative character of his practice clearly denotes the high estimate placed upon him in the community.

Doctor Hill was born in Nicholas County, this state, February 23, 1881, and is a son of John and Rebecca (Rader) Hill, both likewise natives of that county, where they were reared and educated and where their marriage was solemnized. John Hill continued as one of the substantial citizens and representative farmers of Nicholas County until his death, in 1921, and his widow still remains on the old homestead farm. Mr. Hill was a man of sterling character and marked individuality, was a democrat in politics and was an active member of the Baptist Church, as is also his widow. Doctor Hill is one of the four children who survive the honored father; Viola is the wife of George W. Herold, of Cowen, Webster County; Agnes is the wife of Dr. D. P. Kessler, of Weston, Lewis County; and Mintie is the wife of W. E. Gardner, of Cowen.

As a boy Doctor Hill began to assist in the various activities of the home farm, and in the meanwhile he made good use of the advantages offered in the local schools. He later attended normal school at Summersville and Marshall College at Huntington, West Virginia. After completing his literary studies he was soon able to follow along the line of his ambition, as shown in his entering the College of Physicians and Surgeons in the City of Baltimore, Maryland, in which institution he was graduated as a member of the class of 1905 and with the degree of Doctor of Medicine. The village of Camden on Gauley has continuously been the stage of his successful professional activities, and here he has built up a substantial and representative practice. He is a member of the Webster County Medical Society, the West Virginia State Medical Society and the American Medical Association. The democratic party receives his loyal allegiance, and in the Masonic fraternity he is affiliated with Camden Lodge No. 107, A. F. and A. M.; Sutton Chapter No. 29, R. A. M.; and Sutton Commandery No. 16, Knights Templar.

In 1903 was solemnized the marriage of Doctor Hill and Miss Jennie S. McCue, who attended Marshall College and had been a successful and popular teacher prior to her marriage. Doctor and Mrs. Hill have two children: George and Robert, the elder son being, in 1922, a student in the high school.

JOHN R. GARRETT. After a career of successful achievement as a representative of farm enterprise in Gilmer County Mr. Garrett is now living retired in the Village of San Fork, this county. His high place in popular esteem is shown by the fact that he has served as sheriff of the county and also as a member of the County Court.

Mr. Garrett was born in Virginia, in October, 1845, and was about four years of age when his parents came to what is now Gilmer County, West Virginia, where they settled on a farm in 1849. The father here passed the remainder of his life, and the mother was a resident of Upshur County at the time of her death. He whose name initiates this review is a son of Isaac and Sarah (Burgess) Garrett, and the respective families were founded in Virginia many generations ago. Stephen Garrett, a member of the family of which John R. is a representative, was a gallant soldier of the patriot forces in the War of the Revolution, and Isaac Garrett was a soldier in the War of 1812. Isaac Garrett and his wife were earnest members of the Baptist Church, and in politics he was a staunch democrat. Of their six children the subject of this sketch is the youngest, and he is now the only one surviving.

John R. Garrett was reared on the pioneer farm in Gilmer County and gained his early education in the old-time subscription schools. He continued a member of the family circle at the parental home until the time of his marriage, in the autumn of 1865, and thereafter he was actively engaged in lumbering operations in this section of the state for the long period of twenty-two years, besides which he has been concerned also with farm industry, in connection with which he gained substantial success. In 1898 Mr. Garrett was appointed deputy sheriff of Gilmer County, under Sheriff Jacob Moore, and after serving in this capacity six years there came a consistent recognition of his efficiency, in that in 1904 he was elected sheriff. He gave a vigorous administration and retired from office at the close of the year 1908. In 1912 he was again elected sheriff, and his second term was completed in 1917, since which year he has lived virtually retired. Prior to his first election to the office of sheriff he had served six years as a member of the County Court and six years as a member of the Board of Education at Glenville. Mr. Garrett is a stockholder in the Kanawha Union Bank at Glenville, and served as a director of the same for two years. He is still the owner of valuable farm property and other real estate in Gilmer County. His political allegiance is given to the democratic party and he is an active member of the Baptist Church. The supreme bereavement in his life came when his loved and devoted companion of years was summoned to eternal rest on the 13th of March, 1920.

On the 21st of September, 1865, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Garrett and Miss Drusilla Stout, who was born and reared at Stout's Mills, Gilmer County, and of the seven children of this union five survive the devoted mother: Horace is a farmer and merchant of Gilmer County; John and Homer are successful farmers of this county, as is also Grover, who likewise conducts a general store in the Village of Gilmer, and Lovie is the wife of W. D. Keith, of San Fork, this county.

JOSIAH MELVIN RIPPLE, JR., who is one of the progressive merchants in the City of Martinsburg, Berkeley County, was born at Waynesboro, Pennsylvania, October 11, 1883, and is a son of Josiah Melvin Ripple, Sr., and Virginia (Smeltz) Ripple. The father was born at Marlowe, Berkeley County, Virginia (now West Virginia), and was a son of William Ripple, who is supposed to have been born in the same county, where the family was founded when this section of West Virginia represented the western frontier of Virginia. William Ripple was a man of superior education and was for many years a successful teacher in the schools of Berkeley County, he having been a venerable and honored citizen of Marlowe, this county, at the time of his death. Josiah M. Ripple, Sr., gained much of his youthful education under the effective tutelage of his father, and through apprenticeship he became a skilled workman at the trade of carriage maker. In connection with his trade he was for several years foreman of the Thrush & Stoughs carriage factory at Hagerstown, Maryland. He was successful in his business activities, and from 1904 until his death, in 1910, he lived virtually retired at Martinsburg. His marriage to Miss Virginia Smeltz was solemnized in 1880, and Mrs. Ripple still maintains her home at Martinsburg. She was born in Rockingham County, Virginia, as were also her parents, John and Susanna (Dinkle) Smeltz, the former of whom died at the venerable age of eighty-eight years and the latter of whom passed away at the age of sixty-nine years. Their children were eight in number. John Smeltz, whose father was a successful planter and slave-owner in Rockingham County, Virginia, was there reared and educated, and after the close of the Civil war he came to Berkeley County, West Virginia, where he became a substantial farmer and where he passed the remainder of his life on his old homestead farm, not far distant from the road leading from Marlowe to Williamsport.

Josiah M. Ripple, Jr., the only child of his parents, gained his preliminary education in rural schools and thereafter attended the public schools and also a business college at Hagerstown, Maryland. Thereafter he made a record of marked success as a traveling salesman for the Hess Carriage Company, which he represented in the states of Pennsylvania, Maryland, Virginia, West Virginia and Tennessee. After having been thus engaged five years he engaged in the book and stationery business at Martinsburg, and in 1920 he purchased the building in which his well equipped store is now established, on South Queen Street. The Martinsburg Bank formerly occupied a part of the building, and since its removal to other quarters in 1922 Mr. Ripple has utilized the entire ground floor of the building of his substantial and constantly expanding business. He is a director of the Shenandoah Valley Bank & Trust Company, and is one of the loyal and progressive members of the Martinsburg Chamber of Commerce. Mr. Ripple is a republican in political allegiance, he and his wife are communicants of St. John's Lutheran Church in their home city, and he is affiliated with Martinsburg Lodge No. 778, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks; Washington Lodge No. 1, Knights of Pythias; Aghar Temple No. 226, Dramatic Order Knights of Khorassan; and the local camp of the Woodmen of the World.

In 1910 was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Ripple and Miss Claudia May Schill, who was born and reared at Martinsburg, a daughter of George W. and Mary Ellen Schill. Mr. and Mrs. Ripple have one son, Melvin Harold.

RAYMOND MOSES DAVIS, coal operator and broker at Morgantown, Monongalia County, is one of the vital and progressive young business men of this city and is a native son of West Virginia. He was born on a farm eighteen miles south of Pennsboro, Ritchie County, January 28, 1882, and is a son of Moses H. and Mary Ellen Davis, who now reside at Pennsboro, the father having been born in Ohio and the mother in West Virginia. On the home farm Raymond M. Davis was reared to adult age, and that he profited fully by the advantages afforded in the public schools is shown by the fact that as a youth of only sixteen years he passed the required examination that gained to him a teacher's certificate of the second class. The youthful pedagogue then bent his energies to securing a school in which to put his acquisitions to practical test. He walked three miles to the top of a hill for conference with one of the school trustees who was working in a clearing. Upon making application to this trustee the latter, after a careful survey of the applicant, said, "Boy, you should be in school instead of trying to teach." Thereafter Mr. Davis rode on horseback through all parts of his native county in search of a school, but his search caused him to be unsuccessful in his quest, with the result that he abandoned his pedagogic ambition and entered the employ of the Eureka Pipe Line Company in Ritchie County. He continued three years in the employ of this company at nominal wages, and in the meantime learned from an operator at the company's headquarters the rudiments of telegraphy. Until he had attained to his legal majority Mr. Davis sent his wages to his parents, and at the age of twenty-one years he entered the Mountain State Business College at Parkersburg, and he paid his own way while pursuing his studies in this institution eight months. Thereafter he passed about three months in the railroad office at Pennsboro, after which he went to New Martinsville, Putzel County, where for a short time he held the position of telegraph operator at the station of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad. He next engaged in the hotel business at Pennsboro, on borrowed capital, and two years later he left the hotel business at a good profit, marking this successful issue by marrying and going with his bride to California. There he passed two years as a street-car conductor in the City of Los Angeles, and in 1907 he and his wife returned to West Virginia and established their residence at Reedsville, where he became station agent and telegraph operator for the M. & K. Railroad, at a salary of $35 a month. In January, 1908, he was transferred to Albright, at increased salary, and there he continued his services until 1911, when he was promoted train dispatcher and relief agent at Morgantown, in which city he has since maintained his home. Here he was promoted agent, operator and dispatcher at the Sabrator yards of the M. & K. Railroad, and in 1917 he was advanced to the position of train dispatcher. This office he resigned July 15, 1918, and permanently retired from railroad service. In the meanwhile he had invested his savings in the timber business in Braxton County, and after a period of three years he sold his interests in this line at a good profit. In January, 1918, Mr. Davis and Ernest H. Gilbert, who had long been associated in railroad service and who had gained considerable knowledge of the coal industry through handling large shipments from the mines, organized the Davis Coal Company, a partnership concern, and they have since continued as successful coal operators and brokers. In 1919-20 they purchased eight different mines in the Morgantown District, the same having an approximate output capacity of 4,000 tons daily, and under normal conditions the annual brokerage business of the firm involves the handling of 1,000,000 tons of coal. Messrs. Davis and Gilbert have won success entirely through their own ability and efforts and have made for themselves secure vantage-ground as reliable, progressive and substantial young business men.

Mr. Davis married Miss Fannie Wilson, who was born at Pennsboro, Ritchie County, a daughter of Sherman V. and Alice (Broadwater) Wilson. Mr. and Mrs. Davis have two children: Alice Irene, born April 6, 1908, and Mary Margaret, born June 30, 1913.

CHARLES M. GATES, the executive head of the Gates Building & Construction Company, with headquarters at Williamson, Mingo County, is one of the alert and progressive men who are playing a prominent part in the civic and material advancement of this section of the state, his associate in the business being his brother, Darwin R., of whom individual mention is made in a sketch immediately following this.

Charles M. Gates was born at Scottdale, Pennsylvania, October 17, 1870, and is a son of William Michael and Barbara (Wilson) Gates, both likewise natives of the old Keystone State, where the father was long and actively identified with coal mining. William M. Gates served as a gallant soldier of the Union during the Civil war, he having been a private in the Two Hundred and Tenth Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, which was a part of the Fifth Army Corps. He took part in many engagements, including the historic battles of Antietam and Gettysburg. After the war he was engaged in burning charcoal for use in iron furnaces, and in 1872 he became a coal miner in Pennsylvania, a vocation which he followed during the rest of his active career. After the death of his first wife he married Emma B. Holt.

Charles M. Gates attended the public schools of Pennsylvania about three years, and was but nine years old when he became a trapper in a coal mine. With the passing years he made consecutive advancement, became a skilled miner, served as mine foreman, later became mine superintendent and finally became general manager of the Crystal Black Coal Company of Mingo County, West Virginia. In 1917 he established his residence at Williamson and engaged in the real estate business, in connection with which he specialized in the handling of coal mines and other coal properties, besides handling improved and vacant city realty. In connection with this enterprise he found it expedient to do much building in order to sell properties to advantage, and in September, 1921, he became associated with his brother Darwin R. in the organization of the Gates Building & Construction Company, of which he is president. The company, with the best of facilities and management, is developing a large and substantial business in building and general construction work in Mingo and adjoining counties. In the furtherance of the business Mr. Gates is preparing to establish headquarters in the City of Huntington, though he will continue his residence at Williamson. He is a progressive and able business man and a sterling citizen who has achieved marked success, the while he has always commanded unqualified popular esteem. He has received the thirty-second degree of the Scottish Rite of the Masonic fraternity, in which he is also a member of the Mystic Shrine, and he is affiliated also with the Elks and is a member of the Kiwanis and Coal City clubs of Williamson. He and his wife are members of the Baptist Church.

In 1896, in Pennsylvania, Mr. Gates wedded Miss Agnes Glenn, and her death occurred in December, 1916. The children of this union are: Clark Ray, Austin J. W., Katherine A., Thomas D., Pee Jay, Bertha L. and Edith Clark. Clark R. and Thomas D. are engaged in the cattle business at Montrose, Colorado.

On the 21st of May, 1920, was recorded the marriage of Mr. Gates and Mrs. Lucille Gilbert (Cox) Fitzgibbons, a widow with one son, Henry, who now bears the name of Henry Fitzgibbons Gates. Mrs. Gates was born and reared in Kentucky and is a daughter of J. P. and Catherine Cox, of Henderson, that state.

DARWIN R. GATES, who is associated with his brother Charles M. as one of the principals in the Gates Building & Construction Company at Williamson, Mingo County, was born in Clearfield County, Pennsylvania, March 3, 1890, and is a son of William M. and Emma B. (Holt) Gates, adequate record concerning the family being given in the preceding sketch of the brother, Charles M. Gates.

The early education of Darwin R. Gates included that of the high school, but he was compelled to leave school at the age of sixteen years, owing to the death of his father. He was reared in his native county, and there he gained his early experience in coal mining. After acting as mule-driver in the mines for one year he served two years as weighing boss, and he then came to West Virginia and entered the employ of the United States Coal Corporation, a subsidiary of the United States Steel Company. He was employed one year as assistant mine foreman at Gary, McDowell County, and six years as mine foreman, and in 1917 he was made mine superintendent for the Wigarb Mining Company at Goodman, where he remained until 1921, when he engaged in the automobile business at Williamson. Four months later he sold his interest in this enterprise and became associated with his brother in the real estate, building and general construction business, as noted in the preceding outline of the career of his brother. Mr. Gates is affiliated with both York and Scottish Rite bodies of the Masonic fraternity, and also with the Mystic Shrine, is a member of the Kiwanis Club at Williamson, and he and his wife hold membership in the Baptist Church.

June 3, 1914, at Indiana, Pennsylvania, Mr. Gates wedded Miss Della Jennie Hess, daughter of Frank and Sarah (Wheeler) Hess, both natives of Pennsylvania. Mr. and Mrs. Gates have two children, Leona Wahnetta and Della Eleanor.

NEWELL KELLOGG PRATT, superintendent of the Big Sandy Colliery of the Solvay Collieries Company at Big Sandy, McDowell County, has been in the employ of this industrial corporation since 1907, save for a period of somewhat more than a year, during which he was in service with the Young Men's Christian Association in France in the World war.

Mr. Pratt claims the old Empire State as the place of his nativity, his birth having occurred at Delphi Falls, New York, on the 27th of December, 1882. He is a son of Frank F. and Rose (Holbrook) Pratt. Frank F. Pratt has been associated with farm industry throughout his entire active career, and resides with one of his sons on the fine old homestead farm near Cazenovia, Madison County, New York, he being sixty-five years of age at the time of this writing, in the winter of 1921-2. His wife died in 1913, at the age of fifty-five years. Of the two children the subject of this review is the younger, the older son, Ashley, having the active management of the old home farm. The Pratt family was one of prominence and influence in Madison County, New York, from the Colonial period, prior to the War of the Revolution, in which representatives of the name served as patriot soldiers, one having held the rank of lieutenant.

Newell K. Pratt attended a private school in the City of Syracuse, New York, and thereafter continued his studies in a seminary at Cazenovia until he had attained to his legal majority. Thereafter he was associated for one year in the work and management of the home farm, and he then took a position in the receiving teller's department of the Irving National Bank, New York City. He thus remained in the national metropolis until 1907, when he came to West Virginia and became script clerk at Marytown for the Solvay Collieries Company. Six months later he was transferred to the Big Sandy Colliery and advanced to the position of chief clerk. Later he returned to Marytown, and served as chief clerk to J. C. Rawn, general manager of the company, and of this position he continued the incumbent until 1917, when he was assigned to the purchasing department at Huntington. In 1918 he went to France as secretary of the Young Men's Christian Association, and was assigned to the position of accountant and financial secretary of the Vannes Area. He remained in France somewhat more than a year, and in the meanwhile the armistice brought the war to a close. Upon his return he became chief clerk to the general superintendent of the Edgewater Coal Company, subsidiary company of the Solvay organization, at Hellier, Kentucky, and in August, 1920, returned to the Big Sandy Colliery, where he served as assistant superintendent until the 1st of the following December, when he was promoted to his present office, that of superintendent. He is affiliated with the lodge of Ancient Free and Accepted Masons at Welch, the county seat, and with the chapter of Royal Arch Masons at Northfork. He is a republican in political allegiance, and is a member of the Presbyterian Church, in the faith of which he was reared.

LORELLE VERNON REED, deputy collector of internal revenue at Charleston, and division chief of that division, is one of the old-time newspaper men of the state, and for a quarter of a century was identified with the editorial management of the Preston Republican, removing from Terra Alta to Charleston following his appointment in the internal revenue service.

Mr. Reed was born at Lebanon, Laclede County, Missouri, May 25, 1867. His father is a minister of the Church of the Disciples, and has served as pastor of many churches of that denomination. L. V. Reed finished his education in the Christian College at Ash Grove, Missouri, and first came to West Virginia in 1894. His headquarters were at Wheeling, and for a year or so he had been associated as a salesman with the S. J. Clarke Publishing Company and the Goodspeed Publishing Company of Chicago. He represented these publishing houses in Missouri, Iowa, Wisconsin, Ohio, Pennsylvania and Chicago. He is a Presbyterian and a Mason.

In 1896 Mr. Reed removed to Terra Alta and became editor of the Preston Republican. In 1899 he bought the paper, and continued it as owner and editor from 1899 to 1921.

Mr. Reed was not a stranger to Charleston when he moved his home here, since he has held several official positions involving duty at the state capitol. For several years he was secretary of the State Board of Control, with office at Charleston, and he also served as clerk to the finance committee of the House of Delegates. He was appointed deputy collector of internal revenue in October, 1921, and shortly afterward he moved his family from Terra Alta to Charleston. His jurisdiction comprises the counties of Kanawha, Boone, Putnam, Raleigh, Greenbrier, Clay, Mingo, Fayette, Pocahontas and Summers.

The Reed family has been well represented in the public life of West Virginia for several years. Mrs. Reed had a prominent part in the republican state campaign of 1920 and is one of the most influential workers among the newly enfranchised element of the state. Mr. and Mrs. Reed have three interesting children. Virginia is the wife of G. I. Silcott, of Columbus, Ohio. The only son, O. Edward Reed, is a graduate of Columbia University, and now has charge of the publicity department of the Mergenthaler Linotype Company at New York City. Miss Dolly Gray Reed is a student in the University of Ohio at Columbus.

GEORGE S. GOCHENOUR, M. D. That important service to humanity which can only be rendered by the capable and conscientious physician and surgeon has been the work to which Dr. George S. Gochenour has devoted his time and ability in Hardy County for over thirty years. The scope of his activities of a professional nature is not far distant from the locality of his birth and the region in which his family has played an influential role for over a century.

Doctor Gochenour was born at Maurertown, Shenandoah County, Virginia, August 2, 1857. His grandfather, Jonathan Gochenour, spent his life as a farmer at Maurertown where he is buried. He married a sister of Elder George Shaver, and their children were Isaac, George, Sallie, Annie and Eliza. George spent his life at Tom's Brook, Shenandoah County; Sallie married Henry Bater, removed to Ohio during the Civil war, and spent her life there. Annie married Samuel Maphis, and both lived in Shenandoah County until their deaths; Eliza married Crafto Beydler, of Shenandoah County, and during the war the family moved to Jerico, Missouri, where she died recently, the last survivor of this generation of the family.

Isaac Gochenour, father of Doctor Gochenour, was also a native of Shenandoah County, and spent his life there as a farmer. As a member of the Church of the Brethren he was conscientiously opposed to war, and when the Confederate authorities began taking members of the church in the army by force he left his home and went to Pennsylvania, remaining there until the close of hostilities. He returned home just two days before the surrender of General Lee's army and was immediately arrested by Confederate authorities, who started him to Richmond, but his neighbors and friends, with whom he had spent his life, interposed and raised $1,000 in cash, which they paid to release him, the penalty for failure to serve in the Southern Army. Isaac Gochenour always lived as a private citizen but was very active in the work of the church, being leader of the church music and a splendid singer. He died in 1871, when only forty-two years of age.

He was survived many years by his widow, who died in 1894. Her maiden name was Eliza Riednour. Her grandfather was a native of Germany, and while serving as an officer in the German army he met at some point on the coast of Scotland the young lady who subsequently became his wife. They came to America, settled in Shenandoah County, where he followed farming, and lived there until his death. He was a soldier in the War of 1812, and was a man of powerful build and splendid physique, being a giant in stature. At one time three of his young great-grandsons, including Doctor Gochenour, were playing with his trousers and had no difficulty in inserting their bodies within the generous girth of that garment. The wife of this old time settler of Shenandoah County survived him many years, and she never wore glasses and when in advanced years she plied a cambric needle with the ease and dexterity of a woman in middle life.

The father of Eliza Riednour was Dr. Henry Riednour, a noted tooth extractor. He also remained loyal to the Union, and some of the neighbors and friends laid in wait for him with loaded guns and pistols, but he escaped their ambush, went to Illinois, joined a Union regiment and was in service until the close of the war. His command came through his Virginia home region several times, and he visited his family, so that he was not altogether removed from them. After the war he returned and spent the rest of his life in Shenandoah County, where he was born in 1802 and died about 1887. Eliza was the oldest child of Doctor Riednour. The home in which she reared her children was one put together with nails made by a blacksmith, one of the homes built during the days of the Indians on the Virginia frontier. Her children were: Fannie, who became the wife of Elder B. W. Neff, of Mount Jackson, Virginia; H. H., who for sixteen years was a freight conductor on the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad and was killed just after the settlement of a strike on that road; John J. on the old homestead at Maurertown; and George Shaver, the Moorefield physician.

Dr. George S. Gochenour spent his early life in the rural community where he was born, attended the country schools, and his duties were with the farm until past his majority. He had spent much of the time with his grandfather, Doctor Riednour, and this probably influenced him in the choice of medicine as his profession. When ready for college he went to Baltimore and entered the old Baltimore Medical College, receiving his first diploma there in 1889. Later, when that institution was merged with the University of Maryland, the school issued him a new diploma. For the last year while he was a student he was assistant resident physician of the Maryland General Hospital, and after graduating he became resident physician to fill the unexpired term of the regular physician. He also did some general practice while in Baltimore, and left that city, with the promise of success and considerable distinction before him, in order to keep the higher altitude and a climate more beneficial to him in West Virginia. In 1889 he located at Mathias in Hardy County, and remained there until 1898, when he moved to the county seat, Moorefield, where he has now enjoyed an extensive private practice for nearly a quarter of a century.

During the World war Doctor Gochenour was commissioned by the Government a member of the Volunteer Medical Service Corps, authorized by the Council of Defense. He was later sworn in as assistant physician of the draft board, and only awaited the vacancy in the office made by the inability of the regular appointee to serve. For several years he has been city health officer and is a member of the County and State Medical Societies, and for years has been vice president of the Hardy County Bank. Doctor Gochenour was a member of the council at Moorefield for a number of years, has always voted as a democrat, is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, is master of Moorefield Lodge No. 29, A. F. and A. M., and is a thirty-second degree Scottish Rite Mason and Shriner.

Doctor Gochenour married in Shenandoah County Miss Alice V. Shaver, daughter of Elder Samuel A. and Annie (Good) Shaver. She was born March 4, 1860 and died February 11, 1887, the mother of two sons, Ernest and Harry Lee. The latter died in infancy. Ernest Gochenour has made a distinguished record as an educator, is a graduate of Roanoke College and of Princeton University, was formerly teacher of social science in the University at Porto Rico, later professor of Spanish in Wentworth Military Academy at Lexington, Missouri, and is now general superintendent of the Spanish department in the high schools of Birmingham, Alabama.

Doctor Gochenour's second wife was Miss Mollie E. Garrett, daughter of Westfall and Eliza (Chrisman) Garrett. She was born in Hardy County where she died in 1912, leaving a son, Garrett Stouffer Gochenour, born June 16, 1895. He is a graduate of Roanoke College and of Columbia University of New York, was in the service of the navy during the World war, being discharged April 1, 1922, and is now an efficient engineer in an aluminum plant at Niagara Falls.

JOSEPH E. ROBINS, M. D. A resident of Charleston since 1886, Doctor Robins for a quarter of a century performed an invaluable and extensive service as a physician and surgeon, largely as company physician for coal corporations, directing and attending to the medical care, sanitary safeguards provided for mining towns and districts. Doctor Robins has since retired from the active business of the profession, but is still prominently identified with the coal industry and with financial affairs at Charleston.

He was born at Elysburg, Northumberland County, Pennsylvania, in 1861. He represents an old line of solid English ancestors. One of his forefathers was a Colonel Robins, on the staff of Cromwell. Prior to the Revolutionary war the Robins family settled in Northumberland County, Pennsylvania. His great-grandfather, Aaron Robins, was a land owner and merchant in that county, while the grandfather, Dr. Joseph C. Robins, was a graduate of the University of Pennsylvania and a physician. Three of his sons followed the same profession, though Harvey S. Robins, father of Dr. Joseph E., was a merchant in Pennsylvania.

Joseph E. Robins graduated from Jefferson Medical College in Philadelphia in 1883, and for several years practiced at Mount Carmel, Pennsylvania. On coming to Charleston, West Virginia, in 1886, he became surgeon for a number of the coal companies in the New River coal fields. Subsequently he represented several large coal corporations, and during a busy twenty-five years had thousands of miners and their families under his care. Doctor Robins is one of the distinguished men in his profession in the state. For nineteen years he was a member of the State Board of Health and for several years its president. For thirteen years he was a member of the National Guard of West Virginia, and was chief surgeon during the period of martial law, 1912, on Paint and Cabin creeks, serving with the rank of major. He has been retired from medical practice now for several years.

His connection with the coal industry of West Virginia and Kentucky involves large financial interests. He is a stockholder or director in a number of coal companies. He was formerly president of the National City Bank of Charleston, which was merged with the present Charleston National Bank, of which he is vice president. This is the largest National Bank in the state.

During the war with Germany Doctor Robins was a member and examining surgeon for the Charleston Draft Board. The duties of this office kept him busy for many months, literally day and night. The tremendous volume of work accomplished by the board, and its generally high record of efficiency, were due not only to the individual exertions of the three members but to the extra help employed by them, an employment made possible chiefly through substantial contributions of money on the part of Doctor Robins and his two associates.

The outstanding civic interests of Doctor Robins is his work in behalf of education in Charleston. He has been a member of the Charleston Board of Education since 1915. He was elected president of the board in 1919 and reelected in 1921. The half dozen years of his membership have been coincident with a remarkable degree of progress in the material and educational equipment of the Charleston schools. The city now has a magnificent high school and many grade schools, and the board now has a building program involving the expenditure of more than half a million dollars in 1922 and for two or three years following.

Doctor Robins has three children: His daughter Madge is the wife of Mr. Kemp Littlepage, of Charleston. His older son, Dr. Joseph E. Robins, Jr., pursued a literary course in the University of West Virginia and graduated in the medical department of the University of Cincinnati. is now practicing medicine. The younger son, Hugh Barbee Robins, was a literary student of the University of Pennsylvania and now is a student of medicine in the University of Cincinnati.

JAMES MADISON SMITH. The special business of writing insurance has grown to enormous proportions, and this has come about not entirely because the people have come to a realization of the necessity for proper protection, but in a large degree because of the efforts of the men engaged in this line of endeavor, who are educating the masses to an appreciation of the benefits accruing from insurance. This line of business demands many characteristics not demanded in other avenues. The successful insurance man must not only know his own business thoroughly, but be a competent judge of human nature, be possessed in marked degree of that faculty which enables him to speak clearly and convincingly to his possible client, and to be able to place the insurance with a reliable company which will conserve the interests of the insured. Of the able insurance brokers of Mingo County one who is also known as a successful operator in real estate and a man of prominence and influence in his city is James Madison Smith of Williamson, senior member of the Smith-Pool Agency.

Mr. Smith was born February 5, 1878, in Pike County, Kentucky, a son of Andrew J. and Mary (Staten) Smith, natives of Kentucky, and a descendant of an old Virginia family of Irish origin. Andrew J. Smith was identified with the timber business, in getting out logs, or what would be known today as a logger. While he was not in the Civil war, he had an uncle, for whom he was named, who met his death in the battle of Turkey Creek. Andrew J. Smith was active in the work of the Baptist Church and a man of integrity and sound principles.

The country schools of Pike County, Kentucky, furnished James Madison Smith with his educational training, and when he was eighteen years of age he went to work hauling logs with a team from a mill on Pigeon Creek to Warn Cliff, a railroad point, whence they were shipped. He followed this kind of work for six months, and when A. B. Crumb failed he lost his employment and one of his horses. With the proceeds of the sale of his remaining horse he went to school, and was able to secure a teacher's certificate, which he utilized in educational work in Pike County for six years. He then embarked in the grocery business, but after a short experience disposed of his holdings to advantage, as he thought, only to be painfully enlightened to the contrary when the purchaser failed to pay. To make a new start Mr. Smith came to Williamson and secured a position as clerk in the grocery of W. R. Cranshaw, with whom he remained from May 1 to July 4, when he was taken down with typhus fever and it was not until December 29 that he was again able to resume work. Undiscouraged by this series of misfortunes, he accepted a position as bookkeeper in the laundry at Williamson, which failed at the end of his fourth month of employment. Mr. Smith, however, had always been provident and saving, and at this time had accumulated the sum of $115, with which he purchased a small grocery business. Through good management and untiring industry he built up a good business, which he sold at the end of three years to W. L. French and went to Nolan, where for four months he was associated with W. M. Thompson. Later, at the same place, he was identified with G. R. Blackburn, but a short time later returned to Williamson, where he again entered the grocery business and continued therein until July, 1908. Selling out, he went to Nelson County, Virginia, where he purchased a farm and carried on agricultural operations, but at the end of his third year disposed of his land and again came back to Williamson, where in 1912 he purchased a furniture store. After conducting it for two years he sold this enterprise and embarked in the real estate business, in which he has been engaged to the present. In 1916 he took in Mr. Pool as a partner, under the style of the Smith-Pool Agency, and since then insurance has been a big feature of the business. Mr. Smith has made his name synonymous with integrity and upright principles, and has gathered about him a large clientele, who have the utmost confidence in his judgment and reliability.

In July, 1907, Mr. Smith was united in marriage at Williamson with Miss Laura Leslie, daughter of Amos and Bettie (Millard) Leslie, natives of Kentucky, and to this union there have been born three children: Mary Elizabeth, Robert Harrison and James E. By a former marriage Mrs. Smith is the mother of one son, William R. Hendricks. Mr. and Mrs. Smith attend the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. He holds membership in the Masons, the Odd Fellows, the Kiwanis Club and the Coal City Club, in all of which he is popular.

BANTZ W. CRADDOCK, of Glenville, judicial center of Gilmer County, is one of the representative members of the bar of his native town and county, and the popular estimate here placed upon him is vouchsafed in the fact that he is serving as prosecuting attorney of the county at the time of this writing, in 1922.

Mr. Craddock was born at Glenville on the 22d of November, 1887, and is a son of Joseph M. and Vergie B. (Wooddell) Craddock, the former of whom was born at Glenville, in 1863, and the latter of whom was born in 1864. The father received the advantages of the schools of his native county, and as a young man taught four terms in the rural schools. He founded the Glenville Stranger, of which he continued the editor and publisher for twenty years. He is now one of the influential citizens of Clarksburg, Harrison County, and formerly served as mayor of that city. He is a staunch democrat and a liberal supporter of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, of which his wife is an earnest member. Of the six children the eldest is Winnie, who is the wife of O. M. Ewing; Bantz W., of this sketch, was the next in order of birth; Enla is the wife of J. C. Ewing; Ava is the wife of C. C. Stanaard; M. Pauline is the wife of C. E. Elliott; and Thelma D. is the wife of J. C. Crews.

In the public schools of his native village, Bantz W. Craddock continued his studies until his graduation, and in January, 1907, he took a clerical position in the Kanawha Union Bank, in which he continued his service until the autumn of the following year, when he entered the law department of the University of West Virginia. In this institution he was graduated as a member of the class of 1910, followed by his admission to the bar of his native state. He served his professional novitiate by practicing one year at Martinton, and since July, 1911, he has been established in professional work in his native village of Glenville. His ability and personal popularity soon enabled him to build up a representative practice, and he continued his general professional work until 1916, when he was elected prosecuting attorney of the county. He made an admirable record in this office, and in 1920 he was re-elected for a second term of four years.

Mr. Craddock is a loyal advocate of the principles and policies of the democratic party, is a past master of Gilmer County Lodge No. 118, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, and has received the eighteenth degree of the Scottish Rite of Masonry, besides being affiliated with the Order of the Eastern Star, the Knights of Pythias, the Modern Woodmen of America, the Knights of Maccabees, the Junior Order of United American Mechanics, and two college fraternities, Sphinx and Phi Sigma Kappa. His wife holds membership in the Order of the Eastern Star and also in the Methodist Episcopal Church.

December 5, 1913, recorded the marriage of Mr. Craddock and Miss Hallie J. Whiting, who had been a student in the State Normal School at Glenville and who had been a successful and popular teacher in the public schools prior to her marriage. Mr. and Mrs. Craddock have three children: Bantz W., Jr., Marjorie E. and Samuel N.

CHARLES STUART WAUGH. The importance of the practical railroad contractor and highway constructor is very well demonstrated in the recognition he is receiving in every community, for through the medium of his efforts are localities developed and communities put in touch with the outside world. While unfortunately there are some who take unfair advantage of their position, the majority of the men who are engaged in this line of work handle deals of such magnitude that it would be strictly to their disadvantage to carry through anything but aboveboard transactions. Southwestern West Virginia has advanced very largely through the work of this class of men, and one who has been instrumental in developing Mingo and several other counties of this region is Charles Stuart Waugh, who now makes his headquarters at Williamson.

Mr. Waugh was born June 12, 1878, at Orange, Virginia, a son of Charles A. and Sallie (Jones) Waugh, natives of Virginia, a member of an old family of the Old Dominion State, and of English and Scotch ancestry. His father, a contractor in railroad construction, was also an extensive agriculturist in Virginia, and was active in civic affairs and political matters. Likewise he took a helpful part in the work of the Methodist Episcopal Church and served as steward.

The graded and high schools of Orange, Virginia, furnished Charles Stuart Waugh with his primary education, following which he pursued a course of study at the Virginia Polytechnic School, which he left before graduation, in 1896. At that time he took up railroad construction work with the Eliason & Rhodes Company, and remained with that concern for two years, then joining the Rinehart-Dennis Company, with which he remained about one year. At this time Mr. Waugh embarked in business on his own account at Oakvale, West Virginia, his first contract calling for some double track work for the Norfolk & Western Railway from Oakvale to Glen Lyn. This occupied about a year and one-half of time, after which he continued further work for the same line. During this time he made his main headquarters at Orange, Virginia, although he always had headquarters likewise at the scene of his operations. Eventually Mr. Waugh transferred his main headquarters to his present location at Williamson, West Virginia, where he is engaged in general construction work, principally pertaining to railway construction and heavy highway work. He is possessed of full equipment, including steam shovels, graders, etc., of a most modern character, and his contracts generally call for in excess of $100,000 each. Mr. Waugh is likewise a coal operator, owning and operating the West Williamson coal properties, which are quite extensive in size. His reputation in the business world is that of a thoroughly capable, aggressive and reliable business man, and his standing in the community is an influential one.

In 1903, at Wytheville, Virginia, Mr. Waugh was united in marriage with Miss Margaret Porter, daughter of Steven and Maggie (Crocket) Porter, natives of Virginia and agricultural people. Mr. Porter is active in politics at Wytheville. Seven children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Waugh: Charles S., Porter E., Margaret W., Esther, Stuart A., Julia and Lee. Of these Charles S. and Porter E. are attending the military school at Waynesborough, Virginia, while Margaret W. is one of the brightest pupils at the State Deaf and Blind Institute of Virginia. The family belongs to the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Mr. Waugh is a Chapter and Knight Templar Mason, a member of the Mystic Shrine and an Elk, and also holds membership in the Kiwanis and Coal City Clubs.

WILLIAM BOGGS ANDERSON. The high awards that are attainable in character and influence through a life of industry and probity, guided and regulated by a sense of Christian obligation, are illustrated in the career of William Boggs Anderson, for many years an agriculturist of Pendleton County. Possessed of more than ordinary industry, he entered upon his life work in young manhood and never failed to carry out the obligations laid upon his willing shoulders nor to follow up opportunities that opened before him with steadiness and industry, gaining step by step the rare fruits of well-directed enterprise, until he found himself in a position where he was independent financially and held in high esteem by his fellowmen.

Mr. Anderson was born September 7, 1861, in Pendleton County, and belonged to a family that originated in Scotland, the first American ancestor of which was his great-grandfather, who came from Glasgow, Scotland, in the first years of the United States as a republic. The grandfather of William Boggs Anderson, William Anderson, was born in 1800, at Woodstock, Virginia, and served as a drummer boy there during the War of 1812. When he attained mature years he became a business man, and at Woodstock followed merchandising for some years. Like his two wives, who were sisters, he was possessed of marked literary taste, and owned a splendid home library. He was a member of the Virginia Constitutional Convention and a prominent man generally in the State of Virginia, which he left in 1831 to cross the mountains into Pendleton County, settling on the South Fork of the South Branch of the Potomac River, where he owned and carried on extensive operations on a large plantation. His son, David Crawford Anderson, established a school for boys in Pendleton County, and although it was located far from any communities which boasted of populations of any considerable size he made it something of an educational center for the youths of the county. He was a college-bred man himself, and in addition to teaching in his own school, was an instructor in a classical school at Franklin, and later in one at Moorfield. William Anderson rounded out his career on his plantation, where he died, and his body was interred in the cemetery near Franklin with others of the family. His first wife was Rachel White, of Greenbrier County, Virginia, and the six children who were born to them were as follows: Mary, who died as a maiden; David Crawford, the educator and founder of the boys' school noted above, who married Louisa Boggs and died in 1891; William Henry, who died young; Junius Brutus, the father of William B.; Robert Allen, who joined the "gold rush" to California in 1849 and died in the gold fields; and Philip Williams, who was a physician and surgeon throughout life and died at Charleston, West Virginia. For his second wife William Anderson married his first wife's sister, Mrs. Alice (White) Hupp. The White sisters were highly educated women, their father being Valentine White, the proprietor of a school for girls at Warm Springs, Virginia. Valentine White married a Miss Rhodes, a lady from Wales, and one of their daughters, Polly White, married John Cowardin, of Richmond, Virginia, one of their sons, James Cowardin, being editor of the Richmond Dispatch during the war between the states. Mrs. Rachel (White) Anderson died July 19, 1831. The issue of William Anderson and his second wife was a son, Samuel, who passed his life in the main at Franklin, as a farmer, and died unmarried.

Junius Brutus Anderson, the father of William Boggs Anderson, was born November 19, 1824, and was educated by private tutors who came to visit his father's home for the purpose of instructing the children. He became one of the early merchants of Franklin, and during the war between the states engaged in the manufacture of grey goods for uniforms for the Confederate soldiers. He died August 9, 1870, and was buried in the family lot at Franklin. Mr. Anderson married Miss Margaret Boggs, a daughter of Gen. James Boggs. She was a faithful member of the Presbyterian Church and a pioneer of the Franklin congregation, and she passed away in that faith July 22, 1894, aged over sixty-one years, having been born May 5, 1833.

Sallie Anderson, the oldest child of Junius B. and Margaret Anderson, is now Mrs. Cunningham and a resident of Franklin. She was born in this old country town in 1858, and completed her education at Fairfax Hall, Winchester, Virginia, from which she was graduated in 1881, subsequently taking a post-graduate course in art. She established a boarding school for girls at Franklin, growing into it rather easily and unintentionally, until she found herself at the head of a popular and useful institution and continued its life for seven years. She then gave up literary school work and took up art, giving over her entire time to instructing her pupils in oil painting and pastel work. Her paintings have attracted widespread attention and have received much favorable comment from critics. Many of them grace the walls of leading homes all over this region. On May 4, 1893, she was united in marriage with Eliacum Cunningham at Edinburg, Virginia, while she was teaching for a short time at Winchester. Mr. Cunningham was born July 2, 1853, in Pendleton County, and acquired his education in colleges in Virginia and elsewhere as he could provide the means to further his studies. He taught school for a number of years in Lewis County, this state, and after reading law for five years with William H. H. Flick, of Franklin, was admitted to the West Virginia bar. Soon after his marriage to Miss Anderson he established his home at Beverly, West Virginia, where he followed his profession during the rest of his life, dying in December, 1901. He was active in democratic politics, and was frequently an official in the State Senate, where he served as reading clerk and clerk. He never campaigned in his own behalf. Mr. Cunningham was at first a warm supporter of William Jennings Bryan for the presidency, and while he lost some of his admiration for the Nebraskan he always remained loyal to the democratic cause. In May, 1902, Mrs. Cunningham resumed her connection with her native town, where she has continued her work in art and is an active member of the Presbyterian Church. She has not cared to exercise her right of franchise as a voter, but has raised no objection to others voting if they wish to do so.

William Boggs Anderson was reared in a commercial atmosphere, his father being a merchant, but when he entered upon his serious career adopted agriculture and stock-raising as his own pursuits. His education was secured in the public schools, and as a young man he taught school for a time, but soon abandoned the educational profession for the pursuits of the farm and became the owner of valuable lands in Randolph and Pendleton counties. He contributed much to the development of the several communities in which he was located by improving his own estates, and became known as one of the large operators of Pendleton County. Mr. Anderson's chief stock in cattle was of the Hereford strain, and he took particular pride in the production of live stock, constantly seeking to better the breed of his herds. While agriculture was his chief concern, he also had some experience in commercial affairs, having conducted a hardware store at Franklin for many years. He was also one of the directors of the Farmers Bank of Franklin. Politically he was a staunch democrat and manifested a strong interest in politics and political campaigns, being often a delegate of his party to conventions. No fraternity ever won his favor. He was a member of the board of deacons of the Presbyterian Church, and died in that faith March 16, 1920. He is survived by a brother, Charles, who is a farmer on the South Fork of the South Branch of the Potomac River; and four sisters: Mrs. Sallie Cunningham, of Franklin; Mrs. J. J. Roberts, of Culpeper, Virginia; Miss Alice Anderson, of Franklin; and Mrs. Lucy Headley, also of Franklin. One brother, Dr. Walter, died at Franklin while engaged in the practice of dentistry.

At Franklin, December 6, 1899, Mr. Anderson married Miss Catherine Dyer, a native of Pendleton County and a sister of Dr. Osceola Dyer, of Franklin. She was orphaned by the loss of her father when she was a child, and her girlhood was spent at the home of her uncle, John McClure, who married Rebecca J. Skidmore, a sister of Mrs. Anderson's mother. Three children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Anderson: J. McClure, one of the young farmers of the Franklin community, who registered for the World war but was not called into active service, and he married Miss Marguerite Boggs, a daughter of Hugh Boggs; Effie Harness, who is a high school student at Franklin; and William Dyer, who has just completed his graded school work.

The Anderson home, standing upon a conspicuous site at Franklin, was erected by Mr. Anderson, and goes far toward teaching the present generation his character and the manner of man and citizen he was.

CHARLES FRANKLIN RUTTENCUTTER was born and reared in Pleasants County, and since early manhood has been a man among men, efficient in his private business, known for his integrity and wholesome personality, and it was largely on the score of his individual character and fitness that he was chosen to the office of sheriff, which he is now filling.

Daniel Ruttencutter, his grandfather, was a native of Germany. When he came to America as a young man he settled in Tyler County, West Virginia, and after reaching there he married a young woman who had come with him from Germany on the same ship. From Tyler County he moved to Middle Island Creek in Pleasants County. While he owned a farm, he was by trade a cabinet maker and one of the old time artistic masters of that trade. He made a great deal of hand made furniture, some examples of which are still in existence, showing not only sturdiness but artistic lines. This old couple reared a family of eight children, and their descendants comprise the only Ruttencutters in the United States.

Abraham Burkhart Ruttencutter, father of the sheriff was born in Tyler County June 8, 1834, was reared there and in Pleasants County, was married in the latter county and since his marriage his home has been at St. Mary's. For a number of years he owned and operated a water grist mill at Sylvan Mills, for thirty years was proprietor and landlord of the leading hotel of St. Mary's, and eventually confined his attention to the ownership of a livery business. He has been retired since 1901, and now, at the age of eighty-seven, makes his home with his son Charles F. He served a number of terms on the City Council, is a democrat, and since boyhood has been an active member of the Methodist Protestant Church. He has for forty years been a member of St. Marys Lodge No. 41, A. F. and A. M., and for twenty years has affiliated with St. Marys Lodge No. 22, Independent Order of Odd Fellows. Abraham B. Ruttencutter married Christine Watson, who was born on Middle Island Creek in Pleasants County in 1841 and died at St. Marys in 1896. She was the mother of the following children: Belle, wife of George W. Hutchinson, of Parkersburg, West Virginia, Mr. Hutchinson being a sub-divisional manager for the International Harvester Company, having charge of the agencies of this corporation in a number of counties; Mary, who died at Covington, Kentucky, in November, 1920, wife of John C. Watts, a locomotive engineer with the Louisville and Nashville Railroad; John Daniel, superintendent of oil leases for a corporation at Tulsa, Oklahoma; Joseph A., Louisville & Nashville Railway conductor at Covington, Kentucky; Blanche, wife of John M. Brightwell, a locomotive engineer with the Louisville & Nashville Railroad with home at Louisville; Bessie, who died in infancy; and Charles F., who is the youngest.

Charles F. Ruttencutter who was born at St. Marys August 22, 1881, acquired a high school education in his native city, but at the age of seventeen left school and went to work in the St. Marys oil fields. For fifteen years he was in the oil district, turning his versatile talents to nearly every phase of oil production, and for a time had charge of practically all the production in Pleasants County for the firm of Bennedum & Trees. Mr. Ruttencutter has been an individual oil producer for the past fifteen years and owns some of the productive wells in the St. Marys field. His chief business interests, however, is the St. Marys flouring mill, which he bought in 1913. This mill is on Washington Street and has a capacity of seventy-five barrels per day. He also owns an ice house near the depot, which supplies St. Marys and vicinity with ice for domestic purposes, and he also has a retail coal business. Mr. Ruttencutter is a stockholder and director in the Pleasants County Bank of St. Marys.

For several terms he was a member of the City Council. He was elected high sheriff in November, 1920, and began his four year term January 1, 1921. His election was in the nature of a personal triumph. In that year even the old time democratic strongholds went republican. Pleasants County gave the republican ticket an average majority of 225, but Mr. Ruttencutter was chosen sheriff by a margin of 125 votes. He is a member of the Baptist Church, assistant superintendent of the Sunday School, is affiliated with St. Marys Lodge No. 41, A. F. and A. M., Sistersville Chapter No. 27, R. A. M., Mountain State Commandery No. 14, K. T., West Virginia Consistory No. 1, Scottish Rite, at Wheeling, St. Marys Chapter No. 31 of the Eastern Star, and Nemesis Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Parkersburg.

A. P. Hendrickson —

He also belongs to St. Marys Lodge No. 22, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and St. Marys Tent No. 20, Knights of the Maccabees. During the war Mr. Ruttenecutter had charge of all the Red Cross drives in his district, and assumed the responsibility of seeing that these drives filled the quota and was equally interested in the success of the Liberty Loan and other campaigns.

Mr. Ruttenecutter owns one of the substantial homes of St. Mary's, on Creel Street. He married in 1901 Miss Lida Walton, daughter of John and Lida (Le Bearon) Walton, the latter now deceased. Her father lives at Pittsburg, is a teamboat engineer, and well known among Ohio River men. Sheriff and Mrs. Ruttenecutter have two children. Lucille, born in December, 1902, is a graduate of the St. Marys High School and now a sophomore in West Virginia University. Charles Abraham, born in July, 1907, is a junior in the high school.

DANIEL PIERCE HENDRICKSON, a native of Grant County, West Virginia, when young became Clerk of the Courts of Grant County, in the year 1880, and served continuously as Clerk of the Circuit and County Courts of the County until January 1st, 1921.

He has held several other public offices, and has been connected with many of the business interests of the county.

J. TOWNSON HALL was born on a farm in which stands today the thriving village of Auburn, Ritchie County, the date of his nativity having been March 13, 1855. It is interesting to record that he is now one of the representative exponents of farm industry in his native county and that he is president of the Auburn Exchange Bank, to the executive affairs of which he gives much of his time.

Mr. Hall is a son of E. M. and Tacy J. (Jeffrey) Hall, the former of whom was born September 1, 1829, and the latter February 23, 1833, at West Union, Doddridge County. E. M. Hall was a boy at the time of his parents' removal to Ritchie County, where his early education was gained in the subscription schools. His wife was reared and educated in Doddridge County, and after their marriage they resided for a number of years on a farm in that county. Mr. Hall then became a progressive farmer in Ritchie County, and also conducted a general store at Auburn. After selling his store he passed the remainder of his life on his farm, he having become the owner of a fine estate of 200 acres and having been a leader in agricultural and live-stock industry in Ritchie County. He and his wife were zealous members of the Baptist Church, in which he was a local minister, and his political support was given to the democratic party. Of their fine family of twelve children only three are living in 1922, and of this number the subject of this review is the eldest; William F. is a resident of Fort Collins, Colorado; Joseph S. is a successful ranchman and banker in the State of Colorado; and Tacy, who was the wife of Jerome Brake, of Harrisville, Ritchie County, died March 25, 1922.

J. Townson Hall remained at the parental home until he had attained his legal majority, and in the meanwhile he had made good use of his educational advantages, as shown by the fact that he was successfully engaged in teaching in the rural schools for four terms. He has continued as a successful representative of farm enterprise in his native county and is the owner of a well improved farm of 200 acres—the old homestead on which he passed his childhood and youth. He has been actively concerned in the upbuilding of the substantial business of the Auburn Exchange Bank, of which he was one of the organizers and of which he is the president. Though loyal and public-spirited and a staunch advocate of the principles of the democratic party, Mr. Hall has had no desire for public office of any kind. He and his wife are active members of the Baptist Church at Auburn.

In April, 1877, Mr. Hall wedded Miss Amanda V. Ward, who was born on a farm in the Bonecreek District of Ritchie County, December 7, 1853, a daughter of Martin C. and Mary I. (Gaston) Ward. Mr. and Mrs. Hall have five children. F. Guy who resides with his parents, has one son, Arza, and the maiden name of his wife was Edith Wade. Lyda is the wife of Charles Acklin, and they reside in the State of Colorado. They have two children, Theodore and Wesley. Porter

F. lives on a farm in Colorado. Alma is the wife of James Dalton and they also reside on a farm in Colorado. They have four children living, Arnold, Herbert, Le Roy and Mona. They also had a little daughter, Lola, who was drowned at the age of eighteen months. Carr, who married Nerdie Bernard, lives in Gilmer County, West Virginia.

JOHN GABRIEL JACOB. In that unlimited usefulness exercised by a newspaper publisher and editor, and only less as a business man, John Gabriel Jacob was one of the most prominent members of the Jacob family at Wellsburg. The pioneer settlement and achievements of the family group as a whole are described in other sketches in this publication. The American ancestor of the family was John Jacob, Sr., who came from the Isle of Wight to Maryland about 1665, and who died October 26, 1702.

John Gabriel Jacob, who was born at Wellsburg, October 1, 1826, was the oldest son of Samuel and Mary Ann (Shryer) Jacob. His father was a farmer, a noted raiser of fine sheep and cattle, owning a large farm one half mile east of Wellsburg. He was cashier of the Wellsburg National Bank for over forty years.

John G. Jacob was educated in Washington College at Washington, Pennsylvania. He graduated with the class of 1847, a class somewhat famous on account of the number of its members who afterward became prominent, one of them being James G. Blaine. Soon after graduation John G. Jacob made a trip to New Orleans, floating down the Ohio and Mississippi rivers by flat boat loaded with goods produced in this section. On reaching New Orleans he sold his stock and the flat boat at a good profit and returned by steamboat to Wellsburg, after resisting a strong temptation to continue his trip to the gold fields of California, where the first discoveries had been made and which were attracting nearly every young man of adventuresome disposition who could get away from the routine of the East. With the proceeds of his flat boat venture John G. Jacob purchased a half interest in the Wellsburg Transcript, a newspaper then owned by Metcalf & Smith. Only a short time later, in 1849, Mr. Jacob, with the aid of his father, bought the remainder, changing the name to the Wellsburg Herald, under which name he edited and published it for nearly fifty years. He was an able and fearless writer, and in the period immediately preceding the Civil war his editorials had a far reaching influence. He was an ardent abolitionist, and his editorials in a newspaper published in slave territory were widely copied. Through his newspaper he had much to do with molding sentiment and holding the people of his section loyal to the Union.

John G. Jacob as an editor warmly espoused the cause of Abraham Lincoln as candidate for the President, and was a delegate to the convention at Chicago which nominated the great emancipator in 1860. He served on the committee on credentials as the representative of the Virginia delegation. He was a supporter of all public improvements, especially of the substantial sort, and could always be found on the right side on all moral questions. He was an early advocate of prohibition of the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors, and for many years his paper bore at the head of its editorial column the inscription "An Independent Republican Newspaper favoring prohibition."

In 1895 Mr. Jacob relinquished active control of the Herald, turning it over to his son and retiring to his suburban home, but still retaining his active interest in local affairs as well as in the broader affairs of the state and nation.

In October, 1903, at the age of seventy-seven, Mr. Jacob died from an attack of pneumonia, and two days later his remains were laid beside those of his beloved wife, who had preceded him in death just ten days before.

CARL KELLEY JACOB, Wellsburg lawyer and former member of the West Virginia Legislature, is one of the younger representatives of this distinguished family of the Upper Panhandle of the state. He is a grandson of Samuel Jacob, who was born in 1802 and lived in Wellsburg from the age of sixteen. In 1832 the Wellsburg Bank was organized as a branch of the old Bank of Northwestern Virginia, and he became its cashier and served in that capacity for over forty years, being with the institution when it acquired one of the first national charters in the state. While his interests were centered in the bank, he made his home on his farm a mile from Wellsburg. Rose Hill farm comprised six hundred acres, and was the breeding ground of Merino sheep and Shorthorn cattle. He died there in 1884, at the age of eighty-two.

Samuel Jacob married Mary Ann Shryer, and they were the parents of three sons. A separate sketch appears of the oldest, John G. Jacob, the veteran publisher of the Wellsburg Herald. The youngest was Zachariah, who was cashier of the Wellsburg National Bank until his death in 1905.

The second son was Daniel F. Jacob, who was born at Wellsburg June 15, 1832, and lived all his life in that city, where he died July 31, 1921, when in his ninetieth year. Quite early in his career he took part of his father's stock farm, became owner of most of it, and lived there, continuing the breeding and raising of sheep as long as that was a profitable industry. He was a republican, never held a public office, and was an active member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. He married Lydia Kelley, who died when her youngest son, Carl Kelley, was an infant. There were two other sons, Samuel, who died at the age of eighteen, and Daniel F., Jr., who is still at the old homestead.

Carl Kelley Jacob was born near West Liberty, West Virginia, and he was reared by his aunt, Susan Jacob, on the old farm. He graduated from Washington and Jefferson College with the class of 1895, received his law degree at West Virginia University in 1899, and has been one of the busy attorneys at Wellsburg for over twenty years. He has served as city solicitor since 1904. He is a director and chairman of the finance committee of the Wellsburg National Bank, an institution in which the family had been interested since it was started in 1832. Mr. Jacob in 1907 served as a member of the State Legislature, representing Brooke County, and among other committees was a member of the cities and towns committee.

He married Miss Bertha Jones, daughter of William Jones, of Wheeling. Their three children are: Bettie, Helen and Bertha.

WILLIAM PINCKNEY HALLER though only forty years of age has had an almost continuous association and worked in connection with the coal mining and other industrial affairs of Southern West Virginia for nearly thirty years. He is especially well known in Mercer County, being auditor of the Matoaka Electric Power Company, of the Pawama, the Algonquin and Wright Coal Companies, his home and business headquarters being in the village of Matoaka.

Mr. Haller was born at Huntington, West Virginia, February 5, 1882, son of William J. and Margaret (Hatfield) Haller. His father, who died in 1912 at the age of fifty-eight, entered the employ of the Chesapeake and Ohio Railroad Company as a young man in the capacity of telegraph operator at Hawk's Nest. Subsequently he joined the motive power department, was promoted to master mechanic, and at intervals served in that capacity at Richmond, Huntington and Cincinnati. For a time he was master mechanic of the Illinois Central Railroad with headquarters at Memphis. William J. Haller was a democrat in politics, for many years enjoyed membership in the Masonic fraternity and belongs to the Protestant Episcopal Church. He was born at Wytheville, Virginia, son of Dr. William P. Haller. Mrs. Margaret (Hatfield) Haller was born at Barboursville, West Virginia, and continues to reside at Huntington. She is an earnest communicant of the Protestant Episcopal Church. Of her three living children the oldest is John J., an employee of the Chesapeake and Ohio Railroad Company at Huntington. The only daughter is Mrs. W. T. Smith of Huntington.

William P. Haller acquired his public school education at Huntington and Kenova, West Virginia, and at Memphis, Tennessee. When he was twelve years old he went to work in the offices of the Norfolk and Western Railroad at Kenova. A year later he was assigned to clerical work in the coal fields. For a time he had charge of supplies for the Pond Creek and Island Creek Coal Companies, during the period of construction work in 1908. Since 1915 his home has been at Matoaka. In addition to being auditor of the Matoaka Electric Power Company and the coal company above mentioned, he is associated with the Mutual Building & Investment Company, the Odd Fellows Building Corporation and the Matoaka Cemetery Company. He has served as secretary-treasurer of the Matoaka Board of Trade and the Matoaka Business Men's Club, and in 1919, he gave a very vigorous and progressive administration as mayor of this little industrial city.

Mr. Haller is a democrat, is a member of the Protestant Episcopal Church, and is affiliated with Bailey Lodge No. 137, F. and A. M. at Rock, West Virginia, he being a Royal Arch Mason, a member of Athens Chapter No. 20 Athens, West Virginia, is a past chancellor commander and keeper of records and seals of the Knights of Pythias and is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Loyal Order of Moose.

In 1909 he married Miss Marie Tuma Curtin, daughter of Patrick Curtin of Wytheville, Virginia. They have one son and three daughters.

AUGUST N. POWERS. One of the interesting industries of West Virginia is the St. Marys Pearl Button Company located in Pleasants County. The superintendent of this industry is August N. Powers, who has had a wide experience in gathering the raw material and in manufacturing pearl button stock, and came to West Virginia from his native state of Indiana. He was born at Rockport, Indiana, August 17, 1887. In the paternal line his ancestry originated in England and settled in old Virginia in Colonial times. His grandfather, Isaac Newton Powers, was born in Virginia in 1833, but spent nearly all his active life as a farmer in Warrick and Spencer counties in Southern Indiana. He served throughout the Civil war on the Union side. He died at Tennyson, Indiana, in 1905. His son, William Powers, was born in Warrick County in 1865, lived during his youth in that and in Spencer County, and then went to Rockport, Indiana, where he married and for many years owned and operated a grist mill and a grocery store. He has since retired since 1909. In politics he is a democrat. William Powers married Pauline Kline, who was born in New York City in 1869. They have two children, August N. and Elizabeth Hannah. The latter is the wife of Stanley I. Murray, owner of a button factory at Rockport, Indiana, but widely known all over the United States for his breeding kennels, where he breeds full blooded Pointers.

August N. Powers was educated at Rockport, attending the high school during the Junior year. He left school in 1906 and for five seasons played professional baseball. He was a star pitcher in the Virginia League, Kansas State League and Blue Grass League. For one year he did work with surveying crew in Indiana, and then became associated with the Dalton Adding Machine Company in the milling and drilling department at Poplar Bluff, Missouri. After a year and a half in the factory he spent another year in Cincinnati for the same firm.

Mr. Powers took up the button industry in 1915 with the Harvey Chalmers & Sons Company. He was on the road as purchaser of raw material for this company a year and a half, traveling out of Rockport, Indiana, and covering the principal sources of supply through Southern Illinois, Southern Indiana, Western Kentucky and portions of Tennessee. Following that for six months Mr. Powers conducted a button factory of his own at Rockport, Indiana, and in 1917 came to St. Marys, West Virginia, to accept his post as superintendent of the Pearl Button Company. The plant and office of this company are in the north end of town, along the Baltimore & Ohio Railway. Gathering their raw materials from a large section of country, they manufacture pearl button blanks, which are shipped entirely to button factories at Amsterdam, New York. A valuable by-product is crushed shells for poultry and agricultural lime, and this material is shipped all over the United States. It is a business employing a hundred and ten hands, and is one of the prominent assets of St. Marys industrial prosperity.

Mr. Powers votes as a democrat, is a trustee of the Presbyterian church, is a member of the Independent Order of Foresters at St. Marys, St. Marys Chapter No. 31 of the Eastern Star, and at Rockport, Indiana, has membership in Spencer Lodge No. 112, F. and A. M., Rockport Lodge Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and the Encampment degree and the Rebekahs. He is a member of the Commercial Travelers of Utica, New York, and is first vice president of St. Marya Board of Trade.

In 1917, at Rockport, Mr. Powers married Miss Estella Pearl Connor, daughter of Charles C. and Anna (McDaniel) Connor, residents of Rockport, where her father is superintendent of the Rockport Pearl Button Company. Mr. and Mrs. Powers have one daughter, Dorothy Connor, born July 8, 1921.

RICHARD ASHVILLE FARLAND is a Clarksburg banker cashier of the West Virginia Bank, and to that line of business he has devoted his youth and adult manhood. Apart from the value of the work he does and has done his name serves to recall one of the most historic families in this section of the state.

He was born in Clarksburg February 22, 1880. His father, Joseph T. Farland, and his grandfather, Zebulon S. Farland, were both natives of Tappahannock, Virginia, where Joseph was born July 19, 1849. As a young man he came to Clarksburg, and on October 20, 1875, in Christ Episcopal Church of that city, married Mary Thorne, and a few years later began his permanent residence in the city. Joseph T. Farland built up a prosperous coal business, and was head of the Farland Coal and Coke Company. He continued in this business until his death, on December 11, 1892.

Mrs. Mary (Thorne) Farland, still living, was born at Wilsonburg, Harrison County, October 4, 1857, daughter of Ashville B. and Margaret (Wilson) Thorne. Her mother was a daughter of Josiah Davison and Mary (Martin) Wilson, and a granddaughter of Col. Benjamin Wilson. Col. Benjamin Wilson served as an aide-de-camp, with the rank of lieutenant, to Lord Dunmore in the expedition against the Shawnee Indians in 1774, and during the Revolutionary war was a captain in 1777-8 and a colonel in 1787 of forces engaged against the Indians on the frontier. Colonel Wilson built and maintained what is known as Wilson's Fort in Tygart's Valley. He was author of the history entitled "Lord Dunmore's War." His distinctions did not end with his military service, since he was a member of the Virginia Assembly in 1783-4-5-6, and a delegate to the Virginia convention in 1788 which ratified the United States Constitution. Again, from 1790 to 1794, he was a soldier in the Federal service for the protection of the frontier settlers against the Indians.

Ashville B. Thorne, maternal grandfather of the Clarksburg banker, was born in Monongalia County, Virginia, now West Virginia, August 8, 1826, and died at Clarksburg November 19, 1913, in his eighty-eighth year. His wife, Margaret Wilson, was born at Wilsonburg in Harrison County January 13, 1829, and died at Clarksburg November 20, 1920. She was the last survivor of the original Wilsons of Harrison County.

Joseph T. and Mary (Thorne) Farland were active members of Christ Episcopal Church of Clarksburg, and reared their children in the same faith. These children were three in number: Frances F., who married Charles R. Powell, of New York City; Richard A.; and Margaret Elizabeth, wife of Clair P. Sutter, of Clarksburg.

Richard A. Farland, who on account of his maternal ancestry is a member of the Sons of the American Revolution, acquired a good common school education during his boyhood, attended West Virginia University two years, and gave up the idea of completing a university career because of the shortage of funds, which made it advisable for him to go to work. Soon afterward he became an errand boy in the old Traders National Bank of Clarksburg. When the Union National Bank was organized by the consolidation of the Traders National and Peoples Banking & Trust Company, Mr. Farland continued with the new bank and was in its service until October 1, 1909. At that date he began his duties as cashier of the West Virginia Bank of Clarksburg, a position he holds today. The only interruption to his experience as a banker came in the period between October, 1900, and January, 1902, when he was credit man for Armstrong, Crislip, Day & Company, wholesale grocers of Clarksburg.

Mr. Farland is a member of Hermon Lodge No. 6, A. F. and A. M., Clarksburg, West Virginia, and a member of Clarksburg Lodge No. 482, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, of which he is treasurer. He has been treasurer of the Clarksburg Chamber of Commerce, and has acted as treasurer for the local Salvation Army organization. On July 24, 1913, Mr. Farland married Miss Grace Simpson, a daughter of Irwin and Mary (Sutter) Simpson, of Punksuttawney, Pennsylvania. They have one son, Joseph S. Farland, born August 11, 1914. Mr. and Mrs. Farland are members of Christ Episcopal Church.

DAN B. FLEMING was in the ranks of West Virginia's educators for twelve or fifteen years, and resigned as city superintendent of schools at St. Marys to become cashier of the Pleasants County Bank.

Mr. Fleming was born at Ravenswood in Jackson County, West Virginia, November 15, 1885. The Flemings are of Scotch-Irish ancestry, and his grandfather, Bartholomew Fleming, settled at Ravenswood in 1820. He was a native of Allegheny County, Pennsylvania. He spent his active career at Ravenswood, where he established a ferry and was one of the first merchants. His wife was Hannah Warth, who was born near Ravenswood and died there. They were the parents of six children: Oscar, who became a farmer and died in Meigs County, Ohio; George P., a retired wharf master at Ravenswood; Miss Carrie, of Ravenswood; Mrs. Emma Polsene, a widow living at Ravenswood; Henry C.; and Winfield S., a general contractor in Denver, Colorado.

Henry C. Fleming was born at Ravenswood June 30, 1845, and has spent all his life there. For many years he has been the leading photographer in that section of the state. He was for several terms a member of the City Council, is a democrat, a member of the Masonic fraternity and a supporting leader in the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Henry C. Fleming married Lillian Rhodes, who was born at Cottageville, Jackson County, in 1851. She is the mother of three children: The oldest, Jessie, is the wife of Max E. Polsene, a musician at Ravenswood; James is in the internal revenue service at Parkersburg; and Dan B. is the youngest.

Dan B. Fleming graduated from the Ravenswood High School in 1904. He subsequently spent a winter term in Marietta College of Ohio, and for two years taught in Ravenswood, spent one year in the schools of Mason County, and in 1910 graduated from Marshall College, the State Normal at Huntington. Following his graduating Mr. Fleming was teacher of mathematics and science in the high school of St. Marys one year, was then elected and served four years as principal of the high school, and was next promoted to superintendent of city schools and had charge of the administration of the city school system until 1920.

In January, 1921, Mr. Fleming was elected cashier of the Pleasants County Bank. This bank was established in 1897, being opened for business on March 17th. The first president was Newton Ogden, who afterward was state treasurer of West Virginia; the first cashier was Mr. Isaac Reynolds. This bank has a capital of seventy-five thousand dollars, surplus and profits of twenty thousand dollars, and deposits approximating five hundred thousand dollars. The bank is under a state charter and has occupied its modern bank home, a structure of stone and brick, since 1901. The present officers of the bank are: O. C. Barkwill, president; P. S. Tarbox, of Oil City, Pennsylvania, vice president; Dan B. Fleming, cashier; Evert L. Burk, assistant cashier; while the directors are O. C. Barkwill; C. F. Ruttenclutter, sheriff of Pleasants County; Dan H. Reynolds of Parkersburg; Dr. George H. Gale of Newport, Ohio; E. H. Morgan, C. C. Schaeewecker, George Phillips and T. J. Taylor of St. Marys, and Lou Wells of Bens Run, West Virginia.

During the last years of his educational work Mr. Fleming was, during the summers of 1919-20, superintendent for the Redpath Chautauqua Bureau, covering Kentucky, Ohio, Pennsylvania, West Virginia, Illinois and Wisconsin. During war time he was secretary of the Pleasants County Chapter of the Red Cross, made many speeches throughout the county in behalf of all the auxiliary war organizations, and gave much of his time to this patriotic duty. Mr. Fleming is a democrat, is a trustee and steward of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and is affiliated with St. Marys Lodge No. 41, A. F. and A. M., Sistersville Chapter No. 27, R. A. M.,

West Virginia Consistory No. 1 of the Scottish Rite at Wheeling, Nemesis Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Parkersburg, and St. Marys Tent No. 20, Knights of the Maccabees. Mr. Fleming built his new home on Fourth Street in 1921. He married in St. Marys August 2, 1914, Miss Ruth Sayre, daughter of Edward A. and Ella (Gist) Sayre, residents of St. Marys. Her father was formerly cashier of the Pleasants County Bank and one of its organizers. Mrs. Fleming is a graduate of the local high school. They have one daughter, Katherine Eleanor, born May 11, 1915.

JESSE EARLE RILEY, superintendent of city schools of St. Marys, was at one time probably the youngest teacher in West Virginia, qualifying for his first school when he was only fifteen. He has been alternately a student and teacher ever since, is a Master of Arts from Bucknell University, and has an enviable record as a teacher and school administrator.

Mr. Riley was born in Taylor County, West Virginia, near Bridgeport, March 27, 1888. In the same vicinity was born his father, James Riley, in October, 1848, and the grandfather also bore the name James and was born in old Virginia in 1828. The Rileys came from Ireland and were Colonial settlers in Virginia. James Riley, Sr., as a young man moved to the vicinity of Bridgeport, was married there, and lived his life as a successful farmer. He died in 1913. James Riley, Jr., learned a mechanical trade, but for the greater part of his active life owned and managed an extensive farm near Bridgeport and since 1921 has lived retired at Shinnston in Harrison County. He is a democrat, and a very active member of the Baptist Church. He married Louisa Withers, who was born in old Virginia in November, 1850. Their family consisted of eight children: Effie, wife of Jonah Currey, a flour miller at Bridgeport; Leola, who died at Enterprise, West Virginia, in 1909, aged thirty-five, wife of Jesse Anderson, a farmer near Boothsville, West Virginia; Charles, a farmer who died near Bridgeport in 1908, at the age of thirty-three; Leonard, a mechanic and contractor at Shinnston; Marion, a general contractor at Shinnston; Ora, wife of Minor Currey, who is in the lumber business at Shinnston; Jesse Earle; and Truman, a general contractor at Bridgeport.

Jesse Earle Riley attended the rural schools of Taylor County, graduated from Broadus Institute, then located at Clarksburg, with the class of 1909, and received his A. B. degree from Bucknell University at Lewisburg, Pennsylvania, in 1914, and won his Master of Arts degree from the same institution in 1916. He was a member of the Kappa Sigma fraternity at Bucknell. During 1915 Mr. Riley also took special work in history and economics in West Virginia University at Morgantown. As a youth of fifteen he was appointed to preside over a rural school in Taylor County, and taught in rural districts four years. In 1914 he became an instructor in Latin and registrar of Broadus Institute, remaining there a year. For two years he was teacher of science in the high school of Portsmouth, Ohio, then superintendent of schools at Harrisville, West Virginia, two years, principal of the high school of New Martinsville two years, and in June, 1921, came to his present duties as superintendent of city schools of St. Marys. St. Marys has a well organized school system, there being six schools, a staff of twenty-five teachers, and a scholarship enrollment of seven hundred.

Mr. Riley is a member of the West Virginia State Educational Association, and during the war had an effective part in stimulating patriotism and teaching Americanism in the schools and was also a worker in the various war drives at Harrisville. He is a democrat in politics, a member of the Baptist Church, and is affiliated with Shinnston Lodge No. 24, F. and A. M. Mr. Riley is a stockholder in the Riley & Riley Company, general building contractors at Shinnston, an organization in which the active members are his brothers, previously mentioned.

At Washington, D. C., in 1917 Mr. Riley married Miss Ethel Heiter, daughter of James O. and Daisy (Kleckner) Heiter, residents of Lewisburg, Pennsylvania. Mrs. Riley is a graduate of the Domestic Science Department of Bucknell University, and for one year before her marriage was dietitian in the university. The three sons of Mr. and Mrs. Riley are William, born July 27, 1918, John Warren, born February 3, 1920, and Ellwood Withers, born November 20, 1921.

HENRY S. SMITH is vice president of the First National Bank of Richwood, Nicholas County, in which city he is also superintendent of the Cherry River Boom & Lumber Company, one of the important industrial corporations of this section of the state.

Mr. Smith was born in the State of Maryland, September 15, 1874, and is a son of Dr. Albert H. and Agnes (Bradley) Smith, the former of whom was born in the State of New York, in 1836, and the latter of whom was born in the State of Delaware, where she was reared and where her early educational advantages included those of Newar Academy. Dr. Albert H. Smith was reared on a farm in the old Empire State and received his early education in the common schools of the period. He was a youth when he became a resident of Delaware, where he took a full course and prepared himself for the dental profession. After his marriage he established himself in practice at Rising Sun, Maryland, and there he continued in the successful practice of his profession until within two years prior to his death, which occurred in 1920, his wife having passed away in 1897. Of their four children the eldest is George A., who is treasurer of the Baker-Whitely Coal Company at Baltimore, Maryland; A. Bradley, a printer by trade and vocation, is in the employ of the great Curtis Publishing Company in the City of Philadelphia; M. Adeline, whose death occurred in 1919, was a graduate of the Friends Normal Institute at Rising Sun, Maryland.

Henry S. Smith, the last in order of birth in the family of four children, was reared at Rising Sun, Maryland, where he supplemented the discipline of the public schools by a course of study in the Friends Normal Institute, an excellent institution conducted under the auspices of the Society of Friends. In the autumn of 1888 he assumed the position of stenographer and bookkeeper in the offices of the Susquehanna Water Power & Paper Company, with which corporation he continued his connection until July 1897, when he entered the employ of the Beaver Creek Lumber Company at Davis, Tucker County, West Virginia. In 1902 he resigned his position with this company and removed to Richwood, where he became paymaster for the Cherry River Boom & Lumber Company, he having been advanced in 1911 to the office of assistant superintendent, and the year 1920 having recorded his promotion to his present responsible office, that of superintendent.

Mr. Smith is known and honored as one of the loyal and progressive citizens of Richwood, and he has given effective service in local offices of trust. He was city recorder two terms, has given several years of service as a member of the auditing committee of the city government, and has been for ten years a member of the Board of Education. His political allegiance is given to the republican party, and in the Masonic fraternity his affiliations are with Richwood Lodge No. 122, A. F. and A. M., of which he is a past master; Richwood Chapter No. 97, R. A. M., of which he is a past high priest; Sutton Commandery No. 16, Knights Templar; and Beni-Kedem Temple of the Mystic Shrine in the City of Charleston. Mrs. Smith, her two daughters and the elder son hold membership in the Presbyterian Church at Richwood.

On the 16th of October, 1900, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Smith and Miss Flora L. Collins, who was born and reared in Hampshire County, West Virginia, and the children of this union are four in number: Mildred L. and Dorothy O. graduated from the Richwood High School and are, in 1922, pursuing higher studies in a school at Beechwood, Jenkintown, Pennsylvania; William A. is the sixth grade of the public schools at Richwood, and Henry Bradley is the youngest of the number.

NEWTON JASPER KEADLE, the genial and popular postmaster of the City of Williamson, Mingo County, is familiarly known as "Doc" Keadle, and has been an influential figure in Mingo County from the time of its creation in 1895, Governor McCorkle having appointed him the first sheriff of the new county and the ensuing popular election having retained him in the office, in which he served six consecutive years.

Mr. Keadle was born at Madison, Boone County, West Virginia (then Virginia), on the 27th of April, 1860, and is a son of Maj. James W. and Harriet E. (Kessinger) Keadle, his father having been a major in the Confederate service in the Civil war, in which he was captured, and was held as a Union prisoner at Fort Delaware. His death in 1865 resulted from illness contracted while in the army, and his widow having died in 1869, their son Newton J. was doubly orphaned when a mere boy. The old home of the parents was in what is now Monroe County, West Virginia.

After the death of his mother the present postmaster of Williamson was taken into the home of one of his aunts at Welston, Jackson County, Ohio, where he remained and attended school until he was fourteen years of age. Thereafter he was employed on farms and around the blast furnaces in that section of Ohio until his return to his native town, where he learned the printer's trade in the office of the Coal River Record. In 1887 he established the Logan Democrat at Logan, judicial center of the county of that name, and he continued as editor and publisher of this paper one year. He served also as city marshal of Logan, and while a resident of that place became also a local official in the internal revenue service. Upon the erection and organization of the new county of Mingo, formerly a part of Logan County, Mr. Keadle was appointed its first sheriff, as previously noted, and after his retirement from this office he was elected county tax assessor, in which position he served three and one-half years. He then resigned to take the appointment as postmaster of Williamson, the county seat, in 1910, under the administration of President Taft. He continued his service as postmaster until after the election of President Wilson, when he was succeeded by a democratic incumbent. Thereafter he served as state probation officer until the resumption of republican administration of the Government, when he was reappointed postmaster at Williamson, in 1921. His present administration is proving as efficient and popular as did his former regime in this office, and more than this need not be said. Mr. Keadle has been steadfast and loyal in his allegiance to the republican party, and has been prominent in its councils in this section of the state. He was active in support of the various patriotic movements in the World war period, and gave four of his sons to the nation's service in that connection. He and his wife are active members of the Baptist Church in their home city.

In 1889 Mr. Keadle wedded Miss Lucy Miller, who was born in Logan County, this state, a daughter of Judge Miller, who was a leading lawyer and jurist in that county. Mr. and Mrs. Keadle became the parents of a fine family of ten children, all of whom are living: Roy H. entered the nation's aviation service shortly after the United States became involved in the World war. He was transferred to the American Relief Administration and was on the battle lines in France, caring for and assisting in the removal of wounded soldiers, his headquarters having been in the City of Paris and his service having covered a period of twenty-two months. After the World war he became a clerk at the Williamson Post Office. Okey P., an attorney in the office of a leading law firm of Williamson, went overseas with the Pittsburgh Railway Construction Regiment, which established headquarters at Tours, France. Mingo P. became a member of the United States Heavy Coast Artillery and was stationed on Fisherman's Island in Chesapeake Bay. Alonzo received his preliminary training at Fort Benjamin Harrison, Indiana, received commission as first lieutenant, was later promoted a captain and was then assigned to duty to Company E, Three Hundred and Seventeenth Infantry, in connection with the accepting of troops for overseas service. He is now captain in the West Virginia Militia. Emmet, eldest of the sons, is deputy sheriff of Mingo County. John S., the youngest son, is attending the public schools. There are four daughters: Lucy is employed in the First National Bank of Williamson; Katharine is a teacher in the public schools of this city; and Mary and Virginia are still attending school.

REESE G. BAILEY has become one of the influential figures in the coal-mining industry in Mingo County, and, with headquarters at Williamson, the county seat, he is president of the Bailey Pond Creek Coal Company and the Bailey Thacker Coal Company, the mine of the former company being on Pond Creek in Pike County, Kentucky, one mile distant from Williamson. The mining operations of the Bailey Thacker Coal Company are carried on within the corporate limits of Williamson.

Mr. Bailey claims the historic Old Dominion State as the place of his nativity and is a representative of families there founded many generations ago. He was born on his father's farm in Tazewell County, Virginia, February 15, 1877, and his parents, George C. and Eliza C. (Gillespie) Bailey now reside in the City of Richmond, that state, the father having retired after many years of successful association with farm industry and the tanning business. George C. Bailey is now (1922) seventy-eight years of age and his wife sixty-eight, both being members of the Methodist Church. Mr. Bailey gave four years of loyal service as a Confederate soldier in the Civil war, since the close of which he has continuously given his allegiance to the republican party. Of their ten children all are living except one, the subject of this sketch having been the second in order of birth.

The public schools of his native county afforded Reese G. Bailey his early education, which included a course in the Tazewell High School, which he attended until he was nineteen years of age. Thereafter he was in the employ of the United States Bridge Company, his service being in connection with the construction of the crib or wooden work on bridges erected for the Norfolk & Western Railroad. He continued in the employ of this company nine years and did much work in connection with the extension of the lines of the Norfolk & Western into the coal fields of West Virginia, his final service having been in the capacity of bridge foreman. Mr. Bailey next became actively associated with coal mining, and for six years was a contractor in getting out coal for the Springton Coal Company on Widemouth Creek, near Matoaka, Mercer County. As a contractor for the American Coal Company he passed the ensuing eleven years in coal production on Cram Creek, Mercer County. During this latter period he was also engaged successfully in contract mine-construction work. In 1919 Mr. Bailey transferred his field of operations and came to the Mingo District, where he purchased the business and property of the Black Diamond By-product Coal Company. Later he organized the two companies of which he is now president, and both are in successful production of coal. In the World war period Mr. Bailey served as a member of the United States Fuel Administration, and was influential in creating a large production of coal—a work of major importance in that climacteric period. His eldest son, W. Gruver Bailey, entered the United States Army in June, 1919, and is serving in the coast artillery at the present time. Mr. Bailey is a progressive and liberal citizen, takes active interest in public affairs in his home county and city, and is a staunch advocate of the principles of the republican party.

In the year 1896 was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Bailey and Miss May Hawkins, daughter of Thomas Hawkins, of Tazewell County, Virginia, and the children of this union are four sons and four daughters. The attractive family home, known for its generous hospitality, is in the City of Williamson.

EDMUND A. STARLING. The experience and viewpoint of the practical miner belong to Edmund A. Starling, though his apprenticeship in the humbler roles was remarkably short. For a number of years he has been one of the very efficient mine superintendents in Eastern Kentucky and Southern West Virginia.

Mr. Starling is now general superintendent of the Guyan Mining Company at Wilburn in Logan County. He has charge of the operations in four seams, the two upper seams being mines No. one and two of the Island Creek, and the lower seams No. one and two of the Eagle mines. These mines are situated on the west bank of the Guyandotte River, and 500 feet of belting conveys the coal over the river to the tippie. The average output of the mines is 1000 tons daily, but the capacity is 3000 tons. Mr. Starling took charge of these mines in April, 1921.

He was born at Louisville, Kentucky, September 11, 1887, son of Judge Edmond A., Sr., and Mariam (Gallagher) Starling. His father was a native of Hockinsville, Kentucky, and his mother of Louisville. E. A. Starling, Sr., who died in 1912, at the age of fifty-two, was a coal operator at Pineville in Bell County, Kentucky, and built the first coke oven there. He was a pioneer in the coal production of Eastern Kentucky, moving to Pineville from Louisville. He served as county judge of Bell County, and was active in politics both there and in Louisville, being a republican. He was vice president of the Mingo Coal and Coke Company at Middlesboro, Kentucky. He was a member of the Episcopal Church and a Mason and Elk. Mrs. E. A. Starling is an unusually able business woman, and has given particular evidence of that ability since the death of her husband. She owns a chain of eighteen dairy lunch rooms in Pittsburgh. Besides her son Edmund A. there is a daughter, Shirley, wife of Carl A. Simmon, who is chief engineer for the Westinghouse Company of Pittsburgh.

Edmund A. Starling acquired a high school education at Louisville, and took special work in civil and mining engineering at Saint Mary's College at Saint Mary's, Kentucky. At the age of eighteen he left school to go to work in the mines of Eastern Kentucky, at Yellow Creek in Bell County. His first work was greasing cars at fifty cents a day, and he worked as trapper boy for seventy-five cents a day. He drove mules in the mines, worked on the tippie, loaded coal, operated machinery and motors, and in the course of a few years had graduated into the responsibilities of mine superintendent and mine owner. During the World war he owned and operated mines in Bell County and subsequently became manager of the Elkhorn Coal Corporation's properties at Fleming in Letcher County. From there he came to West Virginia. While in Kentucky he opened the mines of the Wisconsin Steel Company at Benham in Harlan County.

Mr. Starling married Miss Lula Shisler, daughter of Judge Lenoard Shisler, of Pineville, Kentucky. They were married in 1912. Mrs. Starling is a Methodist, while Mr. Starling is a member of the Episcopal Church and is affiliated with the Elks Lodge. He is an independent in politics.

THE EAGLE MANUFACTURING COMPANY is to be recorded as one of the important and well ordered industrial concerns of the state and is located at Wellsburg, Brooke County, the business having been established in 1894 and the company having been incorporated under the present title in 1897. In 1894, attracted by the abundant supply of natural gas to be found at Wellsburg, Harry W. Paull, now president of the company, here began manufacturing operations with a modest plant that was a subsidiary of the Wheeling Stamping Company. Within a short period Mr. Paull became associated with his two brothers, James and Samuel O., in the purchase of the plant and business, and at the time of the incorporation of the company Charles B. Ott, of Wheeling, became actively identified with the business, he having since continued as vice president of the company, of which James Paull is treasurer and Samuel O. Paull secretary. The personnel of the official corps remained unchanged from the time of the incorporation until W. C. Jacob, of Wellsburg, became associated in the business as assistant secretary of the company. He is a son of the late J. G. Jacob, one of the pioneer newspaper editors of West Virginia. W. C. Jacob married Elizabeth Paull, a sister of the Paull brothers of the Eagle Manufacturing Company.

In the initial period of operation, employment was given to a force of about thirty-five men, and the output was confined exclusively to glass linings for Mason fruit-jar caps, or liners. The plant at the beginning was in a building 150 feet square, the same having been erected for the purpose to which it was thus applied. The great manufacturing plant of this progressive corporation now covers about 1½ city blocks, additions to the same having been made from time to time, in consonance with the consecutive expansion of the business. About one-half of the building are three or four stories in height, the floor space covering approximately 300,000 square feet.

The company is now engaged in the manufacture of illuminating glassware and stamped-metal lubricating oil containers, and each department operates on an extensive scale, as is evident when it is stated that the company now retains a force of about 500 employees, many of whom are skilled operatives.

The glassware products are sold to jobbers and the stamped-metal products to railroads and wholesale hardware trade. The export trade of the company is likewise one of importance, and is of a constantly cumulative tendency.

The men who have been the dominating forces since its organization in the upbuilding of this splendid industrial enterprise have the satisfaction of knowing that while they have furthered their individual success, they have also contributed distinctly to the industrial and commercial prestige and prosperity of the fine little city in which they maintain their home.

Harry W. Paull, president of this company, James Paull the treasurer, and S. O. Paull, the secretary, are all sons of the late Judge James Paull, a distinguished lawyer who served on the bench of the West Virginia Supreme Court.

Harry W. Paull was born at Wheeling, West Virginia, and was reared in the City of Wellsburg, West Virginia. He has fully demonstrated his initiative and executive powers in connection with the upbuilding of the business of the company of which he is president, he having become the active manager of the manufacturing enterprise since its inception. He is a vital and progressive citizen who takes loyal and helpful interest in all things tending to advance the civic and industrial welfare of his home city, is a democrat in politics, and he and his wife hold membership in the Presbyterian Church. He married Miss Louise B. Beall, daughter of Col. C. H. Beall, and the only child of this union is a daughter, Virginia B.

James Paull, treasurer of the company, was born in Wheeling and completed his education at Wooster University, at Wooster, Ohio. He was for several years secretary of the Wheeling Stamping Company, and was later one of those instrumental in the establishing of the Eagle Manufacturing Company at Wellsburg, and to his financial ability the company is greatly indebted for its success. He married Miss Mariana Jacob, a daughter of J. G. Jacob, and the two children of this union are John J., who is employed in the office of the Eagle Manufacturing Company, and James, Jr., who is a college student at the time of this writing in Washington and Jefferson College.

Samuel O. Paull, secretary of the Eagle Manufacturing Company, is the youngest of the three brothers identified with the Eagle Manufacturing Company, and was born in Wheeling in the year 1869. He there initiated his business career in the capacity of bookkeeper in the office of the Wheeling Stamping Company, with which he continued his alliance until he joined his brothers in the organization and incorporation of the company. He is the active head of the metal stamping department of the Eagle Manufacturing Company, and it is largely due to his initiative and enterprise that this department has reached its present proportions and success. His wife, Celeste, is a daughter of Dr. E. E. Worthen, who was for sixty years engaged in the practice of dentistry in the City of Wheeling. Mr. and Mrs. Paull have no children.

Charles B. Ott, the executive head of the illuminating glassware department of the Eagle Manufacturing Company, was born in the City of Wheeling, and there he was reared and educated. As a youth he became associated with his father's hardware business in that city, and later he was identified with a mercantile enterprise in the City of Omaha, Nebraska, where he remained until he came to Wellsburg, West Virginia, and became one of the stockholders of the Eagle Manufacturing Company, of which he has since continued as vice president. Mr. Ott is a bachelor.

J. O. Paulk

JONATHAN CORBLEY POWELL, prosecuting attorney of Pleasants County, is now in his second term, and his record is a most interesting and unusual one. He was elected prosecuting attorney before he finished his law course in the State University, and early in his first term turned over the responsibilities of the office to his assistant and for practically two years was in the uniform of an army officer, so that during more than half of his term he was prosecuting attorney in name only.

Mr. Powell was born in Pleasants County November 9, 1892, and evidently his range of experience for a man of thirty has been exceptional. His grandfather, Jonathan Powell, was born in England in 1831, and as a young man came to America and settled in Monongalia County, West Virginia. He was a farmer, timberman and steamboatman. In 1867 he bought land in Pleasants County, and two years later located on that land, near the mouth of Sugar Creek, making his home on this place until his death, which occurred May 24, 1917. He owned a large amount of land, carried on extensive operations as a farmer, and also did a large business as a timberman. He was a democrat and a member of the Methodist Protestant Church. Jonathan Powell married Minerva Summers at Little Falls in Monongalia County, where she was born in 1840 and died at the old homestead in Pleasants County in March, 1916. She was the mother of four children: Alice, wife of Theodore Birkheimer, a merchant at Cloverdale, Pleasants County; James B., a merchant at Federal, West Virginia; Thomas B., a merchant at Parkersburg; and George B., a farmer and merchant at Sugar Valley, West Virginia.

James B. Powell, father of Attorney Powell of St. Marys, was born in Monongalia County August 23, 1857, and is still living at Federal, near the old homestead in Pleasants County. He acquired a common school education in Monongalia and Pleasants counties, was married in the latter county, and has followed farming. He owns a farm in Lafayette District, and is also a merchant there and a stockholder in the Pleasants County Bank of St. Marys. James B. Powell is a democrat, and is a trustee and active supporter of the Methodist Protestant Church. He married Miss Alice Jennie Lucas, who was born in Pleasants County August 24, 1869. Two sons were born to their marriage. The older, Edmond Perry, died September 14, 1913, at the home farm at the age of twenty-six.

Jonathan Corbley Powell was reared on the farm of his father, attended rural schools, completed a business course in a business college at Marietta, Ohio, in 1908, during 1909-10, was a student in the preparatory department of West Virginia University at Morgantown, and finished his literary education in the Fairmont State Normal School in 1912. In 1913 he entered West Virginia University, law department, graduating LL. B. with the class of 1917.

Mr. Powell was first honored with the office of prosecuting attorney of Pleasants County in November, 1916. He was inaugurated January 1, 1917, and at once appointed an assistant to conduct the office until June 17, 1917, when, having graduated, he took personal charge. In the meantime America had entered the war with Germany, and, his application being accepted, he entered the Second Officers Training Camp at Fort Benjamin Harrison, Indiana, August 24, 1917. He was in training there and was commissioned second lieutenant November 23, 1917, being ordered to report to the Eighty-fourth Division at Camp Taylor, Kentucky, and was assigned to Headquarters Company of the Three Hundred and Thirty-sixth Infantry. April 22, 1918, he was transferred to Camp Gordon at Atlanta, being made an instructor in the Infantry Replacement Troops in the Manual of Courts Martial in the Smoke, Gas and Flame School, Second Division. June 17, 1918, Lieutenant Powell was transferred to Camp Hancock, Augusta, Georgia, school of machine gun fire, and on July 25, 1918, was promoted to the rank of first lieutenant and assigned as a company commander and instructor in the Fourth Officers Training School in Machine Gun work at Camp Hancock. He also instructed in the branches of manual of court martial and in the machine gun work and in the gas, flame and smoke school and was instructor in hand grenades. His work at Camp Hancock was of a very arduous nature, and he was exceptionally gifted for the varied duties to which he was assigned.

Lieutenant Powell received his honorable discharge February 6, 1919, and at once returned to St. Marys and took over the duties of prosecuting attorney in person. November 3, 1920, he was re-elected for another term of four years, his term running from January 1, 1921, to January 1, 1925. Mr. Powell is a republican, and a member of the County and State Bar Associations. He is a stockholder in the Archer Cord Tire & Rubber Company at Minneapolis. Among other real estate he owns at St. Marys is a handsome stucco residence, which he completed for his own family in 1921. Mr. Powell is present noble grand of St. Marys Lodge No. 22, Independent Order of Odd Fellows.

July 20, 1918, at Augusta, Georgia, he married Miss Lillian Grey Hackney, daughter of James M. and Martha J. (Grey) Hackney, of Morgantown, where her father is a contracting carpenter. Her father graduated A. B. from West Virginia University in 1892. Mrs. Powell is a graduate of the Morgantown High school and was in the junior class of West Virginia University when she was married. She had also taught three terms in the Morgantown public schools. Mr. and Mrs. Powell have two daughters, Rosemary, born April 27, 1919, and Margaret Grey, born October 13, 1921.

HIRAM HUTSON. There is scarcely a better known citizen of Doddridge County than Hiram Hutson, who has lived here all his life, has gained the confidence and respect of an increasing circle of friends and associates, has been a teacher and farmer, and recently was re-elected without opposition to a second term as clerk of the County Court.

He was born on a farm in Doddridge County July 14, 1877, son of Jimison and Ellen (Law) Hutson, and a grandson of Winter and Sarah (Davis) Hutson. Both Jimison and Winter Hutson were natives of Harrison County and moved to Doddridge County when Jimison was two years old. Jimison Hutson was for over eighty years a resident of Doddridge County, a successful farmer, and died at the age of eighty-three years and eight months. He never had a physician attend him in illness until within three months of his death. He was a republican in politics and an attendant of the Methodist Church. His first wife, Ellen Law, was a native of Harrison County, daughter of William Law. She died at the age of fifty-five. The second wife of Jimison Hutson was Eleanor Stackpole. He was the father of eight children by his first marriage and two by the second.

Hiram Hutson had the environment of a farm during his youth and early manhood. After completing his education in the public schools and at Salem College he began teaching in 1895, and for upwards of twenty years his time was divided between teaching and the management of his own farm. He kept his residence on his farm until 1914, in which year he was elected for his first time as county clerk. He was in office six years, and in that time made such a record of efficiency that in 1920 he was reelected without having any opposition from the democratic party. Mr. Hutson is a local leader in the republican party of Doddridge County, a member of the Baptist Church and is affiliated with the Masonic Order and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows.

In 1898 he married Miss Virginia McDonald, a native of Taylor County, and a daughter of Nathan and Mary McDonald.

WILLIAM J. McELHINEY. While his early training as a banker was acquired at Baltimore, Mr. McElhiney's working interests in that field for the past decade have been in West Virginia. He is especially well known in Doddridge County, where he is cashier of the First National Bank of West Union.

Mr. McElhiney was born May 25, 1884, at St. Joseph, Missouri, son of William J. and Mary (Watkins) McElhiney. His father was born at Annapolis, Maryland, and his mother, near that city. For only a brief time his parents lived in Western Missouri, and they then returned to their native state, so that William J. McElhiney, Jr., was reared at Baltimore. He finished his education in a Friends private school of that city, and after school went into the service of a Baltimore banking institution.

On coming to West Virginia Mr. McElhiney was connected with the first National Bank of Fairmont until 1913, when he became and has since served as cashier of the First National Bank of West Union. He married in 1910 Miss Eliza Jones, who was reared at Cincinnati. They have three children: William J. III, Richard Garrett and Thomas Watkins McElhiney.

WADE LINGER is superintendent of school for Lewis County, a capable and progressive educator, and has devoted his talents with singular energy and fidelity to the great cause of education.

Mr. Linger was born in Lewis County April 24, 1886, son of Henry and Sarah E. (Smith) Linger. His father was born in Lewis County February 11, 1839, and his mother was born in the same county December 15, 1849. Both are now deceased. They had only the advantages of the local schools, and after their marriage located on a small farm and gave their lives to the routine of home and farm and the rearing and training of their children. Both were faithful members of the Methodist Protestant Church, and the father was a democrat. Of twelve children nine are still living, Philip L., David H. and Marion C., all farmers; Clara B., wife of W. B. Curtis; Mandeville, of Parkersburg, where he is a teacher in the public schools; Ida, wife of C. C. Sharp; Warren, a teacher in Wood County; Wade; and Preston, in the railway mail service on the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad.

Wade Linger spent his youth on the home farm and as one of a large household bore his share of its duties in addition to making the best possible use of his opportunities in the common schools. He is a graduate of a State Normal School of West Virginia, taught several terms of country school and was principal of the Roanoke graded school until his election as county superintendent of schools for Lewis County in 1918. Mr. Linger was chosen for a four year term, and in spite of some difficulties in the way of progressive school administration during the reconstruction period he has done much to improve the schools individually and collectively. He is unmarried, is a member of the Methodist Protestant Church, a republican in politics, and a charter member of the local lodge of Foresters. He is also a member of the Knights of Pythias, the Pythian Sisters, the Junior Order of the United American Mechanics, and the Grange.

ROYAL J. BYRUM. One of the largest concerns in the country supplying industrial housing is located at Wheeling, the R. L. Byrum's Sons Company, a group of enterprising young men who have perfected their organization to a point where they are able to supply housing facilities almost to the extent of an entire town in the briefest period of time.

The secretary of the R. L. Byrum's Sons Company is Royal J. Byrum, who was born in Kansas City, Kansas, November 17, 1885. His grandfather, Eli Byrum, was a native of South Carolina and as a boy went to Randolph County, Indiana, where his parents were pioneers. He had a large farm in Eastern Indiana, and lived there the rest of his life. His second wife was Lucinda Fields, who was born and died in Randolph County. The Byrums are of old English stock. Three children of Eli and Lucinda Byrum are still living, Robert L.; Enoch E., a clergyman of the Church of God living at Anderson, Indiana; and Noah H., who is treasurer of the Gospel Trumpet Publishing Company at Anderson, Indiana.

Robert L. Byrum was born in Randolph County, Indiana, in 1856, was reared and married in that county, spent his early life on the farm, and at the age of twenty became a carpenter contractor. In 1884 he moved to Kansas City, Kansas, where he followed his trade, but later returned to Indiana and was located at Marion in Grant County until 1899. In that year he moved to Moundsville, West Virginia, and in 1908 established his home at Martin's Ferry, across the river from Wheeling. He is still active in his business as a contractor, and is director and treasurer of R. L. Byrum's Sons Company. He began voting as a democrat, but in later years has been a republican. He is an active supporter of the Church of God. Robert L. Byrum married Mollie J. Mangas, who was born in Randolph County, Indiana, in 1858. Royal J. is the oldest of their five sons. Russell R., the second, is managing editor of the Gospel Trumpet Publishing Company at Anderson, Indiana. The other three sons are all officials of the R. L. Byrum's Sons Company, Ralston E. being president, Leo V., vice president, and Don J., general superintendent. These sons reside at Wheeling.

Royal J. Byrum was educated in the public schools of Indiana, attended high school at Moundsville, West Virginia, and up to 1904 was a student in the Wheeling Business College. For 1½ years he was assistant secretary of the Wheeling Board of Trade and then became assistant to the manager of the Wheeling Traction Company, continuing in the service of that corporation for twelve years. July 19, 1917, he became secretary of the R. L. Byrum's Sons Company. There is only one other industrial housing firm in West Virginia that vies in extent of business with the R. L. Byrum's Sons Company. This company specializes in the building of miners' homes, and its service contracts for that work cover nearly all the important mining fields in Ohio, West Virginia and Western Pennsylvania. The company's offices are in the Wheeling Bank & Trust Company Building.

Royal J. Byrum is a republican, a member of the Church of God, and was a participant in all the local drives for funds during the World war. He owns a modern home at 409 Wheeling Avenue in Pleasanton, Wheeling. April 28, 1906, at Moundsville, he married Mary R. Peters, daughter of Thomas and Lydia (McKen) Peters. The parents live at Moundsville, where her father is a mine fire boss. Mr. and Mrs. Byrum have four children: Bernard R., born February 23, 1908; Dorothy M., born October 28, 1909; Robert, born March 15, 1915; and Royal J., Jr., born January 14, 1921.

WILLIAM J. S. HARMER. Prosperity is not only a matter of material possessions, but, even better, of that happiness which results from doing for others. It is prosperity of this kind that is reflected in the career of William J. S. Harmer, at the head of the oldest established business in Shinnston. With two exceptions he has lived longer in that, his native town, than any resident still there.

He was born at Shinnston February 13, 1856. His father came to Shinnston in 1852, and in the same year established himself in business as a wagon-maker and undertaker. The chief service of the undertaker at that time was to provide the casket. William J. S. Harmer as a boy became an apprentice to his father and learned the trade of wagon-maker and the profession of undertaking. When his father died his will contained a provision that his son, William, buy and continue the old established business. It was in compliance with that request that W. J. S. Harmer became proprietor and has continued the business up to the present time. Within his own experience have come about and have been introduced into his establishment at Shinnston many of the most important advances in the undertaker's art. He has kept his service apace with the demands of the time and he has provided the facilities and service of a high class funeral director, and many times has virtually taken the place of the minister in reading the burial service and delivering the general sermon. This part of his work is not merely professional, but the proceeds from an honest Christian character and conduct maintained since boyhood when he was converted and became a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. He early began the performance of official duties in his church, and for fifty-six years has been a regular attendant at Sunday School, having failed to attend such service only three Sundays, when providentially hindered. For thirty years he was superintendent of the Sunday School. This is a record such as few West Virginians can exhibit.

Mr. Harmer on January 15, 1880, joined the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and from that date has been a zealous member of the fraternity. He has also rendered public duty as a citizen, holding a number of offices, including three terms as street commissioner, two terms as assessor, a number of terms on the City Council and five terms as mayor of Shinnston. In politics he has always been a republican.

The life of Mr. Harmer has been an exceedingly active one, and exemplary in every relationship. His word is regarded as good as his bond, and he has always maintained the strictest regard for honesty and the keeping of a promise.

Mr. Harmer is descended from an old and highly respected American family. His great-grandfather, Jacob Harmer, was a soldier in the Revolutionary war. After doing his uty as a patriot soldier he located at Germantown, Pennsylvania. His son, Jacob Harmer, Jr., was born at Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, January 23, 1794, and died at Winchester, Virginia, March 8, 1868. He married Eliza Tyson Hamer, their children were: Benjamin Tyson, Peter Ham, Emily Susan, James Albert, Theodorick S., John E., Edgar R., Mary J., Anna Virginia, Joseph J. and William H. H.

Benjamin Tyson Harmer, the father of the Shinnston business man and citizen, was born January 1, 1824, and died December 4, 1890. He lived at Shinnston from 1852 until his death, and in that time he exerted the influence of a high character and a busy life upon the community. He was an active member and trustee of the Methodist Episcopal Church for thirty-six years, was a veteran member of the Odd Fellows, served at one time as president of the County Court and was a republican.

He married Margaret Shepler, and their children were: Benjamin Tyson, William J. S., James Albert, Lloyd M., Mary Virginia, Harvey Walker, Charles Leslie and Elizabeth. On June 17, 1880, William J. S. Harmer married Ida Susan Werry. She was born near the Natural Bridge in Amherst county, Virginia, August 7, 1859. The children born to the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Harmer are: Frank Roscoe, who died at the age of nine years; Ella C., who died when six years old; Josephine, born October 16, 1888; Edgar J., born June 11, 1891; and Beulah, born July 13, 1894.

Edgar J. Harmer, now associated with his father in business at Shinnston, in the firm of William J. S. Harmer and Son, was a volunteer in the great war, joining the Naval Reserve Corps May 7, 1918. He was in training for a time and was then detailed to the Medical Officers' Armed Guards at Newport News, Virginia, and served there until his honorable discharge on February 3, 1919.

F. S. SUDDARTH, M. D. The able service of the physician and surgeon has been only part of the record Doctor Suddarth has made since becoming a resident of Grafton twenty years ago. His resources and influence have in a very real sense been contributed to the community's institutions and commercial advancement.

Of an old Virginia family, he was born at Monterey, Highland County, February 4, 1871. William Suddarth, his grandfather, lived at Charlottesville, and his mother was a sister of General Sumner, one of the brilliant officers of the revolution. William Suddarth married a Miss Mann, and they had four sons. Two of them became soldiers of the Civil War, James, now living at Clarksburg, West Virginia, and Joseph, a resident of Kingfisher, Oklahoma.

Frank Suddarth, father of the Grafton physician, was born in Albemarle County, and when he was about six years of age his father removed to Upshur County. He was living there when the Civil war broke out, and, differing from his two brothers on the issues of that conflict, he volunteered in the Confederate Army, joining the Upshur Grays, under Colonel Higginbotham. He was wounded at Rich Mountain and again at the Wilderness, but came out of the army with no serious afflictions. After his marriage he remained in Highland County, engaged in farming in the country bordering the beautiful Shenandoah Valley, and died there in 1906, at the age of seventy-four.

His wife, Susan Frances Seiver, a native of Highland County, was the daughter of James Seiver, a full-blooded potter and a tailor by trade. She died in April, 1874, aged twenty-nine, leaving three children: Ada, wife of Albert Wagner, of Monterey, Virginia; Doctor Suddarth; and a son, Reuben, of California.

In common with other enterprising youth bent on making something of themselves, and without the facilities of wealth to aid their command, Doctor Suddarth had problems to solve as soon as he was old enough to appreciate them. He attended public schools, a normal school in Virginia, and then entered the National Normal University at Lebanon, Ohio, where he had the fortune to come under the influence of that brilliant educator, Professor Holbrook, then in charge there. After graduating in 1891 Doctor Suddarth returned to his home state, and for seven years bestowed his talents on teaching. His last work in that line was done in the country schools of Highland County.

In the meantime he was making progress in private studies needed in his medical college course, and also carried on work in the medical department of the University of Virginia, where he graduated in 1897. For five years he looked after his growing practice at Williamsville in his native state, and part of the time was county health officer. Leaving there, he was in New York a student for five months in the Post-Graduate School of Medicine, and with this additional training to supplement his practical experience he established himself in Grafton in 1902. Here his professional interests have had a widening scope of service. He was one of the builders, with Dr. R. H. Powell, of the Grafton City Hospital. For four years he was president of the Grafton Board of Education. The other members of this board, which among other things accomplished the monumental task of building the new high school, were N. F. Kendall and O. Jay Fleming, local bankers, and W. A. Beavers and G. W. Steele.

Doctor Suddarth has proved his faith in Grafton to the extent of his capital and enterprise. He built several homes on the West Side, is a director in the Taylor County Bank, a stockholder and president of the Grafton Mercantile Company, and formerly had interests in other commercial enterprises of the city. On the outside he has done much in coal development, was formerly vice president of the Fairmont Coal Company, is now vice president of the Fort Grand Coal Company, is president of the Suddarth Coal Company, and owner of some undeveloped coal lands.

Coming of a democratic family, he has been satisfied to vote in the same political faith. He is an elder in the Presbyterian Church, and in Masonry is a past high priest of the Royal Arch Chapter, past eminent commander of the Knights Templars, and a member of Osiris Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Wheeling. In Bath County, Virginia, December 10, 1903, he married Miss Eddie McClintic, daughter of William and Hettie (Montgomery) McClintic, she being second in their family of six sons and three daughters, three of the sons being now deceased. Mrs. Suddarth finished her education with a course in kindergarten training at Washington, and was a teacher until her marriage. Doctor and Mrs. Suddarth have two children: Gertrude, a student in Fairfax Hall, Virginia; and Glen, in the Grafton schools.

ALFRED A. HOLT, a native of Grafton, has been one of the enterprising business men of that city for a number of years. In continuous experience he is one of the oldest druggists, and has a number of other interests that have their share in making that one of the important centers of commerce in West Virginia.

Mr. Holt, who was born March 15, 1875, represents a prominent family. He is the second child of James W. and Anna J. (Jordan) Holt. His father, whose record is given in more detail elsewhere, was the Henry Watterson of the newspaper profession in Taylor County.

Alfred A. Holt finished his education in the Grafton High School in 1896, and then became assistant postmaster under his father. He was in that office six years, and then during an interval, while developing some plans for independent business, he spent several months in the employ of Armour & Company. He then joined with Harry Magill and Dr. W. B. Stuck in the purchase of the property of the Grafton Drug & Chemical Company. On establishing a retail store on the West Side he retired from the former business, but subsequently again became its owner by purchase, and directed its affairs until it was acquired by Dr. Stuck and Fred B. Watkins.

Mr. Holt now devotes his chief time to his growing and prosperous retail drug business on the West Side. The building in which this is located, erected by him in 1912, is a three-story brick, with two business rooms and four apartments. It was not regarded as a profitable investment at the time, but it proved so with the increasing population and the great demand for living quarters. Most of the capital Mr. Holt put into this building he acquired through an investment and enterprise in the lumber regions of Greenbrier County, where he was one of the stockholders in the Maryland Lumber Company, which manufactured lumber for the jobbing and wholesale trade.

Mr. Holt inherits his politics from his father, who was one of the active republicans of the county and exercised a great influence in making Taylor County a stronghold of that party. He cast his first presidential vote for McKinley in 1896 and his last for Harding in 1920. Fraternally he is a past chancellor of Grafton Lodge, Knights of Pythias, has been a delegate to the Grand Lodge, and is a member of the Moose and Elks. He was reared in the faith of the Lutheran Church.

In Taylor County August 28, 1904, Mr. Holt married Miss Lena Hazel Leonard, daughter of William B. and Lucy (Thorn) Leonard. Her father, who has been a life-long resident of Taylor County, is passenger car foreman for the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad at Grafton. Mr. and Mrs. Holt have one daughter, Alice Margaret, born in 1916.

RAY M. PARRISH, president of the Parrish Realty Company of Grafton, has been a resident of West Virginia over twenty years, and his business interests have had an increasing scope and range of importance. Outside of his private affairs he has exercised a decided influence for good in the community of Grafton, his public spirit being one of the reliable assets in any concerted movement for the common welfare.

He was born in Crawford County, Pennsylvania, January 9, 1879. His father, Robert Parrish, was born in Potter County of the same state March 12, 1850, was reared there and acquired a liberal education, being a graduate of one of the Pennsylvania state normals. He was a cheese-maker in Crawford County, then an oil field worker, and gradually drifted into the lumber industry. For a time he was a merchant in Jefferson County of his native state, where he organized a trust company. His home is now at Reynoldsville, Pennsylvania, and he continued active in business until past the age of seventy. His first wife, Effie Scott, a daughter of C. D. Scott, was born at Spartansburg, Pennsylvania, and died in 1894. Her children were: Ray M.; Fern, wife of J. S. Howard, of New York; Leah, wife of Virgil Martin, of Gallipolis, Ohio; Florence, the widow of George H. Pryor, of Martins Ferry, Ohio; and Otis Everett, of Grafton. Robert Parrish by his second marriage, to Carrie Fleming, has two children, Frank and Olive, the former a graduate of Allegheny College and now a sophomore in the law department of the University of Michigan; while Olive is teacher of English in the high school at Kittanning, Pennsylvania.

Ray M. Parrish spent his youth and acquired his public school education in Crawford, Warren and McKean counties, had four months of high school work at Marionville and a business college course at Warren, this constituting the broad basis of his business training and experience. A valuable asset to him as a real estate man was a year's course in the Sprague Correspondence School of Law at Detroit.

The successive steps in his early business career included a brief service with Elisha K. Kane, a lumber manufacturer at Kane, Pennsylvania, and in February, 1898, leaving Forest County, he came to West Virginia as bookkeeper for the Clarion Lumber Company in Taylor County. At the end of the first year he was promoted to manager, conducting the business four years. This was followed by an independent venture as a lumber manufacturer, associated for a year with E. L. Sawyer. Selling out, he returned to the Clarion Lumber Company, which transferred him to the management of the plant at Manquin, King William County, Virginia, where he remained twenty-one months.

On his return to Grafton he engaged in the printing business, organizing and operating the Eclipse Printery in association with U. S. Huggins for two years. Mr. Parrish then became associated with his father and with C. A. Yeager, under the firm name of Parrish & Yeager, in the real estate business at Marlinton, Pocahontas County, specializing in timber lands. A year later Mr. Parrish returned to Grafton, and under the name R. M. Parrish began his operations in the local real estate field and also handling insurance. The Parrish Realty Company was incorporated in August, 1913, Mr. Parrish being president and owner of the majority of the stock. His brother Otis E. Parrish, has been in the firm since 1918, and is secretary-treasurer of the company.

With every organized effort since he came to Grafton, with a view to promoting the commercial and civic welfare, Mr. Parrish has been associated. He was a charter member of the old Board of Trade, the predecessor of the former Business Men's Association, and was secretary of the board. Then came other organizations, including the Chamber of Commerce, and the reorganization of this body was largely due to his personal influence and leadership. He is president of the Chamber of Commerce, which is now engaged on a broad constructive program for the advancement of Grafton and vicinity.

Mr. Parrish was chairman of the finance committee and member of the water committee of the Grafton City Council some ten years ago, when the contract was let for the new water works and the city park purchased as a water plant site; this has since been improved for a public park, bathing and recreation center. Mr. Parrish is a republican, chairman of the county campaign committee in 1916, was delegate to the state convention at Wheeling where delegates to the national convention were chosen, and was a member of the congressional committee of the Second District where W. G. Conley was the party candidate.

Mr. Parrish married at Wheeling, in 1901, Miss Rosal Thayer, daughter of John R. Thayer, a retired farmer at Grafton and one of the county's earliest and best known citizens. Mrs. Parrish died in October, 1911, leaving three children, Helen, Coral and Hubert. December 25, 1919, Mr. Parrish married, in Taylor County, Miss Helen Crickenberger, a native of Giles County, Virginia. Her father, Rev. P. T. Crickenberger, is a Lutheran minister of Grafton. Her mother was member of the Payne family, and her maternal grandmother was an Early, Mrs. Parrish being a great-niece of General Jubal Early. Mr. Parrish attends the Baptist Church, and while he is not a member he is in thorough sympathy with the church and organized religious endeavors. Mrs. Parrish is a member of the Lutheran Church, of which her father is the pastor.

MERTON A. SYBERT is a leader in the moving-picture theatrical business in Marshall County, West Virginia, and is recognized as one of the most vital and progressive business men and loyal citizens of Moundsville. Here he owns and conducts two modern theaters of this type, the Strand and the Park, and at McMechen, this county, he owns and operates the Midway Theater. The Park was opened in 1912, with a seating capacity of about 300, which has since been increased to 750. The seating capacity of the Midway is 553. Mr. Sybert erected the Strand Theater in 1920, at a cost of $100,000, including equipment, and this fine modern amusement resort was opened to the public on November 15th of that year, the house having a seating capacity of 1,050. Mr. Sybert is financially interested also in theaters at Marietta and Cambridge, Ohio, under the title of the C. & M. Amusement Company. Mr. Sybert made his initial appearance in the theatrical field in 1910, when he became the operator of a house at Marietta, Ohio. In 1912 his capitalistic resources were less than $1,000, and he not only lost the amount which he thus invested but also a position that was yielding him $1,500. He retained his confidence in the possibilities for successful amusement enterprise at Moundsville, and as soon as he was able to eliminate competition of adverse order he made rapid advancement, overcoming obstacles that presented and made his way forward to the goal of substantial success.

Mr. Sybert is president of the Moundsville Chamber of Commerce, a director of the local Rotary Club, and in the Masonic fraternity he has completed the circle of both the York and Scottish Rite bodies. He is a past master of Phoenix Lodge No. 73, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, at Sistersville, this state, and is also a past high priest of the Chapter, Royal Arch Masons, at that place. He is a member of Nemesis Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S., of Parkersburg, West Virginia. He has been influential in the councils and campaign activities of the democratic party within the period of his residence in West Virginia, and in 1920 was his party's nominee for the State Senate in which connection he made a vigorous campaign in a district that has a large normal republican majority, which he succeeded in reducing materially, though he failed of election, as he had anticipated.

At Sistersville was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Sybert and Miss Laura Blankensop, of Martin's Ferry, Ohio, and she is a popular figure in the social activities of Moundsville.

W. A. Sybert

Mr. Sybert was born in Armstrong County, Pennsylvania, and his early educational advantages were those of the public schools. As a boy he began to assist in his father's mercantile establishment, and as a youth he held for several years the position of assistant postmaster at Livingston, Montana. In 1895 he opened a retail grocery store in Sistersville, West Virginia, and later he became city treasurer for a wholesale grocery company at Marietta, Ohio. He finally found his maximum potential when he rected his energies into his present field of enterprise, in which he has gained both success and high reputation.

JEDEDIAH WALDO ROBINSON, member of the Grafton law firm of Warder & Robinson, has practiced law in his native county sixteen years, and in his capacity as a good lawyer and public-spirited citizen has achieved no little prominence in the community and its affairs.

Mr. Robinson was born in the county, near Grafton, June 1, 1881, and he bears a family name that has enjoyed honorable standing for many years. His grandfather, William Robinson, was born in Barbour County, was a farmer and cooper, was routed out of his native community by Confederate raiders at the time of the Civil war, and remained in Taylor County until some time in the seventies, when he returned to Barbour County, where he died in 1897, when about twenty years of age, and is buried at the Taylor's Drain cemetery. His wife was Mary Sayre, and their children were: Frank P., whose record follows; Mrs. Isaac Means, of Evansville, West Virginia; Rev. John S., of Fairmont; Mrs. T. A. Allison, who died in Barbour County; Mrs. Thomas Allen, who died in Iowa; Charles W., of Fairmont; Miss Mary, who died at Charleston; Mrs. S. H. White, of Clarksburg; and Judge Ira E., former judge of the Supreme Court of Appeals, and now commissioner of war minerals in the Department of the Interior at Washington.

Frank Pierce Robinson, father of the Grafton attorney, was born in Barbour County November 5, 1852, had a common school education, and having been trained to farming he has followed it as a permanent career. His home has been near Grafton for over forty years. While without professional interest in politics, he served on the county text-book board of the district board of education, and in 1912 was elected a republican to the County Court, serving six years, and during the last two years was president of the Court.

His father's farm was the environment of J. W. Robinson for a number of years. He attended country schools, graduated from the Grafton High School at eighteen, and then entered West Virginia University, where he pursued both the literary and law courses, receiving his A. B. degree in 1905 and the LL. B. degree in 1906. While in Morgantown he was chosen editor of the University weekly paper, and was a member of the "Mountain," (the English club), the only scholarship and honor society of the University at that time. He was also a member of the Sigma Nu fraternity.

He was admitted to the bar in Taylor County in 1906 and the bars of other counties later, then to the Supreme Court of Appeals of the state, and also the Federal District and Circuit Courts and the Circuit Courts of Appeal for the third and fourth circuits. He had the good fortune to begin practice with the distinguished lawyer, his uncle, Hon. Ira E. Robinson, and when the latter, in October, 1907, began his judicial service on the bench, his practice remained with his nephew and Hugh Warder, the firm of Warder & Robinson. His firm has an extensive general practice in all the state and federal courts and are attorneys for the Baltimore & Ohio railroad.

The work done by Mr. Robinson as a citizen is indicated by mentioning the fact that he served as president of the Grafton Chamber of Commerce, of which he is a director; is director and former president of the Y. M. C. A.; is a member of the board of advisory committee of Taylor County, delegated with the duty of assuring the wise expenditure of the proceeds of the million dollar bond issue for the construction of good roads; and is secretary of the Grafton Rotary Club. He gave his first presidential vote to Roosevelt in 1904, and has been steadfastly a republican, though hardly in politics at all. He is a member of the Official Board of the Methodist Episcopal church. During the war he found opportunity to render some useful service in connection with the various drives and auxiliary organizations.

In Taylor County, September 1, 1909, he married Miss Sarah Poe. She was born in this county June 21, 1879, daughter of Ed M. and Amelia (Williams) Poe. Mrs. Robinson acquired a commercial education, and is active in the D. A. R., in the Chamber of Commerce and other community movements. Their three children are: William, born in 1910; James, born in 1914; and Charles, born in 1917.

CHARLES W. STEEL, assistant cashier of the First National Bank of Grafton, has been a worker in the financial circles of that city for twenty years, and has taken an effective part in affairs of local citizenship as well.

He was born at Fetterman, Taylor County, May 19, 1880. His family has been represented in the service of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad for a long period of years. His grandfather, Charles Steel, was an Englishman, who entered the employ of the Baltimore & Ohio when a young man and continued with it until his death. He was for many years mason foreman for the road. He died when about seventy-five years of age, and is buried at Grafton. His wife, Sarah J. MacDonald, was a native of Virginia, and of their ten children the following lived to mature years: George Walter; James E.; William, who made his home in New York City, was an electrician, and died at Fetterman, West Virginia; Albert Lee, whose home the greater part of his life was in New York City, was also an electrician, was one of the first operators of a biograph, an early phase of the moving picture machine, and he lost his wife at sea, being washed overboard while traveling between Portland, Maine, and New York; and Mrs. C. C. Schuster, who has lived for many years in New York City but is now a resident of Logan, West Virginia.

James Edward Steel, father of the Grafton banker, was born at Woodstock, Virginia, and was ten or twelve years old when his parents moved to West Virginia. He learned his father's trade and early entered the Baltimore & Ohio service, became company foreman, then transferred to the train service, and for the past twenty years has been one of the efficient locomotive engineers of the company, with headquarters at Grafton. His first wife was Mary E. Nuzum, of the well known family of that name in Grafton. She died in 1895, Charles W. Steel being her only child. The second wife of James E. Steel was Agnes B. Gardner, who was born in Belfast, Ireland, of Scotch parentage, and lived for a time at Belfast, and came to the United States from the vicinity of Bedford, England, where she had been visiting a sister.

Charles W. Steel acquired his early education at Fetterman, in an old schoolhouse that during Civil war times has been used as a Government hospital. He also attended a private business college at Grafton, leaving to begin work at the wage of three dollars a week as office boy for the Joseph Speidel Grocery Company at Grafton. Five years later, when he left that company, he was doing the work of salesman and all-around man in the office. With this training and record of efficiency he went into the Grafton Banking & Trust Company in 1903. Here he was promoted to assistant cashier, and was with the company fifteen years. In 1918 he became assistant cashier of the First National Bank.

At all times he has regarded his citizenship as a duty, and never more so than during the World war period. He was secretary of the County Council of Defense and treasurer of all the local war organizations. Mr. Steel is the oldest in point of continuous service among the members of the Board of Education. He is a democrat in politics, a member of the Rotary Club, and since childhood has been a communicant of St. Matthias Episcopal Church. Since he was twenty-one years of age he has been a member of Friendship Lodge, Knights of Pythias, of which he is a past chancellor, and has represented the lodge in Grand Lodge at Wheeling an Elkins. In Masonry he is a past master, past high priest and past eminent commander of the York Rite bodies at Grafton, is orator of the eighteenth degree of the Scottish Rite, and is a member of Osiris Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Wheeling.

At Grafton, in June, 1909, Mr. Steel married Miss Viola Louise Miller, of McKeesport, Pennsylvania, a daughter of Henry J. and Elizabeth (Dittme) Miller. Her father is a native of Holland, who crossed to this country when a child.

He became a pioneer steel mill worker in the mills at McKeesport. Her mother is a native of McKeesport. All of their eleven children are still living, Mrs. Steel being the third youngest child. She was educated in the public schools. Mr. and Mrs. Steel have one son, Charles W., Jr., born November 8, 1910.

OLE EVERETT WYCKOFF, one of the ablest members of the Grafton bar, has depended on his own exertions for the success he has achieved. He started with the advantage of a good and honorable name, one that has been identified with West Virginia for considerably more than a century, and with this continent antedating the independence of the United States of America. The first members of this family on coming to this country settled on Long Island, then New Amsterdam, in 1637. His great-grandfather, William Wyckoff, was living in Hardy (now Grant) County as early as the time of the war of 1812. He was a soldier in that conflict, serving in Captain Neville's company of the Sixth Virginia Militia, at the expiration of which term he reenlisted. Except for this military duty he devoted his years to farming, and about 1840 moved to what is now Taylor County. He was laid to rest in the family burying ground in the Court House District of that county. His first wife was Catherine Michael, who left two children, Alfred and Rachel, the latter dying in infancy. His second wife was Mary Shillingberg, and to this union were born fifteen children.

One of them was Samuel Wyckoff, who was born in Hampshire County April 24, 1825, and was fifteen years old when the family moved to Taylor County. His life was quietly spent in the rounds of his agricultural work, his home, his worship as a Baptist, and voting as a republican. He married Mary Ann St. Clair, daughter of Thomas St. Clair and member of another family of ancient residence in West Virginia. They had eight children: Harriet, wife of John Hannegan; Daniel B., noted below; Columbus; Susanna, who married Meigs Day; Claudius; Henrietta, who became the wife of Ellsworth Day; Charles; and Samantha, who married Leonidas Bord.

Daniel B. Wyckoff was born near the village of Simpson, Taylor County, December 22, 1849. Conditions were such that beyond the country schools he had no opportunity for education, and for a number of years he lived at Tyreconnell, Taylor County, clerking in stores and finding other employment. He also did coal mining for a time, but for nearly a quarter of a century his duties have been as a supervisor for the West Virginia Hospital for the Insane at Weston, though he has retained his home at Grafton for more than thirty years. He is a republican in politics. On June 13, 1872, he married Susan Virginia Bayly, a daughter of Usher S. and Jane (Stevens) Bayly. Their family of children consist of the following: Myrtle, wife of M. Edgar Coffman, of Cumberland, Maryland; Nettie, wife of Cornelius J. Burnside, of Pittsburgh; Ole Everett; Adelaide, who married William P. Sample, of Grafton; Harry G., of Fairmont; Holmes V., of Wheeling; Samuel B., who died at the age of three years; Frank Hite, who died at the age of two years; Claire, who became the wife of W. G. Menear, of Grafton; and Paul R., of Fairmont.

This consecutive account of the family now narrows down to the individual career of O. E. Wyckoff, of Grafton. He was born at Tyreconnell, Flemingington District, Taylor County, September 6, 1878, and in that community at an early age he went to work in the mines. His educational equipment consisted of what he had gained while attending the Flemingington District public schools and two terms in the old West Virginia College near there. Later he attended the West Virginia University. He taught school in the villages of Tyreconnell and Flemingington, and subsequently for a year was principal of the Fetterman School. While teaching he carried work in the summer normals at the University, also began reading law, qualifying for admission to the University Law School, where he finished his course and in May, 1904, was admitted to the bar.

Mr. Wyckoff has made his success in the law without forming a single partnership alliance. He has always been in general practice. He recalls with considerable amusement his first case. It was as counsel for a negro charged with felonious assault, and the trial resulted in a verdict for simple assault and a short jail sentence. The negro after his release promised his attorney to go to work and pay the fee. To encourage him as far as possible, Mr. Wyckoff gave him some of the old clothes from his scanty wardrobe and a quarter of a dollar and that was the last he ever saw of this first client.

For some years Mr. Wyckoff has had a growing share of corporation work. He is retained as counsel for the Taylor County Bank, the Bank of Flemingington and several large corporations, and represents other business concerns and estates. In the early years of his practice he was city attorney of Grafton two terms, and has performed the duties of referee in bankruptcy since appointed to that office by Judge Day. He has done some political work for his friends and his party, the republican, but he has never given his friends any encouragement when sounded as a possible candidate.

Mr. Wyckoff helped organize the Taylor County Bank and the Bank of Flemingington. He is president of the Grafton Rotary Club, a director of the Chamber of Commerce, and exerted himself without stint in behalf of home work to aid in winning the great war. He was chairman of the Legal Advisory Board of Taylor County and also one of the "four-minute" speakers. He is a member of the First Baptist Church and belongs to several fraternal orders.

In Taylor County July 12, 1905, he married Miss Mayme Bailey, who was born in the same community as her husband, one of the three children of Marshall and Anna (Clark) Bailey. Mrs. Wyckoff was born October 26, 1880. They have one son, Everett Bailey, born July 21, 1906, and a remarkable specimen of young physical manhood, standing six feet, two inches tall. He is proficient in his studies and is a member of the class of 1923 in the Grafton High School.

WILLIAM B. STUCK has devoted a large share of his active years to the drug business at Grafton, and is one of the prominent drug men of the state. His business is known as the Grafton Drug & Chemical Company.

Dr. Stuck, as he is always known, was born at Palatine, now part of the City of Fairmont, Marion County, March 30, 1860. His grandfather, Stephen Stuck, who married a Miss Hall, was a brother of Matthias Stuck, of Terra Alta, and a record of that branch of the family and its earlier generations is given elsewhere in this publication.

Squire H. Stuck, father of Dr. Stuck, was a native of Uniontown, Pennsylvania, and settled in Marion County, West Virginia, a few years prior to the Civil war. He was a miner by early training and experience, and at Fairmont he became boss or foreman of the old Rainey and Ore coal mines there. Although he had a family of eight children, he was one of the first to enlist in the Union Army when the Civil war came on, serving in Company G of the Fifteenth West Virginia Cavalry. He was in the war until the end, with the Army of the Potomac, and among other battles was at Gettysburg, Cedar Creek and Winchester. He was never wounded or captured. After the war he resumed coal mining, but about 1875 moved to Taylor County and spent the rest of his life on a farm near Grafton, where he died in 1905, at the age of eighty-six. He was a republican voter, and was a devout Methodist, helping build the first church of that denomination at Palatine, and for many years was superintendent of the Sunday School. He married Mary Jane Green, a native of Uniontown, Pennsylvania, who died in 1896. A brief record of their children is: Elizabeth, of Fairmont, widow of William Wallace; Lottie, widow of Nathan Hall, lives with a daughter in Ohio; Miss Laura, deceased; Nancy, who married Harry Butler and died at Fairmont; James W., who is identified with gold and silver mining in Sierra County, New Mexico; Eli L., a resident of Fairmont; William B., and Lawrence A., who died at Fairmont, leaving a wife and two children.

During the first fifteen years of his life William B. Stuck lived with his parents at the toll gate on the pike at Fairmont, and some of his first recollections were connected with the passing of soldiers back and forth over that road. He came to manhood on the farm in the suburbs of Grafton. He possessed a country school education, and when he left home he went to McKeesport, Pennsylvania, and entered the sheet mill of W. D. Woods & Company, who had the reputation of making the best sheet-iron in the country. He learned the trade and worked there four years, until illness compelled him to return home. After recovering, instead of resuming his trade, he became one of the promoters of and partner in the Grafton

H. L. Matson, M.D.

Drug and Chemical Company. While his first partner left the business and it has changed management four times, Dr. Stuck has been with it practically without interruption. This company is one of the large stockholders in the United Drug Company of Boston. Mr. Stack is a member of the Druggists' Association of West Virginia and the United Druggists Association.

In Allegheny City, Pennsylvania, in 1889, Dr. Stuck married Miss Katie B. McClurg, daughter of John McClurg, who with his wife was a native of Scotland and on coming to the United States settled around Pittsburgh and McKeesport. Mrs. Stuck was born at McKeesport, one of a family of six daughters and one son, the others still living being the wife of Dr. Cope, John McClurg of California, and a sister who recently died was the wife of I. N. Scott, a prominent stair builder of Pittsburgh. Dr. and Mrs. Stuck have three children. Mary Agnes is the wife of C. O. Brown, of Blueville, Taylor County, and has a son, Donald. The two younger children are Mary Elizabeth and William B., Jr. The latter graduated from high school in 1922. The daughters also graduated from the Grafton High. Mary Agnes graduated with high honors from Sadler's Business College, Baltimore, while Mary E. graduated from Clarksburg Business College.

FRANK L. MATSON, M. D. As a youth and young man Doctor Matson was in the railroad service, but finally began preparation for a professional career, and for the last fifteen years has carried on a busy practice as a physician and surgeon at Hundred in Wetzel County.

Doctor Matson was born at Watts Flats in Chautauqua County, New York, December 12, 1878. In the paternal line he is of Scotch ancestry. His grandfather was a native of New York State and an early farmer at Watts Flats, where he lived out his life. His wife was of Irish ancestry. James R. Matson, father of Doctor Matson, spent all his life at Watts Flats, where he was born in 1840 and died in 1895. He was a merchant, for twenty years was postmaster, was a republican in politics and was affiliated with the Methodist Episcopal Church and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. He was three times married. By his second wife he had a daughter, Pearl, now deceased. His third marriage was with Miss Elvira E. Hayes, who was born at Wattsburg, Pennsylvania, in 1860, and is now living at Canton, Ohio. Her two sons are Frank L. and James R., the latter an agent for the East Ohio Gas Company at Uhrichsville, Ohio.

Frank L. Matson acquired his grade school education in Watts Flats. About the time he completed school he earned telegraphy, and for five years was an operator with the Erie Railroad, the first two years acting as relief operator on different stations on the First Division. The last three years his service was chiefly at Saegerstown, Pennsylvania, as operator, though much of the time he spent in the train dispatcher's office at Meadville.

Doctor Matson first came to West Virginia in 1900 as telegraph operator at Pine Grove in Wetzel County for the Hope Natural Gas Company. He was there two years and filled a similar position one year at Uniontown in Wetzel County. In 1903 he entered the University of Louisville, and diligently pursued his medical studies until he graduated M. D. in 1906. After graduating he practiced a year at Littleton in Wetzel County, and since then has had his home and offices at Hundred. For the past eight years he had been local surgeon for the Baltimore & Ohio Railway Company, for five years has served as city health officer, and has a large private clientele both as a physician and surgeon. His offices are on Railroad Street, opposite the depot.

Doctor Matson is a republican, has served one year on the City Council of Hundred, is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church and is affiliated with Littleton Lodge No. 131, A. F. and A. M., West Virginia Consistory of the Scottish Rite at Wheeling, Osiris Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Wheeling, Hundred Lodge No. 200, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and Hundred Lodge No. 84, Knights of Pythias. He is a member of the Marshall County Medical Society and the State and American Medical associations. During the war he was a worker in all the local drives for the sale of bonds and other patriotic causes.

In June, 1910, at Wellsburg, West Virginia, Doctor Matson married Miss Emma Jane Kelley, daughter of James A. and Annie (Thompson) Kelley. Her mother died in 1921, at Wellsburg, where her father resides. Mrs. Matson, who is a graduate of the Wellsburg High School, is the mother of one son, Frank Lloyd, Jr., born June 28, 1912.

WILLIAM PAYTON BEANE, M. D. The leading physician and surgeon of Keystone, McDowell County, is Dr. William Payton Beane, whose work here for ten years has earned him all the honors that can possibly be accorded the skillful, conscientious and thorough practitioner.

Doctor Beane was born December 5, 1878, at Red Boiling Springs, Tennessee, son of John and Martha E. (Leonard) Beane, natives of the same state. His ancestors were largely Irish, and the families have been represented in Tennessee, North Carolina and Virginia. John Beane was a farmer, later a merchant, for eighteen years held the office of justice of the peace, and was a member of the Masonic Order and the Christian Church.

William Payton Beane acquired a public school education in his native county, and as he could not look to his parents for further help in the matter of education he depended upon himself and his labors. For thirteen years he alternately taught and studied, attended a normal school at Bowling Green, Kentucky, and by the exercise of great thrift and saving and by helping another he helped himself so that he was able to take three years in the University of Tennessee Medical School at Nashville. He finished his course at Memphis, graduating M. D. in 1912. During his junior and senior years he spent much time in clinics and hospital work at Nashville and Memphis.

After graduating Doctor Beane removed to McDowell County in 1912 and for three months did relief work in the Welch District. He then located at Keystone and began general practice. While he is not a specialist, his skill in handling children's diseases is especially acknowledged. He does a great deal of work in the Bluefield Sanitarium, St. Luke's Hospital at Bluefield, and in the Miners Hospital No. 1 at Welch. He has admirable personal qualifications for his profession, and the determined struggle he made in his early years has given him a quality that does not recognize defeat and his resourcefulness in handling the problems of disease is well known.

Doctor Beane in 1913, at Keystone, married Mrs. Alice Mae (Peery) Winston. Mrs. Winston by her former marriage has two sons, Charles and Roy, Charles being a truck driver for the Tazewell Lumber Company. Doctor and Mrs. Beane are members of the Christian Church, and he is affiliated with the Masonic Lodge. He is a member of the McDowell County, West Virginia State and American Medical Associations.

JOHN M. HEROLD, JR., cashier of the First National Bank of Webster Springs, the judicial center of Webster County, was born in Nicholas County, West Virginia, April 20, 1885, and is a son of Charles F. and Laura L. (Hutchinson) Herold, both likewise natives of Nicholas County, where the former was born in 1861 and the latter in 1863, both having been reared under the influences of farm life and both having received the advantages of the common schools of their native county, where they still maintain their home, the father being not only a successful farmer of Nicholas County but also owing and conducting a general store. Charles F. Herold is a democrat in politics, is affiliated with the Masonic Blue Lodge at Summersville, and he and his wife are active members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Of the nine children seven are living: Howard, a graduate of the Massey Business College at Louisville, Kentucky, is a resident of Clarksburg, West Virginia; John M., of this review, is the next younger; Elmer, who is at the parental home, was a member of the Seventy-ninth United States Infantry in the World war and served with the American Expeditionary Forces in France, where he was at the front on the Argonne sector and also took part in other conflicts; Bascom L., who likewise is now at the parental home, served in the World war as a member of the Three Hundred and Thirteenth Machine Gun Battalion, which was at the front and took part in a number of important battles in France, as a part of the Eighty-sixth Division; Misses Lulu and Bernice and also the youngest son, Delmas, are members of the parental home circle.

The influences and vitalizing activities of the home farm compassed the childhood and early youth of John M. Herold, Jr., and his preliminary education was acquired in the local schools. Thereafter he was graduated in the commercial or business department of Morris Harvey College, and he then continued his active association with the work and management of the old home farm for a period of ten years. In December, 1907, he became bookkeeper in the First National Bank of Webster Springs, and one year later he was advanced to the position of assistant cashier, of which he continued the incumbent seven years. He has since been the cashier of the institution and has been a resourceful executive in the upbuilding of its substantial business and making it an effective conservator of the interests of the community. The personnel of the official corps of the bank is as here noted: E. H. Morton, president; Dr. S. P. Allen, vice president; John M. Herold, Jr., cashier; and W. H. McCutcheon, assistant cashier. In addition to the president and vice president the directorate of the institution includes also T. M. Hicks, H. B. Nichols and O. C. Ferrell.

Mr. Herold has had no desire for special political activity but is a loyal supporter of the cause of the democratic party. He is affiliated with Addison Lodge No. 116, A. F. and A. M., and his wife is an active member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

September 15, 1909, recorded the marriage of Mr. Herold and Miss Ida Miller, who was born at Webster Springs and who received the advantages not only of the public schools of this village but also those of the Mountain State Business College at Parkersburg. Mr. and Mrs. Herold have four children: Charles (a student in the Junior High School), Ruth, Marjorie and John M., II.

WILL L. WOODDELL has so applied his professional ability and constructive energies as to gain secure vantage-ground as one of the prominent and successful members of the bar of Webster County, where he is established in practice at Webster Springs, the county seat.

Mr. Wooddell is a scion of sterling old Virginia ancestry and was born at Greenbank, Pocahontas County, West Virginia, on the 14th of March, 1876, a son of William J. and Martha J. (Gum) Wooddell, both natives of Virginia, where the father was born in Rockingham County. William J. Wooddell was long numbered among the honored and influential citizens of Pocahontas County, West Virginia, where he became a successful merchant and farmer, where he served two terms as county sheriff and where he was twice elected representative of the county in the House of Delegates of the State Legislature, his political allegiance having been given to the democratic party. Both he and his wife were active members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Of their children the eldest is Margaret, who is the wife of Dr. M. H. Dyer, a representative physician in the City of Charleston; Anna is the wife of Arthur Sheets, of Harrison County; Virgie is the wife of J. N. Craddock, a former mayor of Clarksburg, this state, she having formerly served as police matron in that city; Clara, who is the widow of J. Lee Conrad, attended the University of West Virginia and is now a popular teacher in the public schools at Clarksburg; Nettie is the wife of H. C. Thurmond, a retired lawyer and the present (1922) mayor of Webster Springs; Mattie is the wife of W. S. Wysong, of whom specific mention is made on other pages, she being a graduate of the West Virginia State Normal School at Glenville and having been a successful teacher prior to her marriage; Bantz S. is clerk of the County Court of Webster County; James W. is manager of the Waldo Hotel at Clarksburg; and Will L., of this review, is youngest of the number.

After having profited by the advantages of the public schools of Webster Springs, where the family home was established when he was a boy, Will L. Wooddell pursued higher academic studies by attending the State Normal School at Glenville. In 1900 he graduated in the law department of the University of West Virginia, his reception of the degree of Bachelor of Laws having been virtually coincident with his admission to the bar of his native state. He forthwith engaged in active general practice at Webster Springs and he has been an outstanding figure in his profession in this county, owing to his exceptional ability as a trial lawyer and his mature judgment as a counsellor. Since 1906 he has maintained a professional partnership with Senator Morton. He served two terms as prosecuting attorney of Webster County, and has been active and influential in the local councils of the democratic party. Mr. Wooddell is affiliated with Elk Fork Lodge No. 116, A. F. and A. M.; Sutton Chapter No. 129, R. A. M.; and Sutton Commandery No. 16, Knights Templars. Both he and his wife hold membership in the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

Mr. Wooddell wedded Miss Marguerite Miller, who was born and reared in Webster County and whose youthful education included a course in the State Normal School at Fairmont. Mr. and Mrs. Wooddell have four children: Holt is a successful teacher in the public schools of Webster Springs at the time of this writing, in 1922; Gordon is a student in the University of West Virginia; Marguerite is a graduate of the normal department of the Webster Springs High School; and Maurice is a student in the local high school.

BANTZ S. WOODDELL has shown naught of apathy or desultory interest in his prolonged service as a public executive in Webster County, and is giving a most circumspect and effective administration as county clerk, to which office he was elected in November, 1920, and the duties of which he assumed January 1, 1921. In 1905 he was appointed deputy sheriff of the county, and after serving four years in this position he was for six years the incumbent of the position of deputy county clerk, in which connection he made a record that marked him as a most eligible candidate for the office of county clerk, to which he was elected on the democratic ticket.

Mr. Wooddell was born at Greenbank, Pocahontas County, West Virginia, on the 8th of February, 1871, and is a son of William J. and Mattie J. (Gum) Wooddell, who removed to Webster Springs, judicial center of Webster County, when he was a lad of nine years. In the attractive village that is now his home Mr. Wooddell was thus reared to adult age, his educational work having in the meanwhile been carried forward in the public schools. Here also he served a practical apprenticeship to the printer's trade, the intricacies and mysteries of which he compassed in due course. After working for some time in the offices of the Webster Springs newspaper which had afforded him his training in the "art preservative of all arts," he was employed at his trade in the City of Charleston. Later he returned to Webster Springs, where he acquired a financial interest in the Webster Echo, with the publication of which he continued his active association until 1903, when he was appointed deputy sheriff, as previously noted in this context. He has been continuously in public service in the county since that year, and this fact in itself bears significant evidence of his executive efficiency and his personal popularity. As may be inferred from a previous statement, Mr. Wooddell is a stalwart advocate of the principles of the democratic party, and in the Masonic fraternity he is affiliated with Addison Lodge No. 116, A. F. and A. M.; Sutton Chapter No. 29, R. A. M.; and Sutton Commandery No. 16, Knights Templars.

April 18, 1899, recorded the marriage of Mr. Wooddell and Miss Gertrude Curry, and she passed to the life eternal in 1912, four children surviving her: Craddock C., who was born in April, 1900, and who is now in the aviation service of the United States Government at Manila, Philippine Islands; William B. is, in 1922, attending the Webster Springs High School; and the younger children are Ruth and June. For his second wife Mr. Wooddell wedded Miss Sallie M. Killow, of Oakland, Maryland, and they have three children: Mary Helen, Kathryn and Joeph Hopwood. Mrs. Wooddell is a popular figure in the social life of her home community, and is an active member of the local Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

D. W. Kull

DAVID WALTER NULL is a member of the firm Funk & Null, contractors in the drilling of oil and gas wells. Their headquarters are at Hundred in Wetzel County. During the eleven years this firm has been operating in West Virginia it is claimed for them that they never dug a hole and never moved a rig until the well was drilled. Mr. Null of this firm, has had a wide experience in the oil fields of the East and West, covering all the years since early youth.

He was born in Greene County, Pennsylvania, September 4, 1882. His father, David Null, still living at his home near Deep Valley in Greene County, was born in Westmoreland County, Pennsylvania, in 1839, and as a young man went to Greene County, where he married and where during his active life he conducted an extensive farm and did much business as a carpenter. He is now retired and is a democrat in politics. David Null married Lizzie Wright, a native of Deep Valley, and she died at the old home there. She was the mother of the following children: Mary, wife of Lloyd Strope, president of the First National Bank of Cameron, West Virginia; James H., an oil and gas well contractor living at Garrison, Pennsylvania; Lucy, wife of Burns Lemley, a native of Ned, Pennsylvania; Rachel, wife of Joe Sellers, a farmer near Deep Valley; Eva, wife of James Murphy, a merchant, stock dealer and prominent business man at Littleton, West Virginia; David Walter, the subject of this article; Miss Lotta and Miss Ada, still at home with their father.

David Walter Null attended the rural schools of his native county in Pennsylvania, and his activities were identified with his father's farm until he was eighteen. Since then he has been in some phase of the oil industry. The first three years he was a tool dresser in the Deep Valley field. During 1905 he began drilling in the Bartlesville field of Oklahoma, but in 1906 became identified with the drilling operations in the Wetzel County field near Hundred. In 1910 he formed his present association with Mr. Funk, and they have conducted an extensive business as reliable contractors for the drilling of oil and gas wells, and have a large capital employed in their tools and outfits and the operating expenses. His partner is Thomas I. Funk, and they own their office building on Wetzel road.

Mr. Null is also president of the Wetzel Natural Gas Company. He owns one of the best homes in this vicinity, located three-quarters of a mile west of Hundred, and has two other dwellings nearby. Mr. Null is a democrat, and during the World war responded with his means and influence in behalf of every patriotic drive.

January 17, 1906, at Bartlesville, Oklahoma, he married Cecile Virginia Riggs. Mrs. Null was born at Lewiston, Idaho, but represents an old West Virginia family and she graduated from the high school at St. Marys, this state, in 1905. Her father, Arthur Perry Riggs, was born near St. Marys in Pleasants County in 1841, was reared and married there, conducted a farm, and was a leading man in the democratic party of the county. He served as county commissioner and road supervisor. Twice he removed to the Far West, and he homesteaded a claim near Lewiston, Idaho, proving it up before he sold it. His daughter, Mrs. Null, was the first white child born in Nez Perce County, Idaho. Mr. Riggs is affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. During the Civil war he was a Southern man in sympathies, was a member of the Home Militia, and he received a silver cup for protecting Judge Jackson of Parkersburg from an attack by Northern men. Mr. Riggs married India Barker, who was born at Sylvan Mills in Pleasants County, December 9, 1851, and is now living at Holiday, Oklahoma. Mr. and Mrs. Null are the parents of six children: David Arthur, born November 8, 1906; Eugene Jennings, born March 2, 1908; Vaughn Aubrey, born May 12, 1911; Neil Nathan, born August 9, 1912; Orville Milton, born June 13, 1918; and Armond Walter, born June 4, 1920.

JOHN NEWTON CASEY. The entire industrial career of John Newton Casey has been passed in the employ of the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad Company, with which system he has advanced steadily to a position of importance. Starting in a minor capacity about eighteen years ago, his fidelity, industry and general ability have combined to gain him consecutive promotions and he is now chief car distributor at Huntington.

Mr. Casey was born at Ironton, Ohio, April 4, 1887, and is a son of John Newton and Minerva (Wright) Casey. His grandfather, John Casey, spent the greater part of his life in Lawrence County, Kentucky, where he was engaged in extensive agricultural operations and where his death occurred prior to the birth of his grandson. He married Mary Justice, who also died in Lawrence County. John Newton Casey, the elder, was born at Fallsburg, Lawrence County, Kentucky, July 13, 1843, and was reared in the vicinity of Ironton, Ohio. When the war between the states came on he enlisted in the Union Army, in a West Virginia volunteer infantry regiment, with which he served throughout the period of the struggle, and participated in numerous engagements, being with General Sherman's troops on their famous "march to the sea." He was within ten feet of General Sherman when he gave that historic command: "Turn, boys! Turn, we are going back. We will gain the ground we slept on last night, or there will be blood shed." Mr. Casey had an excellent military record, and after receiving his honorable discharge returned to the community of Ironton, Ohio, where he became a pioneer blacksmith. He spent the remainder of his life there, engaged in following his trade, and died at Lawrence Furnace, Ohio, a suburb of Ironton, February 12, 1887. He was a republican in his political views, and as a churchman acknowledged the Christian faith. At Louisa, Kentucky, he married Miss Minerva Wright, who was born at Grayson, Kentucky, July 12, 1860, now a resident of Ironton. They became the parents of four children: Harry, an apprenticed machinist at Ironton, Ohio; Mary, who resides with her mother; John Newton; and Dr. Chester A. Casey, who is now a prominent physician and surgeon at Boston, Massachusetts.

John Newton Casey, the younger, attended the public schools of Ironton, Ohio, leaving school in 1903. In the same year he commenced his connection with the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad Company, starting as bill clerk in the offices at Ironton, Ohio. Later he was promoted to the position of cashier, and this was followed by his advancement to the post of assistant agent at Russell, Kentucky. In August, 1913, he was transferred to Huntington, West Virginia, where he acted as ticket agent until July, 1917, and was then promoted to be chief clerk to the chief car distributor. In May, 1918, he was appointed car distributor at St. Albans, West Virginia, and January 1, 1919, was made night chief car distributor at Huntington. On January 1, 1921, he was advanced to be chief car distributor at Huntington, the position which he holds at this time. His offices are situated on the third floor of the passenger depot of the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad, on Seventh Avenue, between Ninth and Tenth streets. Mr. Casey is a thorough railroad man, and, having worked his way up through the various departments, has a comprehensive knowledge of details. He has found little time to devote to matters outside of the immediate line of his work, but takes a good citizen's interest in civic affairs and politics, and votes the republican ticket. His religious affiliation is with the Christian Church. Mr. Casey is a thirty-second degree Mason, and a member of Huntington Lodge No. 53, A. F. and A. M., West Virginia Consistory No. 1, of Wheeling, and Beni-Kedem Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S., at Charleston. He owns a pleasant and comfortable residence at No. 614 Fifth Street, one of Huntington's modern homes.

On September 6, 1916, Mr. Casey was united in marriage at Mobile, Alabama, with Miss Marie Richey, a graduate of Marshall College at Huntington, and a daughter of William C. and Mollie (Darling) Richey, residents of Huntington, where Mr. Richey is identified with the Varnum Realty Company. Two children have come to Mr. and Mrs. Casey: Mary Eloise, born May 17, 1918; and Anna Maxine, born November 30, 1919.

DRAPER C. HOOVER is, in 1922, serving his third consecutive term as a deputy sheriff of Webster County, maintains his residence at Webster Springs, the county seat, and is the owner of a well improved farm in the county. Mr. Hoover was born on a farm in this county, August 30, 1873, and is a son of William H. and Jerusha (McElvaine) Hoover, both natives of what is now West Virginia, the father having been born in Braxton County, on the 14th of March, 1845, and the latter having been born in Webster County, in 1842, and here her death occurred in 1909. William H. Hoover was reared on the old home farm of his parents in Braxton County, and gained his youthful education in the subscription schools of the locality and period and by ambitious application to study at home. He read much and with discrimination, gained broad information and was a specially appreciative student of history during the entire course of his life. After their marriage he and his wife lived on a farm in Braxton County about two years, and then came to Webster County, where he purchased the excellent farm which continued the stage of his productive enterprise until the close of his life, in 1890. He was a man of mature judgment, and thus wielded no little influence in community affairs of public order. His political faith was that of the democratic party, and he was at one time a candidate for the State Senate, his defeat being compassed by the political exigencies implied in the large republican majority given normally in the district at that time. He served under Sheriff P. F. Duffy as a deputy sheriff of Webster County and was also a member of the board of education of his district, both he and his wife having been zealous members of the Methodist Protestant Church. Of the thirteen children two died in infancy and eight are living in 1922.

Draper C. Hoover has reason to congratulate himself for having received in his boyhood and youth the sturdy discipline of the farm, for he was seventeen years of age at the time of his father's death, and his training had fortified him for the responsibilities which thus fell upon him in the management of the home farm for his widowed mother, with whom he remained until he had attained to the age of twenty-seven years and who was the object of his deep filial solicitude until her death. He has never severed his allegiance to the great basic industries of agriculture and stock-growing, and still maintains a general supervision of his valuable farm near Cowen, Webster County, besides which he is a director of the First National Bank of Cowen, of which he was formerly vice president. He is unwavering in support of the principles of the democratic party, and is affiliated with Cowen Lodge No. 176, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, of which he is a past noble grand and which he represented in the Grand Lodge of the state in 1898.

In January, 1900, Mr. Hoover wedded Miss Ella Payne, of Webster Springs, in which village she was reared and educated, she having been a popular teacher in the schools of her native county prior to her marriage. Mr. and Mrs. Hoover became the parents of four children, of whom the first-born, Fred C., died at the age of five years; Leo F. graduated in the Webster Springs High School and is now a successful teacher in the public schools of this village; Wealthy is attending the home high school and Lillian, the autocrat of the parental home, is three years old.

JAMES W. WHITE. That Mr. White is a citizen of maximum progressiveness and influence in Webster City, judicial center of Webster County, needs no further voucher than the statement that here he is serving as postmaster and is also editor, publisher and active manager of the Webster Republican, a weekly newspaper that is an effective exponent of local interests and of the principles of the republican party.

Mr. White was born at Kingwood, Preston County, West

Virginia, on the 2d of December, 1858, and is a son of John N. and Malinda J. (Feather) White, both likewise natives of Preston County, where the respective families were founded in the pioneer days, when that section was on the frontier of the western part of Virginia. John N. White was reared under the influences and conditions of the pioneer days, and in his youth learned the carpenter trade, to which he continued to devote his attention at Albright, Preston County, until the Civil war began. His loyalty to the Union was signalized by his prompt enlistment in 1861 as a member of a regiment of West Virginia volunteer infantry and he continued in active service, with a record of valor in numerous battles and minor engagements, until he was captured by Confederate forces and incarcerated in historic Andersonville Prison, the hardships of which he endured until his death, which there occurred in 1864. His widow survived him many years, both having become earnest members of the Methodist Episcopal Church long prior to the separation of the bodies of the denomination in the North and the South, incidental to the Civil war. They became the parents of four children: Letitia is the wife of William R. Shaffer, a representative teacher at Morgantown; James W., of this review, was the next in order of birth; Joseph C. is a prosperous farmer in Upshur; and Mrs. Eliza Forsythe is deceased, as is also her husband.

The schools of his native county afforded to James W. White his youthful education, and there also he served his apprenticeship to the printer's trade, which as a journeyman he thereafter followed in various newspaper offices. He became associated with E. M. Heermans as one of the editors and publishers of the Preston County Journal at Kingwood, and after a period of ten years he sold his interest in this paper and became editor and publisher of the Preston Leader and New Era. With this paper he continued his active alliance until 1910, when he purchased the plant and business of the Webster Republican, of which he has since been editor and publisher and which has been brought to a high standard under his vigorous and progressive management. While a resident of Kingwood Mr. White there served two years as postmaster, besides which he represented his native county two terms in the Lower House of the State Legislature. He has been a resolute and resourceful advocate and supporter of the principles and policies for which the republican party has ever stood sponsor in a basic way, and has done much to advance its local interests, both through his newspapers and his activity in its councils and campaign work. At Kingwood he still retains affiliation with Preston Lodge No. 90, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, and he is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. The maiden name of Mrs. White was Nettie F. Graham, and she likewise was born and reared in Preston County. They had children: Martha J., a graduate of Shepherd College, is the wife of William B. Snyder, of Shepherdstown, West Virginia, and Kathleen, who is deceased. Mrs. White, the mother of these children, died February 1, 1896. On March 5, 1921, Mr. White married Mrs. Helen Purinton Liady, of New York City, but a native of Preston County, West Virginia.

GEORGE W. JACKSON is giving most effective service as clerk of the Circuit Court for Webster County, and is one of the popular citizens of Webster Springs, the county seat. He was born in Greenbrier County, West Virginia, October 18, 1883, and is a son of William A. and Nannie B. (Brant) Jackson, both likewise natives of that county, where the former was born in 1861 and the latter in 1862, each having been reared on a farm and each having received the advantages of the local schools of the period. They still reside on the farm upon which they established their home at the time of their marriage and which is the stage of successful agricultural and live-stock industry, William A. Jackson being the owner of a valuable landed estate of 320 acres and having become one of the representative agriculturists and leading stock-growers of his native county. His political allegiance is given to the democratic party, and both he and his wife are members of the Baptist Church. Of the seven children all are living except one: Henry C. is a graduate of the Dunsmore Business

Samuel Whitepage

College at Lewisburg, judicial center of Greenbrier County; Naomi is the wife of W. P. Via; George W., of this sketch, was the next in order of birth; Gordon is a successful farmer in his native county; and Jennie and Clowny remain at the parental home.

In the public schools of Greenbrier County George W. Jackson continued his studies until his graduation from the high school at Lewisburg, and thereafter he graduated also from the Dunsmore Business College, besides which he took a course in the Moore School of Telegraphy in the City of Cincinnati, Ohio. Thereafter he served as telegraph operator and relief agent in the employ of the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad Company. He was for nine years with McGraw on the narrow-gauge line, was a station agent eight years, and for one year was treasurer of the narrow-gauge railroad. He was appointed postmaster of Webster Springs under the administration of President Wilson, and after retaining this office five years and four months and giving a most satisfactory administration he was, in the autumn of 1920, elected Circuit Court clerk for Webster County, the duties of which office he assumed January 1, 1921. He is the owner of one-half interest in the Webster Echo, a democratic weekly paper published at Webster Springs, and is a stockholder in the People's Store, a leading mercantile concern of this village. Mr. Jackson has wielded much influence in connection with the councils and campaign work of the Webster County contingent of the democratic party. He and his wife are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, of which he is a steward, and he is a past master of Addison Lodge No. 116, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons.

On the 4th of July, 1906, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Jackson and Miss Virgie Cool, and they have two daughters: Helen, born December 22, 1916, and Jean, born November 10, 1920.

JUDGE SAMUEL D. LITTLEPAGE was born at "Greystone," the Littlepage Mansion, west of Charleston, Kanawha County, West Virginia, on February 14, 1856. He was the fourth son of Adam B. Littlepage, Sr., and Rebecca Wood Littlepage, and one of their seven children. His father, Adam B. Littlepage, Sr., was a native of Virginia, of an old Virginian ancestry, more remotely Scotch-English, and was one of the early settlers in Kanawha County, West Virginia, in the late 30's. He first settled at Malden, Kanawha County, at that time a part of the State of Virginia. Later, in the early 40's, he moved down the Kanawha River to a point west of the Elk River, and there completed a home, known as "Greystone," in which he lived until the outbreak of the Civil war.

Rebecca Wood Littlepage, the mother of Judge Samuel D. Littlepage, was a daughter of the sturdy mountaineer Woods family, part of which family lived near the mouth of Coal River, Kanawha County, West Virginia.

Adam B. Littlepage, Sr., was a type of character peculiar to the southwest mountain section of West Virginia. At the outbreak of the Civil war he and his oldest son, John Littlepage, enlisted in the Confederate army. Adam B. Littlepage was killed in the army early in the war, and John Littlepage served throughout the conflict. At the death of his father another son, Charles Littlepage, the next oldest, ran away from home to take the place of his father in the Confederate army.

During the war the devastation by both the Federal army and Confederate army left the widow and the seven children of Adam B. Littlepage, Sr., with nothing but the land and home acquired by him—reduced from prosperity and plenty to actual want. The family clung together and sought to re-establish their fallen fortunes. The five boys remained on the farm and that, with their several efforts, together with the guiding genius and unflinching spirit of their mother, provided a livelihood for them all.

Two of the boys, Adam B. Littlepage, Jr., and Samuel D. Littlepage, were inseparable. By dint of their efforts and unflinching courage they acquired enough funds and a country school education with which to enable them to take up the study of their chosen profession, the law.

Judge Samuel D. Littlepage first studied law under the late Judge James Ferguson at his home at Charleston, West Virginia, and having earned enough money to pay his way he entered Washington and Lee University, and there completed his studies of law. He was admitted to the Charleston bar in 1886.

In 1887 Judge Littlepage and Miss Mary Kemp were married. His wife was a daughter of a Confederate soldier, Burrell Thomas Kemp, living at Albany, Georgia, who had served throughout the Civil war. Three children were born to them, a son, Burrell Kemp Littlepage, and two daughters, Mrs. Rebecca Littlepage Wood and Mrs. Charles Littlepage Donnelly.

Judge Littlepage was a democrat of the old school. He was defeated on his party ticket for circuit clerk in 1884 in Kanawha County. A few years later he was elected and served a term as assessor of Kanawha County. In 1912 he was elected circuit judge of the Tenth Judicial Circuit of West Virginia, composed of the counties of Kanawha and Clay. Between 1910 and 1912 he and his son were partners in the general practice of law at Charleston. The partnership was dissolved when he went upon the bench.

Judge Littlepage was known for his unceasing, untiring prompt, and fair discharging of his judicial duties on the bench. He had the rare faculty of successfully delving to the bottom of legal controversies submitted to him, and seemed gifted with the ability to arrive at just decision of the merits of the case, even more as a man than as a jurist coldly applying the technical gauges of the law. He gained the love and respect alike of members of the bar practicing before him, litigants submitting their causes to him, and the masses of the people who had placed him in the judgeship, which he held at his death, in a manner seldom, if ever, equaled as a tribute paid to any public man in the State of West Virginia.

He was possessed of a force of will and self-reliance and a courage above the average. In whatsoever undertaking he engaged his strong personality was a large factor, and his perseverance brought to him his success in life under conditions that would have discouraged a less sturdy and determined character. He feared no antagonist and was unfaithful to no client or trust. He was of a cheerful and optimistic disposition, and possessed a courtesy and gallantry typical of the old school of Southern gentlemen.

Having spent his childhood and early manhood outdoors in a sparsely settled community at a time and in a section where the use of a gun was treated as a necessary part of an education, it was but natural that his inclination throughout his life should be toward the great outdoors. He was an ardent hunter and fisherman, and gained from Nature a vision in his early years by his communion with her in her visible forms, that was materialized in his after life, not only in a love for his fellow men, but for all living creatures.

He was imbued with a spirit of kindness that was not the least of the qualities that drew all living things to him as their friend. He was a Mason and a member of the First Presbyterian Church.

His home, the family mansion "Greystone," was acquired by him in 1898 from the other heirs, after the death of his mother. His never-failing kindnesses and courtesy, his hospitality, and his standing as a man of integrity in his community where he lived brought to his home from all walks of life those who, because of his qualities, held for him a deep and true affection—and they were legion.

Judge Littlepage was an indefatigable worker. He had no set hours for applying himself to the duties of the judgeship, which he held immediately preceding his death. His seemingly untiring efforts in that respect were the immediate cause of his death. His steady application to the duties of his office finally told upon what had been an iron constitution. Possessed of a great physique—he was six feet in height and 200 pounds in weight—he did not realize the limitations placed upon all men, and in 1916, as a result of excessive application to his duties, he suffered a collapse. On August 19, 1917, at Atlantic City, New Jersey, where he had gone seeking relief and rest, he died. He was buried at Charleston, West Virginia, and two years later his wife, Mary Kemp Littlepage, followed him, in death his companion as faithfully as in life. His death was a loss not only to the bar, but to the community, and his epitaph is written more truly and fittingly in the hearts of his friends and acquaintances than could be recorded upon paper or stone.

BURRELL KEMP LITTLEPAGE, son of the late Judge Samuel D. Littlepage, whose record precedes this, has taken up the same profession that his father followed, and has an extensive practice at Charleston.

He was born in Charleston, West Virginia, June 28, 1888, was educated in the Charleston public schools and in St. John's Manlius Military Institute at Syracuse, New York. He studied law in the University of West Virginia, receiving the LL. B. degree in 1911 and his literary degree in 1910. He was admitted to the bar and began practice in Charleston in 1910, entering practice as a member of the firm Littlepage and Littlepage, the other member being the late Judge Samuel D. Littlepage.

He served as member of the City Council from 1914 to 1916. In 1916 he received the democratic nomination for prosecuting attorney of Kanawha County, and in spite of the fact that the county gave a large normal republican majority he was elected. He served four years, beginning January 1, 1917. He was the youngest prosecuting attorney the county ever had. He administered the office with the heaviest normal routine of duties in the state, and also with the increased burdens imposed by the war period as U. S. Government appeal agent for three boards in the county. Since retiring from office he has been engaged in general practice as a member of the firm Byrne, Littlepage & Linn at Charleston. The thoroughness and efficiency of his work as a lawyer and his fidelity to the interest of his clients have won for him an exceptionally large and valuable practice.

Mr. Littlepage married Miss Madge K. Robins, of Charleston, daughter of Dr. J. E. Robins, one of the eminent business men of that city. Mr. and Mrs. Littlepage and their children reside in "Greystone," the old stone mansion in the suburbs of Charleston which has been the home of the Littlepage family for four generations.

WAITMAN T. TALBOTT, engaged in the successful practice of law at Webster Springs, judicial center of Webster county, not only has standing as one of the able members of the bar of his native state but has also given effective service as a representative of Webster County in the House of Delegates of the State Legislature, in which he made a characteristically loyal and effective record and in which he served during six or more sessions.

Mr. Talbott was born in Barbour County, West Virginia, on the 28th of September, 1868, and is a son of William W. and Sarah (Simons) Talbott, both likewise natives of that county, where the former was born in 1832 and the latter in 1839. The parents passed their entire lives in Barbour County, where the father developed and improved an excellent farm near Berryburg, and became a leading exponent of agricultural and live-stock industry, as well as a citizen of influence in community affairs of public order. He was a staunch democrat, and both he and his wife were zealous members of the Missionary Baptist Church, in which he served as a deacon. William W. Talbott was a son of Robert Talbott, who was a pioneer farmer in Barbour County and who there served as sheriff prior to the Civil war, four of his brothers having participated in that fratricidal conflict as loyal soldiers of the Confederacy. Of the eleven children of William W. and Sarah (Simons) Talbott all except one are living at the time of this writing, in the spring of 1922: Salathiel M. is a farmer in the vicinity of Harriman, Idaho; Dr. L. W. is a successful physician and surgeon at Elkins, West Virginia; Elem D. is engaged in the practice of law at Elkins; Abraham I. is a member of the police department of Kansas City, Missouri; Florence is the widow of Garnett Hudkins; Fitzhugh Lee is in the employ of the Government in the Yellowstone National Park; William F. is a farmer near Berryburg, Barbour County; Waitman T., of this sketch, was next in order of birth; Virginia is the widow of E. H. Crim and resides at Philippi, Barbour County; and Robert D. is a prosperous farmer in that county.

Waitman T. Talbott passed his childhood and earlier youth on the old home farm which was the place of his birth, and his public-school discipline was fortified by a course in the West Virginia State Normal School at Fairmont. After leaving that institution he finally entered the law department of the University of West Virginia, in which he was graduated as a member of the class of 1895 and with the degree of Bachelor of Laws. He was forthwith admitted to the bar of West Virginia and has since been engaged in the practice of his profession at Webster Springs, as one of the leading members of the bar of Webster County. In a fraternal way he maintains affiliation with Addison Lodge No. 86, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons.

November 21, 1900, recorded the marriage of Mr. Talbott and Miss Addie B. Greynolds, of Beverly, Randolph County, and they have three children: William R., Mildred and Kathryn, the two older children being members of the class of 1923 in the high school at Webster Springs.

SAMUEL GREENBERRY WILLIAMSON, secretary, treasurer and general manager of the Iager Motor Company at Iager, McDowell County, was born in Berkeley County, West Virginia, March 28, 1894, and is a son of Samuel Johns and May B. (Ditto) Williamson, the former of whom likewise was born in Berkeley County and the latter of whom was born in Washington County, Maryland.

Samuel Johns Williamson, who died in his native county in 1904, at the age of thirty-five years, gained a liberal education largely through private study and through the medium of correspondence schools and a business college at Louisville, Kentucky. As a youth he became a successful teacher in the rural schools, and thereafter he served eight years as a teacher in the high school at Martinsburg, West Virginia, in which connection he drove daily a distance of seven miles to and from his home farm. At the time of his death he had a contract to teach mathematics in the Concord State Normal School at Athens, West Virginia. His father, Samuel Johns Williamson, was born in Berkeley County, Virginia (now West Virginia), and there passed his entire life as a farmer, his homestead place having been a part of a tract of land granted to the Johns family in 1753, the patent to the property having been signed by Governor White, then chief executive of the Old Dominion commonwealth or colony. This historic instrument is now in the possession of the subject of this sketch, by whom it is valued as a family heirloom. Samuel J. and May B. (Ditto) Williamson are survived by two sons and two daughters, all of whom are graduates of the Shepherds College State Normal School of Virginia. As descendants on the maternal side of Capt. John Miller the two daughters are members of the Society of the Daughters of the American Revolution. Mrs. May B. (Ditto) Williamson graduated from Berkeley Female Seminary, and thereafter was for one year a teacher in that institution. The religious faith of the Williamson family for generations was that of the Presbyterian Church, but Samuel J. and May (Ditto) Williamson were active members of the Methodist Protestant Church. He was a republican in political adherence. Mrs. Williamson survived her husband by about fourteen years, and was fifty-one years of age at the time of her death.

Samuel G. Williamson gained his earlier education in the rural schools of his native county, and in 1912 he graduated from the Shepherds College State Normal School. He taught in the school of his home district when he was a youth of eighteen years. In 1913 he attended the summer school of the University of West Virginia, as did he also the sessions of 1915 and 1916. He did successful work as a teacher in the high school of Leetown, Jefferson County, West Virginia, and in 1917-18 gave similar service in the high school at Welch, McDowell County.

On the 15th of May, 1918, he entered the military service of the United States in connection with the World war. He received preliminary training in the City of Richmond, Virginia, where he remained three months. He was then ent to Camp Taylor, Kentucky, where after artillery training he was commissioned second lieutenant. He remained at Camp Taylor until he received his honorable discharge, and he is now commander of the Three Hundred and Twenty-fifth Ammunition Train, Reserve Corps.

H. W. Armstrong

After his discharge from the army Mr. Williamson became principal of the high school of Iaeger, and in 1921 he assumed his present position, that of secretary, treasurer and manager of the Iaeger Motor Company, which has the local agency for the Ford automobiles. Mr. Williamson is a republican, a member of the Presbyterian Church, and is affiliated with the Masonic fraternity and the Delta Tau Delta college fraternity. He is one of the progressive and popular young business men of Iaeger.

ARCH C. WAGNER, D. D. S., a young man of the sterling character and professional ability that augur well for successful achievement, is one of the representative dental practitioners of McDowell County, with residence and office in the Village of Iaeger, he having been for two years a valued member of the McDowell County Dental Clinic. The doctor was graduated in the dental department of the Medical College of Virginia, in the City of Richmond, on the 16th of June, 1919. In the World war period he gained special training and valuable experience in the regimental infirmary of the Three Hundred and Seventeenth United States Infantry, and after receiving his discharge he returned to the college at Richmond and became a member of the Medical Reserve Corps. After his graduation Dr. Wagner was engaged in practice for a few months in his native county of Highland, Virginia, where he worked with a portable dental outfit. He then came to McDowell County, West Virginia, where he has since continued in successful practice. Since becoming a member of the County Dental Clinic he has visited nearly every school in the county, the work of this clinic being largely in the examination of and directing the care of the teeth of children, a matter of major importance. The doctor maintains affiliation with the Masonic fraternity, Knights of Pythias, Junior Order United American Mechanics, and the Xi Psi Phi college fraternity.

Doctor Wagner was born on a farm near Monterey, Highland County, Virginia, March 16, 1895, and is a son of James A. and Lou Ida (Suddarth) Wagner, who still reside on their fine homestead farm in Highland County, where their circle of friends is coincident with that of their acquaintances. Doctor Wagner was reared on the farm and gained his preliminary education in a private school. For four years thereafter he walked four miles night and morning to attend high school, and after his graduation he was engaged in teaching in the rural schools for two years. He then began his preparation for his chosen profession, as already noted in the preceding paragraph. The doctor is one of the loyal and progressive citizens of McDowell County, has here won a host of friends and he still permits his name to be enrolled on the list of eligible young bachelors in the county.

THOMAS M. HICKS has been successfully engaged in the general merchandise business at Webster Springs, Webster County, since 1905, has a modern and well equipped establishment, and his policies have been such that he has developed a substantial and prosperous enterprise.

Mr. Hicks was born in Braxton County, West Virginia, January 15, 1877, and is a son of Thomas F. and Mariah Berry Hicks, both now deceased, the father having been born in Nelson County, Virginia, in 1839, and the mother having been born in what is now West Virginia, in 1846. The father engaged in farm enterprise in Braxton County, hence in 1877 he removed with his family to Nicholas County, where he continued as a successful agriculturist and stock-grower until his death, he having been a citizen of influence and having held various offices of public trust in that county. He was a democrat in politics, and both he and his wife held membership in the Baptist Church. They became the parents of ten children: Bettie is the wife of L. A. Boso; Bertie is the wife of O. F. Williams; Lee is a progressive farmer in Wood County, this state; James H. is a resident of the State of Oklahoma; Nora is the wife of James N. Walker; Ida is the wife of H. D. Walker; Thomas M., of this sketch, was next in order of birth; Ernie is a popular teacher in the schools of Greenbrier County; Lovie is the wife of C. W. Robertson; and John D. is a resident of Greenbrier County.

Thomas M. Hicks was an infant at the time of the family removal to Nicholas County, where he was reared on the home farm and received the advantages of the public schools, his studies having been thereafter continued in one of the normal schools of the state and he having been a successful teacher in the schools of Nicholas and Webster counties prior to establishing his present business at Webster Springs. He owns the building in which his business is conducted, and also owns and occupies one of the attractive homes of the village. He is a democrat, and he and his wife are zealous members of the local Baptist Church, in which he is a deacon. He has been a valued member of the Board of Education during virtually the entire period of his residence at Webster Springs, and he is a director of the local banking institution. In the Masonic fraternity his basic affiliation is with Addison Lodge No. 116, A. F. and A. M., of which he is a past master, and he is a member also of the local Chapter of Royal Arch Masons, as is he also of the Commandery of Knights Templars and of the Temple of the Mystic Shrine in the City of Charleston.

In 1898 was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Hicks and Miss May Stanard, who likewise was born and reared in this state and who attended normal school prior to her marriage. Of the four children of this union the eldest is Areta, who attended the University of West Virginia for three years and who is, in 1922, a teacher in the Junior High School at Webster Springs; Dana M. graduated from the Webster Springs High School and attended the State University eighteen months; Elma is a student in high school; and Mary Lee is in the third grade of the local schools.

HENRY W. ARMSTRONG, general superintendent of the Cherry River Boom & Lumber Company at Richwood and Gauley Mills, Nicholas County, has effectively proved his ability and resourcefulness in the directing of industrial enterprise of broad scope and importance, and as a business executive and loyal citizen he commands high esteem in the state of his adoption.

Mr. Armstrong was born at Horncastle, England, March 9, 1856, and is a son of John and Sarah (Wilson) Armstrong. In addition to availing himself of the advantages of the schools of his native place Mr. Armstrong attended school in Germany during a period of three years. Thereafter he was identified with the grain business in England, where he was thus associated with a large commission firm in this line of enterprise for eight years. In 1880 he came to the United States and became actively identified with lumbering operations in West Virginia. At Bayard, Grant County, he operated a sawmill several years, and in the meanwhile he gained thorough experience in all details of the lumber business. In 1893 he became superintendent of the Richwood plant and business of the Cherry River Boom & Lumber Company, and his efficiency and progressive policies eventually led to his advancement to his present office, that of general superintendent with this important corporation. Mr. Armstrong was one of the organizers and incorporators of the First National Bank of Richwood, and he has served continuously as its president, Henry S. Smith being its vice president, John D. Rake, its cashier, and the other members of the board of directors are Dr. James McClung, Joseph Tinsler, Mr. Feuerherm and T. L. Space. Mr. Armstrong is a republican in political sentiment and adherence, and his wife is an active member of the Presbyterian Church in their home city of Richwood. Her maiden name was Mary Hamil. Mr. and Mrs. Armstrong have no children.

JOHN S. COGAR is distinctively one of the leading members of the bar of Webster County, of which he is serving as prosecuting attorney at the time of this writing, in 1922, and his loyalty to his native county and town, Webster Springs, the county seat, has been signally manifested in his continuous centering of his activities and interests in the community that has represented his home during his entire life thus far.

Mr. Cogar was born at Webster Springs and his early education was acquired in the public schools of his native county. That he made good use of his advantages is shown by the fact that at the age of seventeen years he became a successful teacher, as principal of the village schools of Webster Springs, his entire pedagogic service having been rendered in his native town. In consonance with his well formulated ambition he finally entered the law department of the University of West Virginia, in which he was graduated as a member of the class of 1892 and with the degree of Bachelor of Laws. He soon afterward opened an office at Webster Springs, and in 1893 he there formed a professional partnership with Senator E. H. Morton, with whom he continued his alliance until 1896, when he was elected prosecuting attorney of the county. At the expiration of his term in this office he was nominated, at the democratic senatorial convention held at Weston, as candidate for representative of the old Tenth Senatorial District in the State Senate, and, notwithstanding the fact that the district was strongly republican, he made so effective a campaign and has such secure place in popular esteem in the district that the republican majority was cut down by two-thirds in the ensuing election, in which his defeat was compassed by a small majority. In 1904 he was made the democratic nominee for representative of Webster County in the House of Delegates of the West Virginia Legislature, to which he was elected by a substantial and gratifying majority. He served during the sessions of 1904-5 and made a characteristically effective record in the advancing of constructive legislation and the conserving of the interests of his constituent district. He has since given his exclusive attention to the work of his profession, and in November, 1920, he was again elected prosecuting attorney of the county.

The year 1893 recorded the marriage of Mr. Cogar and Miss Emma L. Koozer, of Clearfield City, Pennsylvania, and they have two daughters. Beatrice, whose educational advantages included those of the Webster Springs High School, the West Virginia Wesleyan College, the University of West Virginia and Columbia University, New York City, is at the parental home and is a popular figure in the representative social and cultural activities of the community. The younger daughter, Lillian Lee, is the wife of Mendham Parmlee Wilson, of Augusta, Georgia, and is a specially talented musician, in both vocal and instrumental interpretation.

CHARLES S. BRIDGES is giving effective service as station agent for the Norfolk & Western Railroad at Iaeger, McDowell County, and is one of the progressive and popular men of this community. He was born in Wythe County, Virginia, March 14, 1870, and was there reared on his father's farm. He is a son of John B. and Frances M. (Long) Bridges, the former of whom was born in Wythe County, Virginia, in 1825, and the latter of whom was born in North Carolina, in 1829. The father died in 1899, aged seventy-four years, and the mother passed away in 1915, at the venerable age of eighty-six years. They became the parents of three sons and two daughters: William R., the eldest son, died in his native county at the age of twenty-four years; Henry B. was thirty-four years of age at the time of his death; the elder daughter, Mrs. Jennie R. Moore, is a resident of Max Meadows, that state; and Mrs. B. L. Hudson, the younger daughter, resides in Pulaski County, Virginia.

Charles S. Bridges gained his early education in the schools of his native county and while still a boy he learned telegraphy at Max Meadows, a station on the line of the Norfolk & Western Railroad. He has continued in the service of this railroad for the long period of thirty-one years, and has been a representative of the company in the coal producing districts of West Virginia since 1891. He was first located at Roderfield, when that place was the terminus of one of the branches of the Norfolk & Western, and as telegraph operator and station agent he has been employed at many different points touched by this railroad system. He was station agent five years at Cedar Bluff, and thereafter he was agent at Welch, county seat of McDowell County, four years. Since 1904 he has held his present post in the thriving industrial Town of Iaeger. He has been actively identified with the development of this village and served as its first mayor after its second organization. In the World War period he was chairman of the McDowell County Draft Board No. 2. He is a democrat in political allegiance. In the Masonic fraternity he is affiliated with the Blue Lodge at Iaeger, having been the first worshipful master and is the present worshipful master, with the Chapter of Royal Arch Masons at Northfork, the Commandery of Knights Templars at Bluefield, and the Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Charleston. His wife is a member of the Baptist church and the remainder of the family are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

In 1899 Mr. Bridges wedded Miss Callie Thomas, of Pulaski County, Virginia, and they have four children: Kathleen is the widow of Dr. Harry T. Bauer, a prominent dentist, who was engaged in the practice of his profession at Iaeger, West Virginia, at the time of his death; Margaret, who has been employed as clerk for the Norfolk & Western Railway for the past five years; Louise, who remains at the parental home; and Charles W., who is now his father's efficient office assistant, was formerly in the employ of the First National Bank of Iaeger.

Reverting to the career of John B. Bridges, father of the subject of this review, it is to be recorded that he was a pioneer in scientific horticulture in Wythe County, Virginia, where he developed the fine New River Nursery, in which he raised all kinds of fruit trees and small fruits, and which he successfully conducted until the time of his death. He was a gallant soldier of the Confederacy in the Civil war, and took part in many engagements, including a number of major battles. He was a staunch democrat, was affiliated with the United Confederate Veterans, and he and his wife were earnest members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

JOSEPH P. HATFIELD is giving characteristically efficient service as clerk of the Circuit Court for Mingo County, and is one of the popular citizens of Williamson, the county seat. He was born at Meador, this county, July 17, 1888, and is a son of Floyd and Esther (Staten) Hatfield, the former of whom was born on Guyon River, near the present site of Gilbert, this county, then a part of Logan County, Virginia, September 4, 1846, and the latter of whom was born where the Village of Sprigg, this county, is now established, the year of her nativity having been 1851. John Hatfield, father of Floyd, was a representative of a family founded in Virginia in the Colonial era, and upon coming to what is now West Virginia in the pioneer days the abundant supply of wild game led him to make permanent location, he having been a nimrod of marked skill and great enthusiasm, and his son Floyd likewise having become a crack shot. Floyd Hatfield gave two years of loyal service as a gallant young soldier of the Confederacy in the Civil war, and his active career has been one of close association with farm industry, both he and his wife being now venerable and honored pioneer citizens of Mingo County and both having long been zealous members of the Christian Church, in which he has held various official positions. His political allegiance is given to the democratic party. Of their eleven children nine are living, and of the number the subject of this sketch was the ninth in order of birth.

The public schools of his native county afforded Joseph P. Hatfield his early education, and that he made good use of his advantages is shown by the fact that when eighteen years of age he became a successful teacher in the rural schools. By his pedagogic service he earned the funds that enabled him to complete a course in the Concord State Normal School at Athens, in which he was graduated as a member of the class of 1916. He taught seven years in the rural schools of Mingo County, served one year as assistant principal of the Iaeger High School, was assistant prin-pal of the Matewan High School one year, and for one year served as supervisor of the schools of Lee District. In 1920 he was elected circuit clerk of the county, on the democratic ticket, and his able executive service has fully justified his election. His brother Alexander, formerly a popular teacher, is now his deputy in the office of circuit clerk. The sister Mary is the wife of Toler Sipple, of Red Creek, this state. Six of the children of the family attended the Concord Normal School.

Mr. Hatfield is affiliated with the Masonic Blue Lodge at Jackson, Lodge of Perfection No. 4, Scottish Rite, in the city of Huntington, where also he is a member of the Knights of the Rose Croix, he having received the thirty-second degree of the Scottish Rite in the Consistory at Wheeling, and his maximum York Rite affiliation is with the Commandery of Knights Templars. He is an active member of the Christian Church and his wife of the Baptist church.

On the 12th of June, 1917, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Hatfield and Miss Elizabeth Adair, daughter of Harvey and Nancy Adair, of Panther, McDowell County. Mrs. Hatfield and her husband were fellow students at the Concord Normal School, and, like him, she taught school to pay the expenses of her course in this institution, she having been for eleven years a successful and popular teacher in the public schools. Mr. and Mrs. Hatfield have one son, William Adair.

GUY B. YOUNG has found in his native county ample opportunity for successful achievement in the work of his profession, is one of the able and representative members of the bar of Gilmer County, and is engaged in active practice at Glenville, the county seat. He was born on a farm near Troy, this county, September 26, 1874, and is a son of Capt. A. B. and Elizabeth (Hanger) Young, the former of whom was born April 2, 1832, in what is now Harrison County, West Virginia, and the latter of whom was born near Staunton, Virginia, in 1840. The parents received excellent educational advantages, as gauged by the standards of locality and period, and the father became a successful teacher in the subscription schools of the county. Capt. A. B. Young went forth as a loyal soldier of the Confederacy when the Civil war was precipitated on the nation, and was captain of a company in the command of Gen. "Stonewall" Jackson. He lived up to the full tenor of the conflict, and in battle was three times wounded. After the close of the war he settled on a farm near Troy, Gilmer County, and with the passing years he achieved substantial success as an agriculturist and stock-grower. He added to his farm property until he had a valuable estate of 300 acres, and he remained on the homestead until 1902, when he sold the place and purchased a farm of 450 acres in Wirt County, where he passed the remainder of his life. He was a staunch democrat, and he lived from 1896 to 1900 as county assessor of Gilmer county. He was affiliated with the United Confederate Veterans and his religious faith was that of the Methodist Episcopal Church, his first wife having been a member of the Presbyterian Church. He was twice married, and became the father of seventeen children. Of the six children of the first marriage, five are living at the time of this writing, in 1921: Jacob W. is engaged in the mercantile business at Newell, Hancock County; Rev. J. Arthur Young is graduated in a theological seminary in the City of Louisville, Kentucky, and is a clergyman of the Baptist church; Warren D. is a merchant at Palestine, Wirt County; Guy B., of this sketch, was the next in order of birth; and George H., who is a mechanic by vocation, resides in the City of Parkersburg, this state.

The childhood and early youth of Guy B. Young were passed by the influences and discipline of the home, and, after leaving the public schools he entered the State Normal School at Glenville, in which he continued his studies until his graduation. In preparation for his chosen profession he entered the law department of the University of West Virginia, in which he was graduated as a member of the class of 1903 and with the degree of Bachelor of Laws. He was forthwith admitted to the bar, and in the same year he initiated the practice of his profession at Glenville, where he has since continued his law business, much of which is in connection with his service as legal representative of the South Penn Oil Company. Mr. Young is a democrat in political allegiance, and he served for a time as deputy county clerk of Gilmer County. He was formerly engaged in farm enterprise near Glenville, and is at the present time owner of royalty interests on several farms in this county. He is affiliated with the Junior Order United American Mechanics, and he and his wife hold membership in the Baptist Church.

Mr. Young married Miss Love H. Fling, whose education included a business course and who had held a position as a skilled stenographer for one year prior to her marriage. Mr. and Mrs. Young have four children: Guy Bayard, Jr., Donald Bell, Maynard Fling and Mary Elizabeth.

WILLIAM REYNOLD HURST, organizer and executive head of the firm of W. R. Hurst & Company, which conducts one of the foremost real estate and insurance agencies in the City of Williamson, Mingo County, was born at Dingess, this county, October 2, 1897, and is a son of William Alexander Hurst and Cynthia Freelove (Thomas) Hurst, the former of whom was born in Carroll County, Virginia, March 1, 1868, and the latter of whom was born at Burkes Garden, that state, October 16, 1868, a daughter of John L. Thomas. The marriage of the parents was solemnized at Gray, Mingo County, West Virginia, in 1896.

The lineage of the Hurst family traces back to English origin, and the original American progenitor settled in Loudoun County, Virginia, in the early Colonial period. The family has been for many generations one of prominence and influence in Carroll County, Virginia, and there William Hurst, great-grandfather of the subject of this review, was born in the year 1798. He became an extensive planter and slaveholder, and continued his residence in his native county until his death, in 1891, at the patriarchal age of ninety-three years. His son, Jesse T., was born on the old home plantation in Carroll County in October, 1836, and at the inception of the Civil war he went forth in defense of the Confederacy, as a member of the Twenty-ninth Virginia Infantry. At the battle of Seven Pines, in 1862, he was wounded, but after his recovery he continued his active service in the army until the close of the war. He served as justice of the peace in Carroll County for a full half century, and has long been numbered among the progressive and successful farmers of that county. Though he is now (1922) eighty-six years of age he retains splendid physical and mental vitality, as does also his wife, whose maiden name was Keturah Smith and who was born in April, 1836. They became the parents of eleven children, of whom the son William Alexander is the father of him whose name initiates this sketch.

William A. Hurst was reared on the fine old homestead farm which was the place of his birth and received his youthful education in the schools of his native state. As a youth he taught school during the winter terms, and worked on the farm in the intervening summer seasons. From 1890 to 1893 he was a guard at the Virginia State Penitentiary at Richmond, and he then, in 1894, established himself in the general merchandise business at Gray, Mingo County, West Virginia. In 1896 he transferred his business and residence to Dingess, this county, and in 1902 he removed with his family to War Eagle, to enter the coal business. In 1904 he removed to Williamson, where shortly afterward he organized the Hurst Hardware Company, which was incorporated with a capital of $5,000, and of which he became the president. This company developed a wholesale and retail hardware business that reached an average of $175,000 a year. From 1908 to 1913 Mr. Hurst served as sheriff of the county, an office in which he made a record that has not been excelled by that of any other who has been the incumbent of the office. In 1914 he became associated with M. T. Persinger in the organization of the Persinger Hardware & Furniture Company, with a capitalization of $250,000, this corporation having taken over the business of the Hurst Hardware Company. Mr. Hurst became president of the new company, and continued his service in this position until his death, this concern now controlling an average annual business of approximately $1,000,000. Mr. Hurst was one of the organizers of and was the first president of the Day and Night Bank of Williamson, was president of the War Eagle Coal Company and the Winifrede Land Company, and was a stockholder and director in many other important business and industrial corporations in this section of the state. He was an uncompromising supporter of the cause of the democratic party, was a Scottish Rite Mason and an Elk, and was an elder of the First Presbyterian Church of Williamson. Of him the following appreciative estimate has been given: "As a man he was kindly and affable, and his generosity knew only the bounds of his opportunity to extend the same. He was a self-made man, and thus his large and worthy success in life is the more pleasing to contemplate. Probably no man in Mingo County had a greater number of sincere friends than did William A. Hurst, and he knew virtually every man in the county. Mr. Hurst met a tragic and instantaneous death in one of the most terrible wrecks that ever occurred on the lines of the New York Central Railroad, he having been one of twelve persons killed, and 110 having been injured. Mr. Hurst had gone to Buffalo, New York, and was preparing to accompany his son William R. and the latter's wife back to Williamson, the son and his wife having been on their wedding tour. On the morning of July 1, 1919, the family party, which included Mrs. James W. Peters, of Williamson, an aunt of William R. Hurst, boarded the New York Central train No. 41 for Columbus, Ohio. Reservations had been made in the rear Pullman car of the train, which was compelled to make a stop at Dunkirk, New York, in order to repair an overheated journal on the rear Pullman. Flagmen sent out to stop the through train No. 7, known as the Westerner, which did not make stops at Dunkirk, failed to arrest the incoming flyer, which collided with and telescoped the rear Pullman of train No. 41, it having been estimated that the Westerner was moving at the rate of fifty-five miles an hour at the time. A scene of terror followed, the engine of No. 7 ran under and overturned the rear sleeper of the No. 41 train, and the escaping steam from the engine scalded virtually all occupants of the sleeper, while smoke added its suffocating fumes to the horror. In this wreck William Alexander Hurst was instantaneously killed. Mrs. William R. Hurst was painfully scalded all over her left side, and received a deep cut just above her right ankle; Mrs. Peters escaped with minor bruises and scalds, but, as a result of the shock, she fell down some steps after arriving at her home, fractured her right hip and became permanently crippled; William R. Hurst received concussion of the brain and was made unconscious, was lightly scalded and one of his knees was badly bruised. Mrs. William R. Hurst has recovered from her injuries save that her right leg remains very weak and her right ankle habitually turns or falls over when she is walking. The remains of the loved father were brought home for interment, and the entire community was not only shocked by his tragic death but also manifested a deep sense of personal loss and bereavement."

William R. Hurst attended the public schools at War Eagle and the old academy at Williamson. In 1905 he lost his hearing from an attack of spinal meningitis, and in 1906 he received a few months of instruction from a private teacher. In the following year he entered the Pennsylvania Institution for the Deaf and Dumb at Mount Airy, Philadelphia, where he remained until June, 1910, and covered grade and high school work. From the fall of 1910 to June, 1912, he attended the Wright Oral School in New York City. In June, 1912, he became associated with the Hurst Hardware Company, and in his activities as clerk, driver of teams, shipping clerk and assistant bookkeeper he proved that his physical infirmity was slight handicap to progress. Mr. Hurst continued in the employ of the company until it was merged with the Persinger Hardware & Furniture Company, and he then, in February, 1915, engaged in the real estate and insurance business, of which he has continued one of the progressive, representative and successful exponents at Williamson to the present time. He is the only surviving child of his parents, the other son, Frank, having died at birth, in 1902. The widowed mother who was Freelove Thomas, of Emery, Virginia, still maintains her home at Williamson, she being a zealous member of the First Presbyterian Church, as are also her son and his wife.

On the 16th of June, 1919, at Philadelphia, Pennsylvania was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Hurst and Miss Ethel Wiles, a daughter of William F. Wiles, a representative citizen of Tunnelton, West Virginia.

JOHN R. THAYER, a resident of Taylor County for more than half a century, now a retired farmer at Grafton, was an efficient business man while on the farm, and at one time was one of the foremost representatives and leaders among the agricultural interests of the state.

He was born in Marion County February 20, 1850. His father, Franklin Thayer, was born near Williamsport, Massachusetts, in 1803, and came from that state to West Virginia. He married Nancy Mason, daughter of John Mason, and their marriage were born ten children: Mrs. Amanda Hoover, who died near Helena, Montana; Caroline, a resident of Buchanan, widow of George R. Latham, who held the rank of colonel in the Union Army, later was a congressman, and was appointed by President Johnson to a foreign post in Australia; Cordelia, who married Lindley Ray, of Fairmont, both now deceased; Lukey, of Grafton, widow of Martin Miller; Miller J., who died at Salina, Kansas; Nancy, who married H. White and died at Oswego, Kansas; Frank, Miss Mary S. Stephen, all of Grafton; and John R., the youngest.

When John Ralph Thayer was six years old his parents moved to Nuzum's Mill, now the site of Hammond, West Virginia, and in 1864 came to Taylor County and settled near Grafton. John R. Thayer grew up in a time and place where little attention was paid to the subject of education, and most of his advantages were acquired in the public schools at Grafton. As a youth he did work in a brickyard, offhanded brick, also worked as tail sawyer in a sawmill, and for two years was an Illinois farm hand in Marshall County, getting sixteen dollars a month and board. On his return to West Virginia he did farm labor at Knottsville, near Grafton, two years, following which he was again a tail sawyer at Grafton, worked in a planing mill, and bought and sold lumber for the plant. While thus employed he married, and soon afterward settled down to his vocation as a farmer.

Beginning with some land provided by his wife's father in the Haymond settlement near Grafton, he bought other land and accumulated and improved a farm of two hundred and fifty acres, getting two hundred of it under cultivation. Crops were marketed almost altogether through livestock, which was the main business of the farm, raising cattle, horses and sheep. In connection with farming, Mr. Thayer twenty years was local agent for the McCormick Harvesting Company, and he also sold the J. I. Case harvesting, threshing and road-making machinery.

From his own business his interest went out to the welfare of the community and gradually to all movements for the advancement of country life. As a member of the Board of Education of the Fetterman District his service might well be gratefully remembered. He had a hand in the erection of a new schoolhouse at Thornton, and was the moving spirit in a strenuous campaign for two new schoolhouses in the Haymond settlement. This involved an education of public opinion from the ground up, and it was due to his persistent advocacy that the community finally came over to his way of thinking, and secured a modification of the board's plan of one schoolhouse in favor of two. Mr. Thayer early espoused the cause of the Farmers Alliance when it spread here from the Southwest and West, and he took a prominent part in organization work. He was elected county president of Taylor County and then vice president of the state organization, refusing the office of president. Of the ten thousand members of the Alliance enrolled in West Virginia, his personal influence and effort were responsible for at least ten thousand.

The Alliance was not essentially a political movement, and when it became evident that its aims could only be achieved by political action the organization was largely merged with the people's party, and Mr. Thayer naturally had a prominent place in the new party's organization.

West Virginia. He was offered the nomination for governor on its first state ticket, but accepted instead the nomination for state senator. In the second campaign there was a fusion between the populists and democrats, and though the results were not altogether successful Mr. Thayer received the nomination of both parties for the House of Delegates. Since the decline of the people's party he has had no official part in politics. His independence of mind is indicated in the mixed record he has made as a voter. His first presidential ballot went to General Grant, he supported James G. Blaine, voted for Bryan twice, once for Colonel Roosevelt, and twice for Mr. Wilson. By appointment Mr. Thayer is now serving as survey commissioner and county coroner.

Mr. Thayer married Miss Bertha Kincaid, only daughter of Moses and Nancy (Knotts) Kincaid. She was born and reared at Knottsville, Taylor County, attended the State University and two terms at the Fairmont State Normal. Mr. Thayer was reared in the Methodist faith, but took up Christian Science for the benefit of his wife's health, and both became converts. She profited wonderfully from the treatment, and her life was prolonged many years after hope had been abandoned. She died July 9, 1917. There were two daughters, Rosalee, deceased, was the wife of Ray M. Parrish, of Grafton, and she is survived by three children. The other daughter, Miss Iva, is the companion of her father.

FRANK BENNETT has been one of the most popular residents of Grafton for many years, and is former county assessor and now county court clerk of Taylor County, and prior to that had charge of the city electric light plant.

He was born in Clinton District, Monongalia County, June 1, 1873, son of William and Mary (Jacobs) Bennett. William Bennett was born at Sheffield, England, where his father was a brick-maker, and came to the United States at the age of sixteen, his parents locating at Birmingham, Pennsylvania, but eventually removing to West Virginia, and they are buried in the Simmers Cemetery in Monongalia County. Their children besides William were: Timothy, a resident of Morgantown; Albert, deceased, a Monongalia County farmer, whose daughter is the wife of Governor Ephraim F. Morgan; Ann, who died in Pittsburgh, wife of Abraham Kay; and Sarah Ann, who married Elijah Jacobs and is living at the Flats, near Morgantown, nearly one hundred years old.

William Bennett also learned the trade of brick-maker, which he followed until he took up farming as his regular vocation. He had a good education and remained a student the rest of his life, and was noted in his community for his ability to sustain an argument on a wide variety of topics. He was a republican, and he and his wife were devout in their religious duties and saw to it that their children always attended church and Sunday School. William Bennett died in 1903, when almost eighty, and his wife died five years later, also in her eightieth year. Their children were: Mrs. Priscilla Gwyn, deceased; Annarrie, wife of W. H. Gwyn, living near the old Bennett home in Monongalia County; Nella, unmarried and at the old homestead; Joseph, operator of the same farm; and Frank.

Frank Bennett grew up on the farm in Monongalia County, and completed his common school education there. For one year he farmed for himself, and soon after his marriage took his bride to Grafton, where he entered the service of the Baltimore & Ohio in the carpenter shops, building engine sheds. Five years of his career were given to that line of work. Following this he was put in charge of the electric light service for the City of Grafton. He handled this department with a rare degree of skill and tact, and through all the fourteen years he never missed a payday through absence from duty. At the same time he was a sub-mail carrier for the city post office.

Having been a resident of Grafton almost twenty years, and having gained a wide acquaintance throughout the county, he consented to put his name and qualifications before the people as candidate for county assessor. He was nominated in the primaries, and in the fall of 1916 ran ahead of his party ticket, making a record vote for a single candidate. He served his four-year term, and then became candidate for county clerk, being elected by a majority of 2,018 votes over his democratic competitor. He succeeded C. T. Bartlett in office, and began his official term in January, 1921.

Mr. Bennett is an active member of the Grafton Chamber of Commerce. He is a past chancellor of the Knights of Pythias, past noble grand of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and a member of the Improved Order of Red Men. He is one of the trustees and deacons of the Grafton Baptist Church.

In Marion County, June 14, 1896, Mr. Bennett married Miss Elta Summers, who was born near Mt. Nebo in that county and reared on the farm there. Her parents, David and Frances (Shuttleworth) Summers, were reared in the same county. She was a child when her father was killed by the kick of a horse. Her mother is still living at the old homestead. Besides Mrs. Bennett the surviving children are: James, of Fairmont; Emma, wife of David Downey, of Pittsburgh; Luther, on the home farm; Camden, of Fairmont; Albertus, a farmer at Gladesville, Preston County; William, who died in Marion County, leaving a family; and Ollie, who died in Grafton, the wife of William G. Lake.

Of the children of Mr. and Mrs. Bennett the oldest is Ethel, wife of Clarence D. Arnett, of Fairmont. Robert is chief clerk for the Hazel-Atlas Glass Company of Fetterman. Landa is the wife of Coy H. Hardman, of Fairmont. Dottie and Sarah Olive are students in high school at Grafton, while the younger children are named Roger Gordon, Charles Edward and Marjorie.

WILLIAM BERNARD CRUISE was at one time train dispatcher and trainmaster for the Baltimore & Ohio, and after retiring from the railroad service he returned to his home city of Grafton, where he has built up and is still active in a business of general insurance. He is the present chairman of the Taylor County Democratic Central Committee.

He was born in Reno District of Preston County July 31, 1867. His father, Thomas Cruise, was born in Dunmore, County Galway, Ireland, and married there Mary Kenny. They crossed the Atlantic in a sailing vessel, and spent successive staves in Baltimore, Green Springs and Sykesville. He did construction work for the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, also excavating work and contracted a portion of the tunnel construction at Tunnelton. At that point he retired from the railroad service and spent the rest of his life as a farmer there. Thomas Cruise possessed a liberal education, early became an American citizen, was interested in American affairs and was affiliated with the democratic party. He died at Tunnelton January 30, 1900, at the age of eighty-six, and his widow passed away August 12, 1904, aged seventy-six. Their children were: Catherine, of Cumberland, Maryland, widow of Thomas Dorsey, one of the old engineers of the Baltimore & Ohio; Miss Annie, of Fairmont; Agnes, wife of Judge Haymond, of Fairmont; William B.; John T., who spent his active life as a telegraph operator and died April 16, 1906; and Ellen, wife of James S. Hunt, of Tunnelton.

William Bernard Cruise, who has never married, lived the first fifteen years of his life on his father's farm near Tunnelton, attending the common schools, and at thirteen began the study of telegraphy with his brother-in-law, then the Baltimore & Ohio operator at Tunnelton, now Judge Haymond of Fairmont. He succeeded his relative as operator at Tunnelton, and two years later was promoted to the duties of train dispatcher at Grafton, where he began his work July 6, 1885, when only eighteen years old. In 1896 Mr. Cruise was transferred to Cumberland, Maryland, and made chief train dispatcher and then trainmaster of the Baltimore & Ohio division between Cumberland and Grafton. After a time he resigned, and returning to Grafton entered the insurance business and has developed an extensive general agency, handling all kinds of insurance and surety bonds.

Mr. Cruise has worked for the upbuilding of Grafton through the Chamber of Commerce and other organizations, and is one of the well known leaders of the democratic party in the state, having served as county chairman for ten years. He was a delegate to the state convention of 1904 which nominated John J. Cornwell for governor, and has attended many of the local and state conventions since. He served as a clerk in the State Senate through appointment by Senator Kidd. Mr. Cruise is an exalted ruler of the Elks and was a factor in building at Grafton one of the best homes of that order in the state. He is also affiliated with the Loyal Order of Moose and the Knights of Columbus. He is Taylor County chairman and member of the state committee of the Woodrow Wilson Foundation, a movement to raise a million dollar fund to be used for awards or rewards to the individual or group that has rendered, within a specified period, most meritorious service to democracy, public welfare, liberal thought, or peace through justice. Mr. Cruise was chairman of the local Draft Board for Taylor County for 1917-1919, during the World war.

HARRY FRIEDMAN, secretary of the Grafton Board of Education, has been one of the successful attorneys of that city for a number of years, his activities having been in particular evidence in the commercial field of the law.

He was born in Lewiston, Maine, and was a year old when his parents moved to Grafton in 1884. His father, Faibel Friedman, who was active in the clothing business at Grafton thirty-seven years, was born in the province of Saxe-Meiningen, Germany, September 8, 1846, was liberally educated, and came to the United States in 1865. Later he returned, and at Bad Kitzingen, Bavaria, married Fannie Goodman, who was born in that part of Bavaria February 28, 1846, daughter of Faibel and Sarah Gutman or Goodman. The surviving children of these parents are: Simon J., a Grafton merchant; Alma, wife of Ralph Rothschild, of Richmond, Virginia; Max, a Grafton merchant; Joseph, in the insurance business at Baltimore; Harry; and Jacob H., a clothing merchant at Richmond.

Harry Friedman, who is unmarried, grew up in the atmosphere of a mercantile business but early decided to employ his talents in a profession. His first teacher in the public schools was Miss Amanda Abbott, now dean of the city public school teachers, and he graduated from high school in 1901. This was followed by the general literary course in West Virginia University, from which he graduated in law with the LL. B. degree in 1906. Admitted to the bar, he tried his first case in court at Grafton, and has had an increasing share in the civil and commercial law work of this district.

Mr. Friedman has carried some of the burdens and expense of political work in the county, was candidate for prosecuting attorney in 1916, was a delegate to the last democratic convention at Wheeling, and was a spectator of the dramatic proceedings in the Baltimore convention of 1912 when Mr. Wilson was first nominated. Besides his duties as secretary of the Board of Education Mr. Friedman is a member of the Chamber of Commerce, and is prominent in fraternal affairs. He is a past master of Mystic Lodge No. 75, A. F. and A. M., is a thirty-second degree Scottish Rite Mason and Shriner, and member of the Elks, Modern Woodmen of America and Loyal Order of Moose, and the college fraternity Sigma Nu.

C. L. RITTER, president of the Rock Castle Lumber Company, has been actively identified with lumber manufacture in West Virginia since early youth, and the organizations of which he is directing head comprise one of the largest individual groups of capital and resources in the lumber industry of the state.

Mr. Ritter, whose home has been at Huntington for twenty years and whose active associations with the life and affairs of that city proclaim him at once a man of prominence, was born at Muncy, Pennsylvania, October 6, 1865. His father, Daniel S. Ritter, was born in Lyeomcing County, Pennsylvania, December 27, 1828, and died at Milton, that state, April 11, 1913. During his long residence in Lyeomcing County he was a farmer, a hotel proprietor, held the office of overseer of the poor and county supervisor. He was a democrat and a member of the Lutheran Church. His wife was Catherine Cramer, born in Lyeomcing County in 1833 and died at Muncy in 1901. The oldest of their children is Dr. William E., a physician and surgeon at White-wood, Virginia; C. L. Ritter is the second in age; John is a trader living at Williamsport, Pennsylvania; the youngest, Mazie, died in childhood.

C. L. Ritter acquired a common school education in Lyeomcing County, attended the Williamsport Seminary, and the first twelve years of his life were spent on his father's farm and after that he lived with his parents at Muncy and Williamsport until he was nineteen. For two years he was in the mercantile business at Muncy, and in 1889 came to West Virginia and entered the lumber business at Oak-vale on East River. His lumbering interests subsequently took him into McDowell County and also to Clay County, both of which counties he was a manufacturer, and in 1901 he removed his headquarters to Huntington. The Rock Castle Lumber Company, C. L. Ritter and other lumber companies, of which he is president have mills in several parts of the state, and the business is both manufacturing and wholesale.

Of his business associations that are more immediately identified with Huntington are the Central Realty Company, of which he is president, also has interests in Standard Printing & Publishing Company and with the Watts-Ritter Company, wholesale dry goods; is vice president of the Huntington Land Company; has important interests in the Kenna Land Company; is president of the Empire Furniture Company, furniture manufacturers, and a director of the First National Bank of Huntington. He has some valuable property interests, including his office building, known as the Ritter Building, on Fourth Avenue, a three-story structure, owns a half interest in the six-story building at the corner of Tenth Street and Fourth Avenue, a half interest in the two-story business house on the opposite corner of Tenth Street and Fourth Avenue and is a half owner of the Orpheum Theater Building.

Mr. Ritter is a republican, a member of the Lutheran Church, and is affiliated with the Guyardotte Club of Huntington, the Country Club, and during the World war was chairman of the Cabell County Chapter of the Red Cross and gave time and means to the support of the Government during that period.

His home is one of the best residences on Ritter Hill. In 1910 he purchased Ritter Hill, and was instrumental in securing Ritter Park, part of which was given by him to the city. He was quite active in opening up Ritter Hill as well as Ritter Hill Addition. He married at Huntington in 1902 Miss Mabel McClintock, who is a graduate of Marshall College at Huntington. Mr. and Mrs. Ritter have three children: Charles Lloyd, born March 3, 1904; William Randolph, born December 31, 1905, and Don McClintock, born April 24, 1908. Charles Lloyd and William Randolph are students in Adirondacks Florida School, while Don McClintock Ritter is attending St. Christopher's School at Richmond, Virginia.

Mrs. Ritter was born in Dempseytown, near Oil City, Pennsylvania, May 9, 1880, a daughter of Charles A. and Adeline (Richey) McClintock, of whom extended mention is made in the sketch of Herbert D. McClintock. Mrs. Ritter is a member of the First Presbyterian Church. During the war she was active in Red Cross work, being at the head of the teaching force of surgical dressings for two years. She is a member of the Woman's Club and a active member of Buford Chapter, D. A. R., having been its regent for two years.

LEE EARL BENNETT is business manager of the Grafton Sentinel, and has been associated with that staunch old West Virginia newspaper the greater part of the time since he was released from army service. He is one of the younger members of an old and prominent family in Taylor County, a more complete record being published on other pages.

He was born at the old county seat, Pruntytown, November 1, 1892, and during his boyhood was a pupil in the grade schools there. He had two years of high school work at Grafton and also a commercial course, and then took charge of his father's paint store. He left that to become deputy sheriff under his father, serving through the four-year term, and also had charge of the office during the term of Sheriff Melvin Newlon until called to the colors.

As a selective service man he was enrolled for duty in Company F, Fortieth Infantry, in the Fourteenth Division. His first assignment was at Fort Sheridan, near Chicago, then at Camp Custer, Michigan, and after the signing of the armistice the regiment was ordered to Camp Sherman, Ohio for guard duty. He was discharged there as a first-class private, and he resumed civilian life March 1, 1919, as a clerk in the accountants office of the Baltimore & Ohio Division at Grafton. Soon afterward he joined the business department of the Sentinel as bookkeeper, and since 1921, has been business manager.

C. L. Ritter

Mr. Bennett is finance officer of Taylor County Post of the American Legion, is a member of the Chamber of Commerce and belongs to the Methodist Protestant Church. September 7, 1917, Mr. Bennett married Eileene Burdett Batson, only child of G. H. A. and Lucy Maud (Burdett) Batson. She was born at Pruntytown, March 8, 1893, and was educated in the grade schools there and had two years in the Wesleyan College at Buckhannon. Mr. and Mrs. Bennett have a daughter, Georgeanna, born July 29, 1918, and a son, Louis Lee, born February 21, 1922.

Mrs. Bennett's family is an old and conspicuous one in the Pruntytown community. Her great-grandfather, James Batson, came from Loudoun County, Virginia, in pioneer times, was a shoemaker by trade, and followed that occupation during the rest of his active life at Pruntytown. He married Sarah Rawlings, and both are buried at Pruntytown. Their children were: Elizabeth, who became the wife of Lamkin Newlon and lived in Taylor County; Thomas, a saddler who followed his trade at Pruntytown and later returned to his home in old Virginia, where he died; John W., whose record follows; James W., who was a shoemaker and later a farmer; Mary Jane, who married Christian Core and lived in Pruntytown and later in Grafton, where she died; Calvin Emery, who was a shoemaker, later in the coal business and died at Flemington; Susan B., who married Milton Holland and lived in Monongalia and Marion counties, dying in the latter; Washington Randolph was a soldier of the Union Army, an early stage-driver between Fairmont and Morgantown, later a teamster at Fairmont, where he died.

John W. Batson, grandfather of Mrs. Bennett, was a native of Loudoun County and a small boy when the family came to Pruntytown, where he learned the shoemaker's trade and worked at it as long as he was able. He died there in 1913, at the venerable age of eighty-eight. He was active in the Methodist Protestant Church, was a strong partisan of the great whig statesman Henry Clay, and an equally ardent follower of Abraham Lincoln in politics. John W. Batson married Elnora Kunst, who died in 1920. Her father, G. H. A. Kunst, was a native of Germany, came to the United States many years before the Civil war, and spent his life at Pruntytown, where for many years he was an active merchant. Of the four children of John W. and Mrs. Batson the two survivors are George H. A. and Mrs. John W. Newlon of Keyser, West Virginia.

George H. A. Batson is a native of Pruntytown, his birth occurring on the property of Charles E. Bunner. He attended a subscription school and then the public school, and during vacation spent most of his time around a village store, an association that caused him, when he decided that the time had arrived for a permanent vocation, to become an employe in the store of C. F. W. Kunst at Grafton. A few years later he joined the store of John H. Kunst at Pruntytown, and for ten years was connected with the West Virginia Reform School, now known as the Industrial School for Boys, at Pruntytown. He was steward and subsequently assistant superintendent of that institution.

Politically he has always voted as a republican, has been a party worker in Taylor County and has been a delegate in numerous local and congressional conventions. He is one of the Official Board of the Pruntytown Methodist Protestant Church and is a Scottish Rite Mason.

In Taylor County Mr. Batson married Miss Lucy Maud Burdett, who is also a native of Pruntytown, and daughter of James Burdett.

J. FRANK COX throughout his active career of thirty years has given his skill and energies to one industry, the Wheeling Mold & Foundry Company, of which he is now shop superintendent.

Mr. Cox was born in New Martinsville in Wetzel County, West Virginia, February 13, 1876, son of James M. and Mollie (Ruddick) Cox. He is a descendant of three notable old families in the West Virginia Northern Panhandle. The Cox family had early settlement in Brooke County, and he is also connected with the Woods family of Ohio County and the Cresap family of Marshall County, his paternal grandmother being Jane Cresap Cox, who was also a great-aunt of Mrs. Hannah O. Cresap Cox. Reminiscent of the Woods family influence in this district is Wood Street in Wheeling and also the former suburban town now incorporated portions of Wheeling known as Woodsdale, Woodlawn and Edgewood. J. Frank Cox married a member of the Cresap family, a name that recalls the earliest recorded history in the Upper Ohio Valley. Thomas Cresap was a representative of the Ohio Company in building its first forts and storehouses on the western slope of the Alleghenies. Michael Cresap, a son of Thomas, was one of the group of pioneers who were associated with Fort Fincastle, predecessor of Fort Henry at Wheeling. Members of both the Cresap and Cox families were present at the signing of the treaty with the Indians on Piqua Plains near the old town of Chillicothe, Ohio.

James Franklin Cox's mother had lived in Keokuk, Lee County, Iowa, and her son's education was begun in the public schools of Keokuk. He also attended school in Marshall County, West Virginia, and spent one year, 1890-91 at Linsley Institute at Wheeling. Soon after leaving school Mr. Cox began his apprenticeship as a machinist with the Wheeling Mold & Foundry Company. He was one of the first employes of the company and is now the oldest in years of service of any employe or official of the industry. For a number of years he was a draftsman with the company and now has the responsibilities of machine shop superintendent. Mr. Cox is also a director of the Fulton Bank & Trust Company in Wheeling.

In politics he is non-partisan. He is a member of the Masonic Club of Wheeling and is affiliated with Wheeling Lodge No. 5, F. and A. M., and West Virginia Consistory No. 1 of the Scottish Rite at Wheeling. He also belongs to Wheeling Lodge No. 114, Knights of Pythias. Mr. Cox is a member of St. Matthew's Episcopal Church. October 22, 1902, at Cresap's Bottom in Marshall County, he married Hannah O. Cresap, daughter of Quincy and Elizabeth Cresap, of Cresap's Bottom and Moundville. Her ancestor, Michael Cresap, above noted, surveyed some of the first lands along the bottoms of the Ohio River, and some of these lands are still in the hands of the Cresap and Washington heirs. Mr. and Mrs. Cox have an interesting family of seven children: E. Jane Cox, a student in West Virginia University at Morgantown, Jessie R., James F., Mary F., Robert C., Charles Q. and Michael Cresap Cox.

LEE BENNETT, a former sheriff of Taylor County, is a plasterer, contractor and business man of Grafton, where he has spent practically all his years since early childhood. A more popular and substantial citizen of the county it would be difficult to find.

The family was established in Taylor County by his grandfather, Reuben Bennett, a native of Virginia and a farmer by occupation. He died about 1878, aged eighty-one, surviving his wife about a year. Her maiden name was Martha Carder. Reuben Bennett was strong in his Southern sympathies, but two of his sons wore the blue and two the grey during the Civil war. His children were: Elias; Calvin and Frank, the Union soldiers, who spent their last years in the West; William, who also died in the West; Thomas, who died near Industrial, West Virginia; John, a resident of Taylor County; Tabby, who married Noah Carter and died in Barbour County; Ann, who became the wife of Frank Goodwyn and died in Taylor County; Jane, who married Everett Scott, and lived and died in the West; and Elizabeth, who died unmarried.

Elias Bennett was born in Taylor County and as a young man left his family to enlist in the Confederate Army, serving from the beginning to the end of the struggle. After the war he settled on a small farm at Vicksburg, Mississippi, and died there in February, 1866, aged forty years. While in the South he married Margaret J. Six, daughter of a Southern planter. Lee Bennett, who was born at Vicksburg, February 19, 1865, was the youngest of three children and the only one to grow up.

After the death of his father his mother came to West Virginia and established her home with Reuben Bennett in Taylor County. She lived at Pruntytown many years, and finally went to live with her son in Grafton, where she died, September 30, 1921, when almost eighty-one. She was an active member of the Baptist Church, was well educated and had taught in the South before the war and did some teaching in Taylor County. On coming up from the South she brought, among other effects, the pocketbook and Testament that had been carried by her husband through the war, and these are carefully preserved by her son, Lee.

Lee Bennett had a farm training and attended the rural schools of the Booths Creek District. At the age of eighteen, in the intervals of farm work, he began learning the trade of plasterer, and for many years he wielded the trowel, hawk, darby and brush as the principal implements of his life work. After his four years' service as sheriff he again resumed the tools of his trade, and is still a contractor supervising the work of several mechanics, though most of his time is devoted to his paint, oil and varnish store on Main Street in Grafton.

When he was elected sheriff in 1912 Mr. Bennett broke a custom in local politics that had kept a republican in the office of sheriff for twenty-eight years. He made the race against big odds, and gave a thoroughly efficient administration. He succeeded Sheriff Hefner, and was in turn succeeded by Melvin Newlon. Mr. Bennett cast his first presidential vote for Cleveland in 1888 and has always done his duty at the polls and has since helped elect two democratic presidents. He is a member of the Grafton Chamber of Commerce, is a past noble grand of Taylor Lodge No. 23, I. O. O. F., at Pruntytown, and has been a delegate to the Grand Lodge at Huntington, and is also a member of the Woodmen of the World.

In Taylor County, January 21, 1891, Mr. Bennett married Miss Annie M. Bunner. Her mother was a Miss Warder. She was born at Martins Ferry, Ohio, April 15, 1870, and was reared in Taylor County, where her father died when she was a child. The other children of her parents were Charles, of Pruntytown; Ocie; and Margaret, wife of William Hall, of Seattle, Washington. Mr. and Mrs. Bennett have three children. Lee E., connected with the Sentinel Publishing Company of Grafton, married Ileen C. L. Kimmel, of Morgantown, and has a daughter, Catherine Virginia. Hazel is the wife of J. D. Sisler, of Harrisburg, Pennsylvania, and they have a daughter, Jeanne Susan.

GEORGE W. ANDERSON, M. D. A native of Wetzel County, now doing an extensive practice as a physician and surgeon at Littleton, Doctor Anderson was in early life a teacher, and his career has shown him to be possessed of exceptional abilities for professional service.

He was born near Wileyville, Wetzel County, November 19, 1872, youngest of the fifteen children of William H. Anderson and the only one of this large family born in Wetzel County. All the others were natives of Belmont County, Ohio, where William H. Anderson was born, March 29, 1820. He was a farmer, a Union soldier in the Civil war, and also taught school a number of terms both in Belmont County and in Wetzel County, West Virginia. In 1870 he moved to Wetzel County, locating on a farm near Foster, in 1871 went to Postlethwait Ridge near Wileyville, and from there in 1883, removed to the vicinity of Smithfield, where he died in January, 1895. He began his voting as a democrat but later became a republican, and was an active member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. William H. Anderson married Lucinda Your, who was born in Belmont County, Ohio, September 21, 1826, and died at Middlebourne, Tyler County, West Virginia, November 29, 1916, at the age of ninety, having retained her faculties to a remarkable degree in advanced years. She was the mother of fifteen children. Among the children who survived infancy were: Hannah, who died in Belmont County, aged seventy-two, wife of David Rutter, a school teacher and farmer who died near Salsburg in Wood County, West Virginia; John R. was a merchant and died in Wetzel County in 1897; Isaac L. is a farmer in West Virginia; Samuel is an oil field worker in Texas; Mary, twin sister of Samuel, lives at Earnshaw, her first husband having been Harvey Mahoney and she is now the widow of Lindsa Anderson; Amy lives at Parkersburg, widow of Ebenezer C. Horner, who was a farmer; Margaret lives on her farm in Wetzel County, widow of John Postlethwait; Katherine is the wife of Friend Rutter. The names of other children who died in youth were Gasper, Elizabeth, William and Lucinda.

George W. Anderson was reared in the atmosphere of a farm in Wetzel County, attended rural schools and spent two years in the Fairmont State Normal School, concluding his work there in 1896. Doctor Anderson was an apt student from early childhood, and at the age of fourteen was granted a license to teach and at that time taught a term of rural school in Wetzel County. Altogether he taught eleven terms in the country districts of the county, and in the schoolroom until 1900. After that until 1904 he was in the oil fields of Wetzel County, and then began a serious preparation for the medical profession. The first two years he attended the Central University School of Medicine at Louisville, Kentucky, another year was in the medical department of the University of Louisville, and finished in the Hospital Medical College, the medical school of Central University of Kentucky, graduating May 1, July 30, 1908. In the same year he began practice at Burchfield in Wetzel County, a year later moved to Uniontown, where he practiced nine years, and since 1919 he had his home and offices at Littleton. He does all his surgical work and is a recognized specialist of ability in diseases of children. Doctor Anderson owns his modern home and offices on the public road in the eastern part of Littleton and also has a farm seven miles west of Littleton, improved with good house and other buildings. Doctor Anderson is the present city health officer of Littleton, is a member of the County, State and American Medical associations. He did much home work during the war, and he also passed the examination for duty in the Medical Corps, but by order of the Government remained at Littleton to help combat the influenza epidemic, which taxed his powers and energies for several months.

Doctor Anderson is a republican and is affiliated with Folsom Lodge No. 261, Independent Order of Odd Fellows is also an Encampment degree Odd Fellow, and is a member of Littleton Lodge No. 111, Knights of Pythias. August 19, 1900, in Wetzel County, he married Miss Jessie Toothman, daughter of Jesse S. and Susan (Snider) Tooman, the latter deceased. Her father is a retired farmer at Hundred. Doctor and Mrs. Anderson had three children: Howard, who died at the age of three months a day; Gail, born July 13, 1902, graduated from the West Liberty State Normal School in 1920, and is now doing post-graduate work there; and Clair Sherrill, born March 4, 1911.

ARTHUR TRASK POST, M. D., is a prominent Harrison County physician and surgeon, has been engaged in his professional work for fifteen years, and he brought to his profession thorough training and preparation and unusual talent for success in that exacting vocation. Since moving to Clarksburg to practice Doctor Post has had his office in one location, but is now established in the third office building, the Prunty Building, which stands on the site of two earlier buildings destroyed by fire.

Doctor Post was born at Jarvisville, Harrison County, January 26, 1880. This is one of the oldest families in Harrison County, represented here by five successive generations. His great-grandfather, Isaac Post, and his grandfather, Jacob Post, were both natives of Harrison County. George Washington Post, father of Doctor Post, died in 1919, at the age of seventy-five. He was a man of ability and sterling character, achieved success as a farmer and commanded the respect and confidence of all who knew him. He married Margaret A. Yerkey, and both were born and reared in the vicinity of Good Hope, Harrison County. The widowed mother is still living at the old homestead at Jarvisville. She is an earnest member of the United Brethren Church. George W. Post was a republican in politics. Their four children Doctor Post is the second in age and the others are Theresa Viola, Asa Gael and Sophronia Esther.

Doctor Post spent his boyhood days and early became active on a farm, attended public schools and graduated in 1901 from Salem College with the degree Bachelor of edagogy. Salem College in 1907 conferred upon him the degree Bachelor of Science. Doctor Post taught school two years, in 1905 completed his medical studies in the University of West Virginia and then entered the medical department of the University of Maryland at Baltimore, where he graduated Doctor of Medicine in 1907 and in the same year received a similar degree from the University of West Virginia. While in Baltimore he became a member of the Phi Beta Pi fraternity, in which society he was at all times a very active member. At Morgantown he was a member of the Delta Tau Delta fraternity, had a permanent part in athletics, has a "life pass" to all athletic events, and was a member of the football team in the memorable contest between West Virginia University and Washington and Jefferson College in 1903. After graduating in 1907 Doctor Post took charge of the practice of Dr. J. S. Maloy Shinnston, during the illness of Doctor Maloy. He handled the professional work in that community until Doctor Maloy recovered, ten months later, and then came to Clarksburg and opened his office on West Main Street. Doctor Post has built up a large and representative following and has kept in touch with all the advances made in medicine and surgery by attending clinics in surgery at Chicago, Cleveland, New York, Philadelphia and Baltimore, and also the clinics of the famous Mayo Brothers at Rochester, Minnesota.

Doctor Post is a member of the West Virginia and American Medical associations, served as president in 1922 of the Harrison County Medical Society and is a member of the regular staff of St. Mary's Hospital at Clarksburg. Doctor Post is a republican, he and wife are members of the Presbyterian Church, and he is a thirty-second degree Scottish-Rite Mason and Shriner, a member of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, the National Masonic Club, the Clarksburg Country Club, the Assembly Club, the Allegheny Sportsman's Association, the Cheat Mountain Club, the Clarksburg Chamber of Commerce and the Kiwanis Club.

Doctor Post married in 1912 Miss Edna Lenora Siers. Their home is at 232 Daisy Street in Clarksburg. They are the parents of five children, George Winfield, Margaret Catherine, Eleanor Edna, Laura Jean and Julia Anne.

For all the busy professional duties of his mature career Doctor Post keeps in close touch with the interests and associations of his youth. He is still an enthusiast on football, follows all college and amateur sports, and is one of the influential alumni of the University of West Virginia and also Salem College. Much more than the average citizen, he also keeps in touch with the work done by the Clarksburg High School. While his own children are getting their education in the grammar schools, Doctor Post is lending financial and other encouragement to a young man now enrolled in the University of West Virginia and takes all paternal interest in his progress. This is only an instance of many acts of practical kindness Doctor Post has shown to young people whose financial means do not measure up to their ambitions. Doing good is a never ending pleasure with Doctor Post.

THOMAS COLLINS THORNBURG was for a number of years in the railroad service, became a traffic manager, and out of his long experience has founded and developed at Huntington the Thornburg Traffic Bureau, a highly specialized and technical organization with a clientele embracing many West Virginia business and industrial concerns.

Mr. Thornburg is a member of an old family of Cabell county, but was born at Richmond, Virginia, April 6 1892. The Thornburgs are of Scotch ancestry, and settled in Virginia in Colonial times. His grandfather, Collins U. Thornburg, was born in West Virginia in 1834, was a pioneer farmer of Cabell County, and while he was away serving in the Confederate army during the Civil war his old homestead, located at what is now Guyandotte, was burned and destroyed by the Federals. That is how the family property was swept away during the war. Collins U. Thornburg recovered his early losses during subsequent years, and continued his life as a farmer near Huntington until his death in 1899. He married Nora Miller, who was born near Cincinnati in 1840, and is still living at Huntington past the age of four score. All her children, four boys and three girls, are living, namely: Harry C.; Miss Lyda, a teacher in the public schools of Huntington; Charles, a merchant in the State of Iowa; Edgar, secretary and treasurer of the Foster-Thornburg Hardware Company of Huntington; Frank, a traveling salesman with home at Huntington; Frances, twin sister of Frank, an employee of the Mercereau Hawkins Tie Company of Huntington; and Mrs. Nora Yarbrough, wife of a traveling salesman living at Huntington.

Harry C. Thornburg, who was born at Martinsburg, West Virginia, in 1866, has spent all his active life in railroad service. He was reared near Huntington, and lived for several years at Richmond, Virginia, where he married and where he was in the service of the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad as a machinist. He has been with the same railroad ever since, moving to Huntington in 1900, and in 1916 was promoted from machinist to foreman of the roundhouse and is still on duty. Harry C. Thornburg is a democrat, a member of the Johnson Memorial Methodist Episcopal Church, South, of Huntington, and is affiliated with Reese Camp No. 66, Woodmen of the World, and Huntington Lodge No. 313, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks.

Harry C. Thornburg married Belle Hartwell Turner, who was born at Richmond, Virginia, in 1872. The oldest of their children is Thomas Collins. Rosa, the second in age, is the wife of John Vaughan, a jewelry merchant at Louisa, Kentucky. Mamie, the youngest child, is the wife of Earl Bramham, who is connected with the Du Pont Powder Company and lives at Huntington.

Thomas Collins Thornburg acquired a public school education at Huntington, and has lived in that city since he was eight years of age. He left school at the age of sixteen and began his service with the Baltimore & Ohio Railway Company as a messenger boy. He possessed the special intellectual qualifications that opened the way for rapid advancement in the complicated subject of rates and tariff, and while still at Huntington he was promoted to rate clerk. In 1914 he was transferred, with an advance of salary and as rate clerk, to Fairmont, and in 1917 went to the Cleveland, Ohio, headquarters of the Baltimore & Ohio, as chief rate clerk. He resigned this position in 1919 and became traffic manager at Cleveland for the Ohio Chemical and Manufacturing Company.

In 1920 Mr. Thornburg returned to Huntington and established the Thornburg Traffic Bureau, of which he is sole owner. This bureau performs the important service of freight audit bureau and the handling of nearly every subject involving freight transportation for business interests. The bureau looks after a large volume of business before the Interstate Commerce Commission and the Public Service Commission. The offices of the bureau are in the Lewis-Samson Building on Fourth Avenue in Huntington.

Mr. Thornburg is a democrat, a member of the Johnson Memorial Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and the West Side Country Club of Huntington. He married in that city in 1913 Miss Mae Bland, daughter of John H. and Edna May Bland, resident of Huntington, where her father is a retired building contractor. Mrs. Thornburg is a graduate of the Huntington High School with the class of 1911 and also a graduate of Marshall College. To their marriage were born four children: Thomas Collins, Jr., born May 30, 1914; Edna Hartwell, who died at the age of eighteen months; James Lewis, born December 13, 1919; and Edgar Horace, born May 7, 1921.

JOHN S. DANA. Among the men prominently identified with the mercantile and financial interests of Charleston, as well as with the social life of the city, few have gained a higher reputation for ability and keenness of discernment than John S. Dana, vice president of the wholesale dry goods concern of Abney-Barnes Company. Mr. Dana is also not unknown to public life, and in each avenue of activity is accounted a constructive and helpful citizen.

Mr. Dana was born near Charleston, June 28, 1879, a son of J. E. and Maria A. (Swift) Dana, natives of New York. His father, who fought as a Union soldier during the Civil war, came here immediately after receiving his honorable discharge to investigate the coal fields. He started the Campbell's Creek Coal Company, of which he ran the operating end, while his brother, S. F. Dana, had charge of the office at Cincinnati, Ohio. Mr. Dana continued in charge of the operations of this company for a period of forty years, and then retired to his comfortable home at Charleston, of which city he was appointed postmaster, a position in which he served four years. He is now living in his home at Palm Beach, Florida. Mrs. Dana, to whom he was married at Richfield Springs, New York, died in 1914.

John S. Dana attended the public schools of Charleston, and after doing some preparatory work pursued a course at Princeton University, from which he graduated with the class of 1903, receiving the degree of Bachelor of Arts. In that year he returned to Charleston, where he joined the Abney-Barnes Company, wholesale dry goods merchants, of which he is now vice president. This company is now the largest concern of its kind in the Kanawha Valley, and has always adhered to the same line. It started as a small retail store some time after the close of the Civil war, but has been gradually developed into an enterprise which has a place among the city's leading concerns. It has sixty-five employees and twenty road salesmen, in addition to house salesmen, and during the nineteen years that Mr. Dana has been with the company he has seen its sales increase 600 per cent. The present officers are: W. O. Abney, president; E. A. Barnes, treasurer; and John S. Dana, vice president. Mr. Dana was also one of the original organizers of the Union Trust Company, which opened its doors for business May 5, 1913. The officials of this concern, of which Mr. Dana is a director, are: William O. Abney, president; A. B. Koontz, vice president; Charles Ward, vice president; H. P. Brightwell, cashier; and directors, Roman Pickens, J. S. Dana, E. L. Boggs, James A. Holley and H. M. Bertolet. This institution is one of the strongest in West Virginia and owns one of the finest bank and office buildings in the state. Mr. Dana is also a partner in the brokerage firm of Hardy-Dana Company, members of the New York Stock Exchange. He is a staunch republican in his political views and for several years has been one of the constructive and working members of the city council, in which body he is serving as chairman of the finance committee. He has been a constant supporter of worthy civic movements, and his name is found regularly on the list of worthy charities.

Mr. Dana was united in marriage at Charleston with Miss Cynthia Abney, born in this city, a daughter of F. W. Abney, one of the founders of the firm of Abney-Barnes Company. To this union there have been born four children, namely: Francis, Arnold, Adelaide and John S.

Rev. E. M. Hickey gave thirty years of earnest and consecrated service in the Catholic parish of St. Xavier's Church at Parkersburg, and brought to bear in his sacred office a most glowing and buoyant personality, the finest of intellectuality, the deepest human sympathy and tolerance, and the full measure of consecrated devotion to the aiding and uplifting of his fellow men. Father Hickey and his work meant much in Parkersburg, and in offering in this publication a tribute to his memory it is deemed but consistent to quote liberally, but with slight paraphrase, from the appreciative estimate that appeared in the Parkersburg Sentinel of October 12, 1909, the day of the death of the loved priest and citizen.

"No death in Parkersburg in recent years has caused such universal sorrow and regret in this community as that of Rev. Father E. M. Hickey. Father Hickey's life and services in Parkersburg are known to all. For thirty years he has labored in the vineyard of the parish of Parkersburg, and there have been fruitful results. He was highly educated, the master of many languages, a deep thinker, eloquent and flowery, and broad-minded and liberal. He was beloved by the members of his church and was esteemed and respected by everyone, of whatever creed and of whatever condition of life, as there were no class distinctions in his friendships, but a kindly salutation and a pleasant word were on his lips for everyone.

"Father Hickey was in the seventy-second year of age. He was a native of Catskill, New York, where he was born August 12, 1837, and it was there he spent his early years and received his preliminary education, which was acquired in the parochial school. Later, after he had decided to enter the priesthood, he took a full course at St. Mary's Seminary in the City of Baltimore, Maryland, among his classmates having been the late Cardinal Gibbons, and one of the most distinguished dignitaries of the church on the Western Continent, the two having always remained close friends. After concluding his course at St. Mary's Father Hickey went to Rome, where he spent several years in study.

"Father Hickey was ordained to the priesthood on October 5, 1860, in the cathedral at Newark, New Jersey, and he had lived one more year he would have celebrated his fiftieth anniversary of his ordination. During the Civil war he served as chaplain of a New Jersey regiment, and at the close of the war he returned to New Jersey, where he was stationed for some time thereafter. He was a member of the faculty of the Catholic college at Orange, the state, and his lectures in this institution attracted wide attention. They were deep and logical and were masterpieces of beautiful phrasing and diction.

"In 1873 Father Hickey was transferred to Newbern, West Virginia, and this small parish was enriched by his presence. In November, 1880, he was transferred to the Parkersburg Parish, where he succeeded Rev. Father H. Park, who had presided over the destinies of this parish for a period of nearly thirty years and who was known all over the state. For nearly thirty years Father Hickey has labored earnestly and zealously for the spiritual welfare of his large flock, and has spent much of his time and efforts in advancing the work of the church. Broad-minded, charitable and with a loving nature, Father Hickey had good word for everyone. In his makeup there was utter absence of bigotry and prejudice, and thus he won friends and admirers wherever he moved, regardless of denominational religious lines. He frequently took part in civic gatherings, and was always heard with pleasure and profit. Father Hickey was survived by a brother and two sisters, Charles Hickey, of Newark, New Jersey; Mrs. Mary Croton, of New York City; and Mrs. Sophia Norton, who has been his constant home companion for years."

In all that represents the higher ethics of human life and all that represents the finest conceptions of spirituality and Christian faith as expressed in service, Father Hickey stood forth as a noble and commanding figure, and his name and memory shall long be revered in the city and parish in which he long lived and labored to goodly ends.

CREED O. NEWLON is one of Grafton's veteran business men. He has been in the city and its business life more than forty years. His individual activities serve to emphasize the record of a family that for four or five generations has borne its share of business, civic, political and military duty in old Virginia and West Virginia. The family history, though it can be told only briefly, is a record of more than ordinary experience and achievement.

The record may properly start with the great-grandfather of the Grafton business man. His name was William Newlon. In 1799 he moved with his family from Lancaster County, Pennsylvania, to Fauquier County, Virginia. He married a Miss Martin, probably a native of Lancaster County. They had six children: James, whose record follows; Elijah, who died near Bentonsport, Iowa; William, who died in Loudoun County, Virginia; John, who never married and died in Loudoun County; Tamer, who probably never married; and Debbie, who married Mr. Cart and spent her life in Loudoun County.

James Newlon, representing the next generation, was born at Shepherdstown, Maryland, August 14, 1782. On March 1, 1807, in Fauquier County, Virginia, he married Jane Adams, and for a number of years they lived near Culpeper Court House. In 1824 they came to West Virginia, locating in what was then Harrison County, now Taylor County, and near Pruntytown. After his death Charles went to Webster to take charge of a mill and store.

James Newlon purchased his son's home in Pruntytown, and they lived there the rest of their days. He died March 29, 1867. His wife was born in Fauquier County in February, 1791, and died February 12, 1882.

Charles Washington Newlon, son of James and father of Creed O., was born near Culpeper Court House, Virginia, in 1816, and was about eight years of age when the family came to the frontier community of Pruntytown and to the farm on Fairmont Pike. Charles W. Newlon acquired a limited education and as a youth learned the tailor trade. By self study he educated himself far beyond the point to which his school advantages took him, and he exercised the qualities of a fine mind by acquiring wide information on many subjects and developed great fluency as a public speaker. He became prominent in politics and public affairs. He was the second clerk of Taylor County, and he held the offices of Circuit and County Court clerk. About 1856 he was elected to the Virginia Senate, being chosen on the democratic ticket, and remained a member of the Virginia government through a portion of the war. He was opposed to secession, but when Virginia went out of the Union he declared himself a loyal citizen like General Lee and other strong men of the town. One service he performed during the war was securing the exchange of Maj. Nathan Goff, a Union officer held by the Confederates as a hostage for Major Armsey of the Southern army, and that possibly saved the lives of both of these officers. After the war he seems to have retired from politics for some years. Later he was elected mayor of Grafton, and in 1876 was chosen to the West Virginia Senate. He remained loyal to the democratic party after the war, and in spite of this handicap he defeated the republican nominee and served one term in the Senate of the new state. He really possessed the qualifications of a safe leader in politics and affairs. About the close of his term in the Senate he gave up his business as a merchant at Grafton and moved his family to Buckhannon, where he helped organize the Buckhannon Bank and was its cashier until his death in February, 1889. Before the Civil war and while a resident of Taylor County he joined, in the spring of 1859, David Elliott and G. H. A. Kunst in the co-partnership of Elliott, Newlon and Company. This firm erected a four-story flouring mill and sawmill in Webster, and with the management and conduct of this and his mercantile business Charles W. Newlon was connected until the outbreak of the war.

Charles W. Newlon was a church worker, probably never missed a church service, and he and F. M. Durbin and John W. Hull promoted and organized the First Methodist Protestant Church in Grafton. He was licensed to preach, but probably never officiated in this capacity with the exception in the absence of the pastor. He was never at a loss to make a good speech, and had a large vocabulary and a very fine diction. He joined the church when about sixteen years of age, and probably as a consequence of his devotion to church he never became a member of any fraternity.

Charles W. Newlon married Christina Margaret Earl. The home of the Earl family was Randolph County, Virginia, at Beverly, where her father, Archibald Earl, was an extensive landowner and farmer and justice of the peace. Archibald Earl was born at Winchester in the Valley of Virginia, and was a strong Southern man over the issues of the Civil war. He married a Miss Buckley, of Beverly. Christina Margaret was one of eleven children, the others being: John, Elias, Jefferson, Archibald, Creed, Mrs. Lucinda Leonard, Mrs. Anzina Crawford, Mrs. Sallie Ann Harner, Mrs. Maria Ward and Mrs. Elizabeth Barlow. Mrs. Charles W. Newlon died at Buckhannon two years after the death of her husband, at the age of seventy-three. Her children were: Doctor Granville A., who practiced his profession in the vicinity of Buckhannon, where he died; Doctor Charles W., Jr., who died at Grafton; Jefferson Earl, who was a merchant and died at Buckhannon; Creed Owens; James Lee, who died at Grafton while a Baltimore and Ohio Railway conductor; and Ida, who resides at Parkersburg, wife of Charles W. McCormick.

It now remains to take up the individual record of Mr.

Creed O. Newlon. He was born at Pruntytown, Taylor County, February 17, 1851. He was about ten years of age when the Civil war broke out. At that time his parents followed the Southern army from Fetterman south, and though but a child he witnessed with them the first battles of the Civil war fought in West Virginia, these battles being at Philippi and Rich Mountain. He received his first schooling in his native community, and during the war attended the Rock Bridge Academy, Brownsburg, Virginia. The close of the war found the family living at Rock Bridge Baths on North River. Soon afterward his father returned to Western Virginia, to take possession of what remained of his property, and after disposing of his interests he gathered his family together and took them to Texas. The trip southwest was made by railroad to Parkersburg, by boat to New Orleans, thence by another boat up Red River to Jefferson, Texas. While in New Orleans his father purchased a Wheeling made wagon and at Jefferson, Texas, bought a pair of horses and harness and drove two hundred miles west into Texas to Fort Worth. He remained there about a year, and in the meantime became convinced that he was in a country too wild for permanent habitation, and accordingly traded his team and some other property for land in Randolph County, West Virginia. The party with whom he made the trade conveyed the family as far as Milliken, then the terminus of a railway, and from there they traveled by train to Houston, by steamboat down Buffalo Bayou to Galveston, and thence by boat over the Gulf to the mouth of the Mississippi River and up that river two hundred and ten miles to New Orleans. Here another boat received the family of eight Newlons, and they came up the Mississippi and Ohio through Cincinnati, where they transferred to another boat bound for Parkersburg. Leaving the river, they traveled by train to Grafton, having been absent only a year, but having had experiences of travel and change that would hardly be forgotten by a boy of fourteen or fifteen years. From Grafton the family went on to Volga, Barbour County, by wagon, remained at old Burnersville a year and then returned to Grafton.

In the meantime Creed O. Newlon had picked up considerable knowledge of mechanical trade, did work as a carpenter, was a merchant for a brief time at Grafton, and then took up the plumbing business and performed the first public plumbing job in the city. He now ranks as the oldest plumber of Grafton. For over nineteen years he was manager of the Grafton Gas and Electric Light Company. He then resumed business for himself, operating a foundry and machine shop, and in connection doing business in electrical and plumbing goods. He continued the machine shop until 1919, and he is still active in business on Latrobe Street, handling plumbing supplies and mining and machine supplies.

Mr. Newlon was chairman of the Water Commission that installed the first water system of Grafton, and he was formerly a member of the School Board. He has rather avoided politics beyond voting as a democrat, and he claims to have profited from his father's long experience in public affairs to the extent of steering clear of political burdens.

October 29, 1873, at Grafton, Mr. Newlon married Miss Katie B. Barbee, a native of Grafton and daughter of Joseph and Jackalina (Smith) Barbee. Mrs. Newlon died in August, 1898. She was the mother of six children: Owen E., a plumber at Marietta, Ohio; Floyd A., master mechanic of the Texas and Pacific Railway at Big Springs, Texas; Ethel N., of Columbus, Ohio, widow of T. Frank Cotton; Bertha K., wife of Allen T. Hodges, of Elkins, West Virginia; Ella-May, wife of Everett McDaniel, of Columbus, Ohio; and Albert Joseph, a machinist of Marietta, Ohio.

The soldier representative of the family in the great war is Owen E. Newlon, who volunteered in April, 1917, giving up a high salaried position and declaring that he was volunteering for the emergency of the war, and at the termination of which he wished to be discharged so as to re-enter civil life. He was assigned to Battery C of the Seventy-sixth Field Artillery of the Third Division, was trained at Fort Ethan Allen, Burlington, Vermont, and at Camp

Shelby, Hattiesburg, Mississippi, went overseas from New York and was on the front line at the Battle of Chateau Thierry and until the close, being never absent from his post of duty an hour. He was cited at Mousay, France, for distinguished service, was promoted to sergeant of his company, and the morning following the signing of the armistice he and his regiment started with the Army of Occupation for the Rhine. The people of Coblenz declared that the Seventy-sixth Field Artillery was the finest body of men they had ever seen. When he went into the service Owen Newlon knew personally the one hundred ninety-eight men of his battery, and when the war ended there were only thirty-five of his old acquaintances left in the active personnel.

October 1, 1901, Mr. Creed Newlon married Miss Katie B. Miller, of New Hope, Kentucky, where she was born, daughter of William B. and Mollie Miller. She is the oldest of a family of five daughters and one son. Her father was a farmer and is now deceased, and her widowed mother occupies the old home farm with her unmarried son and two unmarried daughters, William B., Jr., and Misses Sallie and Florence Miller. The married daughters besides Mrs. Newlon are Mrs. Sudie Peterson and Mrs. Lula May.

Mr. Creed Newlon has become affiliated with all branches of Masonry, being active in the Royal Arch Chapter, the Knights Templars Commandery and the Mystic Shrine, and has served as secretary of his lodge for twenty-two years. He is a past chancellor of the Knights of Pythias, and is a Grand Lodge representative and deputy grand chancellor of that order. He is a member of the Presbyterian Church.

WILLIAM PEARL McCue represents the younger generation of one of the old land holding families of West Virginia, and while he has kept in close touch with land and agriculture, his associations for a number of years have been those of an energetic business leader and man of affairs at Morgantown. Mr. McCue is in the insurance and real estate business and is general manager of the Hope Realty Company of Morgantown.

His birth occurred on the old McCue homestead in Nicholas County, West Virginia, December 25, 1883. His parents were Kyle B. and Martha (Whitman) McCue. His grandparents were John and Mary (Burr) McCue. The McCues were north Irish Scotch people who, on coming to America, settled in old Virginia. Kyle B. McCue was born in Nicholas County in 1853, and is still active in business affairs, being known throughout that section of the state as one of the largest land owners and stock men. He has about 2,000 acres of land in Nicholas County and has made a successful business of stock raising. He has been honored with a number of local offices, including membership in the County Court and school director.

William P. McCue lived with his father on the home farm until 1902, when he was nineteen. In the meantime he attended the public schools and was also a student in the West Virginia Wesleyan Seminary, now the Wesleyan University at Buckhannon. On leaving the farm he attended West Virginia University, and left there to return to Nicholas County and take charge of a 600-acre farm which he had inherited from his grandfather McCue. He remained in charge of this property for a year, and then returned to Morgantown and became associated with William E. Price in the furniture business. He had active charge of the firm's interests until 1916, in which year he became local agent for the Northwestern Life Insurance Company and has since built up a splendid business in insurance and also in real estate. He organized the Hope Realty Company, which he now manages, and was also identified with the organization of the Smith-McCue Coal Company, and was one of the organizers and has since been a director of the Union Bank & Trust Company.

Other affiliations that betoken his wholesome interest in the life and affairs of his home city are: Morgantown Union Lodge No. 4, A. F. and A. M., Morgantown Chapter No. 14, R. A. M., Morgantown Commandery No. 18, K. T., Morgantown Lodge of Perfection No. 6 of the Scottish Rite, West Virginia Consistory No. 1 and Osiris Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Wheeling; Morgantown Lodge No.

411, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks; Monongahela Lodge, Independent Order of Odd Fellows; Kiwanis Club, Chamber of Commerce; and the First Baptist Church.

On December 27, 1907, Mr. McCue married Edith Price, daughter of William E. and Elizabeth Price, of Morgantown. Her death occurred in May, 1909, shortly after the birth of her son, William Price McCue, who was born April 24, 1909. September 25, 1913, Mr. McCue married Ann Burke, who was born in Greene County, Pennsylvania, daughter of Justus South and Esther (Ross) Burke. The three sons of this marriage are: Robert Burke and Richard Burke, twins, born October 7, 1914, Richard dying at birth, and John Burke McCue, born December 19, 1916.

BENJAMIN F. BONE, M. D., who is engaged in the practice of his profession in the City of Moundsville, Marshall County, has unequivocal prestige as one of the leading physicians and surgeons of this section of the state and has gained specially high reputation as a skilled surgeon. His success has been on a parity with his professional ability and his personality has gained to him a host of staunch friends in the county of his adoption. The doctor has identified himself most fully with local interests and owns and occupies one of the finest homes in Moundsville.

Doctor Bone was born at Mount Pleasant, Ohio, October 4, 1875, and is a scion of one of the honored pioneer families of the old Buckeye State. His paternal grandfather came to the United States from Haling Island, England, and was a resident of Ohio at the time of his death, in 1879, when seventy-six years of age. His brother, Rev. Henry Bone, was for forty years pastor of the Methodist Church at Martin's Ferry, Ohio. A maternal uncle, Dr. Doctor Bone was Dr. Nathaniel R. Coleman, who served as president of the Ohio State Board of Health and held other positions of influence in connection with public affairs. The Coleman family was founded in Ohio in the early pioneer period of its history.

After completing the curriculum of the high school Doctor Bone entered the medical department of George Washington University, at Washington, District of Columbia, and after receiving his degree of Doctor of Medicine he came to West Virginia and engaged in practice at Tunnelton, where he also held the position of railway surgeon. Later he was engaged in practice at Fairmont until 1908, when he came to Moundsville, where he had charge of the prison hospital under the administration of Governor Dawson. He confined his attention largely to office and surgical practice, is a valued member of the staff of the Reynolds Memorial Hospital, and just prior to the signing of the armistice which brought the World war to a close he had been accepted for service in the Medical Corps of the United States Army. At the inception of the movement to send medical units to the stage of warfare Doctor Bone had tendered his services but at that time there was no requisition for his aid in this capacity.

Doctor Bone is liberal in politics and gives his support to men and measures rather than being constrained by strict partisan lines. He has received the thirty-second degree in the Scottish Rite of the Masonic fraternity and is affiliated also with the Mystic Shrine. He is a director of the City and County Bank at Moundsville, and in a professional way is actively identified with the Marshall County Medical Society, the West Virginia State Medical Society and the American Medical Association. His chief diversion is found in annual hunting trips in Northern Michigan on the shores of Lake Superior, where he maintains a cabin as a domicile for use in hunting seasons of deer. He has several fine trophies of the hunt, including splendid deer heads. He has also maintained a summer home for the past ten years at Lake Odessa, Michigan, where the family spend the summer, and the fishing is very good. His wife, whose maiden name was Murtle G. Harr, is a daughter of the late and honored Dr. Wayne Harr, of Fairmont, West Virginia. The three children of this union are Margaret, who is, in 1921, a student in the University of West Virginia, she having been previously graduated in Washington Seminary, at Washington, Pennsylvania; Dorothy, like her sister graduated from high school and is now a student in the State University; and George, who graduated from the Linsly Military Academy of Wheeling, West Virginia, is now attending Washington and Jefferson College.

Wm. P. McEne

GRAFTON EDUCATORS. The dean of the educational forces of Grafton is Miss Amanda Abbott, who has been continuously in the service of the schools of that city since 1877. In any account of the school workers of the city her name easily stands first.

Her grandfather was Abner Abbott, who came with his wife from King and Queen County, Virginia, and settled in what is now Lewis County, between Weston and Buckhannon. He acquired a large tract of land and was much interested in public affairs. He was a judicial officer attending court at Weston at a time when the country was new and all travel was by wagon or horseback. Once his son accompanied him to court and returned home with the horses. During the week Squire Abbott remarked that if he had a horse he would go home. One of the attending lawyers put a horse at his disposal. On the way he was thrown off, his head striking a stone or stake, and he was instantly killed. After his death his lands, due to a flaw in the title, were lost to his heirs. He had married Fannie Price, also a native of Virginia, and daughter of a slaveholder. But Squire Abbott was opposed to slavery, and in line with his convictions he returned a negro boy given his wife by her father. Mrs. Fannie Abbott spent her last years with a son in Missouri. Her children were: James, who became a resident of Missouri; John and Jacob, who remained in West Virginia; Vernon, whose record follows; and Patricia, or Pattie, who died in Missouri.

Vernon Abbott was born in what is now Lewis County, June 23, 1820. He acquired a common school education, learned the trade of plasterer, developing a high degree of artistry in the handling of such material, and did a contracting business. His mind was active and led him to study and reading as a permanent taste. He was a keen student of political conditions, was an intense patriot and republican, but announced as a result of his experience in politics his conviction that Grover Cleveland would win the election of 1884.

His home for many years was at Fairmont, where he died in 1890. His first wife was Priscilla VanZandt. The children of this marriage were: William E., who served as a Union soldier; Lee Roy, a lawyer, now deceased; and Fannie, who became the wife of J. C. McKinney and reared her family at Fairmont. The second wife of Vernon Abbott was Mrs. Mary (Toothman) Price, who died in September, 1911, aged eighty-four. She was the mother of: Miss Amanda; Alice, of Fairmont; Millard, who died in Fairmont; Ida, who for ten years had charge of the department of history in the Fairmont State Normal School and the last two years was dean of women; Luther, a merchant at Grafton and a leading Taylor County citizen; James H. and Thomas Bruce, twins, deceased; and Clarence V., connected with the Domestic Coke Company of Fairmont.

Miss Amanda Abbott was born at Fairmont, acquired her first advantages in a subscription school there, later attended public school, and graduated from the Fairmont Normal in 1873. Throughout her life she has been an active member of the Methodist Protestant Church, and year after year taught the primary class in the Sunday School, thus broadening the scope of her influence beyond the schoolroom in behalf of the character building among the young. Her first teaching was done as a substitute in Fairmont under Professor T. C. Miller. She became a regular teacher in the Newburg schools, and from there came to Grafton in 1877, taking charge of the primary grade in one of the six rooms of the old Central Building. The two years she spent in Newburg were under Principal Bowman. Her coming to Grafton was at the invitation of Marion Durbin, then president of the school board, the other two members being Arthur Sinsel and John Deck, all men of constructive ideals in molding the educational program of the city. Some of the little children to whom she directed her first salutation in 1877 are now grandfathers or grandmothers of pupils in her primary class. There has been no interruption to this service for which she has dedicated her life and her highest talents. Grafton has grown and expanded greatly as a city and in its schools. The Central Building was the only schoolhouse in Grafton proper when she came, but other schools have come in with the coalescing of several districts comprised in the limits of the present city, and the city now has a total of seven brick school buildings, beside the parochial schools. For forty-four years Miss Abbott has had the primary work in the new or remodeled Central Building.

Among her old pupils who have achieved some special distinction are Howard H. Holt, editor and proprietor of the Grafton Sentinel; Harry A. Abbott, cashier of the Grafton Banking & Trust Company; Harry Friedman, lawyer and secretary of the Grafton Board of Education; Max Friedman, a leading business man; and Miss Grace White, who teaches in the eighth grade of the public schools.

With education as her chosen life work Miss Abbott has accepted many opportunities to make her experience available to the teaching profession, and is widely known over the state through the associations of teachers. She has attended a great many of the State Associations, and she was present at the first regular meeting of the Round Table at Fairmont, and has since attended every annual meeting of the Monongahela Branch of the Round Table.

Miss Abbott is well informed concerning the educational administration of the Grafton schools. The first principal, at a time when West Grafton and Fetterman were separate school entities, was Patrick O'Brien. The first winner of the Peabody medal or graduate of the Grafton schools was Florence Jacob. O'Brien was followed by U. S. Fleming, who gave the schools a regular curriculum, permitting graduation as a prescribed course. Following Fleming came Professor Jack Wilkinson, who remained six years. He was an excellent disciplinarian and an all-round school man. Hayward Fleming, his successor, was an exemplar of thoroughness in school work, and that characteristic followed him in other lines of work. He was followed by J. S. Cornwell and by Professor Gorby.

Professor Humphrey, who had been a high school principal at Fairmont, did some efficient work the two years he was at Grafton and proved his ability both in the administrative and the teaching departments. It was a congenial work here, and he has been a strong man in educational affairs since in the state.

When he left Morgan Brooks, principal of the high school, took his place as acting superintendent. He was a good teacher, possessed a splendid personality, and since leaving Grafton has been in school work at Buckhannon.

Since 1914 the superintendent of the Grafton schools has been Mr. Burns. From the first he has been the embodiment of the educational progress, and in addition to what he accomplished in behalf of the present high school he has achieved results in co-ordinating and increasing the efficiency of the schools in every grade and department.

JOSHUA WHITEHAIR has long been known as a man of great energy, sound business ability and civic spirit, engaged in farming and the livestock business near Terra Alta, and member of one of the old and substantial families of Preston County.

He was born in that community, February 2, 1856. His grandfather, George Whitehair, was a native of Germany and came from Luxemburg in company with some relatives, the Nine family, which also became well represented in Preston County. George Whitehair married Polly McGruder, a native of Ireland. Their children were: John, a shoemaker, who died at Rowlesburg; Christopher, who though a civilian was taken prisoner by the Federal troops and died while at Camp Chase, Columbus, Ohio; George, who spent his life on a farm near Eglen in Preston County; Isaac, who lived on a farm in Salt Lick; Josias, who moved to Delaware County, Indiana, where he spent the rest of his life; Fannie, who married Henry Broman and moved to Ohio; Margaret and Polly, who left the old homestead as young women and did not afterward keep in touch with the family. The second wife of George Whitehair was Margaret Strawser, and the three children of this union were: Fydelany, who lived for a time in Indiana and then settled in Washington State; Mary, who married Minor Whitehair in Indiana and died in Delaware County; and Susanna, who died at Salt Lick as Mrs. Henry Messenger.

Daniel Whitehair, another son of George Whitehair, was born on Salt Lick, near Ambersburg, more than a hundred years ago, and lived in that community as a farmer until shortly after the Civil war, when he moved to the Terra Alta locality, establishing his home about two miles northwest of the little city, on the mountaintop. Daniel Whitehair never had any educational advantages, and with this handicap he acquired a competency as a farmer, lived industriously and rather uneventfully, never concerned himself with church or politics, merely voting as a democrat. His wife was Sarah Messenger, daughter of Edmund and Eliza (Mason) Messenger. The Messengers came from Maine to Preston County in pioneer times. The children of Daniel Whitehair and wife were: Charlotte, who married Francis Nune near Sunnyside, Maryland; Edmund, of Philippi, West Virginia; Emily E., who became the wife of Samuel Freeland and died in Preston County; Elijah, a farmer at the old homestead; Joshua; Charles, of Davis, West Virginia; Spencer, a farmer near Terra Alta; Grant, a farmer near Albright; George, a farmer in Delaware County, Indiana; Nancy, wife of Gilbert Metheny, of Terra Alta; Malinda Jane, who died at Terra Alta, wife of Walter Guthrie; Amanda, Mrs. Lawrence Wright, of Delaware County; and Louisa, who died as the wife of Chris Nordick.

Joshua Whitehair attended the first free schools established on Salt Lick, and was about ten years of age when his parents moved to the Terra Alta community. Here he continued to attend country schools, and at the same time gained an experience of the hard work of the farm, clearing off the timber, making staves and crossies and now and then cutting a few sawlogs. He was an aid to his parents until past his majority, and after his marriage he settled on a portion of the homestead, living there until 1894, when he moved to his present place, which had been settled by members of the Messenger family. Here for nearly thirty years Mr. Whitehair has been vigorous in the prosecution of his farming enterprise, but is most widely known as a buyer and shipper of livestock. As a young man for several years he butchered lambs for a hotel at Terra Alta. Later he bought stock for D. B. Zimmerman of Somerset County, Pennsylvania, for ten years, was then local buyer for the firm of Eden & Company of Baltimore, and later he and his sons used their own capital for the business and for a number of years have been shippers of stock to the Baltimore and Pittsburgh markets.

Any worthy movement or interest of the community Mr. Whitehair regards as his own. He has been trustee of the local schools, has served as road boss, votes for the best man in local politics, and in national affairs is a democrat.

Mr. Whitehair has reared a fine family of children and has a number of grandchildren. April 25, 1878, he married Phoebe Ellen Garner, daughter of William R. and Nancy (Ridenour) Garner. The Garner children were: Eva, deceased wife of Thomas B. Jackson; Julia A., who married William Taylor; Phoebe Ellen; Mary who married David Everly; John A., Andrew, William and Wesley Garner.

The oldest of the children of Mr. and Mrs. Whitehair is William, living at Terra Alta, and by his marriage to Isa Kelley is the father of a son, Ingh Kelley. John Whitehair, associated with his father in the stock business, is unmarried. Enzer, a prominent stock dealer near Terra Alta, married Annie Dumire, and their children are Roy, Grace, Blanche and Earl. Bruce is a farmer at Kalispell, Montana. Mintie is the wife of Ora Teets, of Cranesville, and they have a son, Bruce. F. Arch, associated with his father in the stock business, is unmarried. Nancy married Walter Childs, of Kingwood, and they have a son, Willis. T. Rowland, the youngest, now in the stock business at home, finished his education at Ashland College, Ashland, Ohio, and for six years was a teacher in the public schools.

The son Bruce Whitehair left home as a young man and went to Montana, where he was in the railway mail service until he volunteered and in 1918 went to France and was assigned to duty in the army mail service at Paris. He resumed his work with the postal department after his return to the United States, and then bought a farm near Kalispell, Montana.

T. Rowland Whitehair is also an ex-service man, entering the army in April, 1918, and training at Camp Meade as a member of the One Hundred and Fifty-first Company. He was soon discharged, in May, 1918, and then resumed work as a teacher, but since 1919 has been in the stock business.

ALBERT LAFAYETTE LOHM, member of the Clarksburg law firm, Neff & Lohm, brought to his career at the bar some unusual associations and advantages derived from a working contact with leading men of affairs in other lines. He has been extremely successful as a lawyer, and his firm is one of the ablest represented in the Harrison County Bar.

Mr. Lohm was born at Keyser, Mineral County, West Virginia, May 9, 1884, one of the five children of George W. L. and Ella R. (Shaw) Lohm. His father was a native of Jefferson County and his mother of Taylor County. The Lohm family was established in America several generations ago from Germany, and many of the name still live around Shepherdstown in Jefferson County. The Shaw family is of Scotch ancestry, one of the oldest in Taylor County, and Robert Shaw was a pioneer settler at Grafton.

George W. L. Lohm has spent his active life as a railroad man. When Albert Lohm was twelve years of age the family moved to Oakland, Maryland, where his parents still live. The son acquired a high school education in Maryland, graduated at the age of sixteen from the Oakland High School, and the following year attended a business college at Cincinnati. For one year he was private secretary to the general passenger agent of the Pittsburgh & Lake Erie Railroad at Pittsburgh. He left the railroad service to enter the law department of the University of West Virginia at Morgantown, and completed his course in 1906 and was admitted to the bar that year. In 1907 he became private secretary to Hon. William P. Hubbard of Wheeling, member of Congress from their First Congressional District of West Virginia. Mr. Lohm was with Mr. Hubbard during his two terms in Congress, and saw much of the life and affairs of the capital city. While in Washington he pursued post graduate studies in law at George Washington University, from which he was graduated LL. B. in 1909.

Since 1911 Mr. Lohm has given his entire time to the practice of law, in association with Mr. Carl W. Neff. In 1917 he was appointed United States commissioner for the Federal District Court at Clarksburg, and performed the duties of that office until May, 1921.

Mr. Lohm has also earned prominence in the republican party of West Virginia. In 1912 he was a delegate to the State Republican Convention, and was chairman of the committee on credentials, a special compliment to a man of his years. He belongs to the County and State Bar associations, and in Masonry is a member of the K. C. C. in Scottish Rite and is venerable master of Mizrah Lodge of Perfection No. 5. He is a Presbyterian.

November 16, 1916, Mr. Lohm married Miss Mary Genevieve Harrison, of a distinguished West Virginia family. Her great-grandfather, Judge William A. Harrison, came from Prince William County, Virginia, and established his home at Clarksburg in 1821, just a century ago. She is the only granddaughter of Hon. Thomas W. Harrison, who at one time was a judge of the West Virginia Supreme Court. She is the only daughter of Hon. Samuel R. Harrison, former banker and clerk of the United States Circuit Court at Clarksburg. Mrs. Lohm completed her education in Wheaton Seminary in Massachusetts. They have one son, John Harrison Lohm, born May 9, 1918, on his father's thirty-fourth birthday.

GUY B. PATTERSON. One of the important industrial enterprises at Cameron, Marshall County, is that of the Patterson Glass Manufacturing Company, of which Guy B. Patterson is secretary and treasurer and George B. Patterson is the president. This concern represents a reorganization of the Marshall Window Glass Company, which was promoted by Guy B. Patterson and which erected the manufacturing plant at Cameron in the year 1901. The original company gave employment to seventy-five operatives in the manufacturing of window glass, and Mr. Patterson was secretary of the company from its inception until its reorganization under the present title in 1906, since which time he has been secretary and treasurer. The substantial enterprise now entails the retention of about 150 men, and the capacity of the manufactory is now about double that of the original. The pay roll of the company averages about $5,000 a week, and this has significant bearing on the commercial prestige of Cameron, the sand utilized at the factory being obtained from Berkeley Springs, Morgan County, and the limestone from Martinsburg, Berkeley County. The employees are numbered among the substantial and valued citizens of Cameron, many of them being highly skilled artisans and being the owners of home properties in the community. The plant is modern in all equipments, including continuous furnace provision instead of the more common individual fire pots. Here are manufactured excellent grades of window glass, and there is a constant and ready demand for the output of the factory.

Guy B. Patterson was born at Barnesville, Belmont County, Ohio, and is a son of George B. Patterson, who is president of the Patterson Glass Manufacturing Company and who has maintained his residence at Cameron for the past fifteen years. Guy B. Patterson has been associated with the operation of the plant of the Eastern Ohio Glass Company in his native town of Barnesville, and there familiarized himself with all technical details of manufacturing, as well as with the general office details connected with the business. He has brought his experience into most effective play in developing the substantial and prosperous business of the company of which he is now secretary and treasurer, and one of the vital and progressive business men of this section of West Virginia. Mr. Patterson and his father own the gas well which supplies their factory and also other industrial plants at Cameron, and he is vice president and a director of the Bank of Cameron. Mr. Patterson married Miss Alta Parriott, daughter of Samuel Parriott, who was formerly engaged in the hotel business at Cameron and who was one of the most successful and popular hotel men in this section of West Virginia. After his retirement from active business Mr. Parriott continued to reside at Cameron until his death. Mr. and Mrs. Patterson have two sons, George Benjamin and Samuel.

JOHN SPURGEON CARPER, D. D. S. About one year after receiving his honorable discharge as first lieutenant in the Dental Corps of the United States Army, in which he had been in service in France, Doctor Carper established himself in the practice of his profession at Morgantown, where he has a finely equipped office, with the most approved facilities and accessories in both laboratory and operating departments, and where he has built up a substantial and representative practice.

Doctor Carper was born on a farm in Roane County, this state, on the 9th of January, 1887, and is a son of Clifton H. and Prussia (Stackhouse) Carper, the former a native of Virginia and the latter of what is now West Virginia. The father gave his entire active career to farm enterprise, and his death occurred October 5, 1902, his widow being now a resident of Charleston, the capital city of West Virginia.

The first nineteen years of Doctor Carper's life were passed on the farm, and in the meanwhile he profited by the advantage afforded in the public schools. He was for two years a student in the high school at Gassaway, Braxton County, and thereafter attended the State Normal School at that place for an equal period. He next made a successful record as a teacher, his work having been in two schools, and in 1910 he entered the Ohio College of Dental Surgery at Cincinnati, in which he was graduated May 12, 1914, with the degree of Doctor of Dental Surgery. In the same year he engaged in the practice of his profession in the City of Charleston, where he continued until the nation became involved in the World war, when he subordinated all personal interests to enter into patriotic service. On the 5th of October, 1918, Doctor Carper enlisted in the Dental Corps of the United States Army and was sent to Camp Lee, Virginia, where, six months later, he was commissioned a first lieutenant. From Camp Lee he was transferred to Camp Upton, New York, and four months later he was ordered to France as a casual officer in the Dental Corps. He continued in active duty in France for a period of ten months, and on May 30, 1919, sailed for home. He was mustered out and received his discharge at Camp Dix, New Jersey, and he still is a member of the Dental Reserve Corps, in which his commission as first lieutenant will expire January 10, 1922.

Upon leaving the army Doctor Carper engaged in the practice of his profession at Gassaway, Braxton County, but a year later he transferred his professional headquarters to Morgantown, in which city he has built up an excellent practice. He is a member of Gassaway Lodge No. 196, Knights of Pythias, and is actively identified with the Morgantown Chamber of Commerce.

Doctor Carper married Miss Madge Virginia Snyder, daughter of Jackson and Mary (Burke) Snyder, of Gilmer County, this state, and the one child of this union is a daughter, Mary Gertrude.

DAYTON P. RUNNER. The Runner family has been in Monongalia County for considerably more than a century. They have been substantial farmers, and Dayton P. Runner, of the present generation, has found in farming a satisfying as well as a profitable business. He conducts a dairy farm four miles east of Morgantown, in Morgan District.

He was born August 1, 1861, on an adjoining farm, and is a son of William Runner and a grandson of Henry Runner. William Runner was a native of Frederick County, Maryland, and was a boy when the family came to West Virginia, about 1815, and settled on a farm in Morgan District. William Runner learned the carpenter's trade, but for the most part farmed. He lived for many years near Morgantown and had owned several pieces of property, including the farm adjoining the present home of his son Dayton P. Here he died about 1881, at the age of eighty-three, while his brother, Lewis W., survived him twenty years.

Dayton P. Runner was reared and educated in Monongalia County and at the age of twenty went out to Colorado. After a year he returned, and for forty years his efforts and energies have been well extended in the rural communities around Morgantown. His home has been at his present location for eighteen years. He has 108 acres, the principal business being dairying. He has a good herd of cows, including some high grade Jerseys, and retails bottled milk to customers. His average production is about fifty gallons daily. Mr. Runner is a member of the Board of Education in his district, is a republican and belongs to the Methodist Protestant Church at Mount Union.

At the age of twenty-five he married Jennie Sinder, who grew up in the same locality as her husband. She was a child when her father, Clark Snider, died, and her mother, Maria Chisler, died at the age of fifty. Without children of their own Mr. and Mrs. Runner have cared for four boys and girls. One of them, W. O. Flumm, is now a partner with Mr. Runner. Clara Snider, a niece of Mrs. Runner, has been in their home for the past eight years and is attending high school.

Mr. Runner has brought his land to a high state of fertility and his methods of cropping have produced satisfactory yields of the grains on land that many of the old timers considered suitable for grazing purposes alone.

D. ALTON JACKSON, representing an old and honored business family of Preston County, is a lumber manufacturer at Rowlesburg and has been effectively identified with the business and civic affairs of that locality for a dozen years.

Mr. Jackson was born at Kingwood, October 23, 1881. His grandfather was a Pennsylvanian, early identified with the iron furnace industry in that state, but for many years made his home in Monongalia County, West Virginia. He was twice married, was the father of twenty-four sons and three daughters, and of these only one now survives, Mrs. Anabell Mearar of Kingwood.

Daniel R. Jackson, father of the Rowlesburg business man, was a child of his father's second marriage, to Miss Fleming. Daniel R. Jackson was born and reared in Monongalia County, had a practical education, and as a young man entered the Union Army as a private soldier of the Fourteenth West Virginia Infantry. He served three years with the Army of the Potomac, and among other engagements participated in the battle of Antietam. He was twice wounded, in one engagement having an ear drum burst and was once shot in the thigh. He suffered from his wounds the rest of his life. While he became a member of the G. A. R. after the war, he attended only a few of its reunions. His life for half a century was devoted to merchandising at Kingwood, where he began as a general merchant, later conducted a hardware store, but finally returned to general merchandising. He was a successful business man and interested in progressive development. He was associated with the promotion of the Tunnelton, Kingwood & Fairhance Railway, now the West Virginia Northern, and from 1888 to 1892 was high sheriff of Preston County, succeeding A. Staley Shaw in that office. Soon after leaving the office of sheriff he was appointed deputy United States marshal by Captain Thompson, and also served under Marshal C. D. Elliott. Altogether he spent eight years in that service. While engaged in official duties his mercantile business was carried on by his sons.

Daniel R. Jackson by his activities and character was one of the best citizens of Preston County. He died July 6, 1920, at the age of seventy-six. He was a Methodist and affiliated with the Knights of Pythias. His wife was Rachel G. Martin, sister of J. Ami Martin, a native of Preston County, who became well known in business affairs at Morgantown. The children of Daniel R. Jackson and wife were: Charles M.; Hoy B.; D. Alton; Mildred M., wife of M. L. Jackson, of Kingwood; Vernon F., of Kingwood; Gertrude Vance, of Morgantown and George D. West Virginia pays a special tribute to George D. Jackson, who was the first native son of the state killed in the World war. He was at the front in France as a lieutenant when he paid the extreme sacrifice, and his body now lies in the cemetery at Kingwood.

D. Alton Jackson grew up at Kingwood, attended the public schools, and left school to go to work as a clerk in his father's hardware store. He learned the business there by diligent application for seven years. His next service was with the Austen Coal & Coke Company at Austen in Preston County, where for seven years he was manager of the company store. Then followed a period as a salesman on the road for the Miller-Clark Grain Company, with headquarters at Fairmont. Mr. Jackson in 1909 located at Rowlesburg, which he now regards as his permanent home. For two years he was on the road as a salesman for the Rowlesburg Grocery Company. He then engaged in the hardware business for a few years, but sold his stock and has since been a lumber manufacturer.

The Rowlesburg Lumber Company was organized by Mr. Jackson and W. B. Bowman. They are essentially manufacturers rather than dealers, and their mills are located on Cheat River, above Rowlesburg. They cut large quantities of hardwood lumber and also have a planing mill for finished product. While most of this lumber is sold locally, some of it is exported through jobbers.

Mr. Jackson is a republican, although not giving much of his time to politics. He served as deputy sheriff under Sheriff Schaeffer, and has been a member of the Council and mayor of Rowlesburg. Mr. Jackson is a member of the Masonic Lodge at Newburg, the Royal Arch Chapter at Grafton, also the Knights Templar Commandery there and is a member of Scottish Rite Consistory and Osiris Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Wheeling.

September 21, 1901, at Marietta, Ohio, Mr. Jackson married Miss Jessie Augusta Spahr. She is a sister of the editor of the Kingwood Argus. Her father, Jesse Spahr, was a tanner by trade and spent all his life in Preston County. Judge Spahr married Rebecca Gibson, and Mrs. Jackson is one of their seven children still surviving.

CHARLES RUSSELL HUSTON. Morgantown, his native city, has been the scene of the varied experiences and achievements of Charles Russell Huston, an active business man for over thirty years, and for many years president of the Morgantown Savings & Loan Society.

Mr. Huston was born in Morgantown, February 18, 1865, son of Samuel P. and Louise (Murphy) Huston. His great-grandfather, Peter Huston, was a native of Ireland, and about the close of the American Revolution came to America and established his home in Somerset County, Pennsylvania. His son, Chambers Huston, was born in Somerset in 1809 and died in 1889. He followed the industry and trade of carpenter, and was a member of the Methodist Church. His wife was Margaret Pritts, who died in 1896. Their third son was the late Samuel P. Huston, who was born in Somerset County, January 3, 1835, and died in Morgantown, West Virginia, in 1912. He also learned the carpenter's trade, and moved to Morgantown in 1858. For many years he had an extensive business as a building contractor over that section of West Virginia. He was a leader in the Methodist Church and superintendent of its Sunday school and was an Odd Fellow. March 1, 1861, he married Louise Murphy, and they celebrated their golden wedding anniversary. Her death also occurred in 1912. They had three children: Chauncey W., Charles Russell and Louise.

Charles Russell Huston acquired a public school education at Morgantown and spent two years in the University of West Virginia. Leaving college at the end of his sophomore year, he took up the trade of sheet metal worker and roofer, and from 1885 became a contractor in the roofing, sheet metal and heating business. For twenty-six years he was active in that line, with an organization capable of handling the largest contracts. He finally sold the business in 1911.

Mr. Huston has been identified with the Morgantown Savings & Loan Society since a few years after its organization, was a director, and since 1900 has been its president. He is also a director and one of the executive committee of the Bank of Morgantown, and has been interested in several local industries and is now department manager at the Saberton plant of the American Sheet & Tin Plate Corporation.

Mr. Huston and family are members of the First Methodist Episcopal Church and he was for many years treasurer of the Sunday school. In December, 1905, he married Miss Beula B. Hubbard, daughter of Mrs. Eva Hubbard, of Morgantown, formerly of Wheeling. Mr. and Mrs. Huston are the parents of three children: Charles Russell, Jr., born January 15, 1907; Louise, born January 19, 1909; and Helen, born May 17, 1911.

HOWARD G. GILGER. Born and reared close to the historic center of the original petroleum production of America, Howard G. Gilger has been a worker in the oil fields since early youth, and for many years has had prominent associations with the West Virginia oil and gas industry. He is a contractor, and for many years has had his home at New Martinsville.

He was born in Venango County, Pennsylvania, November 20, 1859. The Gilger family is of German origin and was established in Pennsylvania in Colonial times. His grandfather, Jonas Gilger, was born in Bucks County, that state, in 1754, but spent the greater part of his life in Clarion County, where he owned a large amount of land. He died in Clarion County in 1863. He reared a family of seven sons and seven daughters, all now deceased. Jonas Gilger, Jr., father of Howard G., was born in Clarion County in 1822, and returned to his native county to spend his later years at St. Petersburg, where he died in 1885. As a young man he took up farming, and became a cattle drover to the eastern markets. As a railroad contractor he built the Allegheny Railroad from the mouth of Clarion River to Fulton, Pennsylvania. From 1870 on, his busi-ess interests were in the oil districts of Venango and McKean counties. He was a contractor with his teams and also a jobber in coal and other supplies for the oil fields. Jonas Gilger was a republican, served as a member of the school Board in Richland Township of Venango County, and was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. He married Hettie Dreihelbis, who was born in Berks County, Pennsylvania, in 1822, and died in Venango County in 1882. Her ancestors were also German and identified with the Colonial period of Pennsylvania. Her father, Jacob Dreihelbis, was born in Berks County in 1786 and died in Venango County in 1869, having been a pioneer farmer in the latter county. He reared a family of four sons and four daughters. The children of Jonas and Hettie Gilger were: Samuel, a farmer in Venango County; Sarah, who died in Venango County at the age of sixty; wife of Samuel Martz, a farmer; Wesley, a farmer, who died in Venango County at the age of sixty-two; Frances, of St. Petersburg, Clarion County, widow of John Morgan, who was an oil operator; Clara, widow of William Sheiry, a farmer near Franklin in Venango County; Oliver, a farmer, who died at Garretttsville, Ohio, aged forty-nine years and six months; Howard G.; Della, wife of Martin Fortmeyer, an oil well driller and contractor living at North Baltimore, Ohio; and John Edward, of Cement, Oklahoma, a superintendent of oil properties.

Howard G. Gilger grew up in Venango County and attended the rural schools there to the age of sixteen. His working career began as a pumpier in the Clarion County oil fields. Two years later he removed to McKean County, was a pumpier there, and from that was made a superintendent of the E. H. Jennings oil interests. This work kept him in McKean County until 1894, when he was transferred to West Union, Doddridge County, West Virginia, and continued as Mr. Jennings' superintendent there until 1900. Since then for twenty years he has been a contractor in the drilling of oil and gas wells, and has operated his outfits over many of the prominent West Virginia fields, including Springtown in Doddridge County, then at Salem, then at Richmond Run on Fishing Creek and at Steels Run in Wetzel County. His operations have covered the oil and gas fields of the counties of Wood, Ritchie, Harrison and Marion. Mr. Gilger has had his home at New Martinsville since 1903, and owns a modern residence at 235 Locust Street. His principal interests as an oil well pumpier are now in the fields of Wetzel and Marion counties.

Mr. Gilger is a republican, served a term on the City Council at West Union, is affiliated with the Methodist Episcopal Church and fraternally is a member of Friendship Lodge No. 56, A. F. and A. M., at West Union; Clarksburg Chapter No. 11, R. A. M.; Clarksburg Commandery No. 13, K. T.; and Osiris Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Wheeling.

In 1891, at Olean, New York, he married Miss Flora Steele, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Steele, now deceased. Her father was an oil field contractor. Mrs. Gilger died in McKean County in the spring of 1894. Her only surviving child is Miss Della, who is a graduate of the Martinsville High School and the West Liberty State Normal School and is a popular teacher in the schools of Martinsville. In 1898, at Cumberland, West Virginia, Mr. Gilger married Miss Mary A. Johnson, daughter of Joseph and Hattie (Weekley) Johnson, the latter now living at Bakersfield, California. Her father was a native of Columbus, Ohio, was a miner in that state and died at Nelsonville, Ohio, in 1876. Mr. and Mrs. Gilger became the parents of ten children: Hazel, the oldest, born October 11, 1898, is a graduate of the New Martinsville High School and the Normal Department of Wesleyan College at Buckhannon, and after teaching three years in Wetzel County was married to Mr. Joseph Henry, a teacher now located at Woodland in Marshall County, West Virginia. The second child, Garnett, died at the age of one year. Roy, born November 23, 1901, is a graduate of the Magnolia High School at New Martinsville and a teacher at Piney in Wetzel County. The younger children are: Earl, born January 20, 1903; Virginia, born December 8, 1904, a senior in the Magnolia High School; Fred, born October 7, 1906, in the freshman year of high school; Doris, born February 20, 1908; Betty, born November 14, 1909; Joe, born April 2, 1911 and Phyllis, born June 22, 1914.

JAMES S. HUNT has been a resident of Tunnelton almost seventy years and through long service as a mechanic, merchant, banker and public spirited citizen has well earned the high esteem he enjoys.

Mr. Hunt was born at Paw Paw, West Virginia, January 25, 1850, son of Robert and Margaret (Cunningham) Hunt. Nine months after his birth his parents came to West Virginia and while the first tunnel was being constructed at Tunnelton his father established his home there. Both parents were natives of Ireland, were married after coming to the United States, and for several years lived in Allegany County, Maryland, where Robert Hunt was employed on public works. After locating at Tunnelton he kept a store and also managed a small farm. He was a democrat in politics, and died in 1872 when about sixty-seven years of age. His widow died ten years later when past eighty.

James Sylvester Hunt, only child of his parents, grew up at Tunnelton, acquired a subscription school education, and learned the principles of merchandising from his father. On leaving home he worked in the Baltimore & Ohio shops at Piedmont and learned something of the boilermaker's trade and then went out to the Pacific Coast and for two and a half years was employed in a boiler shop at San Francisco and worked on the construction of the then famous Palace Hotel. In 1876 he came back across the plains to West Virginia, and at Tunnelton resumed his connection with his home community by various activities, the principal ones including a clerkship with the Austen Coal & Coke Company under Manager Charles Jessup, followed by a long service of sixteen years with the mercantile firm of Shaffer & Bonafield. Following this long employment Mr. Hunt set up in business for himself as a merchant, and has one of the leading places of business in Tunnelton.

Mr. Hunt helped organize the Tunnelton Bank which began business in 1903 and has capital stock of $50,000, a generous surplus, and deposits of over $500,000. Mr. Hunt has been one of the directors from the time the bank opened, later was elected vice president, and succeeded Mr. Gibson on his death as president. Mr. Hunt, in 1919, was also an active factor in the organization of the Tunnelton Freepport Coal Company and is its president.

Community affairs have always made a claim upon his time and interests and assistance. For a number of years he was member of the Tunnelton Council and was in that body when the charter for the Telephone Company was granted. He voted the democratic ticket regularly until 1908, and frequently attended conventions as a delegate. In 1908 he supported William Howard Taft for president, and has since attended republican conventions. Mr. Hunt was reared in the Catholic Church, and has not affiliated with any fraternities.

In October, 1889, near Tunnelton, he married Miss Ella Cruise, who was born and educated in that community, daughter of Thomas and Mary (Kenny) Cruise. Her father spent practically all his life in the service of the Baltimore & Ohio Railway, and was a pensioner of the road when he died in 1902 at the age of eighty-three. Her mother died in 1906 when past eighty. Mrs. Hunt was the youngest of her parents' children, the others, now living, being Agnes, who married Judge William S. Haymond of Fairmont; Catherine, wife of Thomas Dorsey of Cumberland, Maryland; Miss Annie of Coalton, West Virginia; and William B. of Granton.

Of the children of Mr. and Mrs. Hunt, James William, the oldest, was a sergeant during the war, was with the Eleventh Division ready for overseas duty when the armistice was signed, and is now in the service of the Liberty Trust Company of Cumberland, Maryland. He is an A. B. of Rock Hill College, Maryland, and took post-graduate work at the University of Pennsylvania. Thomas E., the second son, was for four years deputy revenue collector under the Wilson administration and is now an instructor in the Tunnelton public schools. He attended Rock Hill College, and is a graduate of Fairmont State Normal School. Robert E. is store manager for the Albright Smokeless Coal Company of Tunnelton. He attended Rock Hill and St. John's College, Annapolis, Maryland. The youngest of the family is John A. Hunt, a sophomore in the Tunnelton High School.

MELVIN NEWLON, now principal of the Tyreconnell School, has been long and favorably known in Taylor County as an educator, farmer and public official. He recently retired from the office of county sheriff, and was also county assessor.

Mr. Newlon was born near the Village of Simpson in Taylor County, June 2, 1873, son of Alfred and Elizabeth (Yates) Newlon. His mother was a daughter of Martin L. Yates, member of an old family of the county. Alfred Newlon was born in Taylor County, spent his life in the Simpson community as a farmer, and was one of the honored old soldiers of that community. At the time of the Civil war he joined the Third West Virginia Infantry and later the Sixth West Virginia Cavalry. For three and a half years he was with his regiment fighting the Confederates, and for a year after the war was out on the plains fighting Indians in Kansas, Wyoming and Nebraska. While never wounded, he suffered exposure from freezing weather, and this injured his health and made him prematurely old. In politics he was an uncompromising republican and a member of the Baptist Church.

Alfred Newlon was killed while driving a wagon over a Baltimore and Ohio Railroad crossing in April, 1901, when just sixty years of age. His wife died in 1910. They were the parents of two sons and seven daughters. Five of the daughters are living: Lucy, wife of Homer Selvey, of Grafton; Nancy L., wife of Charles Davis; Hallie, wife of Gail Goodwin; Gertrude, who married Harry McCay; and Miss Effie, of Grafton. The sons are Melvin and Dellet, the latter a former county superintendent of schools of Taylor County and a farmer.

Melvin Newlon in his early youth was a farmer and coal miner. He had an ambition to rise above his environments, and he secured a liberal education in old West Virginia College and Wesleyan University at Buckhannon. At the age of eighteen he taught his first term of school in the Fetterman District. For fourteen consecutive terms he taught in the Court House District. When not teaching he worked about coal mines, driving mules or digging coal in the summer season. It was at the conclusion of his sixteenth term of school work that he became a regular employe of the Grafton Coal and Coke Company, and later of the Maryland Coal Company of West Virginia, and was in the service of these corporations for a number of years. From this business he was called into politics by the vote of his fellow citizens and was elected on the republican ticket to the office of county assessor in 1912, succeeding Luke Haymond in office. In 1916 he was elected sheriff to succeed Lee Bennett, and began his four year term in January, 1917. He was sheriff of the county during the World war, but the term of his administration was peaceful and orderly, and at the end of four years he turned over the office to W. J. Mays, and soon afterward resumed school work as principal of the Tyreconnell School.

Mr. Newlon is an enthusiastic republican, casting his first presidential vote for McKinley in 1896. He is affiliated with Flemington Lodge No. 152, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, Wendel Lodge No. 126, Woodmen of the World, and since the age of fourteen has been a member of the Baptist Church. In Taylor County, November 27, 1900, he married Miss Gertrude M. Lake. She was born in the Simpson community, daughter of H. A. and Belle (Davis) Lake. Her mother was a daughter of Mack Davis, an old hotel man of Simpson, who came from Virginia. Mrs. Newlon was the oldest of three children, the other two being James A. and Dakota Lake, of Simpson. Mrs. Newlon was a pupil of her husband while he was getting his early experience as a teacher. Mr. and Mrs. Newlon have three children: Roy M., a graduate of the Grafton High School, and now teaching his second term at Wendel; Edith Belle, member of the class of 1923 in the Grafton High School; and Martin L., at home.

GEORGE M. WEST. While he laid the foundation of his business experience in Pittsburgh, the commercial associations of Mr. West in Clarksburg have been as a dealer in hay, grain, feed and other commodities, and at the same time he has exerted a helpful influence in the progress and advancement of the community welfare.

Mr. West was born in Washington County, Ohio, November 28, 1876, a son of Samuel and Phoebe Ann (Davis) West, his father a native of England and his mother of Ohio. His father is still living, a retired miller and merchant, and for many years was in business at New Matamoras, Ohio.

After graduating from high school at New Matamoras and completing a commercial college course in Pittsburgh, George M. West remained in that city for three years, associated with his brother, W. C. West, in the feed business. On selling out to his brother he came to Clarksburg in 1900, and, beginning as a feed merchant, has steadily increased the scope of his enterprise until he has an establishment both for retail and wholesale trade, covering a large territory adjacent to Clarksburg, and is a dealer in hay and grain and general building supplies including lime, plaster, cement, sewer pipe, etc. His present office, warehouse and place of business was erected in 1910. Mr. West is also president of the Universal Concrete Products Company, whose plant is at New Martinsville, West Virginia, and he is a director of the Community Savings and Loan Company of Clarksburg.

He is a well known member of the Clarksburg Chamber of Commerce and socially is affiliated with the Country, Rotary, Allegheny, Cheat Mountain and other clubs. He is a republican, a Methodist and fraternally is a Knight Templar and thirty-second degree Scottish Rite Mason and Shriner and an Elk.

In 1902 Mr. West married Miss Myrtle Ferguson, who was born and reared in Harrison County, West Virginia. Her father, James Ferguson, was of an old family of Harrison County. Her mother was a daughter of W. W. Bogges, a name also prominent in Harrison County. Mrs. West is a member of the Presbyterian Church, belongs to the Eastern Star Chapter, and for several years has been active in civic and social affairs.

GUY CARLETON MACTAGGART is now in his third term as county superintendent of schools of Pleasants County. He began his career as a teacher at the age of eighteen, has had a successive and successful experience as a teacher in a number of districts in the county, and he brought to his office as county superintendent not only the qualifications of an able educator but a thorough knowledge of school conditions of this section.

Mr. MacTaggart was born in Grant District of Pleasants County, January 23, 1885. He is of Scotch ancestry. His grandfather, Hugh MacTaggart, was born in Scotland in 1819, son of William and Jennie MacTaggart, who three years later, in 1822, came to America and settled on Short Creek near Wheeling, but after a few years moved to Willow Island in Pleasants County, where William MacTaggart acquired a large amount of land and engaged in the sheep industry on an extensive scale. He and his wife died at Willow Island. Hugh MacTaggart grew up there, married and then removed to the vicinity of Eureka in Pleasants County, where he carried on his operations as a farmer. He died at his home near Eureka in 1909, at the age of ninety. His wife was Dicinda Phillips, a native of Ohio. William P. MacTaggart, father of Superintendent MacTaggart, was born May 21, 1854, near the farm where he now resides, located a mile and a half west of Eureka. Farming has been his life occupation and from it he has provided amply for himself and family. He owns both a hill farm and river farm. He is a republican, and a leader in the Baptist Church of his home community. William P. MacTaggart married Ida Virginia Rhymmer, who was born at St. Marys, October 20, 1855. Of their children Guy Carleton is the oldest. The second, William Carey, died at the age of nine years. Grace is the wife of Winton E. White, a farmer at Point Pleasants in Mason County. Miss Maude is at home. Laura, a former teacher, is now attending the Mountain State Business College at Parkersburg. Miss Mary teaches the Wolf Run School in Pleasants County. Miss Dicie is at home. Georgia is the wife of Ralph A. Smith, an employe of the Octo Gas Company at Flushing, Ohio.

Guy Carleton MacTaggart was educated in the rural schools of Pleasants County and the public school at St. Marys. He left school at the age of eighteen, and his first work as a teacher was done in the Spice Run School. Then followed a term in the Raven Rock School, two terms at Mount Olive, his home school, three terms at Eureka and one term at Belmont, all in Pleasants County.

Mr. MacTaggart, in November, 1912, was elected county superintendent of schools to fill a vacancy caused by the death of his predecessor. For that reason he began his duties immediately, and in 1914 was elected for the full four year term and in 1918 for a second full term, running from 1919 to 1923. His offices are in the Graded School Building on Washington Street in St. Marys. He has under his supervision seventy-six schools, seventy-six teachers, with a scholarship enrollment of 2,500.

He is a member of the State Educational Association and Ohio Valley Round Table, and keeps in touch with all the progressive movements in educational affairs. He was a member of the County Council of Defense at the time of the war, a Four-Minute Speaker, and did all the work he could for the successful prosecution of the war. He is a republican, a member of the Baptist Church, is affiliated with St. Marys Lodge No. 41, F. and A. M., Sistersville Chapter No. 27, R. A. M., Mountain State Commandery No. 14, K. T., and Nemesis Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Parkersburg.

Mr. MacTaggart's home is at Eureka, where he owns a modern residence. He married at Eureka, November 29, 1917, Miss Judith A. Ruckman, daughter of Aaron and Rhoda (Outward) Ruckman. Her mother died in 1916 and her father is a farmer at Eureka.

ORION LEE LAZEAR. Many years ago, when Sistersville was just coming into prominence as an oil center, a group of young men of enterprise, under the name of Lazear Brothers, took hold of a small business as dealers in feed and grain, and while death has removed one member of the firm the old title is still continued, with Orion Lee Lazear as the active manager of a business that now covers a wide scope, including flour and feed manufacturing, ice and the handling of other commodities.

Orion Lee Lazear was born in Tyler County, West Virginia, January 22, 1878. The Lazears have been in Tyler County for over eighty years. It is a family, as the name indicates, of French stock, and the name was transplanted to America shortly after the Revolution. For a number of years representatives of the name lived in Greene County, Pennsylvania. The grandfather of O. L. Lazear was Joseph Lazear, a native of Greene County, where he married Mary Gray, of the same county. In 1838 they left their farm in Greene County and moved to Tyler County and spent the rest of their lives on a large farm on Middle Island Creek, seven miles east of Sistersville. Among the children of this pioneer couple who reached mature years were Clark, Franklin and John W.

John W. Lazear was born in Greene County in 1837, and was an infant when the family moved to Tyler County. He was reared and married there, became a successful farmer, served six years as member of the Board of Education of Union District, and for one term was a member of the Tyler County Court, serving in this office six years. He was a republican and was a prominent worker in the Protestant Methodist Church. He married Nancy J. Strouss, who was born at Allegheny, Pennsylvania, in 1842, and is still living at Sistersville. Her parents were William and Margaret (Oliver) Strouss, and her father for many years was a mate on an Ohio River steamboat. John W. Lazear, who died in 1900, was the father of a family of ten children: Joseph S., who was in the livery business at Mannington, West Virginia, and still had his home there when he died at Wheeling in 1918, at the age of fifty-two; William M., who was one of the firm of Lazear Brothers at Sistersville, where he died in 1909, at the age of forty-one; Nora, who died in Sistersville in 1909, aged thirty-nine, was the wife of Arza E. Underwood, a flour miller, who died at St. Mary's, West Virginia; Ida, wife of Lewis M. Thomas, a farmer at Kirkersville, Ohio; Jesse F., who was a teaming contractor and lived near Cameron, West Virginia, but died in the hospital at Wheeling in 1899, at the age of twenty-seven; George W., a wholesale dealer in hay and coal at Mount Vernon, Ohio; Orion Lee; James H., a farmer at Kirkersville, Ohio; John B., in the furniture and undertaking business at Mannington; and Ira F., a traveling salesman, with home at Wheeling.

Orion Lee Lazear lived on his father's farm until he was nineteen years of age. In the meantime he attended the rural schools and a subscription school at Middlebourne. For 2½ years he worked for his brother William at Mannington, and then he and his brothers William and George W. bought a small feed and grain business at Sistersville from its former proprietor, S. W. Lawrence. This was the beginning of the firm Lazear Brothers. In 1906 William and O. L. bought out their brother George, and at the death of William, in 1909, his widow succeeded to his interests, but Orion L. has continued as active manager, and through successive developments has made Lazear Brothers a firm of the highest financial standing in this section of the state. The firm owns the plant and offices at 406 Diamond Street. In 1901 they bought from Benjamin Showalter, a retail ice business, and since then Lazear Brothers have supplied Sistersville with practically all the ice for domestic purposes. In 1917 Mr. Lazear bought from E. Roome the Riverside Mills, an old milling establishment on Water Street, with a capacity of thirty-five barrels of flour per day, and doing a custom business in the grinding of feed and meal.

Besides this extensive business Mr. Lazear is secretary and treasurer and a stockholder of the Sistersville Undertaking Company. Lazear Brothers are stockholders in the Oil Review Publishing Company of Sistersville.

Mr. Lazear has done his modest part in community affairs, serving two years on the City Council, votes as a republican, is a member of the Presbyterian Church, is a past master of Phoenix Lodge No. 73, A. F. and A. M.; member of Sistersville Chapter No. 27, R. A. M.; Mountain State Commandery No. 14, K. T.; Nemesis Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Parkersburg; and is a past exalted ruler of Sistersville Lodge No. 333, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks.

In 1901, at Mannington, Mr. Lazear married Margaret I. Enoch, daughter of Nathan and Frances (Hopkins) Enoch, now deceased. Her father was an oil field worker. Mrs. Lazear died in January, 1909, at Sistersville, leaving two children: Nancy F., born February 15, 1904, now a student in the Mount de Chantal Academy at Wheeling, and Paul, born December 26, 1908. On April 9, 1913, at Sistersville, Mr. Lazear married Miss Anna R. Morrissey, daughter of Jack and Mary Elizabeth Morrissey, now deceased. Her father was also an oil field worker.

EZEKIEL DEAN GARDNER, who is established in the plumbing and tinning business in his native city of Martinsburg, Berkeley County, was here born on the 9th of August, 1867, and he is a son of John F. and Emma (Showers) Gardner. John F. Gardner was born at Smithsburg, Washington County, Maryland, a son of George Gardner, who is supposed to have been born at Reading, Pennsylvania, the latter having been a son of one of two or three brothers who came from Holland to America in the Colonial period of our national history and established residence in Pennsylvania. George Gardner learned the weaver's trade, at the time when weaving was done by hand. He lived for a number of years at Smithsburg, Maryland, and then came to Martinsburg, Virginia (now West Virginia), where he died at the age of eighty-four years. The maiden name of his wife was Getzendanner, and she was reared at Frederick, Maryland. She preceded him to the life eternal.

John F. Gardner received good educational advantages, and as a young man he taught school on Stephen Street at Martinsburg until the outbreak of the Civil war, when he engaged in the provision business, to which he here gave his attention until his death, at the age of fifty-two years. His wife was a daughter of Ezekiel Showers, who was an early settler in Berkeley County, where he purchased a large tract of land, including that now comprising Green Hill Cemetery, an appreciable portion of his landed estate being now within the city limits of Martinsburg. Mr. Showers erected and equipped a woolen mill on Tuscarawas Street, and this he operated successfully in addition to his farming enterprise. His wife, whose maiden name was Susan Sibert, was a member of the well known family of that name in this section of West Virginia. Mrs. Emma (Showers) Gardner died at the age of sixty-seven years. Her children were six in number: Susan, Hannis, Kate (who died young), John Franklin (deceased), Ezekiel Dean, and Roberta Lee (died at the age of twenty-five years).

Ezekiel D. Gardner gained his early education in the public schools of Martinsburg, and as a youth he served an apprenticeship to the carpenter's trade. After following this trade for a time he established himself in the plumbing and tinning business, in which he here continued until 1904, when he was elected sheriff of the county. Upon the completion of his term of four years he was renamed for a similar period as a clerical assistant in the office of the sheriff, and next served four years as deputy sheriff. At the expiration of this last period he resumed business in the plumbing and tinning line, in which he has continued with excellent success. Mr. Gardner is affiliated with Equality Lodge No. 44, A. F. and A. M.; Lebanon Chapter No. 1, R. A. M.; Palestine Commandery No. 2, Knights Templars; the Lodge of Perfection; Osiris Temple, Mystic Shrine, at Wheeling; and also with the Fraternal Order of Eagles.

At the age of thirty years Mr. Gardner married Miss Mary Cecelia Sullivan, who was born and reared at Martinsburg and who is a daughter of Michael and Elizabeth Sullivan. Mr. and Mrs. Gardner have two children: Louise Marie and John Frederick.

ROGER EARL WATSON, who is engaged in the successful practice of law at Martinsburg as one of the able and representative members of the bar of Berkeley County, has the distinction of being the only person born in the old homestead of Gen. Charles Lee, a Revolutionary officer, at Leetown, Jefferson County, West Virginia, the date of his nativity having been February 10, 1886.

The lineage of the Watson family traces back to stanch English origin, and the name has been one of prominence in the history of Maryland, Virginia and West Virginia, in connection with both civic and material development and progress. From Scotland, via England, James Watson with three brothers came to America prior to 1740, and settled in St. Mary's County, Maryland. He married Mary Greene, who, according to family tradition, was a sister of Gen. Nathaniel Greene, the distinguished Revolutionary officer. James Watson bought land near Port Tobacco, Charles County, Maryland, where he developed the fine estate known as Chestnut Ridge. By marriage the Watson family became related to Charles Carroll of Carrollton, another distinguished figure of the Revolutionary period. Numerous representatives of the family were identified with early Indian conflicts, and members of the family also gained fame as scouts and soldiers of the patriot forces in the war of the Revolution. Among the numerous children of James and Mary (Greene) Watson were three sons, Joseph, Zephaniah and James Greene, and through one of these sons the subject of this review is a descendant of James Watson, one of the three original representatives of the family in America.

John James Watson, father of him whose name initiates this article, was born in what is now Jefferson County, West Virginia, August 15, 1836, his father, James Watson, having been born in Maryland, and who came thence to Virginia and developed a large farm estate in the vicinity of Leetown, Jefferson County, he having been the owner of a goodly number of slaves. He was somewhat more than seventy years of age at the time of his death. The maiden name of his wife was Elizabeth Shaull, and their children were ten in number, namely: Benjamin, George, John J. Ephraim, Charles, Snowden, Joseph, Daniel, Lydia and Elizabeth.

John J. Watson was reared on the old homestead, and at the inception of the Civil war he entered the Confederate service, in which he participated in the first battle of Bull Run and many other important engagements, besides which he served for a time as courier between Generals Lee and Jackson. He was wounded in the forehead, and bore the scar until his death. In the last year of the war he was a member of Clark's Cavalry, and he was its last survivor. He was present at the surrender of General Lee, his service having covered the entire period of the war. After the war he was for twenty-five years engaged in mercantile business at Charles Town, Jefferson County, and he then removed to Martinsburg, where he continued a few years in the same line of enterprise, and then retired from active business, his death having here occurred November 1, 1921. His wife survives him, her maiden name having been Ella Virginia Rogers. Her birth occurred in Jefferson County, she being a daughter of Isaac and Drusilla (Nicely) Rogers. The only child is Roger Earl, immediate subject of this sketch.

In 1904 Roger E. Watson graduated from the Martinsburg High School, as president of his class, and in the same year he entered the University of West Virginia, where he took a course in the department of chemistry. For two years, from 1906, he was engaged as a chemist with the H. C. Frick Coke Company of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, and he then entered the law department of the University of West Virginia, in which he was graduated in 1910, he having been president of his class in the junior year. After receiving his degree of Bachelor of Laws, with concomitant admission to the bar of his native state, Mr. Watson opened an office at Martinsburg, where he has developed a substantial and representative law practice and gained secure vantage-ground as a resourceful trial lawyer and conservative counsellor. He has been active in local campaign service of the democratic party, and is one of the loyal and progressive citizens of the fine little city that is the judicial center of Berkeley County. Mr. Watson is affiliated with the Pi Kappa Alpha and the Theta Nu Epsilon fraternities of the University of West Virginia, and as an undergraduate in that institution he was active in athletic affairs, he having been assistant manager of the baseball team in 1910 and manager of the second team of that year.

Mr. Watson married, July 4, 1919, Miss Catherine McHarg, of Boston, Massachusetts, the one child of this union was Roger Edward.

C. WARDEN PIPPEN has devoted considerably more than half his lifetime to the business and profession of life insurance. He is a man of unusual achievements in that calling, which demands the broadest qualifications of industry, resourcefulness and commercial integrity.

Mr. Pippen, who is general agent in West Virginia for the Massachusetts Life Insurance Company, was born at Baltimore, Maryland, in 1884, son of Charles Edward and Roberta O. (Hamill) Pippen. His father, a native of Gloucester County, Virginia, moved to Baltimore when a young man and married there a daughter of Robert Warden Hamill, who owned and operated the first steam flour mill in Baltimore.

C. Warden Pippen acquired a good general education in the public schools of Baltimore, and finished his third year in the City College of Baltimore. He was only seventeen when, in 1901, he gained his first practical knowledge of the life insurance business as a clerk in the Baltimore office of the New York Life Insurance Company. He was there two years, and then removed to Atlanta, Georgia, and he came assistant cashier for the Mutual Life Insurance Company. Subsequently he went to Nashville, Tennessee, a cashier for the same company in that city, and later was transferred to Washington as superintendent of agents. The eleven years he spent with the Mutual Life were th period in which his powers were developed and in which his reputation became widely extended as a successful insurance man. He then formed a new connection with the Massachusetts Life Insurance Company of Springfield. This company sent him to Charleston as general agent, and he established his office and home in the capital city in 1914. Mr. Phippen is general agent for the entire state except two counties.

Mr. Phippen brought to his new duties at Charleston the knowledge and resources acquired by years of toil, experience and training, and in this state he has added to his reputation as an insurance producer. Every year the business credited to his Charleston headquarters has shown a gratifying increase. It is especially worthy of note that in the year 1921, a year of anti-climax to practically every business and industry in point of volume as contrasted with the years of war inflation that succeeded, the West Virginia agency was one of only fifteen agencies in the Union to show an increase in volume of insurance business for the Massachusetts Life Company over the record of the previous year.

Mr. Phippen is a member of the Chamber of Commerce, Kanawha Country Club, Elks, and has the honor of being secretary of the Lions Club of Charleston. He assisted in organizing this club on September 30, 1921. Its membership embraces a representation of what may well be called the best of strong, vigorous, active citizenship of Charleston, men of high character and devoted to the best interests of the city. Mr. Phippen married Miss Blanche Watson, of Baltimore. Their two children are: Gretchen B. and Jean Ann Phippen.

JACOB W. GATRELL is closely associated with some of the primary business interests of the Eastern Panhandle, particularly those involved in the handling and storage and also the production of the most distinctive output of this region—fruit. He grew up in the cold-storage business, and the Rothwell-Gatrell Company, of which he is president, is one of the larger concerns of this kind at Martinsburg.

Mr. Gatrell was born in Martinsburg, a son of Charles Anthony Oscar Gatrell and grandson of Charles Gatrell. Charles Gatrell, who was born in 1807, was a native of either Jefferson or Berkeley County, and his ancestors were pioneers here. Owing to the early death of his father Charles Gatrell had to become a wage earner to assist in the support of an invalid sister and a blind mother. The best wages he could earn was 6 cents a day. His industry and long continued application to work brought him a reasonable degree of prosperity, and after rearing his family he bought a home in Shepherdstown, where he spent his last days and died at the advanced age of ninety-four. He married a Miss Leshorne, whose people were early settlers of Berkeley County, and she died some years before her husband.

Charles Anthony Oscar Gatrell was born on a farm in Berkeley County in 1845, and during his youth learned the trade of miller. He spent practically all his active life as a miller at Martinsburg, where he died at the age of seventy-two. He married Emma Eliza Hess, who was born at the family homestead then located at the corner of Queen and West Race streets in Martinsburg, daughter of David H. and Mary (Cline) Hess. The Hess family is represented elsewhere in this publication. Mr. Jacob Gatrell and his sister, Maud, are the only living children. His sister and her mother occupy the old home in Martinsburg.

Jacob W. Gatrell was educated in Martinsburg, and the industrious habits of his family have earned him a career of usefulness and success. He worked at different lines as a boy, and at the age of twenty-three he went with the Rothwell Cold Storage Plant. He learned that business in every detail, was advanced to general manager, and eventually became a large stockholder. In 1921 he reorganized the business as the Rothwell-Gatrell Company, of which he is president and general manager. This plant has storage capacity for 50,000 barrels of apples, manufactures thirty-five tons of ice daily and supplies ice to the city in addition to refrigeration for the storage plants.

Mr. Gatrell married Louise I. Hanshaw, a native of Martinsburg and daughter of Allen and Bernice Hanshaw. The four children of Mr. and Mrs. Gatrell are Ann, Jacob W., Jr., Louise and David. Mr. Gatrell was reared a Lutheran. Among other business interests he is vice president and treasurer of the Rothwell Farm and Orchard Company, is president and general manager of the Pomona Orchard Company, and is a stockholder in the Imperial Orchard Company. He is affiliated with Tuscarora Lodge No. 24, Modern Woodmen of America.

WALTER SMITH SUGDEN, after graduating in law, located at Sistersville, West Virginia, and in that rapidly growing center of the oil industry is found abundant demands upon his professional talent. Mr. Sugden is associated as attorney or in other official relations with a number of the corporations that give distinction to Sistersville as a commercial center.

Mr. Sugden was born at Amsterdam, New York, April 9, 1880. His father, James T. Sugden, a prominent New York manufacturer, was born in Yorkshire, England, October 5, 1837, and was about twenty years of age when he came to the United States. In 1860 he established his home in Amsterdam, New York, where he had charge of the spinning department in carpet mills, and later became a manufacturer of knit underwear. He established and built up a very large industry of that kind at Amsterdam. He was in every way a most substantial citizen, giving liberally of his time and means to causes outside his immediate business. He was a member of the Board of Water Commissioners of the City of Amsterdam and supervised the building of the first city waterworks. He was president and for twenty-two years member of the Board of Education. He was for forty-seven years a vestryman in St. Ann's Episcopal Church and was affiliated with Welcome Lodge of Masons. Although a resident of Amsterdam, at the time of his death, April 18, 1921, he was visiting in Sistersville. James T. Sugden married Elizabeth L. Smith, who was born at Thompsonville, Connecticut, December 19, 1849, and is now living with her son in Sistersville. Walter S. is the oldest of her three children. The second, May, died at the age of eight years. Gilbert Taylor lives at Lockport, New York, and is president of Western & Company, Incorporated manufacturers of bar iron.

Walter Smith Sugden attended the public schools of Amsterdam, graduating from high school in 1898. He prepared for university in Phillips Academy at Andover, Massachusetts, graduating in 1899, and then entered Harvard University, where he graduated A. B. in 1903 and received his law degree from Harvard Law School in 1906. Mr. Sugden took a prominent part in student activities, and most of the old followers of university football recall him as one of the star players for the Crimson and also selected as one of the "All-American team." While in university he was a member of the Institute of 1770, a sophomore club, the Dickey Club, the Hasty Pudding Club, and Theta Nu Epsilon.

Mr. Sugden removed to Sistersville, West Virginia, in 1906. He had other interests to engage him for a time, and on January 12, 1910, was admitted to the bar and has since been active in a law practice, largely in corporation law. He is a member of the law firm of Kimball & Sugden, formed in 1910. This firm is chief counsel for Petroleum Exploration, organized under the laws of the State of Maine, with headquarters at Sistersville; for the Wiser Oil Company of Sistersville, Amity Gasoline Company of Sistersville, Western Petroleum Exploration of Sistersville. The firm is local counsel for the Baltimore & Ohio Railway Company, the American Oil Development Company of Pittsburgh, the Barnsdall Corporation of New York City, and are attorneys for the First Tyler Bank & Trust Company of Sistersville. The offices of the firm are in the Thistle Building.

Mr. Sugden is individually a vice president of the Agnew Torpedo Company, Columbia Oil Company of West Virginia, secretary of the Oil Review Publishing Company of Sistersville, and a director of the Wiser Oil Company, Amity Gasoline Company, Petroleum Exploration, and First Tyler Bank & Trust Company.

He votes as a republican and was a delegate from the Fourth Congressional District to the National Convention in Chicago in 1912. He has served the past four years as city attorney of Sistersville. Mr. Sugden is registrar and a vestryman in St. Paul's Episcopal Church; is a member of Phoenix Lodge No. 73, A. F. and A. M.; Sistersville Chapter No. 27, R. A. M.; Mountain State Commandery No. 14, K. T.; West Virginia Consistory No. 1 at Wheeling; and is a past potentate of Osiris Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Wheeling. He is also a member of Sistersville Lodge No. 333, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, and the Kiwanis Club. Mr. Sugden had little time to devote to profession or business affairs during the war, since he was an associate member of the Legal Advisory Board of Tyler County, a Four Minute Speaker, chief of the Tyler County Division of the American Protective League and chairman of the Publicity Committee for the County Chapter of the Red Cross.

In 1916, at New Matamoros, Ohio, Mr. Sugden married Miss Rachel E. Hutchison, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John M. Hutchison, residents of Monroe County, that state, where her father is a farmer and farm owner. Mrs. Sugden, who died in 1918 at Sistersville, is survived by one daughter, Elizabeth Jane, born January 21, 1918.

JOHN H. ZIRKLE. Member of an old Barbour County family, John H. Zirkle was at one time a newspaperman at Philippi, and while in the Government service came to Martinsburg, where for the past thirteen years he has practiced law with success and honor and is also the present city recorder. He is a descendant of one of three Zirkle brothers who came out of Germany in Colonial times and settled in Virginia.

His grandfather was Daniel Zirkle, who was born in Rockingham County, Virginia, in 1805, and married Catherine A. Will, who was born in Shenandoah County, Virginia, in 1816. About 1836 Daniel Zirkle moved with his family to what is now Barbour County, and settled near the Town of Philippi. He was a farmer, and in the days before railroads took his surplus products to Baltimore and Philadelphia with four-horse teams, a trip that required several weeks when the roads were bad. On returning he loaded his wagons with merchandise. Daniel Zirkle died December 18, 1868, at Philippi in Barbour County. His wife died March 3, 1841, just two weeks after the birth of her son, Jacob Zirkle.

Jacob Zirkle, father of John H., was born in Barbour County, February 17, 1841, and was reared on a farm. On August 23, 1862, he enlisted in Company F, of the Fifteenth West Virginia Infantry, and served in all the campaigns and battles of that regiment until the final surrender. He was once slightly wounded in the shoulder. He participated in the battles of Cloyd Mountain, New River, Middlebrook, Lexington, Lyneburg, Berryville, Hall Town, Opequon, Fishers Hill, Cedar Creek (first and second battle), Hatcher's Run, Petersburg, Rice Station, and was at Appomattox and in many other skirmishes besides. He received his honorable discharge June 14, 1865. After the war he resumed farming, having inherited the old homestead in Valley District, and became a large land owner and a very prosperous and influential citizen. He celebrated his eighty-first birthday in February, 1922, and is now living with his oldest son, A. D. Zirkle, at Philippi.

In Barbour County, August 27, 1865, Jacob Zirkle married Rebecca Schleuss, who was born in Shenandoah County, Virginia, April 4, 1842, daughter of Andrew and Sarah F. (Carter) Schleuss. Her father was born in Maryland in 1809, and her mother in Rappahannock County, Virginia, in 1824. The Schleuss family removed to Barbour County in 1842, and her father died December 18, 1864. Jacob and Rebecca Zirkle were church members from early youth, being reared in the United Brethren Church, but later joined the Methodist Church. Jacob Zirkle was class leader for about twenty-five years. His wife died May 17, 1917, and was buried in Fraternity Cemetery at Philippi.

These worthy parents had a family of ten children: Andrew D., born August 6, 1866, and living at Philippi; Mary F., born October 25, 1867; and died December 15th, following; Roxanna, born April 15, 1869, now living near Garden City; Kansas; Charles I., born March 20, 1871, also living at Garden City; Daniel O. L., born February 26, 1873, and died March 1, following; John H., the Martinsburg lawyer; Lorenzo Dow and David T., twins, born August 10, the former living at Garden City, Kansas, and the latter died February 28, 1879; William Luther, born December 25, 1880, now living at Moundsville, West Virginia; and Simon Elijah, born April 18, 1883, a resident of Garden City, Kansas.

John H. Zirkle was born on the home farm near Philippi December 17, 1874, and the labor of the farm was the first item in his practical experience. He attended the free schools there until he was eighteen, and then entered what is now Wesleyan College at Buckhannon, where he completed a three year college course. Then for three years he taught school, the first school being a mile from Belington in his native county. He left the schoolroom to purchase a half interest in the Philippi Republican of Barbour County, and was junior editor of that paper for eight years. He gave up newspaper work when assigned to a Government position as storekeeper and gauger, his first assignment being at Jarrett's Distillery at Grafton, and later he was transferred to the Hannis Distillery at Martinsburg where he served eleven years, until removed after the election of Woodrow Wilson.

While in the Government service at Martinsburg Mr. Zirkle studied law by correspondence courses and later took the lectures at West Virginia University, also passed his law examination there and was admitted to the bar in 1909. For a number of years he has had an extensive practice in all the courts of his district. While in Philippi he was for two years city recorder, and since 1915 he has been city recorder and auditor of Martinsburg. Mr. Zirkle is active in republican politics, is affiliated with Equality Lodge No. 44, A. F. and A. M., at Martinsburg, with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and he and his wife are members of the First Methodist Episcopal Church.

In 1901, at Philippi, he married Miss Grace Ice, daughter of Judge William T. and Columbia (Jarvis) Ice. He father was for several years judge of the Circuit Court in the district comprising Barbour, Preston and Randolph counties. To the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Zirkle were born four children: Robert, now employed by the Martinsburg Paid City Fire Department; Fred, in the eighth grade of the grammar school; Willard and Elizabeth Columbia, both deceased.

WALTER J. LAMBERT, first vice president of the Citizens Bank of Martinsburg, Berkeley County, was born at Frederick City, Maryland, on the 15th of July, 1850. He is a son of Frederick Lambert, presumably a native of Virginia. The original American progenitors came from England in an early day and settled in the historic Old Dominion State. Frederick Lambert became a representative merchant at Frederick City, Maryland, his store and residence having been at the west end of Patrick Street. The maiden name of his wife was Catherine Lambright, she having been born and reared in Frederick City, where she and her husband continued to reside until their deaths. They became the parents of the following sons and daughters: David, Michael, William H., Charles O. (served three terms as mayor of Martinsburg, West Virginia), John C. Harriet A., George Dallas (served as a member of the city council at Martinsburg, West Virginia, and was a soldier in the Civil war three years), Thomas F., Lewis E., Walter J., Franklin P. (died at the age of four years), and Emma J. The daughter Harriet became the wife of Walter H. Keedy, who served as a soldier of the Union in the Civil war. Mr. and Mrs. Keedy became the parents of six children, namely: Eugene, Mary, Laura, Naomi, Mabel and Emma, the latter of whom died in infancy. Emma J. Lambert became the wife of Charles E. Zieler, now deceased and she now presides over the domestic economies and social regime of the home of her brother, Walter J., subject of this review.

In his youth Walter J. Lambert attended the excellent schools conducted by Professor James English at Frederick

City, Maryland, and he early manifested distinct native talent as a trader, he having been a lad of twelve years old when he entered the employ of Augustus Fraley, a dealer in horses and other live stock, for whom he bought and sold with remarkable judgment for a youth of that immature age. Mr. Lambert was fourteen years old when he came to Martinsburg, West Virginia, to enter the employ of his brothers, George D. and Charles O., who had here established themselves in the provision business. He continued to be thus associated with his brothers until they dissolved their partnership. Thereafter he was for three years in the employ of his brother George D., who then consolidated his business with that of his father-in-law, Andrew Grazier. After remaining for a time with this firm Walter J. Lambert engaged in the provision business in an independent way. Three years later he turned his attention to the restaurant business, with which he continued to be successfully identified a few years, in the meanwhile having been successful also as a local buyer and shipper of live stock. Mr. Lambert was one of the organizers of the Citizens Bank of Martinsburg, and has been a member of its directorate from the time of its incorporation, besides which he has given effective executive service as its first vice president, an office of which he is the incumbent at the present time, his mature business judgment and effective counsel having been a potent influence in connection with the development of this substantial financial institution. Mr. Lambert has made judicious investments in Martinsburg real estate, and was the owner of the local opera-house, which was destroyed by fire in 1920. He is a member of Robert White Lodge No. 67, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, Martinsburg Lodge No. 778, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, and of Washington Lodge No. 1, Knights of Pythias.

Mr. Lambert has taken deep and helpful interest in the welfare of the fine little city that has long represented his home, and while he has had no desire for public office he has been at all times a liberal and progressive citizen—one who has inviolable place in the esteem and good will of the community. Mr. Lambert is a bachelor.

LEWIS H. THOMPSON. It is possible to characterize justly Mr. Thompson's position in Martinsburg as that of a man of affairs. In private business he has prosecuted his interests with a vigor and judgment that have earned something more than ordinary success. At the same time he has recognized the claims of citizenship, and has been efficient and competent in public office. Organized movements and institutions which are the source of Martinsburg's best fame before the world have profited from his wise leadership and influence.

Mr. Thompson is a native of Martinsburg. His grandfather, Joseph Thompson, was born in County Down, Ireland, but of Scotch ancestry, and brought his family to America and became a pioneer in Berkeley County. He served as a soldier in the War of 1812, and for these services was granted land in Iowa. He died at the age of seventy-eight, transmitting the vigor of his mind and body to his descendants. His son James Thompson was twelve years of age when brought to America. He possessed the essential talents of the scholar, and it is said that before he came to America he had read the Bible through three times. He learned the trade of weaver, and that was his chief occupation during his active life. He died at the age of eighty.

Samuel J. Thompson, father of the Martinsburg business man, was a soldier in the Confederate army, being with E. B. Stuart's command until wounded. Following the war he entered the service of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Company and was a passenger conductor until late in years he resigned and lived retired until his death at the age of eighty-three. He married Sally Reed, whose father, James P. Reed, was born in Martinsburg in 1818, and was the son of a weaver who owned and operated a mill on East John Street. James P. Reed succeeded to the ownership of the mill, and also operated another mill a mile and a half west of Martinsburg. James P. Reed married Ann Snyder. Sally Reed Thompson died at the age of sixty-seven, after rearing a family of ten sons and three daughters.

In this last family Lewis H. Thompson was next to the youngest son. While growing up at Martinsburg he attended the city school, and at the age of seventeen became a clerk in the store of Thompson & Tabler, remaining with that firm five years, and for three years was with his brother James F. He then engaged in business with his brother Benjamin, and subsequently became sole proprietor and still conducts a high class men's furnishing store. However, that business is only one of several important affairs in which he is interested as a stockholder and executive. He is vice president of the Shenandoah Bank and Trust Company, was for a number of years a director of the Bank of Martinsburg, is president of the Cherry Run Orchard Company, is president of the Martinsburg Fruit Exchange and for several years was president of the Business Men's Association and is a director of the Chamber of Commerce.

Mr. Thompson was for six years a member of the City Board of Affairs and for six years a member of the City Council, and during that time was also city treasurer. A prominent democrat, he has been chairman of the County Democratic Committee, a member of the Congressional District Committee and has attended as a delegate a number of local, district and state conventions.

At the age of twenty-one Mr. Thompson married Alice A. Grimes, a native of Martinsburg, and daughter of Harry and Julia Grimes. They have two children, Ethel Amelia and LaGarde Jones. Ethel Amelia is the wife of Capt. Hugh C. Parker, of the United States Army. Mr. and Mrs. Thompson are members of the Baptist Church, and for twenty-two years he served as superintendent of the Sunday school.

BRUCE LEONARD HOLLAND while not one of the oldest men is one of the oldest citizens of Logan, and has been a factor in the expanding business affairs of that community more than twenty years. He has perhaps the oldest and largest business in real estate, insurance and bonds in the town, and is also vice president of the Bank of Logan.

Mr. Holland was born near Morgantown, West Virginia, October 20, 1877, son of Capt. W. C. and Agnes Jane (Selby) Holland. The Holland family were pioneers in and around Morgantown. His parents were both natives of Monongalia County. The mother is now living at Parkersburg, where the family located in 1907. Captain Holland, who died there in 1910, at the age of seventy-five, was a well-to-do farmer and engaged in the timber business on the Monongahela River. He was always interested in politics as a matter of good government, was a republican, and for a number of years held the post of justice of the peace, and was on the school board and in other official positions. Captain Holland and five brothers were Union soldiers, and his service began at the opening of hostilities and continued until the close of the war. He was in many battles, including Gettysburg, was twice wounded and for a time was a prisoner of war at Libby Prison. His youngest brother entered the service at the age of fourteen years as a bugler. Captain Holland was a member of the Grand Army of the Republic and a high degree Mason, and he and his family were Baptists. They had a family of four sons and three daughters. The oldest, B. O. Holland, who died at the age of fifty years, was a pioneer merchant at Logan, being a member of the firm Moore & Holland, held the office of postmaster a number of years, and was deeply interested in the general development of the Guyon Valley and was one of the first republican voters in the community. The second child, Sally, is the wife of John Ball, who for several terms served as sheriff of Wyoming County. The third child, Fannie, is the wife of Judge Blizzard, of Parkersburg. Frank C. is in the real estate and insurance business at Mullins in Wyoming County. Bruce Leonard is the next in age. Fred is an accountant in Baldwin Tool Works at Parkersburg.

Bruce Leonard Holland acquired his early education in district schools and also attended school at Grantsville in Calhoun County. Soon after leaving school he came to Holland, and for eight years was assistant postmaster under his brother. In 1906 he was commissioned by the governor of West Virginia to transcribe the records pertaining to that part of Logan County which went to form the new County of Mingo. This was a task that required eighteen months, and its performance gave him perhaps a wider and a more intimate acquaintance with the people and affairs of Logan and Mingo counties than was possessed by any one in this section.

Many years ago Mr. Holland began selling life insurance, and his insurance business has since taken on a broad and general scope, representing some of the strongest companies in fire and life, marine, mining and all other branches of insurance service applicable to such an industrial community as Logan County. He is also connected with several bonding companies. While in this business he began dealing in real estate, and his knowledge and experience of real estate give some vital facts indicating the growth of the community. A number of years ago he paid $600 for one tract of land for which he has since been offered $60,000. Among other properties owned by him is the Jefferson Hotel at Logan. He was one of the organizers of the Bank of Logan, which started business in 1920, and of which he is vice president and member of the discount board. This bank has had a rapid growth, its deposits aggregate $800,000, and these deposits also reflect the prosperity of this mining community, since the larger part of the deposits are made by miners. Mr. Holland is also a stockholder in the First National Bank.

He inherits the interest of his father in public affairs, is one of the leading republicans of the county and a number of times has been chosen chairman of the county committee. In 1903 Mr. Holland married Kittie F. Aldridge, daughter of John F. Aldridge and a niece of Judge Wilkinson of Logan. They have three children: Paul, who just completed his high school course, has proved a very able assistant to his father in business, and is now continuing his education in Yale University; Max S., now thirteen years of age and in his first year in high school; and Mary L.

WILLIAM FRAZIER NARET is one of the leading representatives of real estate enterprise and fire and casualty insurance business at Morgantown, judicial center and metropolis of Monongalia County. He was born at Buffalo, Putnam County, this state, October 25, 1876, and is a son of Dr. Edward and Rhoda F. (Frazier) Naret. Edward Naret was born in the City of Paris, France, in 1823, and there his educational discipline included the study of law. He was nineteen years of age when he came to the United States in 1842, and later he returned to his native land, where he devoted about two years to the study of medicine. He then came again to the United States, and he continued his studies in the medical department of the University of Pennsylvania until he there received his degree of Doctor of Medicine. He then engaged in the practice of his profession at Gallipolis, Ohio, and there was solemnized his first marriage. Later he met in the City of Philadelphia some Frenchmen who owned land at Buffalo, West Virginia, and who wished to sell the property. The doctor purchased the land and removed to that place, where several French families had established their homes. There he continued in the practice of his profession until his death in 1876, and he long was known and honored as one of the influential citizens of that community. His first wife died, and at Buffalo he was united in marriage with Miss Rhoda F. Frazier, who was born and reared in what is now Putnam County, this state, a daughter of William Frazier, who came with one of his brothers from another part of Virginia and settled in Putnam County, which was at that time a part of the Old Dominion State. The locality where he settled became known as Frazier's Bottoms. Mrs. Naret survives her husband and still resides in her native county.

William F. Naret obtained his youthful education in the public schools of his native place, and in the fall of 1892 he entered the preparatory department of the University of West Virginia, where he continued his studies until he entered the agricultural department of the University, in which he was graduated in 1898, with the degree of Bachelor of Agriculture. In 1900 he received from the university the supplemental degree of Master of Arts, he having previously received a fellowship in the university.

In 1900 Mr. Naret became associated with the Allegheny Orchard Company at Martinsburg, this state, where he remained about one year. Thereafter he was employed in a drug store at Morgantown for a period of about two years, and he then became associated with Curtis R. Hayes in the real estate and insurance business in this city. About two years later he purchased the business and formed the Hayes-Miller corporation to continue the same. Three years later he became the sole owner of the substantial and prosperous business, which he has since continued successfully and in an individual way under his own name. Mr. Naret handles city, suburban and farm realty, and his transactions have been of broad scope, the while his reputation constitutes one of the most valuable assets of his business. He is also representative of a number of leading fire and casualty insurance companies and has a representative clientage in his underwriting business. He is also secretary of the Fair-Mor Coal Company, the coal mines of which are situated near Fairmont, Marion County, though most of the stockholders in the company are residents of Morgantown. Mr. Naret is financially interested in several Morgantown industrial enterprises, and is one of the liberal and broad-gauged citizens of Monongalia County. He is a member of the local Kiwanis Club and is affiliated with Morgantown Lodge No. 411, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, and with Athens Lodge No. 30, Knights of Pythias.

WILLIAM SMITH SNYDER is a native of Martinsburg, and was an active business man of the city for twenty years or more, but now gives his time chiefly to the management of his private property interests. He is member of one of the substantial old families of the Eastern Panhandle.

Mr. Snyder was born at Martinsburg, January 28, 1858. His grandfather, John Snyder, at one time was a resident of Chillicothe, Ohio, and from there came to Virginia, lived for a time in Jefferson County, and then established his permanent home at Martinsburg. He was a hatter by trade, and he served as a constable in Martinsburg. He had three sons. Two of them, John and Daniel, were shoemakers at a time when shoe making was a manual trade and all boots and shoes were made to order. John Snyder continued the business of custom shoemaker in Martinsburg for many years, and was also a member of the official board of the Methodist Church. All business houses of the city were closed during his funeral. Daniel Snyder specialized in the making of women's shoes. His son removed to Baltimore and for many years was in business in that city.

Samuel Snyder, father of William Smith Snyder, learned the trade of carpenter and followed that occupation. He was a Union sympathizer when the war broke out between the states, removed to Pennsylvania and was soon stricken with diphtheria, and died in May, 1861, soon after returning home. He married Mary A. P. Legg, who was born at Annapolis, Maryland. Her father was a farmer in Maryland, and on leaving the farm lived with her at Annapolis. Mrs. Mary Snyder was left a widow with three small children, named Clara W., who subsequently married William Rouark, Maggie O. and William Smith. William Smith was only three years old when his father died. The mother kept her children together and carefully reared and educated them, and she died at the age of sixty-two. She and her husband were active members of the First Methodist Episcopal Church.

William Smith Snyder attended the city schools, and early sought a useful occupation that would provide his self-support. He learned the tinner's trade at the age of twenty, established himself in business as a tinsmith, and that was the active business line he followed. Mr. Snyder has made numerous investments in local real estate, and his accumulating interests in this field give him property that requires much of his time.

At the age of twenty-five he married Emma Susan Shaffer, who was born at Martinsburg, daughter of Jacob and Isabelle (Burnett) Shaffer. Her grandfather, John Shaffer, was born in 1795 and was a son of Peter Shaffer, a Pennsylvania soldier in the American Revolution. John Shaffer was an early settler of Martinsburg, and a wagon manufacturer whose place of business was at the corner of West King and South Raleigh streets. He married Sally Curtis. The father of Mrs. Snyder was the first superintendent of the Martinsburg Water Works, and continued in that official capacity for forty years. The maternal grandparents of Mrs. Snyder were Archibald and Eve Burnett.

Mr. and Mrs. Snyder, who are members of the First Methodist Episcopal Church, reared five children. Edith May, the oldest, is the wife of A. D. Darby and has two children, named Ruth May and Albert D., Jr. Roland Shaffer, the oldest son, entered the United States service in the World war, was first stationed at Kelly Field, near San Antonio, Texas, and was at Chanute Field, near Champaign, Illinois, until the close of the war. The third child is Hattie Webb. The fourth, Mary Isabella, is the wife of Roy Harrison and has two children, Isabella and Margaret. William Stanley, the younger son, also is an ex-service man, and was stationed at Camp Lee until the close of the war. He attended Washington and Lee University and West Virginia University, and is now a clerk in the office of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad at Cumberland, Maryland.

CHARLES S. TRUMP. Prominent among the younger generation of logists at the Berkeley County bar is found Charles Samuel Trump, who has already displayed professional ability of a high order and has made rapid strides in his calling. Mr. Trump is a veteran of the World war, in which he suffered wounds, and is an energetic, forceful and capable representative of the kind of citizenship which in recent years has brought West Virginia prominently to the forefront in various avenues of endeavor.

Mr. Trump was born at Martinsburg, West Virginia, January 18, 1891, and is a son of Rev. Charles Trump, a native of Carroll County, Maryland, born in 1855. The grandfather of Mr. Trump was George Trump, born in 1807, in Carroll County, Maryland, being a son of Frederick Trump, also a native of Carroll County, whose father was Von Johannes Trump, who was born in Holland in 1736 and came to America during Colonial days, settling in Maryland and fighting with the Colonial forces during the War of the Revolution. He died in 1815, while his wife, Catherine Schloegel, who was born in Holland in 1738, died in 1823. Frederick Trump was a merchant in Carroll County, Maryland, and spent his entire life there. He married Elizabeth Krantz, who was born in the same county and died in 1888, aged seventy years. Cornelius Trump, a great uncle of Charles S. Trump, was a soldier in the Union army during the war between the states, and was captured and for a time confined in Libby Prison.

Rev. Charles Trump took an academic course at the Western Maryland College, Westminster, Maryland, and after graduation therefrom entered the Lutheran Seminary at Gettysburg, Pennsylvania, being graduated from the theological department of that institution. At that time he located at Harpers Ferry, as pastor of the Lutheran Church there, and in addition to his ministerial duties engaged in teaching school. After two years Reverend Trump removed to Centerville, Pennsylvania, where he was pastor of the old stone church of the Lutheran faith located there, and in 1888 resigned that pastorate to accept a call to St. John's Lutheran Church at Martinsburg. Here he labored faithfully and effectively until his greatly-mourned death in October, 1919. He married Eva Schick, who was born at Gettysburg, Pennsylvania, and she survives him as a resident of Baltimore, Maryland. She reared five children: Harold, Mary B., S. Elizabeth, Charles Samuel and Frank M. Mr. Trump's maternal great-grandfather was John Lawrence Schick, Sr., who died in 1834. He married Susan Holtzworth, of Lancaster, Pennsylvania, in November, 1819. He was born in Duerscheim, Germany, January 22, 1793, and came from there to America, September 20, 1818, and settled in Lancaster, Pennsylvania. His son, John Lawrence Schick, the maternal grandfather of Mr. Trump, married Sarah Welty. He was born December 25, 1822. When he was a young child his parents moved to Gettysburg, Pennsylvania, where he died in 1913, aged ninety-one years. He was a strong Unionist, and while he never served in the war he gave liberally to the cause. He served many years as treasurer of the Gettysburg Battlefield Memorial Association.

Charles S. Trump attended the public schools of Martinsburg, completing his high school course at the East High School, Columbus, Ohio, following which he enrolled as a student at West Virginia University, Morgantown, where he completed an academic course of one year and then entered upon a three-year law course. He was still at the university when the United States became embroiled in the World war, and in 1917 he enlisted in the United States service, being first stationed at Camp Benjamin Harrison, Indiana, where he was commissioned a second lieutenant and assigned first to the Eighty-third Division, from which he was transferred to the Thirty-seventh Division and later to the Seventy-ninth Division, with which he went overseas in December, 1917. Going to the front in France, he participated in various skirmishes and battles until the severe engagement at Montfaucon, which the Americans captured September 27, 1918, when he was wounded. He was at once sent to a base hospital, in which he was still confined when the armistice was signed, and as soon as he had sufficiently recovered was placed in charge of Blois Casual Company No. 311 and returned to the United States. Upon his arrival he was assigned to duty at Camp Upton, where he remained until August 13, 1919, and was then honorably discharged. Returning to the university, he resumed his studies and was graduated in 1920 with the degree of Bachelor of Laws. Admitted to the bar, he at once commenced following his profession at Martinsburg, where he has since built up a large and lucrative practice.

On March 30, 1917, Mr. Trump was united in marriage with Miss Rose Lee LaVelle, who was born at Uniontown, West Virginia, daughter of Thomas M. and Susan LaVelle, and to this union there have been born two children, Belle Lee and Jeanne LaVelle. Mr. and Mrs. Trump belong to St. John's Lutheran Church. He is a member of Washington Lodge No. 1, Knights of Pythias, and the American Legion.

WILSON PORTERFIELD SPEROW. The Sperows were one of the many families that moved down from Pennsylvania and joined in the very early settlement of the Shenandoah Valley in what is now Berkeley County. They were here before the Indians had departed, and shared in the struggles and vicissitudes of making the country habitable. Some five or six generations of the family have lived here and one of the youngest is represented by Wilson Porterfield Sperow, a prominent school man living in Martinsburg.

He was born at Bedington in Berkeley County, son of John Wilson Sperow, grandson of George O. Sperow and great-grandson of George Sperow, who died on the farm which he owned and occupied in Hedgesville District. He had a family of six sons and two daughters: Brown, George O., Henry V., Cromwell S., James, Peter S., Kate and Sallie. George O. Sperow was born in Hedgesville District, acquired a farm in Falling Water District, and when he finally left the farm he moved to Martinsburg, where he died at the age of seventy-eight. His wife was Mary S. Riner, who was born in Falling Waters District, a daughter of Henry and Polly (Couchman) Riner. She died at the age of sixty-nine, mother of four children: Henry Riner, John Wilson, Anna May and Hester.

John Wilson Sperow is now a resident of Martinsburg. He was born on a farm in Falling Waters District, grew up there and received a rural school education, and at the age of twenty-two bought the home farm and gave his time to its management and cultivation until 1911, when he moved to Martinsburg. Since then he has been a traveling salesman, though he still owns and manages the farm. He was elected a member of the State Legislature in 1911, and was a member of some of the important committees during his term. He and his wife are members of Trinity Methodist Episcopal Church, South, at Martinsburg. John Wilson Sperow married Sallie A. Porterfield, who was born on a farm in Falling Water District. Her father, Alexander Robinson Porterfield, is now eighty-eight years of age, sturdy and useful in spite of his long life, and is still living on the farm where he was born December 24, 1833. He was a son of William and Polly (Rush) Porterfield, and both the Porterfield and Rush families were early settlers of Berkeley County. Alexander R. Porterfield was an active farmer before the Civil war, and had slaves to operate his plantation. He married Susan B. Small, who was born in Opequan District of Berkeley County, daughter of John and Sallie Small. John Wilson Spewer and wife reared two children, Wilson Porterfield and Dora Vivian. The latter is the wife of Daniel Franklin Dennis and has a daughter, named Margaret Katherine.

Wilson Porterfield Spewer received his first educational advantages in Bedington. He pursued a four-year course in the Shepherd College State Normal, graduating in 1914 with the A. B. degree and in 1916 received the Master of Arts degree. His career as a teacher has been in connection with some of the larger schools of this section. He taught in the Martinsburg High School until he answered the call to the colors in 1918. He was a sergeant and remained at Camp Meade until honorably discharged in December, 1918. On returning home he was an employee of the old National Bank at Martinsburg until the fall of 1919, when he began his duties as principal of the Bunker Hill High School.

On March 20 1920, Mr. Spewer married Lillian Henrietta Sites, who was born in Pendleton County, West Virginia, daughter of Dr. Johnson McKee and Isabella (Kile) Sites. Her father was a practicing physician in Martinsburg for many years, and is now deceased. Mr. and Mrs. Spewer are members of the Trinity Methodist Episcopal Church, South. He is affiliated with Equality Lodge No. 44, A. F. and A. M., Lebanon Chapter, R. A. M., Palestine Commandery No. 2, K. T., Washington Lodge No. 1, Knights of Pythias, Azhar Temple No. 226, D. O. K. K. He is past moderator of the Potomac Valley Round Table, a teachers organization, and is a member of the Rotary Club at Martinsburg.

HON. WILLIAM HEREFORD MCGINNIS has been a prominent practitioner at the Raleigh County bar for more than forty years, and during a large portion of that period has been a leading figure in public life, having served for six years as a member of the State Senate and also having occupied other positions. His public service has been of great practical value to his community, and in his home city of Beckley, as well as elsewhere, he is accounted a leading and formidable corporation lawyer.

Senator McGinnis was born on Marsh Fork of Coal River, thirty miles northwest of Beckley, Raleigh County, West Virginia, and is a son of Hon. James Hereford and Mary (Williams) McGinnis. James H. McGinnis was born on the Nibert place, on the Guyandotte River, Logan County, this state, in 1827, and died at Beckley in 1907. He was a son of Pyrrhus McGinnis, a native of Frederick County, Virginia, who was a pioneer of Logan County and a merchant there for many years. In about 1850 Pyrrhus McGinnis brought his family to Raleigh County and settled on Marsh Fork, where he established a mercantile business, as he did in several other parts of the county. He was a successful merchant and accumulated several thousand acres of land, some of which was located near Beckley. He found time to engage helpfully in school work, and was also a faithful member of the Methodist Church. When secession raised its head Mr. McGinnis, a man of positive views and the courage to voice his opinions, at once took a stand in favor of the Union, and during the war between the states was shot at by a Southern sympathizer at Beckley. Two of his sons, Achilles and T. J., were soldiers in the Seventh West Virginia Cavalry, the former holding the rank of first lieutenant. Mr. McGinnis lived to see his principles vindicated, dying at Beckley in 1874.

James Hereford McGinnis was educated in the common schools, and as a young man became a school teacher, a vocation which he followed ten years, during which time he studied law and was admitted to the bar at Barboursville, West Virginia. It was his desire to enter the army at the outbreak of the war between the states, but he was severely afflicted with rheumatism at the time and thus was prevented from service. Following the war he was one of the few that could take the test oath, and was a partner of Hon. Sam Price of Lewisburg, war governor of West Virginia, who was barred from practice because he could not take the test oath, but who was not excluded from acting as counsel. Later Mr. McGinnis practiced law all over West Virginia. A man of great natural ability, fine presence and magnificent oratorical powers, no one could present a case in better manner to a jury, and as a result his practice, general in character but slightly tending toward criminal cases, was large and important. He had an office at Fayetteville for many years, but Beckley was his home. Mr. McGinnis was a raconteur of parts, and his stories were much relished by his fellow Masons and others with whom he was wont to gather in a social way. An ardent republican, he served as prosecuting attorney in several counties, and in 1888 was elected to Congress, but was counted out, and before a Congressional contest could be settled Congress had adjourned, thus preventing him from acting in the national lower body. Mr. McGinnis married Miss Mary Williams, who was born in 1830 and died in 1917, a daughter of William Williams, who came from North Carolina and settled on Johns Creek in Pike County, Kentucky, where his daughter was born. She was a life-long Methodist. The children born to James H. and Mary (Williams) McGinnis were: Virginia, the wife of T. K. Scott, of Beckley; Nancy, who died in young womanhood; Mary, the widow of John F. Davis, residing at Beckley; Sallie, who died at the age of eight years; James H., Jr., who died in childhood; Martha, the wife of W. R. Lilly, an attorney of Logan; J. Douglas, an attorney of Beckley; and William Hereford.

William Hereford McGinnis attended the local schools and as a young man adopted the vocation, temporarily, of school-teaching. After several terms spent in the rural schools in 1879 and 1880 he attended Concord Normal School and then took up his duties as his father's amanuensis. While thus engaged he improved the opportunity to study law and was admitted to the bar at Hinton while attending court there. For years he was associated with his father in practice, as he was also with Judge John H. Hatcher from 1905 until Judge Hatcher ascended the bench in 1921, or for a period of sixteen years. During the last ten years Senator McGinnis has devoted his attention almost exclusively to court practice, has a large and prominent clientele, and is attorney for many of the corporations, coal companies and railways here. The dean of the Raleigh County bar, he was elected prosecuting attorney in 1892, and served in that office for four years. In 1902 he was elected to the West Virginia Senate, in which body he served six years, and was a member of many of the most important committees. He was one of five democrats in the Senate and was the nominee of his party for president of the body. Had he occupied that position he would have succeeded the governor in case anything had happened to remove him from the gubernatorial office. He has been a democrat since the attainment of his majority, and at one time knew "every voter in the county and his dog." He is president of the Raleigh County Bar Association, a director in the Bank of Raleigh, a Methodist in his religious faith, and fraternally is affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, in which he has been a delegate to the Grand Lodge at various times. He has witnessed and participated in the entire development of Beckley, as at the time that he commenced the practice of law here the community was a mud-road town, without railroads or other modern conveniences, consisting of a blacksmith shop, post office and court house, scattered around which were the primitive homes of the residents.

In 1891 Mr. McGinnis was united in marriage with Miss Sallie Holroyd, a daughter of William Holroyd, of Athens, Mercer County, West Virginia, and to this union there have been born four children: James Hereford; William Holroyd; Mary Nan, the wife of W. W. Goldsmith, an attorney of Beckley; and Sarah E., residing with her parents. James Hereford McGinnis is a graduate of Washington and Lee University, and is now associated with his father in the practice of law at Beckley. On April 15, 1917, he volunteered his services to the United States and trained at the First Officers' Training Camp, where he secured a second lieutenant's commission. He was assigned to duty with the Twelfth Machine Gun Battalion, and was on the battle lines of Chateau Thierry and Argonne Forest and with the Army of Occupation in Germany. During his service he was slightly gassed on one occasion, and at Chateau Thierry, for gallantry in action, was promoted first lieutenant and received a number of citations. William Holroyd McGinnis volunteered in February, 1918, was assigned to the same command as his brother, and advanced from private to sergeant. He was on the battle lines of St. Mihiel, Chateau Thierry and Argonne Forest, and received the Distinguished Service Cross for the rescue of two wounded comrades. He was at the Officers' Training Camp at LaMons, France, when the armistice was signed. Mrs. McGinnis is a Methodist, and the children have been reared in the faith of that church.

FLEMING C. LEFTWICH, a representative member of the bar of the City of Huntington, claims the Old Dominion State as the place of his nativity and is a scion of a family that was there founded in the Colonial days, the original American representatives having come from England. Col. William Leftwich, great-grandfather of the subject of this review, served as a patriot soldier and officer in the Revolution, in which he was a general of Virginia troops. Jabez Leftwich, grandfather of Fleming C., was born in Bedford County, Virginia, in 1791, and died in Giles County, that state, in 1875. The major part of his life, however, was passed in Montgomery County, Virginia, where he was an extensive planter and slaveholder prior to the Civil war. He well upheld the military and patriotic prestige of the family name by his service as a captain in the War of 1812, and thereafter he ever continued to be known as Captain Leftwich. His wife, whose maiden name was Martha Early and who was a cousin of the distinguished Confederate officer, Gen. Jubal A. Early, was born in Bedford County, Virginia, in 1793, and died in Giles County, that state, in 1875, the same year in which her husband died.

Tubal W. Leftwich, father of him whose name initiates his sketch, was born in Bedford County, Virginia, in 1838, and died in Madison, Boone County, West Virginia, in 1903. He was reared in Montgomery County, Virginia, and his marriage occurred in Giles County, that state, where he continued activities as a farmer and carpenter until 1895. He then came to Madison, West Virginia, where he passed the remainder of his life. He was originally a democrat and later a republican, and in Giles County he served many years as justice of the peace. He served as first lieutenant in the Thirty-sixth Virginia Infantry, Confederate, during the entire period of the Civil war, took part in many engagements, including the second battle of Manassas and that of Winchester, and was thrice wounded. He and his wife were members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. In Giles County, Virginia, he married Mary Porterfield, and there her death occurred in 1875. Everett, eldest of the children of this union, who died April 3, 1922, was a leading lawyer at Williamson, West Virginia; Pemberton Lee died at the age of eighteen years; Fleming C., of this sketch, was next in order of birth; Jennie is the wife of Sidney A. Albert, of Pizgah, North Carolina; Charles W., a traveling salesman and a veteran of the Spanish-American war, resides at Madison, West Virginia; May is the wife of Andrew J. Bradley, of Peytona, West Virginia; Miss Mary is a resident of Madison, this state; and William P. is a resident of Nallen, Fayette County.

For his second wife Tubal W. Leftwich married Miss Louisa Snodgrass, who was born in Giles County, Virginia, in 1853, and whose death occurred in 1898. They are survived by four children: Marvin E., of Moundsville, West Virginia; Lela, wife of Gaylord Berry, present postmaster at Madison, this state; Margaret, wife of William A. Clendennen, a farmer near Peytona.

Fleming C. Leftwich was born in Giles County, Virginia, April 17, 1866, and there attended rural and select schools. He remained on the home farm until he was twenty years old, when he came to Madison, West Virginia. He taught school three years, and in the meanwhile took up the study of law. He was admitted to the bar in 1889, and thereafter was engaged in practice at Madison until 1910, when he removed to the City of Huntington and assumed charge of the legal departments of the Big Creek Development Company, the Yawkey & Freeman Coal Company and the Pond Fork Coal Company. Of the two corporations last mentioned he is now secretary, treasurer and legal adviser, and in his general practice he has secure prestige as one of the able and successful members of the bar of this section of the state. He is a director of the Huntington Banking & Trust Company, the Madison National Bank, the VanZandt-Leftwich Auto Supply Company of Huntington, and the Miller Casket Company of this city. His professional and business offices are maintained at 1211 First National Bank Building.

Mr. Leftwich is a stalwart advocate of the principles of the republican party, and while a resident of Boone County he served as prosecuting attorney from January 1, 1897, to January 1, 1901, besides which he was postmaster at Madison under the administration of President Benjamin Harrison. In 1908-9 he represented the Eighth Senatorial District—Boone, Kanawha and Logan counties—in the State Senate. He is a past master of Odell Lodge No. 115, A. F. and A. M., at Madison; is affiliated with Tryan Chapter, R. A. M., at Charleston, where also he is a member of Kanawha Commandery No. 20, Knights Templars, and Beni-Kedem Temple of the Mystic Shrine, while in the Scottish Rite he has received the thirty-second degree in the Consistory at Wheeling. He is a past grand of Boone Lodge No. 170, I. O. O. F., at Madison, and is a member of Huntington Lodge No. 13, B. P. O. E. Mr. Leftwich is a member of the West Virginia Bar Association and in his home city holds membership in the Guyan Country Club. He was active in the furtherance of local patriotic measures in the World war period, and as a member of Draft Board No. 2 gave much time to the enrollment of young men for the nation's service.

December 20, 1893, recorded the marriage of Mr. Leftwich and Miss Minnie Stollings, daughter of the late Col. Joe E. and Ella (Croft) Stollings, of Madison. Colonel Stollings, with whom Mr. Leftwich was associated in the practice of law for a number of years, was a Confederate colonel in the Civil war. Mrs. Leftwich attended the Concord Normal School at Athens, and was a successful teacher in the schools of Boone County prior to her marriage. Mr. and Mrs. Leftwich have but one child, Miss Ruby, who remains at the parental home and is a popular figure in the social life of Huntington. Miss Leftwich received the best of educational advantages, including those of Marshall College, at Huntington, Barbourville College, at Barbourville, this state, and Fairmont Seminary, Washington, D. C.

GEORGE ARTHUR MOHLER. A contributing factor to the business prestige of the City of Beckley and the surrounding territory is the bottling works of the Raleigh Coca-Cola Company, situated at Mahanott. This important business enterprise is under the management of George Arthur Mohler, a man of capacity and experience, who is also manager of the plant at Mullens. He has been identified with this line of work ever since entering upon his business career, and his advancement therein has been well merited.

Mr. Mohler was born at Harrisburg, Pennsylvania, March 26, 1886, and is a son of Albert Curtis and Ellen (Meminger) Mohler, of Pennsylvania Dutch ancestry. Albert C. Mohler was a tanner in his native state of Pennsylvania, where he resided until 1900, in that year removing to Iron Gate, Virginia. He conducted a tannery at that place until 1917, when he took up his residence at Petersburg, West Virginia, and there is the proprietor of the same kind of an establishment. Mr. Mohler is widely known for his integrity in business matters, and has the reputation of a sound, reliable and public-spirited citizen. He and his worthy wife are the parents of two sons: James H., who is in charge of the dairy farm of the Hershey Candy Company at Hershey, this state; and George Arthur.

George Arthur Mohler attended the graded schools of Harrisburg, following which he entered high school at Cliffton Forge, Virginia, and was then given a clerical position by the Clifton Forge Ice and Bottling Works. There, by industry and fidelity, he worked himself to the position of assistant manager, and in 1919 was called to Beckley to take his present position. This plant was originally established in 1906 and was acquired by the present owners March 5, 1919. The president of the concern is L. M. Hogg, of Huntington, West Virginia; C. P. Nair, of Clifton Forge, Virginia, is vice president; C. P. Nair, Jr., of the same place, is secretary; and A. C. Ford, of Clifton Forge, is treasurer. The business is a very extensive one and has grown considerably during the management of Mr. Mohler, who has effected a number of changes in system and equipment that have contributed to the concern's prosperity. The product of this plant is of the highest class and finds favor with the dealers over a large contiguous territory.

In October, 1912, Mr. Mohler was united in marriage with Miss Florence E. Lackey, daughter of Dr. Harry Lackey, a practicing physician of Clifton Forge, and to this union there have been born four sons: George Arthur, Jr., Edgar L., Harry C. and Robert S. Mr. Mohler has been active in religious work, being a deacon of the Presbyterian Church and superintendent of the Sunday School at Tiel Schoolhouse. He also takes a keen and helpful interest in civic affairs, although he has never sought public office. His political beliefs make him a supporter of the candidates and principles of the republican party. Mr. Mohler is a popular member of the local Kiwanis Club.

DAVID D. ASHWORTH, who participated in some of the actual fighting in France as a lieutenant of infantry, has been a member of the West Virginia bar for half a dozen years, compiled a record of good service in the educational field, and is the present prosecuting attorney of Raleigh County, with home at Beckley.

He was born at Ghent in that county, May 10, 1889, son of Charles V. and Ida (Lilly) Ashworth. His paternal grandfather, Armistead A. Ashworth, was a minister of a Primitive Baptist Church, and had charge of many congregations in Virginia and West Virginia and was widely known in church circles. He lived to be ninety-four years of age. Charles V. Ashworth, who was born in Grant County, Virginia, in 1854, moved to West Virginia in 1877, and was a farmer and teacher, conducting a number of rural schools in Raleigh County. In 1908 he moved to Mansfield, Missouri, where he is now living, and his later years have been given to the service of a Primitive Baptist Church as a minister. He has also served as a justice of the peace in Mansfield. He had two brothers who were Confederate soldiers. Ida Lilly, first wife of Charles V. Ashworth, was born in Raleigh County in 1857, and died in 1893. The second wife of Charles V. Ashworth was Esta, daughter of George Broyles, of Monroe County. By the first marriage there were six sons and four daughters, David D. being the eighth child. The oldest, Dr. R. A. Ashworth, is physician at the State Penitentiary at Moundsville, West Virginia. Ezra is in the lumber business and a farmer in Raleigh County. John enlisted in the Regular Army at the age of eighteen, has risen from the ranks to captain of infantry and is now located at Topeka, Kansas. L. L. Ashworth has the Ford agency at Pocahontas, Virginia. Joseph is a mine superintendent at Shady in Raleigh County. Of the daughters, Maude, who died in 1906, at the age of twenty-six, was the wife of H. W. Hicks, of Marion, Virginia. Lilly B. is the wife of T. S. McKinney, and they live on the Ashworth homestead. Alice, who died in 1913, at the age of twenty-five, was the wife of Dan Griffith. Charlotte is the wife of George McKinney. Charles Ashworth by his second marriage has one daughter, Lula.

David D. Ashworth received his first instruction in the grade school of Ghent. Later he attended the Beckley Institute, graduated in 1913 from the Concord State Normal School, and during 1913-15 was a student of law at West Virginia University. He was admitted to the bar November 9, 1915. In the meantime and afterward he pursued a successful career as a teacher and school man. He taught ten terms of school. During 1909-10 he was superintendent of the Sandy River District in McDowell County.

He was also principal of the Eccles High School. In 1919-20 he was superintendent of the Town District of Raleigh County. At that time the Beckley High School was in course of construction, and it was finished under his supervision and is one of the finest schools in the state. Between terms of school Mr. Ashworth clerked in stores, and one summer was clerk in the Raleigh County Bank. He also served as deputy sheriff under W. L. Foster.

Offering his services as a volunteer, Mr. Ashworth in August, 1917, entered the Second Officers' Training Camp at Fort Benjamin Harrison, and was commissioned a second lieutenant of infantry. For some months he was on duty as an instructor in Camp Dodge, Iowa, and August 14, 1918, went overseas, reaching France September 3. He was at the front lines and part of the time on the battle front from October 3 until the signing of the armistice November 11. He was in the Meuse-Argonne district, and was promoted to first lieutenant soon after going to France. He was once slightly wounded, and had the unusual experience of having two canteens shot from his shoulder, and his comrades spoke of him as the man who could not keep a canteen. After the armistice he went with the Army of Occupation to Weitersburg, near Coblenz, where he remained until May 3, 1919. He received his honorable discharge from active duty June 8, 1919, but still retains a commission as a first lieutenant in the Reserve Corps.

Mr. Ashworth was elected prosecuting attorney of Raleigh County in the fall of 1920, and entered the office January 1, 1921. He has given a splendid account of himself in this splendid office. He is a member of the chamber of commerce at Beckley, is a Master Mason and Knight of Pythias, and in politics is a republican. He is a member of the Missionary Baptist Church, and Mrs. Ashworth is a Lutheran.

On June 25, 1919, he married Miss Martha Kellman, of Des Moines, Iowa. She is a graduate of Drake University of Des Moines. They have one daughter, Harriet Ruth.

J. HUGH MILLER. One of the important factors in business and banking affairs of Beckley is J. Hugh Miller, cashier of the Raleigh Banking and Trust Company. He has been prominently interested at Beckley and elsewhere in a number of enterprises which have benefited by his good judgment and energetic management, and his participation in civic affairs has served to add impetus to worthy movements established for the general welfare.

Mr. Miller was born on a farm in Rappahannock County, Virginia, August 2, 1864, a son of James N. and Catherine (Payne) Miller. James N. Miller was born in 1838, in Rappahannock County, Virginia, and as a young man adopted farming as his vocation. During the war between the states he enlisted in Colonel Mosby's command in the Confederate service, and fought with that famous organization throughout the four-year struggle. He returned then to his farm, where he died at the age of seventy-three years, after a useful, honorable and successful career. He was a democrat in politics, and his religious faith was that of the Baptist Church, to which also belonged his wife, who was born in Fauquier County, Virginia, and died at the age of seventy-three years, one year after the death of her husband. They had three sons and seven daughters, the sons being: J. Hugh; Frank, who died at Cheyenne, Wyoming, as a railroad employee; and W. R., who was traveling freight agent for the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad at the time of his death.

J. Hugh Miller grew to manhood on the home farm and attended the rural schools and the graded schools of Woodville, Virginia. Later he spent six months at Westminster College, Maryland, and in 1885 came to Hinton, West Virginia, as clerk and station agent for the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad, which was then little more than a streak of rusty rails, while Hinton was only a small village. After remaining with the railroad for thirteen years Mr. Miller came to Beckley to become cashier of the old Bank of Raleigh. Five years later he went to Thurmond, as cashier of the Bank of Thurmond, which during the time he was there became the National Bank of Thurmond of which he remained the cashier. In 1921 he returned to Beckley and became one of the organizers of the Raleigh Banking and

Henry L. Potter

Trust Company, of which he has since been cashier. This has already become one of the leading financial institutions of Raleigh County and stands high in public confidence and favor.

In 1902 Mr. Miller was united in marriage with Miss Jane Anderson, born in Iowa, a daughter of Archie Anderson, a mine foreman who met his death in a mine explosion. Four children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Miller: John R. and Mary E., who are attending Beckley High School; J. Hugh, Jr., who is attending the graded school; and Cora Ann. Mr. Miller is a Baptist in religious faith and his wife, a Methodist. He is well known in Masonry, belonging to the Blue Lodge at Beckley, the Chapter at Thurmond and the Shrine at Charleston, and also holds membership in the Loyal Order of Moose, the Knights of Pythias, the Kiwanis Club, the Beckley Chamber of Commerce and the Young Men's Club. A democrat in his political views, he has taken an active interest in the success of his party and in civic affairs, and while residing at Thurmond served as mayor of that city.

EDGAR W. SMOOT, M. D., one of the skilled physicians and surgeons, and a member of the staff of the Danville Hospital and a veteran of the World war, is specializing with remarkable success in children's diseases, with offices at Madison. He was born in Boone County, March 29, 1870, a son of Daniel and Mary Alice (Atkins) Smoot, both of whom were born in West Virginia. Doctor Smoot comes of English and Dutch descent, the Smoot family being an old one in Virginia and the Atkins family is also prominent in Virginia.

D. J. Smoot, son of William and Martha Smoot, was born near Ballardsville, Logan County, Virginia, now Madison, West Virginia, November 10, 1843, and died February 7, 1918. He served in the Confederate Army in the company known as the Logan Wildcats, was at Appomattox when Lee surrendered, and received an honorable discharge, which he prized very highly. He married Mary Alice Atkins on January 17, 1867. To this union were born five children, three sons and two daughters: W. W. Smoot, of Danville, West Virginia; Dr. E. W. Smoot, of Madison, West Virginia; D. A. Smoot, of Danville, West Virginia; Mrs. W. W. Hall, of Stallings, West Virginia; and Mrs. M. J. Hopkins, of Sumner, Ohio. There are nine grandchildren. Mr. Smoot was a democrat in politics, always active in support of the principles in which he believed, and was twice elected clerk of the County Court of Boone County. He was a member of the Baptist Church, having united with that organization thirty-five years ago, and lived a consistent Christian life. He belonged to the Order of Odd Fellows, American Mechanics and Improved Order of Red Men. He is survived by his wife and children, all of whom were with him at his death.

From childhood Doctor Smoot possessed the ambition to fit himself for the medical profession, and in order to obtain the money necessary for his long courses first prepared himself for that of teaching by supplementing his common-school training with two terms at the State Normal School at Athens, West Virginia. There he took a general academic course and secured his teacher's certificate. For four years he taught school in Boone County, and then, going to Louisville, Kentucky, took up the study of medicine at the Kentucky School of Medicine, from which he was graduated in 1897 with the degree of Doctor of Medicine. Immediately thereafter he established himself in a general practice at Madison, Boone County. Becoming interested in that branch of his profession which deals with children's diseases, he did post-graduate work in Louisville in 1899, and again in that city about 1909, and is now specializing on the subject, although he still conducts his general practice, his former patients being unwilling to dispense with his services.

During the late war Doctor Smoot enlisted in the Medical Corps and was stationed in the Embarkation Hospital at Newport News, with the rank of first lieutenant. Here he spent seven months, receiving his honorable discharge in December, 1918, but was almost immediately stricken, was taken to Charleston, West Virginia, where he remained until July, 1919, when his health was sufficiently regained for him to return home.

In 1913 Doctor Smoot married at Charleston, West Virginia, Miss Rosalie Zinn, a daughter of James B. Zinn, of Spencer, West Virginia. Mr. Zinn and his wife were both born in West Virginia. He is a stone mason and farmer. Doctor and Mrs. Smoot have no children. He belongs to the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, the Knights of Pythias, the Improved Order of Red Men and the Fraternal Order of Eagles. With the exception of three years in the coal fields of Blair and the period of his war service Doctor Smoot's professional life has been spent at Madison, and his is a familiar figure in Boone County. Both as a physician and personally he has won the warm friendship of all classes, and is recognized as a skillful practitioner and an expert in his specialty. As a citizen he has never shirked his duty, but striven to give to his community a loyal service, and has always placed his professional skill and knowledge at the disposal of the officials whenever necessary. He is an honor to his calling and his state, and there are many of the veterans of the World war, now scattered all over the country, who have cause to remember with grateful appreciation his efficient service at the time this country was at war.

HENRY L. PORTER studied and qualified for the law, but the profession has been of only incidental service to him in a very practical business career. He early became associated with the timber and mineral industry of Eastern Kentucky, where some of his heavy interests are yet located. As a coal operator he came into the West Virginia fields several years ago, and is now a resident of Huntington and secretary of the Eureka Coal & Mining Company.

Mr. Porter was born in Floyd County, Kentucky, October 13, 1877. The Porter ancestors came originally from Ireland and were Colonial settlers in Virginia. His grandfather, Samuel Porter, was born in old Virginia in 1797, and was a pioneer in Johnson County, Kentucky. He acquired and developed to farming uses a large amount of land there. This land afterward became exceedingly valuable for coal deposits, and was acquired as some of the property of the Consolidation Coal Company. Samuel Porter was a useful soldier in the War of 1812, being stationed on duty at the mouth of the James River. He died in Johnson County, Kentucky, in 1882. His wife was Anna Raines, who was born in Tazewell County, Virginia, in 1800, and died in Johnson County in 1884. Henry L. Porter, Sr., father of the Huntington coal operator, was born in Johnson County, Kentucky, in 1843, was reared and married there, and soon after his marriage he moved to Floyd County, and for many years was a successful merchant in that vicinity. He served as a soldier in the Civil war, was a democrat, and was one of the very earnest and active supporters of the work of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. He died in Boyd County in 1912. His wife was Minta Wells, who was born in Johnson County in 1845 and died in Floyd County in 1891. A brief record of their children is as follows: Maggie, of Prestonsburg, Kentucky, widow of Col. C. Cline, who was in the timber business there; Laura, who died at Anderson, Indiana, at the age of thirty-five, wife of E. L. Cline, now engaged in the timber business in Floyd County; Maryland, wife of Thomas M. Peery, a blacksmith at Pikeville, Kentucky; Henry L., Jr.; and Samuel, at Ashland, Kentucky, who owns and operates several coal mines in Floyd County.

Henry L. Porter, Jr., attended rural schools near his father's home, continued his education in the Prestonsburg Normal School, and for five years was a teacher in Floyd County and one year in Meeker County, Minnesota. He taught his first school at the age of eighteen. While teaching he studied law, and for two years was a student of law in what is now called the Western State Normal School at Bowling Green, Kentucky. He graduated LL. B. with the class of 1901. Instead of beginning law practice, he continued teaching in Floyd County until 1905, and for about ten years was also interested in timber operations in that section of Eastern Kentucky. Mr. Porter began dealing in coal lands at John's Creek in Floyd County in 1914, and his association with this business for three years led to more active connections with coal mining. In 1917 he helped organize the Long Branch Coal Company, of which he is a director. He and Harry Leaberry in 1918 organized the Eureka Coal and Mining Company, with mines at Prestonsburg. Mr. Porter is still secretary of this company. The company's mines are equipped to handle from 2,000 to 3,000 tons per day. Mr. Porter in March, 1921, was one of the organizers of the Coal River Collieries, developing mines on Coal River and in Boone County, West Virginia, where the company has over 5,000 acres under lease. The officers of both the Eureka and the Coal River companies are at 522 Tenth Street in Huntington, and Mr. Porter is secretary and treasurer of the Coal River Company.

While a resident of Floyd County Mr. Porter served four years as justice of the peace. He is a democrat, a member of the Johnson Memorial Methodist Episcopal Church, South, of Huntington, of which he is a steward, is a past senior warden of Zebulon Lodge No. 273, F. and A. M., at Prestonsburg, a member of Paintsville Chapter No. 131, R. A. M., Huntington Lodge of Perfection No. 4, Huntington Rose Croix Chapter No. 4 of the Scottish Rite, and West Virginia Consistory No. 1 of the thirty-second degree at Wheeling. He belongs to Beni-Kedem Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Charleston.

Since coming to Huntington Mr. Porter has made some investments in real estate, including his fine home, a ten room brick house in a restricted residential section, at 229 Fifth Avenue. In December, 1903, in Floyd County, Kentucky, he married Miss Myrtle Clark, daughter of Morgan and Rebecca (Graham) Clark, the latter still living in Floyd County, where the father died after a successful career as a farmer and stock raiser. Mr. and Mrs. Porter have four children: Ruth, born October 17, 1905, and Esther, born in June, 1908, both students in the Central High School at Huntington; Henry Howard, born October 17, 1910, and Jean, born May 25, 1914, students in the grammar school at Huntington.

HOWARD J. MCGINNIS has become an influential figure in the educational affairs of his native state, and his pedagogic and executive powers are being effectively used in his present important office, that of president of the West Virginia State Normal School at West Liberty, Ohio County, an institution of which due record is made in the general historical department of this publication.

Professor McGinnis was born on a farm near Glenville, Gilmer County, this state, and the date of his nativity was April 4, 1882. The family lineage traces back to John McGinnis, who, as an orphan boy, came to what is now West Virginia nearly a century ago and who here passed his adult life as a farmer in Gilmer County, where his death occurred when he was well advanced in years. On his old homestead farm was born his son John H., father of him whose name initiates this review, and the son passed his entire life on this ancestral farmstead, which is still in the possession of the family, with the exception of a minor area. John H. McGinnis, a man of strong mentality and sterling character, died at the age of sixty years, and his wife survived him a number of years.

The early education of Prof. Howard J. McGinnis was acquired in the public schools of his native county, and there he was graduated in the State Normal School at Glenville as a member of the class of 1906. In 1915 he was graduated in the University of West Virginia, with the degree of Bachelor of Science, and later he completed a post-graduate course in the great University of Chicago, from which he received the degree of Master of Arts. He has been actively engaged in educational service in West Virginia for twenty years, and his career in his profession has been marked by consecutive advancement in subjective success and objective influence. For four years he continued to teach in the rural schools, a basic work of major importance; for three years he was principal of the Fourth Ward School at Morgantown; for two years he was superintendent of the schools at Bridgeport, West Virginia; for one year he held a similar position at Harrisville, Ritchie County, West Virginia; for five years he was instructor in rural education and registrar at the State Normal School at Fairmont; and in November, 1919, he was elected president of the State Normal School at West Liberty.

Professor McGinnis has given earnest and valuable service also in connection with the work of teachers' county institutes and in other educational assemblages and organizations. He is an active member of the National Teachers Association and also the West Virginia State Teachers Association. He is a republican in general politics, but not super-partisan in local affairs; his religious faith is that of the Methodist Episcopal Church; and he is a member of the Phi Sigma Kappa College fraternity. At West Virginia University he was elected to the honorary scholarship fraternity, Phi Beta Kappa, and at Chicago University he was similarly honored by election to the professional education fraternity, Phi Delta Kappa. Mr. McGinnis is also a member of the Odd Fellows and the Masonic lodges.

His fondness for athletics, in which he has taken active part, enhances his value as an educator of youth. He is an enthusiast in his profession and has the ability to inspire enthusiasm in the students who work under his supervision, as well as in the teachers with whom he is associated in service.

Professor McGinnis wedded Miss Nellie A. Weisman, who was born in the State of Illinois, and who was a teacher under his supervision while he was connected with the public schools at Morgantown, she being a graduate of Austin College, Illinois. Professor and Mrs. McGinnis have two children: Alma Christine and Helen Virginia.

HISTORY OF THE BURNS FAMILY IN WEST VIRGINIA. The Burns family of Fairmont descended from William Howard Burns, who was born in 1766 in Belfast, County Antrim, Province of Ulster, Ireland.

The last years of the eighteenth century found Ireland in rebellion, and during these troublous times young Burns sailed for America. Born in Ulster, a Protestant and an Orangeman, we have reasons to believe that his departure was for political reasons, and that he left the Irish question to be settled without his aid. In 1797 he came to Hampshire County, Virginia (now West Virginia) and bought land on Pattersons Creek. (Will Book No. 14, P. 227.) In 1802 a postoffice was established at Western Port and Mr. Burns was the first postmaster. He died there in 1811.

William Howard Burns married Philadelphia Burbridge who was born in Fredericksburg, Virginia, August 28, 1775. Her father, John Burbridge, was a soldier in the Revolution and died "in States' Service in 1782." Her grandmother was Mary Ball, of the Virginia Balls. Philadelphia Burbridge was a descendant of one "Thomas Burbridge Gentleman," who came to Virginia in 1636 and had many hundred acres granted him on the Nausemond River, in what is now Isle of Wight County (and adjacent counties). The family is an old English one, and while the spelling of the name has differed somewhat, there are sixteen generations of Burbridges behind Thomas. To the union of William Howard and Philadelphia Burns six children were born: Maria, 1798; Patsy Elliott, 1800; Benjamin B., 1802; James, 1801; Philadelphia, 1806; William, 1810.

James Burns, son of William H. Burns, was born February 4, 1801. In 1823 he married Nancy Agnes Ingman of Allegany County, Maryland. About 1825 he moved to what was then Middleton, Monongalia County, riding horseback, by bridle path, through the wilderness, almost 100 years ago. To this union nine children were born: Jane, 1824; William Howard, 1825; Silas, 1828; Philadelphia, 1830; James J. (subject) Am, 1835; Benjamin Burbridge, 1837; Ellen, 1841; Laura Lee, 1847.

On the site of Skimmers' Tavern Mr. Burns operated a tannery until 1856, when he moved it to Fairview, and still had an interest in it for years. In 1852 the B. & O. Railroad ran their first train through Fairmont, and Mr. Burns had the tavern, or eating house as it was called, for four years. He purchased a farm of 118 acres in what is now Locust Avenue or West Fairmont. Five years later, on the 10th of September, 1873, he started for Peoria, Illinois, where he died January 17, 1892, when lacking only a few days of reaching his ninety-first birthday. James Burns was energetic and active, and in his business affairs displayed such good judgment and keen foresight that he was successful in every line in which he was engaged, from tanning to farming. In every relation of life he was active and useful, and was well known in every community in which he resided, for industry, honesty and benevolence.

James J. Burns, son of James and grandson of William H., was born in Fairmont on June 18, 1832, and became one of the city's prominent citizens and successful business men. He was engaged in the mercantile business in Fairmont until 1857, in which year he went to Minnesota, where he resided for two years. He returned to Fairmont in 1859, and, entering general merchandising, he continued until 1888. After 1888 he gave all his time to the development of the resources of West Virginia, along which line he did as much as any other man of his time to inaugurate the development of the coal and gas interests of the state and to attract outside capital for that purpose. He helped to organize many companies, among which were the West Fairmont Gas & Coal Company, the Virginia & Pittsburgh Coal & Coke Company, the New England Coal & Coke Company, the Washington City Coal & Coke Company, and the Fairmont Gas Coal Company of New York, each of which were pioneers in the West Virginia field.

Always interested in educational work, he was among the first to work for the public schools, and in establishing the normal though he was educated in the old time subscription schools, then in their prime. He was a man of large sympathies and public spirit. He passed away in his sixty-eighth year, November 9, 1899.

On December 21, 1854, Mr. Burns married Margaret Stewart, of Huntingdon County, Pennsylvania, and to them were born the following children: Ida Ellen, who married John McNary; Della Ann, who married George H. Shinn; Minnesota, who died in infancy; Laura J., who married Thomas H. B. Stagers; Mabel S., who married Starke L. Baker and later, Randolph Stalnaker; Mary Knight who married Boyd Nees; and Margaret Burns, who is the last of the name of this branch of the family.

SHINN FAMILY. One of the historic communities in Harrison County is Shinnston, founded by and named in honor of members of the Shinn family. The Shinnas are still represented in the useful citizenship of West Virginia, and the vigor of the family stock appears undiminished in nearly three centuries of American residence. The purpose of this article is to give a brief account of the Shinn genealogy and the circumstances and personalities connected with the origin of Shinnston.

The first Shinnas came to America with a party of two hundred and thirty Quakers that left London on the ship "Kent," half of them being from London and the other half from Yorkshire. They were settlers in New Jersey. They were followed by other immigrants in the year 1677. A New Jersey historian gives a general list of these immigrants, and among them is the name of John Shinn. In a record of the freeholders of Burlington for the year 1680 appear the names John Shinn and Clement Shinn. The children of John Shinn were Francis, John, Jr., George, Mary, Thomas, Sarah, Esther, Francis, Martha and James.

James Shinn, representing the second generation, was born in England, and lived longer than any of his brothers or sisters. He died in 1751, without a will. March 3, 1697, he married Abigail Lippincott.

Their son Clement first appears as a witness upon several marriage certificates. In 1740 he married Elizabeth Webb, a woman not of Quaker faith. As a later paragraph discloses, it was his children who were the pioneers of the family in West Virginia.

His son Clement Shinn, Jr., was born in 1746. In 1774 he married Ruth Bates, of New Jersey. Their children were Joseph, Moses, Daniel, Hepzibah, Clement, Edward, Reuben, Rehsah, Samuel, Jonathan and Eli.

Of the next generation Moses Shinn was born, February 0, 1779, and died in 1871, at the age of ninety-two. April 5, 1799, he married Sarah Kyle, in Virginia, daughter of Anthony and Elizabeth (Cooper) Kyle. She died in her eighty-fourth year. Their children were: Hiram, Maria, Sampson, Matilda, Justus, Merriek, Rezin K., Sevilla, Absalom.

Absalom Shinn was born in Harrison County, January 19, 1818. He was a physician by profession, and prior to the Civil war was an anti-slavery man. He spent his last years at Brooklyn, five miles from Heliopolis, where he died in January, 1861. September 7, 1837, he married Clarissa B. Ebel, who was born November 10, 1820. Their family of children consisted of Savilla Ann, Harriet Amelia, Sarah Elizabeth, Henry Alphonso, Paulina, Orville, Charles Moses, James William, Mary Jones and George H. M.

A representative of the seventh generation was George H. M. Shinn, who was born, April 27, 1855, and died in Fairmont, June 27, 1903. For a number of years he was a Government postal inspector in the Railway Division, and later was in the Census Department at Washington, District of Columbia. February 27, 1879, he married Della Burns. The oldest of their children was Mabel Parker, born March 1, 1880. The second, James Edwin, was born at Fairmont, May 13, 1882. The third, Chester Crittenden, was born June 9, 1884. Charles M., was born January 18, 1889. Margaret, the next child, married J. J. Crumbaugh. Jennie M., the youngest, was born October 10, 1892.

Shinnston stands upon land originally taken up by the Shinnas after their emigration from New Jersey. The pioneer was Levi Shinn, one of the sons of Clement Shinn Sr., in the above record. According to the land records Levi Shinn located 400 acres on the West Fork River, adjoining lands of John Wood to include his settlement made in the year 1773, with a pre-emption right to 1,000 acres adjoining. Levi, it appears, did not remove his family to his homestead for a year or two after making his location. Shortly after doing so he was joined by several members of his family, including his two brothers, Clement, Jr., and Jonathan. There is a family tradition that Levi's lands lay west and south of Shinn's Run. Jonathan's lands extended from the mouth of this run down the river to the south and east, covering the present site of Shinnston, while Clement's holdings lay south of Jonathan's, on a stream called Middle Creek. Jonathan willed the land covering the present site of Shinnston to his son Levi, who built the first house, in 1802. This house was still standing in 1909. The first child born in the new settlement was Asa Shinn.

The act of the Legislature establishing the town of Shinnston, as passed January 22, 1818, enacted: "That the lots and streets as already laid off on the lands of Asa and Levi Shinn on the West Fork of the Monongahela River in the County of Harrison, he established a town by the name of Shinnston and that John Righter, Davis Wamsley, Samuel Shinn, John D. Lucas, Benjamin Wood, Joseph Wilson, and Jeremiah, Roby, Gentlemen, and they are hereby appointed trustees thereof."

By an act of May 26, 1852, Shinnston was incorporated and the voters were authorized to elect seven trustees with the usual powers of such officers. The act was not to take effect until ratified by a majority of the voters of the town, and was to include the town "as the same has heretofore been laid off into lots, streets and alleys." During the war this charter was allowed to lapse and a new one was procured in 1877. The Circuit Court on June 4, 1877, issued an order incorporating the Town of Shinnston under Chapter 47 of the code and appointed Albert Shinn, James Jackson and M. J. Ogden commissioners to hold the first election for officers of the said town.

WILLIAM DEHART FITZHUGH, M. D. After graduating in medicine Doctor Fitzhugh entered the army service during the World war, was on duty in France, and for the past two years has been mining physician and surgeon for the Pocahontas Fuel Company and the American Coal Company and also local surgeon for the Norfolk & Western Railroad Company at McComas in Mercer County.

Doctor Fitzhugh was born at Culpeper, Virginia, August 14, 1881, son of W. D. and Bettie Carter (Grayson) Fitzhugh, natives of Virginia. He is of Scotch ancestry, with an admixture of Irish. His father was a farmer at Culpener, spent his life quietly and industriously, and perhaps his chief interest outside of home and family was his work in the Presbyterian Church.

Doctor Fitzhugh acquired a common school education in Culpener, graduated in 1901 from William and Mary College, and then entered the George Washington University at Washington, where he pursued his medical course and graduated M.D. in 1912. For a year he remained on duty in the Children's Hospital at Washington and began his general practice in Highland County, Virginia. He remained there three years and then removed to Morrisville and soon afterward enlisted when America entered the war. He was a volunteer in the Medical Reserve Corps and for about two months was stationed at Camp Hill, Newport News, and was then ordered to duty over seas. He sailed for France, landing at Brest with the Three Hundred and Twelfth Battalion, and remained there from April to December, 1918. The Three Hundred and Twelfth Battalion was the chief unit in charge of the construction work carried on by the American forces at Brest. After receiving his honorable discharge Doctor Fitzhugh returned to Morrisville and resumed his practice and in June, 1919, joined the Pocahontas Fuel Company and has since been in charge of the mines and operations of the company at McComas. He is a member of the Mercer County, State and American Medical associations and of the Southern Medical Association. Fraternally he is a Royal Arch and Knights Templar Mason and Shriner, and is a member of the Presbyterian Church.

In 1914, in Highland County, Virginia, Doctor Fitzhugh married Miss Bessie May Wagner, daughter of Thomas and Minnie (Simmons) Wagner. They have five children: Mary Bess, Eleanor Grayson, Celeste Wagner, William D., Jr., and Roberta.

CHARLES STRATTON SMILEY. During the full strength and vigor of manhood, when an individual is accomplishing results beyond those of his fellows and gaining favor and appropriation, his compelling personality may have much influence, but after he has passed off the stage of life and his achievements, his successes and his failures are viewed with the cold and unbiased criticism that posterity accords even its highest and greatest, his true character stands forth and his measure of usefulness to mankind is clearly revealed. The student of biography knows full well how frequently this severe test brings only disillusionment. When, then, a community can point proudly to an individual the records of whose daily career disclosed true integrity and probity, how valuable, how interesting is the story, however brief, and how far-reaching may be its influence. To the memory of such a man, Charles Stratton Smiley, Clarksburg, West Virginia, pays tribute.

Mr. Smiley was born at Franklin, Venango County, Pennsylvania, September 3, 1861, a son of William and Jane (Kinnear) Smiley. His father, a merchant, was one of Franklin's well-known and highly respected citizens, and the youth was given a good practical education in the public schools of his native city. When he entered upon his independent career it was in connection with the oil business, an industry with which he continued to be identified in various ways throughout his life. His first employment was with the Eclipse Oil Company of Pennsylvania, and when he was only twenty-two years of age he went to Philadelphia to become manager for the Logan-Emery-Weaver Oil Company, a position which he retained for two years. His next location was Bradford Pennsylvania, where he was connected with the Oil Well Supply Company for a number of years, and about 1902 he came to Clarksburg, West Virginia, and engaged in the manufacture of oil well supplies. He also acted as agent for a broad territory contiguous to Clarksburg for the Columbian Rope Company of Auburn, New York, the product of which concern he handled on a large scale, at the same time giving much energy and attention to the oil business in general, being looked upon as one of the industry's successful men in West Virginia. Aside from and in connection with the foregoing

Mr. Smiley had a number of important financial interests. He took an active part in the merging of the Peoples Bank and Trust Company and the Traders National Bank, and in this connection was one of the factors in the movement that gave birth to the Union National Bank, in which he was a member of the Board of Directors, as he was also in the Empire National Bank. Mr. Smiley was a well-informed man, possessing an analytical mind, and his advice was sought by many and freely given, while his business associates had every reason to place implicit confidence in his judgment. Charitable to a marked degree, he gave all causes which he deemed worthy of support, and in his death, which occurred at Clarksburg August 13, 1915, the city lost a citizen who had been public-spirited and constructive in co-operating in movements for the general welfare. He was a Scottish Rite Mason and a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, to which the members of the hereafter family belong.

Mr. Smiley's first marriage was with Miss Araminta Kilgore, of Franklin, Pennsylvania, who died shortly after the removal of the family to Clarksburg, leaving one child, Frederic Stratton, now an oil man of California. Frederic S. Smiley is a graduate of Culver Military Academy, Culver, Indiana. When the United States entered the World war he enlisted in the United States Army and was at once sent to Fort Sheridan, Illinois, where he was commissioned a second lieutenant. Later he was ordered to the University of Illinois, at Urbana, where he served as an instructor until the close of the war. He did not get an opportunity to go overseas, the armistice being signed before he was assigned for such service. On June 21, 1904, Charles S. Smiley married Miss Pearl Siggins, a native of Bradford, Pennsylvania, and a daughter of John W. and Jane (Clark) Siggins. Mrs. Smiley survives her husband with three children: Jane Louise, Ruth Kinnear and Helen Bushnell.

AUSTIN J. KING, of Huntington, president of a dozen leading coal companies in the West Virginia fields, and one of the recognized leaders in the industry, began working in an Ohio coal mine at the age of twelve, and while acquiring a knowledge of mining from a practical standpoint he continued his studies in school and eventually completed a course in mining engineering. Even a brief record of his consecutive experience is a stimulating example of the power of an individual to rise above his circumstances.

Mr. King, whose full name is Austin John King, was born at Salineville, Columbiana County, Ohio, May 19, 1874. His father, Austin King, was an Englishman by birth, of Irish parentage, born at Portobello, July 8, 1851, was reared there, and in 1870, before reaching his majority, came to the United States. He lived for several years at Salineville, Ohio, was married there, entered the coal mines and for several years was a state mine inspector of Ohio. During 1884-6 he had charge of mines at Leetonia. In 1886 he removed to Leisenring, Pennsylvania, became coal mine superintendent, was for two years, beginning in 1890, a state inspector of coal mines in Pennsylvania, and in 1892 returned to the practical part of mining at Leisenring, the mines in that locality having in the meantime been acquired by the H. C. Frick Coal & Coke Company. He continued with that great corporation as a superintendent the rest of his life except for three years as general manager of the Dominion Coal Company at Cape Breton, Nova Scotia. Eventually he became chief mine inspector for the Frick Coal & Coke Company, and had held that office for a number of years before his death, which occurred at Scottsdale, Pennsylvania, in May, 1915. He was a democrat, a member of the Knights of Columbus and the Catholic Church.

Austin King married Mary Maloney, who was born in Lancashire, England, August 15, 1852, and died at Scottsdale, Pennsylvania, April 14, 1914. Of their large family of children Austin John is the oldest. Patrick S., a resident of Pittsburgh, is a state mine inspector in Pennsylvania. Frank E., of Huntington, is general superintendent of the Aracoma Coal Company, Sunbeam Coal Company, Thermo-Pocahontas Coal Company, King Fuel Company, Oneida Coal Company, is secretary-treasurer of the Halcón Coal Company, the Standard Eagle Coal Company, the Beckley

D. J. King

Pocahontas Coal Company, the Lick Fork Collieries Company and the Dorkent Coal Company. The fourth child, John R., lives at Pittsburgh and is a mine foreman. Sister Mary Austin is a Franciscan nun in St. Anthony's Convent at Sacramento, California. Catherine V. is a graduate of St. Francis Xavier University at Antigonish, Nova Scotia, and is a prominent teacher in the public schools of Pittsburgh. Nora B. is voucher clerk for the H. C. Frick Coal & Coke Company of Pittsburgh. Dr. Edward A. is a graduate of the University of Pennsylvania with the medical degree, is a New York surgeon, being visiting surgeon of St. Vincent's Hospital of that city, adjunct visiting surgeon of Bellevue Hospital, and a professor of surgery in the Bellevue Hospital Medical College. The ninth child is Mrs. Bonfiglio, a trained nurse, graduate of Johns Hopkins Hospital and the wife of a physician and surgeon at Long Beach, California. Thomas A. was educated in Duquesne University of Pittsburgh and St. Francis Xavier University of Antigonish, Nova Scotia, studied law in the University of West Virginia at Morgantown, and is now a mining engineer in New York City. Margaret D., the youngest, is a graduate of the University of Pittsburgh, and is teacher in the public schools of that city.

As noted above, the education of Austiu J. King was acquired in the intervals of other work. He attended public schools in Ohio, the Ingleside Academy of McDonald, Pennsylvania, and for two years was a student of engineering in the Ohio State University. His first work in a coal mine, continuing for a year and beginning at the age of twelve, was in the National Mine at Washingtonville, Ohio. Another year he worked in the potteries at Liverpool, Ohio. For about a year he and his brother Patrick S. alternated in their duties, operating the pumping plant at night in the mines at McDonald, Pennsylvania, and during the day attended school. From the age of fifteen to seventeen Mr. King worked in the mines at Houtzdale, Clearfield County, Pennsylvania, and from August 15, 1891, to September 1, 1893, was employed with the engineer corps of the H. C. Frick Coal & Coke Company. This was an experience that gave him a broader knowledge of the technic of coal mining in general, and following that he took a course in mine engineering in the Ohio State University. Leaving University in 1895, from June to October of that year he was shipping clerk in the mine office of the H. C. Frick Coal & Coke Company at Leisenring, then resumed his duties with the engineer corps until March 1, 1900, with headquarters at Scottsdale, and at the last mentioned date became division engineer of the Pittsburgh Coal Company. He was on duty there four months, and on July 1, 1900, became chief engineer and assistant general superintendent of the Southwest Virginia Improvement Company, with headquarters at Pocahontas, Virginia. During the next ten or twelve years Mr. King has held a number of responsible positions with mining and industrial corporations. December 1, 1901, he was made general superintendent for the Southwest Virginia Improvement Company, a name, changed at that time to the Pocahontas Collieries Company. In August, 1903, he became general superintendent of the Virginia Iron Coal & Coke Company at Toms Creek. January 1, 1904, he began his duties as general superintendent of the James W. Ellsworth Company, with mines at Ellsworth and Washington County, Pennsylvania. For two years, beginning in March, 1905, he was chief engineer of the New River Smokeless Coal Company at Rush Run, West Virginia. When this business was acquired by the Guggenheims of New York the name of the company was changed to the New River Collieries Company, with Mr. King as division superintendent. His duties were interrupted in March, 1909, by a second attack of typhoid fever, the first of which had occurred in 1903. After recovering he resumed work July 1, 1909, as assistant chief inspector of the Department of Mines of West Virginia, but on December 1st of the same year was again appointed general superintendent of the Pocahontas Collieries Company at Pocahontas, Virginia. On March 15, 1911, he left to take charge of properties in Logan County, and since that date has been an independent coal operator, with constantly enlarging and growing interests. His home has been at Huntington, since May, 1917.

A brief outline of his connections and interests as a coal miner is summarized in the following: President and general manager of the Aracoma Coal Company, Sunbeam Coal Company, Eagle Island Coal Company, King Fuel Company, Oneida Coal Company, Halcon Coal Company, Standard Eagle Coal Company, Lick Fork Collieries Company, Thermo-Pocahontas Coal Company, Beekley-Pocahontas Coal Company, Dorkent Coal Company and Carroll Coal Company. His executive offices are in the Robson-Pritchard Building at Huntington. Among other business interests Mr. King is a director of the Ohio Valley Bank of Huntington, and has some valuable land interests near White Sulphur Springs. His home is a beautiful modern residence on Stanton Road at Huntington.

As one of the prominent coal miners of the country he is associated in membership with the Mining Institute of West Virginia, the American Mining Congress, the Coal Mining Institute of America, which has its headquarters in Pittsburgh, and is a former member of the American Institute of Mining Engineers. He is a republican, a Catholic, a fourth degree Knight of Columbus in Huntington Council No. 963, and is a member of the Guyandotte Club and the Guyan Country Club of Huntington.

In November, 1895, at Leisenring, Pennsylvania, Mr. King married Miss Catherine Carroll, daughter of William and Mary (Naylor) Carroll, the latter a resident of Conneltsville, Pennsylvania, while her father, who died at Leisenring, was a yard foreman in a coke yard. Mr. King lost his wife by death at Charleston, February 8, 1914. She was the mother of nine children: Mary, employed in the office of the state tax commissioner at Charleston; Austin C., purchasing agent for the companies of which his father is president, and who graduated A. B. from Yale University in June, 1921; Helen is a graduate nurse from Mercy Hospital of Pittsburgh; William P. is student in the Carnegie Institute of Technology of Pittsburgh; Catherine died at the age of ten months; Paul is employed in mines at Logan, West Virginia; Virginia, Margaret and Harriet are students in St. Joseph's Parochial School of Huntington.

On June 27, 1917, at Charleston, Mr. King married Miss Catherine A. Cavey, of that city. For twelve years before her marriage she followed her profession as a trained nurse, being a graduate of the Deaconess Hospital of Cincinnati. Mr. and Mrs. King have three children: James, born October 22, 1918; John, born December 29, 1919; and Anna, born August 19, 1921.

LOUIS A. JOHNSON, a Clarksburg lawyer, and an ex-service man, has been a member of the West Virginia bar for ten years. He was born at Roanoke, Roanoke County, Virginia, January 10, 1891, son of Marcellus A. and Katherine L. (Arthur) Johnson, and grandson of Caleb B. Johnson and James Louis Arthur, who were Virginia planters and Confederate soldiers in the war between the states.

Louis A. Johnson was educated in the public schools of Roanoke, finished his literary education in the University of Virginia, and in 1912 received his law degree from that institution. During his senior year he was assistant professor of law. He was admitted to the Virginia bar after graduation, and in September of the same year moved to Clarksburg, where for nine years he has been junior member of the law firm of Steptoe and Johnson. In 1916 Mr. Johnson was elected a member of the House of Delegates on the democratic ticket, and during the regular and extraordinary sessions of 1917 was majority floor leader and chairman of the Judiciary Committee, resigning as a member of the Legislature in order to enter the Second Officers' Training Camp at Fort Benjamin Harrison, Indianapolis, August 27, 1917. He was there commissioned captain of infantry, spent some time in Camp Lee, and in May, 1918, went overseas with the Eightieth Division. In France he was in the St. Mihiel and Meuse-Argonne campaigns and with the Army of Occupation, being with the Fourth, Fifth, Eightieth and Ninetieth Divisions.

He was discharged from active service June 8, 1919, with the rank of major, and still retains his commission in the Reserve Corps. Since his discharge he has continued his practice of law with the firm of Steptoe and Johnson. Mr.

Johnson has served two terms as national committeeman from West Virginia in the American Legion, and is now vice president of the West Virginia Bar Association. In addition, he is a member of the American and Harrison County bar associations, the Masons, Odd Fellows and Elks. February 7, 1920, he married Ruth Maxwell, daughter of W. Brent Maxwell, of Clarksburg. They have one daughter, Lillian Maxwell Johnson.

ROBERT L. MACFARLAND is president and general manager of the Ohio Valley Publishing Company, one of the largest publishing and printing houses in West Virginia. The technical facilities, the business organization, and the magnificent trade territory of the concern are in a large and important sense a direct tribute to the phenomenal energy and wisdom Mr. MacFarland has put into the business.

He was born at Parkersburg November 14, 1883, son of Leander B. and Mary J. (Adair) MacFarland, the former from Pennsylvania and the latter from Maryland, of Scotch-Irish ancestry, and both of whom settled in Parkersburg, in 1873 and 1877, respectively.

Robert L. MacFarland attended the public schools and then entered the State University at Morgantown, where he spent one year in the general course and after that in the law school. He was admitted to the bar in Wood County in 1904, though he has never made any effort to build up a professional clientele. While in the university he formed the working connections that led to his present business career. He was employed at Parkersburg by the Elletson Printery of Parkersburg, this being succeeded by the Elletson-Carver Company. George Elletson began this business as a job printing shop in 1851, and members of the Elletson family have been connected with the business through all its changes. E. B. Elletson, a son of George, is now superintendent and foreman of the Ohio Valley Publishing Company.

After completing his law course Mr. MacFarland became city salesman for the Elletson-Carver Company. Later he resigned and for a year was city salesman for the Globe Printing & Binding Company. In February, 1909, he was appointed receiver for the Elletson-Carver Company, and at once undertook his duties and had advanced to a point in winding up the affairs of the company where in May, 1909, the business was sold to R. J. A. Boreman, and he then reorganized it as the Ohio Valley Publishing Company. Mr. Boreman was president and Mr. MacFarland, secretary, treasurer and general manager. In May, 1921, when Mr. Boreman retired, he was succeeded as president by Mr. MacFarland. Logically, therefore, the history of the present business covers a period of seventy years. This great growth and development has come within the past ten years. The Ohio Valley Publishing Company now has a business extending to twenty-five states of the Union.

Mr. MacFarland is deeply devoted to the welfare of the city where he has spent practically all his life. At the age of twenty-four he was elected a member of the City Council, serving two terms, of two years each. He was the only democratic member in the Council his first term, and he was chosen by a margin of only nine votes. In 1909 he was re-elected by a majority of 179. He retired in 1911, when the commission form of government was adopted. Mr. MacFarland is a member of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, the Modern Woodmen of America, the United Commercial Travelers and the Alpha Rho Chapter, Southern Kappa Alpha College Fraternity at West Virginia University.

April 19, 1911, he married Miss Angele L. Pinkley, of Los Angeles, daughter of Virgil L. and Louisa M. (Devens) Pinkley. Her father for many years was a member of the faculty of the University of Cincinnati. Mr. and Mrs. MacFarland have one son, Lee Virgil MacFarland. Mr. MacFarland is a member of the Rotary Club and Chamber of Commerce.

FLAVIUS BAXTER HALLER. Living itself is an achievement, but when to living are added the carrying of burdens, the performance of useful work, and the fulfillment of duties, the individual existence acquires distinctions that make it something better than the common lot. Something in the nature of satisfying fulfillment has marked County, and the following record of himself and family will therefore be not one of the least interesting sketches to appear in these volumes.

The Haller family is of German origin. The grandfather of Flavius Haller, John Haller, was born at Fredrick, Maryland, but little is known of his life work. His brother, Godfrey Haller, spent his life in Barbour County, and Tobias Haller also lives there. Godfrey was a hatter by trade and Tobias made combs out of horn. All these brothers left posterity in Barbour County.

Michael Theodore Haller, father of Flavius Baxter, was born at Shinnston, Harrison County, was a farmer and teacher, was a captain of militia in the old mustering days, and when the Civil war was fought he was a captain in the State Guard. While engaged in rounding up Confederate stragglers, who were returning home from the main army after the surrender of General Lee, he and his squad ran into an ambush and he and several others were killed. This tragedy occurred after the war, on April 24, 1865. His body was brought home and laid to rest in St. John's Cemetery in Huffman Settlement of Barbour County. He was forty-one years of age when killed, and left a number of sons and daughters to succeed him. Michael T. Haller was a man of excellent mind and a great reader, and due to the habit of reading was a man of superior education in the county. He was a staunch admirer of Abraham Lincoln, one of the few men in the county who voted for him in 1860, and he was also a personal and political friend of Governor A. I. Boreman. While reading Mr. Lincoln's speeches in the great debate work with Douglas, Mr. Haller was converted to Lincolnism and declared in the presence of his family, striking his hand heavily upon the table, "I'll vote for Abe Lincoln."

Michael T. Haller married Sarah Nestor, a native of Barbour County, born on the waters of Teters Creek. Mrs. M. T. Haller's father, George Nestor, born in the same locality, married Amelia Poling, and both of these families came originally from Holland. George Nestor was a miller on Teters Creek and also enjoyed the reputation of a great hunter. For many years he held the office of magistrate, and one of his sons succeeded him in office. The children of Michael T. Haller and wife were: Catherine, of Elkins, West Virginia, widow of Samuel Shanabarger; Amelia, wife of Jacob Huffman, now living on the waters of Teters Creek; Charles W., of Fairmont; John Webster, a farmer and carpenter near Arden in Barbour County; Flavius Baxter; Mary Elizabeth, who became the wife of Isaac Coonts, of Belington; Watson Herschel, of Bridgeport, West Virginia; and Michael Lorenzo, in the hotel business at Belington. The mother of these children married for her second husband Jackson Ramsey, but had no children by that union. She died June 19, 1899, at the age of seventy-six.

Flavius Baxter Haller was born on Teters Creek in Barbour County, February 1, 1855, and had only the advantages of the common schools, which during his boyhood were not noted for the efficiency of their discipline. Better than any school work was the inheritance of his father's disposition to read and investigate for himself, and more than most men Mr. Haller has been a student all his life. The reading room and table in his home are covered with magazines, daily papers and other periodicals. Perhaps the first money he ever earned was in making soapstone pencils, which he sold and the proceeds he invested in a third reader. The fact that he grew up on a farm is evidence that he early learned the meaning of hard labor. He was sixteen years of age when his mother married again, and after that he lived with strangers until he acquired a home of his own. During the summer season he worked for wages on a farm, and turned these wages to good account by attending school in winter. Thus even his schooling meant a considerable struggle and self sacrifice. After leaving school Mr. Haller went to Indiana and worked on a farm in Elkhart, Johnson, and Shelby counties. Harvest hands were then being paid $2 a day and ordinary labor $1 a day. After being in Indiana six months he returned home and worked for

J R Phillips

Squire John N. Hall on his farm on Elk Creek for two years. Following that Mr. Haller became a photographer, taking pictures by the old daguerreotype process. He then came to Taylor County, worked on a farm two years, and following that was a merchant at Tyronconnell for eight years. He left business of his own to go on the road as a commercial traveler, and successfully represented the firms of Jacobs and Eisenburg for four years; was on the road for the Deleplain Dry Goods Company of Wheeling fifteen years; then for John A. Horner of Baltimore; H. P. McGregor and Company of Wheeling; the Koblegard Company of Clarksburg; and concluded his twenty-seven years of travel work as representative for the firm of Hicks and Hoge.

After selling his own store Mr. Haller bought a farm at Rosemont, established his family there, and, when not on the road, personally supervised farm work and farm developments. Since retiring from salesmanship he has made farming his chief interest, the most profitable feature of his farm enterprise being dairying and poultry raising. Mr. and Mrs. Haller are not actuated by a strenuous ambition to get rich and have found it better to be content with a moderate degree of prosperity and really live while they live.

Mr. Haller's citizenship has been of a public spirited and practical kind. For eight years he was a member of the Board of Education, and while on the board helped establish the first district high school in Taylor County and one of the first district high schools in the state. Other matters that have been accorded his earnest support are good public roads and other improvements. He has been a worker in the republican party, was a delegate to the State Convention when Governor Atkinson was nominated, and was a delegate to the well remembered state convention at Charleston when one faction nominated Swisher for governor and the rump convention nominated still another, while later both candidates were withdrawn through the Elkins influence and Governor Glascock was put up and elected.

In Taylor County, September 5, 1883, Mr. Haller married Miss Amanda Bailey, daughter of Silas P. and Almira (Kelley) Bailey. Mrs. Haller was the oldest child of her father's second marriage and was born in Taylor County, February 7, 1863. She had two sisters, the wife of Dr. C. R. Peck of Clarksburg and Mrs. Alta Lanham, the latter having died, October 2, 1899. Her brothers are the late B. F. Bailey, a prominent attorney of Grafton, who died suddenly in New York City on December 1, 1914; Grant, of Rosemont; Carl, a successful dairyman and farmer in Randolph, New York; and Bruce Bailey, a civil engineer at Fairmont. Of the children born to Mr. and Mrs. Haller the oldest is Earl Stanley, manager at Staunton, Virginia, for Sine's Ice Cream Company of Harrisburg, Virginia. The second child, Enid, is the wife of H. Ralph Harper, who is in the office of the Grasselli Chemical Company at Zelisburg, West Virginia. M. Quay is an inspector for the Hutchinson Coal Company at Erie, West Virginia. Sallie married Carl Huffman, a chemist living at Denver, Colorado. Morris Jacob, the youngest of the family, graduated A. B. from West Virginia University. is also a graduate of the Fairmont State Normal School, for a time was a high school principal and is now in the real estate business at Morgantown.

Something should be said in conclusion concerning the Haller home at Rosemont. It is one of the old homes of that locality, stands on an elevation near the public highway, and is marked both for its domestic conveniences and for the air of hospitality that surrounds it. In point of conveniences it is in a class with many city homes. The house, barn, back, buildings and grounds are illuminated from a Delco electric lighting system, and this plant is used not only for lighting, but also to supply current for a number of mechanical devices, not least among which is the electric iron and washer. The house has a complete water system, bathroom and other facilities. After having equipped five children abundantly for useful work in life, it seems appropriate that Mr. and Mrs. Haller should have such an attractive and comfortable place in which to spend their remaining years and enjoy the fruit of their labor and economy.

SIMEON L. LONG. For twenty years or more Simeon L. Long has been one of the men of leadership in the business, financial and educational affairs of Wetzel County. He is president of the Bank of Littleton and one of the principal lumber mill operators in the county.

Mr. Long has made his own way in the world. He secured his early education in the rural schools of Wetzel County, where he was born near Silver Hill, March 6, 1873. He also attended the Fairmont State Normal School two terms, concluding his work there in 1896. At the age of seventeen he taught his first term in a rural school of Wetzel County. Altogether he spent nine years in the school-room and in 1902 was elected county superintendent of schools, beginning his first four year term on July 1, 1903. In 1906 he was returned to this post of responsibility, his second term beginning July 1, 1907. Thus for over twenty years he was either a teacher or had the general administration of the school system of the county.

In the meantime, in 1900, Mr. Long became interested in the timber business and lumber milling, and he still owns and operates two saw mills, working up various timber tracts throughout this section. One of his mills is now established at Hammond and the other at Mobley.

The Bank of Littleton, of which he is president, was established May 20, 1901, under a state charter, and is now one of the strong and prosperous institutions of Wetzel County with capital of $25,000, surplus and profits of $15,000, and deposits averaging $400,000. Mr. Long was vice president from July, 1920, to January, 1921. The other executive officers are: F. W. Daugherty, of Littleton, vice president; B. A. Pyles, cashier; while the directors are S. L. Long, F. W. Daugherty, B. A. Pyles, Baker Cosgray, J. K. Long of Silver Hill, John L. Carney of Silver Hill, Ellis Miller of Littleton, U. G. Thomas of Glover Gap and Dr. W. V. Teagarden of Cameron, West Virginia.

There has been no lapse in Mr. Long's sincere interest in the educational affairs of his county. He is now president of the Board of Education of the Clay District, comprising Littleton and five rural schools. He votes as a democrat, is affiliated with the Methodist Episcopal Church, and is a member of Littleton Lodge No. 131, F. and A. M., and Littleton Lodge No. 111, Independent Order of Odd Fellows.

In 1897, near Littleton, he married Miss Myrtle Abergett, daughter of David and Margaret (Francis) Abergett, the latter a resident of Smithfield, West Virginia. Her father owned a large farm and died in Clay District of Wetzel County. Mr. and Mrs. Long have had a fine family of nine children. The oldest, Edna Ellen, is the wife of Jean H. Wood, now superintendent of city schools at Littleton. The second child, Cecil A., died May 25, 1913, at the age of eighteen, while a junior in the Littleton High School. Clarence, the third child, died at the age of four years. The other children are: Ernest, born January 6, 1905, attending the Littleton High School; Mildred, born April 9, 1907; Virginia, born February 11, 1910; Carl, born February 24, 1914; Willa Frances, born November 26, 1916; and Bernadette, born May 30, 1920.

DAVID R. PHILLIPS. Perhaps the best measure of success is the manner in which talents and opportunities are used at every successive stage in the individual's career. A slate picker in a coal breaker at the age of ten, then a practical coal digger and an eager student of all the technical processes involved in coal mining, successively mine foreman, superintendent, and now manager, with headquarters at Huntington, of the extensive interests of the Elkhorn-Piney Mining Company—apparently there has been no time in the life of David R. Phillips when he has not kept every faculty of his being alert and responsive to the duties before him.

Mr. Phillips was born at Ashland, Schuylkill County, Pennsylvania, July 5, 1859. He is of Welsh ancestry. His grandfather, Rosser Phillips, was born in Wales in 1791, and was a hotel proprietor in his native country. In 1850 he brought his family to America, and lived for a time at Minersville, Pennsylvania, and later at Ashland, where he died in 1873. He married Janet Jones, a native of Wales, who died at Ashland, Pennsylvania. Their son, Joseph Phillips, was born in Wales in October, 1832, and was about eighteen years of age when he came to America. He became a miner at Minersville, and continued in the same industry after the family moved to Ashland in 1856. In 1860 he went to Mineral Ridge, Ohio, and worked in the mines of that vicinity until he enlisted in 1862 as a Union soldier in the One Hundred and Fifth Ohio Infantry. Later in the same year and in his first campaign he was severely wounded at the battle of Perryville, Kentucky, and was incapacitated for further military service. After recovering in some degree his health and strength he became foreman of timbering gangs for the Reading Railroad Company of Ashland, Pennsylvania, but in 1873 returned to Mineral Ridge, Ohio, and resumed mining. In 1876 he moved to Brisbin, Clearfield County, Pennsylvania, where he was a miner and a merchant. He died in April, 1892, his death being due to the results of the wound he received while in the army. At the time of his death he was overseer of the poor at Brisbin. He was a republican in politics, and for many years held the post of deacon in the Baptist Church. He was affiliated with the Improved Order of Red Men.

Joseph Phillips married Rachel Edwards, who was born in Wales in August, 1838, and now lives at Phillipsburg, Pennsylvania. Their children were: Mary Jane, wife of Thomas Thomas, a miner and mechanic at Berlin, Pennsylvania; David R.; Thomas, an invalid living at Warren, Pennsylvania; Joseph, a miner who died at Phillipsburg at the age of forty-nine; Rachel, wife of Joseph Morgan, a miner in Pennsylvania; Sarah, who died at Johnstown, Pennsylvania, at the age of thirty-three, wife of Charles Absalom, a mine foreman in that city; Margaret, wife of Thomas Clement, of Phillipsburg; Benjamin, who died at Johnstown, Pennsylvania, aged seventeen, having been killed in a railroad accident.

David R. Phillips in the intervals of his early working career attended public schools at Ashland, and also did night school work, and while he never attended college he has gained a good literary education by private study and has the technical education of a mining engineer acquired by completing the course of the International Correspondence School of Scranton. As previously noted, he did his first work as slate picker at the age of ten, subsequently was introduced to other practical phases of the miner's trade in Ohio, and in 1886 became a mine foreman in Clearfield County, Pennsylvania, and remained there until he was promoted to superintendent of mines. He was for a time district manager for the Somerset Coal Company in Somerset County, and held a similar position with the Reading Iron Company in Somerset County until February, 1905.

Mr. Phillips' association with the coal mining industry of West Virginia began in February, 1905, when he removed to Tunnelton and for two years was superintendent of the Merchants Coal Company. Then for two years he was superintendent of mines in Tucker County for the Davis Coal and Coke Company, and left that to become state mine inspector. He was in this office of the state government two years, and for a brief time after retiring was superintendent of the E. R. Johnson Mines in Logan County, and the next ten years he devoted to his duties as allotment commissioner for the Chesapeake & Ohio Railway Company.

Mr. Phillips on June 1, 1920, became mine inspector for the Elkhorn-Piney Mining Company and on August 1st of the same year was advanced to manager of the company's mining properties, which are located at Weeksbury, Kentucky, at Dehue in Logan County, and at Powellton, Mahan, St. Clair and Stanford, West Virginia. These mines have a working capacity of 150,000 tons a month. Mr. Phillips' offices are in the Robson-Pritchard Building at Huntington. He is well known among the coal men who have their headquarters in this city, and is a popular man of affairs in the community. He is a republican, a Baptist, is affiliated with Somerset Lodge, F. and A. M., of Somerset, Pennsylvania, and the Royal Arcanum, and has a modern home at 612 First Street in Huntington, and also owns a home in Phillipsburg, Pennsylvania, and other real estate in Suffolk, Virginia.

In March, 1880, at Brisbin, Pennsylvania, Mr. Phillips married Miss Elizabeth Edwards, daughter of William S. and Elizabeth (Jenkins) Edwards, now deceased. Her father was a mine superintendent in Clearfield County. Mr. and Mrs. Phillips have an interesting family of seven children. Reuben C., the oldest, is a mine superintendent at Chapmansville, West Virginia. William is a druggist at Windber, Pennsylvania. Wendell O. married and a traveling salesman, with home at St. Albans, West Virginia, is an ex-service man, spending a year in France in the Radio Department as first sergeant. Elizabeth is the wife of Harry Pugh, a superintendent of mine commissaries in Somerset County, Pennsylvania. David is a mine foreman, living at Omar, West Virginia. Rachel is the wife of Richard Petit, owner of an electrical shop at Beckley, West Virginia. John, the youngest of the family, enlisted at the time of the World war and was stationed at Morgantown in the radio department. He has the Welsh gift for music, and is the possessor of a remarkable baritone voice and is now cultivating this talent under special private teachers in New York City.

WILLIAM F. HARLESS, M. D. Skilled physician, efficient business man and good citizen, Dr. William F. Harless, of Clothier, is one of the representative men of Boone County, and no one stands any higher in public opinion than he. He was born near Spencer, Roane County, West Virginia, October 4, 1881, a son of William H. and Frances (Keifer) Harless. The Harless family was established in this country by Doctor Harless' great-grandfather, a native of Germany, who settled in Virginia, and it was in that state that the grandfather was born. The Keifers were also of German extraction. Both William H. Harless and his wife were born in West Virginia, and he is a farmer of Roane County, and a man of some importance in his home community, having served on the school board, as a county commissioner as a deacon of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and in other capacities, and he is a prominent member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows.

After completing his studies in the common schools of his native county Doctor Harless went through the Spencer High School. His professional training was taken at the University of Louisville, Kentucky, and he was graduated therefrom in 1908, with the degree of Doctor of Medicine. Immediately thereafter he established himself in a general practice at Clothier, where he still remains. Doctor Harless established the drug store at Clothier and one at Madison, both of which he still owns and keeps under his personal supervision, although he has a registered pharmacist at each one. He took up post-graduate work in 1913 at the Post-Graduate School of New York City, and keeps abreast of the progress made in his profession by reading and study. For some time he has served as physician and surgeon of the Buffalo-Thacker Coal Company at Ottawa, West Virginia, and is also a C. & O. Railway surgeon.

In 1914 Doctor Harless married in Mason County Miss Lucretia Kay, a daughter of John and Elsie Kay. Mr. Kay is a native of Scotland, and his wife was born in Pennsylvania. In early life he was engaged in the coal business, but is now a farmer. Doctor and Mrs. Harless have one daughter, Eleanor. They belong to the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and take an active part in the work of the various church organizations. Fraternally Doctor Harless maintains membership with the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. He is a strong republican, but has not cared to come before the people as an office seeker.

Ever since he located at Clothier Doctor Harless has played an important part in its life. His drug store is one of the best-conducted in this part of the county, and he takes pride in it and the one at Madison. As a physician and surgeon he has won the approval of his professional associates as well as the affection and gratitude of his patients, and his practice shows a large increase annually. While he has not been an official, he has not spared himself in working for the good of the city, but cheerfully rendered a valuable service whenever it was needed, and is especially zealous in forwarding those measures designed to improve the sanitation of the city and county. Personally he is very popular, and has friends all over this part of the state.

LOUIS F. ECHOLS. Some of the most representative men and solid citizens of Boone County are devoting their time and using their energies in behalf of agricultural activities, in this way not only earning a fair competence for themselves, but rendering a service to the country in the production of raw materials and increasing the prestige of this region. One of these men thus prosperous and useful is Louis F. Echols, owner of a valuable farm near Madison, and county assessor.

Louis F. Echols was born in Craig County, Virginia, in March, 1866, a son of G. A. and Cartha (Atkins) Echols, the former of whom came of Irish stock, and the latter of Dutch ancestry. The paternal grandfather settled in Giles County, Virginia, at an early day. Both G. A. Echols and his wife were born in Virginia, where they were married. When Louis F. Echols was about one year old they moved to West Virginia, settling in Boone County. G. A. Echols was a farmer and also did contract coal hauling from the mines before the construction of the railroads. He was very active in church work and was an elder of the Christian denomination.

Reared in Boone County, Louis F. Echols attended its common schools, and when only sixteen years old began working at making molasses in what was then a new way. The first evaporators that were installed in the county were set up on the Echols farm. Mr. Echols was also engaged in farming, and then went into the coal mines, where he remained for three years. His attention was then turned to the lumber and timber business, and for twenty-eight years, or until 1920, he owned and operated a portable saw-mill, and did logging and sawing. All of this time, however, he was also engaged in farming, and is still conducting his valuable farm, on which he makes his home. His operations as a farmer are of such magnitude as to make him a leader in this important industry.

In 1918 Mr. Echols was elected a member of the board of education, but resigned that position when, in 1920, he was elected county assessor, as, according to the state law, a man can hold but one public office. His work in connection with his present office is of such a character as to place him among the very efficient men to serve in this capacity, and the record he is making is an enviable one in every respect.

Mr. Echols married in November, 1893, Miss Viola Long, at Rock Creek, Boone County. She is a daughter of John and Frances Long, the former of whom, a native of Ireland, came to the United States in young manhood, and subsequently located in West Virginia, where Mrs. Echols was born. Her mother was also a native of this state. Mr. and Mrs. Echols became the parents of eight children. Eva, the eldest, married Siegel Workman, of Madison, who is United States marshal for the Southern Judicial District. At one time he served as assistant cashier in the Madison Bank. Mr. and Mrs. Workman have one son, Siegel Workman, Junior. Ezra Echols, the second child, married Lora Lilly, at Madison, and they have one son, Thomas George Echols. Bessie, the third child, married Harry Humphrey, who is deputy county assessor under his father-in-law. Mr. and Mrs. Humphrey have one daughter, Betsy Ann. Jesse, Edgar and Celeste are unmarried and at home. There were two children who died young. Both Ezra and Jesse Echols served in the World war, the former being overseas for eighteen months. Mr. Humphrey was also in the service, so that the Echols family was well represented in the late war. The family all belong to the Christian Church. Fraternally Mr. Echols maintains membership with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Improved Order of Red Men. From the day he cast his first ballot Mr. Echols has been zealous in behalf of the republican party, and is a recognized leader of the local forces. His career has not been spectacular, but his progress has been steady, and for a long time he has held the position in his community to which his ability and accomplishments entitle him. His name has long stood for efficiency and uprightness, and his advocacy of any movement stamps it as one worth favorable consideration.

DELLET NEWLON, whose home is on rural route No. 1 out of Simpson, has given a satisfactory account of his abilities in several capacities, but his outstanding service has undoubtedly been in education. His term as county superintendent was an area of educational progress for Taylor County. Recently he resumed teaching in his home locality.

Something is said on other pages of the Newlon family, one of the best known in Taylor County. His grandfather, William Newlon, was born in old Virginia, was a soldier in the War of 1812 under General Dearborn, and soon after leaving the army settled on Long Run. The old farm he owned there is now the property of Daniel R. Shafer of Grafton. He gave the rest of his life to the management and cultivation of this farm. After coming to West Virginia he married Miss Powell, and their children were: Burr P., who was a farmer and died near Belington; William, who moved to a farm in Doddridge County and died at Tollgate; Payton, Nathan and Lemuel, all of whom were farmers on Long Run, where the widow of Lemuel is still living; Chapman, who was born on Long Run and was a farmer there; Frederick, who died when a young man; and Alfred.

Alfred Newlon, father of Dellet, enlisted in the Union Army during the Civil war, at first in Company D of the Sixth West Virginia, a company subsequently consolidated with Company E. He was in service in the Valley of Virginia, participated in the battles of Bull Run and Antietam, and was with Sheridan's forces at Winchester and Cedar Creek. At the close of the war he went with the regiment to fight the Indians on the western plains. The command went up the Missouri River by boat from St. Louis to Fort Leavenworth and thence overland to Fort Laramie, Wyoming. As souvenirs of this western experience he brought home a large Indian knife and a silver medal, both now the property of his son Dellet. He was never wounded while in the army, but had his feet frozen. Alfred Newlon was as good a citizen as he was a soldier. He was a constable of his district, a republican and a member of the Baptist Church. He was killed by a Baltimore and Ohio train in 1901. He married Elizabeth Yates, daughter of Martin and Elizabeth (Wiseman) Yates. She died in 1909, and of their nine children Dellet is the fourth in age.

Dellet Newlon was born June 2, 1876, and his home today is within a mile of his birthplace. He grew up on the farm on Sand Lick, and laid the foundation of his education in country schools. He attended the summer normal courses in the old West Virginia College, and began teaching at the age of twenty-two. His first school was the Cather School, near the old college which he had attended. He was a teacher five consecutive terms, and in 1902 was elected county superintendent of schools as a successor of Wallace T. Phillips. He was thrice elected his own successor. Here it is possible only briefly to note some of the more important educational progress made during his administration. A beginning was made of school consolidation. The consolidated school at Webster is the result of combining the districts whose schools were five miles from Webster, the pupils being gathered up in wagons and carried five miles to the consolidated school. Also the Gabe's Fork School was consolidated with the Simpson School. Two high schools were established, one at Flemington and the other at Simpson. He was the first superintendent to introduce the graduating system for free school diplomas. He also established district institutes, which brought together both teachers and patrons of the schools.

After leaving the office of county superintendent Mr. Newlon taught one year, and then turned his attention to business, spending about two years as clerk in the store of the Maryland Coal Company at Wendel. For three years he was deputy sheriff under his brother, Melvin Newlon. After leaving the sheriff's office he was manager of the Simpson Cooperative Store, has also done considerable teaching and has been in charge of the Long Run School since the fall of 1921.

In Taylor County, February 5, 1903, Mr. Newlon married Miss Effie Dearing, who was born in Berry's Run locality, February 4, 1874, daughter of E. Nelson and Elizabeth (Greathouse) Dearing. Her mother was a daughter of John Greathouse, of Ravenswood, West Virginia. Nelson Dearing was born at Buck Run, Taylor County, was a farmer, served as deputy sheriff under Sheriff Davidson, and died January 20, 1920, while his wife passed away November 30, 1919. The Dearing children were: Maud, Jessie and Mrs. Newlon. The two oldest daughters were the successive wives of Okey Goodwin. Mrs. Newlon was educated in the public school at Berry's Run. She is the mother of three children: Mildred E., who is a junior in the Simpson High School; Merle, also a junior in high school; and Alfred, a pupil in the Long Run Grade School.

In politics Mr. Newlon is a republican and cast his first presidential vote for Major McKinley in 1900. He has attended several local conventions as a delegate. He is a past chancellor of the Knights of Pythias Lodge and a member of the Woodmen of the World, is a Baptist, and has been teacher of the young men's class in the Simpson Sunday School.

LEWIS EDWIN LANTZ, president of the Bank of Jacksonburg, a farmer and oil producer, is serving his second term representing Wetzel County in the West Virginia House of Delegates.

Part of the Town of Jacksonburg is built on land that was once included in his grandfather's farm. His grandfather was Alexander Lantz, who was born in Pennsylvania in 1793, and established his home at Jacksonburg in 1833, acquiring an extensive home site and operating it as a farm during the remainder of his life. He was a soldier in the War of 1812 and died at Jacksonburg in 1875. His wife was Margaret Minor, a native of Pennsylvania, who died at Jacksonburg. Their son, Samuel Lantz, was born December 10, 1824, at the mouth of Hoovers Run, near Blacksburg, West Virginia, and was nine years of age when his parents moved to the site at Jacksonburg. He was reared and married there, and in his day was regarded as one of the most progressive farmers and stock raisers in this vicinity. He was a democrat in politics, the family faith, and was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Samuel Lantz died at Jacksonburg March 26, 1920, in his ninety-sixth year. His wife, a Miss McCormick, was born near Blacksburg, in Monongalia County, May 22, 1836, and at the age of eighty-five lives with her only surviving child at Jacksonburg. Her older son, Pierson, died in 1882.

Lewis Edwin Lantz was born at Jacksonburg, Wetzel County, November 25, 1870. He was educated in common and private schools, lived on his father's farm at the age of twenty, and then for ten years conducted a store near Jacksonburg. He then removed his mercantile business into that town, and is still financially interested in this business, though his commercial relations are now widely extended. He has much invested capital in the wholesale grocery business at New Martinsville, Wheeling and Clarksburg. Mr. Lantz has been a successful dealer in livestock and land, and since 1906 has been heavily interested in oil and gas production in the West Virginia fields and in the Bridgeport field of Illinois. He still has some production, though he sold most of his holdings during the war. He owns a large farm of 600 acres adjoining Jacksonburg. The Bank of Jacksonburg was organized in January, 1904, and he has been its president from the beginning.

Mr. Lantz has for many years been a leader in his section of the state in the democratic party, has served as chairman of the County Executive Committee and as a member of the State Executive Committee. In November, 1918, he was elected to the House of Delegates and re-elected in 1920. During the 1919 session he was a member of the committees on roads, fish and game, banks and banking, military affairs, and was again placed on the same committees in 1921. A subject that he regards as of primary importance and to which he has given study for a number of years and much attention while in the Legislature is good roads.

He is a prominent Mason, both in the York and Scottish Rite, being affiliated with Wetzel Lodge No. 39, F. and A. M., at New Martinsville; Sistersville Chapter No. 27, R. A. M.; Mountain State Commandery No. 14, K. T.; West Virginia Consistory of the Scottish Rite at Wheeling; and Osiris Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Wheeling. Mr. Lantz was one of the men who really neglected business to devote their time and influence to aiding the Government in the successful prosecution of the war. He was associated with every drive made in Wetzel County for sale of Liberty Bonds, raising of funds for Red Cross and other organizations, and helped many of the recruits fill out their questionnaires.

June 17, 1893, at Jacksonburg, Mr. Lantz married Miss Violet Morgan, daughter of Elisha and Elizabeth (Anderson) Morgan. Mrs. Lantz is a member of the historic Morgan family that originally settled at Morgantown. Her mother still lives at Jacksonburg, and her father, a farmer, died there. Mr. and Mrs. Lantz have reared an interesting family of children: Florence, born December 24, 1894, is the wife of Capt. Roy F. Miller, both graduates of West Virginia University. Captain Miller served with that rank in the World war as an instructor at Camp Meade and was recommended for the rank of major when the armistice was signed. He is now minister of the Presbyterian Church at Cochranton, Pennsylvania. Bryan Pierson, the second child, born June 4, 1897, finished his education in the Staunton Military Academy at Staunton, Virginia, and is an oil well driller in Oklahoma. Phyllis, born in 1899, is a graduate of the Visitation Academy at Parkersburg, spent two terms in West Virginia University and is a bookkeeper in the Bank of Jacksonburg. Margaret, born in 1901, and Ruth, born in 1903, live with their sister at Cochranton, Pennsylvania, where they are seniors in the Cochranton High School. Pearl, born in 1906, is in the sophomore class of the Jacksonburg High School, and the two younger children are Lewis Edwin, Jr., born in 1911, and Harry Lee, born in 1913.

HARRY OUTEN COLE. It is generally a difficult matter for the layman to even partly appreciate the work accomplished by one of those men who are essentially an outcome of twentieth-century progress, the construction engineers, for the public for the most part has no realization of the importance of the work of those who labor for the service of mankind in this special direction. No man can enter upon this important field of endeavor without a careful and complete preparation if he desires to succeed. His training must include a sound knowledge of mathematics, physics, chemistry, hydraulics, mechanical engineering and electricity, while he must have a practical knowledge of geology, surveying and architecture, and be fully acquainted with the nature and strength of the materials which he may be called upon to use. Among the leading construction engineers of West Virginia, one who has won a well-merited position and reputation in his calling is Harry Outen Cole, of the firm of Cole Brothers.

Mr. Cole was born on Dent's Run, near the City of Morgantown, April 3, 1874. His great-grandfather, Coverdale Cole, came from Delaware into Monongalia County in 1794, and bought 700 acres of land, paying for it the sum of 800 pounds sterling. He was the pioneer of the family in West Virginia, and his son, Draper, was the grandfather of Harry O. Cole. Nimrod Cole, the father of Harry O., was born on Dent's Run in 1836, and died in 1910. He married Sarah Jane Lough, daughter of Matthew Lough, whose wife was a member of the well-known Willey family, which came to Monongalia County from Red Stone, Pennsylvania.

Harry O. Cole was reared on the home farm and acquired his early education in the public and select schools of his native neighborhood. In the spring of 1893 he entered the University of West Virginia, from which institution he was graduated with the class of 1898, receiving the degree of B. S. C. E. In that same year he commenced en-engineering work with the Keystone Bridge Works at Pittsburgh, and during 1900 was with the National Steel Company of Youngstown, Ohio. During 1901 and 1902 and a part of 1903 he was employed by the American Bridge Company of Philadelphia, and from 1903 to 1907 was with V. G. Bogue, a consulting engineer of New York City, as assistant in charge of design of bridges for four different railroad companies. During a portion of 1908 Mr. Cole was employed as special expert computer with the investigating commission on the Queensborough Bridge, New York City. In the same year he became identified with the Isthmian Canal Commission, and continued to be connected with that commission until 1914, as follows: From 1908 to 1909, as office engineer in charge of designs for the Pacific Division; 1909-1910, assistant engineer in charge of the office and also in the Municipal Division, including Panama City; 1910-1911, resident engineer in charge of lock and dam construction of the Pacific Division; 1912-1914, engineer in charge of Pacific Division, covering construction of locks, canal excavations, hydraulic work, electrical department, quarries and municipal work in Panama City, reporting direct to the chairman and chief engineer.

H. O. Boe

From 1914 to 1916 Mr. Cole was president of Cole Brothers Company, construction engineers of Baltimore and Morgantown, engaged in general engineering and contract construction work, and from 1916 to 1920 was employed by the Guggenheim Brothers, 120 Broadway, New York City, as follows: 1916-18, assistant construction engineer; 1918-1920, construction engineer in charge of designs and construction of copper plant development work for the Chile Exploration Company and the Braden Copper Company, with headquarters in New York City, which work covered the designs, specifications, purchase of materials, transportation and field construction work for the two companies in South America, with expenditures approximating $65,000,000. During this period he made occasional trips of inspection to South America, also during the war rendered considerable assistance to the United States War Department by supplying expert engineers in various governmental branches, Mr. Cole having some 300 experts in the engineering department of his New York City office from whom to draw.

Since 1920 Mr. Cole has been in construction and contracting business as senior member of the firm of Cole Brothers at Morgantown, having handled during 1921 numerous contracts for bank and office buildings, railways, highways and general construction work in the surrounding counties. Mr. Cole is a member of the American Society of Civil Engineers, and in 1921 was elected vice president of the Morgantown Chamber of Commerce. He is prominent in Masonry, a member of Sojourners Lodge at Cristobal, Panama, and a Knight Templar, and a Shriner, having been made a member of the latter body at the time, in the Miraflores Lock Chamber, the ceremonial was put on by Osmar Temple of St. Paul, Labor Day, 1913, one of the greatest ceremonials in the history of Shrinedom. He belongs to the Phi Kappa Sigma fraternity. His religious connection is with the Presbyterian Church.

Mr. Cole married Miss Mabel Wilson, daughter of A. A. Wilson, an attorney of Cumberland, Maryland, and they have one daughter, Catherine, born January 26, 1905.

JAMES E. HIBBS. There is not a better known or more highly esteemed citizen of Booths Creek District of Taylor County than James E. Hibbs, farmer, and a resident of the county for over fifty-five years. He has been a capable manager of his own affairs, has been faithful to his obligations in the community, and he has justly earned the confidence of all with whom he has been associated.

His great-grandfather, a Pennsylvanian, established the family in West Virginia, locating on the waters of Painter-Hick Run in Marion County, where he remained until death and was buried in the Wilson graveyard. His son, William Hibbs, was a farmer in the same region, lived without official or military service, and at his death he was buried in the Toothman private cemetery. By his marriage to Lovicy Wildman he had the following children: Samuel, mentioned below; Bettie, who married John Reed; Millie, who became the wife of David Haynes; John; William, who was a Union soldier and lived in Marion County; Thomas, also a soldier of the Union Army; Ellen, who married Alfred Ammons; Arthelia, who married Arch Walls; Phoebe and Lovicy, who married brothers, Zimri and Wesley Ammons.

Samuel Hibbs, father of James E., was reared in Marion County, had little opportunity to secure an education, and from that county moved to Ritchie and some years later to Taylor County. He was an active member of the Methodist Church, and died May 29, 1916, at the advanced age of eighty-six. He married Sarah Yost, daughter of David Yost, and she passed away some years before her husband, being the mother of only two children, James E. and Lovicy Ellen, who died unmarried.

James E. Hibbs had an unusually limited family relationship even for a man of his years. He has neither parents, brother or sister, nor children of his own. He was born in Ritchie County, August 31, 1858, and became a resident of Taylor County with his parents in April, 1866. He grew up on the farm where he lives today, attended a school on Booths Creek nearby, and since early manhood his business has been with the farm. The chief feature of his enterprise has been the growing and grazing of stock, cattle and sheep, and this line of business still demands his efforts and the fruit of his long experience.

Mr. Hibbs is sincerely interested in the growth and advancement of his community, and is president of the Board of Education for Booths Creek District. He served about twenty years as justice of the peace of his district. In politics he is a democrat, casting his first vote for General Hancock in 1880, and twice gave a ballot to Cleveland and twice to Mr. Wilson. Fraternally he is affiliated with Pruntytown Lodge of the Odd Fellows and with the Loyal Order of Moose at Grafton.

In Taylor County, November 18, 1880, he married Miss Frances J. Humphreys. She was born in the Pleasant Hill locality of Ritchie County, daughter of Dr. J. B. and Nancy (Gaines) Humphreys. Her father, who came to West Virginia from old Virginia, was a capable physician, and spent the last twenty years of his life in the Booths Creek District of Taylor County. He and his wife are buried in the Greenlawn Cemetery at Clarksburg. Their children were: Mary, wife of Sherman Strother, of Clarksburg; Virginia, wife of E. Y. McElroy, of Clarksburg; Mrs. Hibbs; and Thomas J., of Wheeling. Without children of their own, Mr. and Mrs. Hibbs opened the doors of their home and their hearts as well to several children otherwise homeless. These children had the benefit of a hospitable home and superior education and moral training. One of them now lives in Ohio. Three others, a brother and two sisters, still comprise the home circle of Mr. and Mrs. Hibbs.

GEORGE A. WALLS, a resident of Kingwood forty years, was for more than a quarter of a century connected with the office of county clerk as deputy or chief, has also been in business, and his record is one of public spirited participation in the work and affairs that have constituted the progressive history of the community.

He represents one of the families that have lived in Preston County for a century or more. Their original seat was at Bruceton Mills in Preston County. Mr. Walls' great-grandfather came to this country from England. His grandfather, Charles Walls, established his home in Preston County, was a farmer and died seven years before the Civil war. He married Elizabeth Foreman, and both are now at rest near Pisgah, Preston County. Their children were: Jonathan, who was killed in the Civil war; Eli J., a farmer who always lived in his native community; Ami F.; George W., who spent his life on the home farm; Annie, who became the wife of Col. William H. King; Jemimah, who died as the wife of Andrew S. McNair; and Mrs. Malinda Jenkins.

Ami F. Walls, father of George A. Walls, was born near Bruceton in 1828, grew up on his father's farm, and aside from a brief residence at Keokuk, Iowa, spent all his life in Preston County. Farming was his life work, and his death occurred at the age of fifty-nine. He was called out as a soldier in the Civil war a short time before the surrender of General Lee, but did not participate in any field duty. He was a democrat in politics. Ami F. Walls married Elizabeth Adams, who was born near Bruceton, and she died in 1913, when past seventy-three. Her children were: Abner F., a farmer at Pisgah; George Adams; Sophronia T., wife of Adam Lyons, living near Gans, Pennsylvania; Chester L., of Morgantown, West Virginia; Omer, a farmer at Pisgah; Charles, a merchant at Morgantown; and Margaret, of Morgantown.

George Adams Walls was born on the home farm at what is now Pisgah, Preston County, March 23, 1862. He grew up there, taking an increasing share in the work of the farm, attended the common schools, and spent one term in West Virginia University when John R. Thompson was president. The university then had an enrollment of perhaps 400 students, while now it is a great school with 2,000 students. Mr. Walls was a student in the preparatory department, studied Latin and other subjects, and secured an equipment that would have fitted him for teaching had he chosen that vocation.

At the age of nineteen, August 1, 1881, Mr. Walls came to Kingwood and entered the office of County Clerk J. Ami Martin. He was deputy to Mr. Martin fifteen years, and in 1896 was himself elected on the republican ticket as county clerk and filled the office two terms. When he retired in 1908 he had rounded out twenty-seven years of active duty as clerk of the County Court and had the reputation of being one of the best clerks in the State of West Virginia. Following that Mr. Walls was a silent partner in a mercantile firm at Kingwood until 1919, when he sold out his business affairs and is now practically retired. For two years, from January 1, 1917, to January 1, 1919, he returned to the Court House as bookkeeper or office deputy for Sheriff J. D. Browning.

Mr. Walls has never been a political leader or party manager, but has steadfastly supported and worked for the success of the republicans in his county, state and national affairs. He cast his first presidential ballot for James G. Blaine, and has participated in every general election since that time. Mr. Walls has filled the various chairs of the local lodge of Knights of Pythias and has sat as a member of the Grand Lodge. His parents were good Methodists, and in later years he became an active member of that church and for fifteen years was recording steward and treasurer of the Kingwood Church and has also been superintendent of the Sunday school. Mrs. Walls is one of the prominent members of the Kingwood Methodist Church, has been active in the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society, and for thirty-six years has been a member of the church choir. She began singing for the church when sixteen years of age.

The first wife of Mr. Walls was Miss Belle Snyder. By this marriage he has a daughter, Cora, now the wife of Forest M. McDaniel, of Clarksburg, and the mother of a son, Malcolm Wayne McDaniel.

May 24, 1893, at Kingwood, Mr. Walls married Miss Olive E. Parks, daughter of the late James W. Parks, a native of Preston County and who for a number of years, up to his death, was cashier of the Bank of Kingwood. The mother of Mrs. Walls was Mary Electa Heermans, daughter of John Heermans. John Heermans was one of the notable citizens of Preston County in his day. He was born at Hyde Park, Pennsylvania, March 27, 1814, learned the blacksmith's trade with his brother Sylvanus, and followed that occupation until 1842, when he removed to Ottawa, Illinois. Illness in his family caused him to return East, and he was associated with his brother Sylvanus in the mercantile business at Hyde Park. Selling out in 1845, he removed to Rush in Susquehanna County, Pennsylvania, was a merchant there on his own account and also engaged in the lumber business, rafting the finished lumber to market. In 1849, he brought his family to Preston County, West Virginia, and for several years was a successful merchant here. John Heermans was conspicuous for his zeal in the advocacy of the temperance cause and at a time when such advocacy won him much public odium, in spite of which he persisted in doing what he was convinced was right, and became a leader in the prohibition movement in this section of the state. Otherwise he was an ardent member of the republican party, and he once wrote a powerful article on the protective tariff which in the opinion of competent critics, would have done honor to the editorial pen of Horace Greeley, himself. Mr. Heermans was a consistent member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. By his first marriage, to Mary Pepper, he was the father of five children. Mrs. Walls had a twin brother who died in childhood. Her father, James W. Parks, died January 10, 1912, and her mother passed away March 8, 1911. Mrs. Walls was educated in the Kingwood schools and finished her musical course in Baltimore.

DANIEL MOSSER. One favorable characteristic of the Mosser family represented by the venerable Daniel Mosser, a retired farmer at Clifton Mills, is strong attachment to the home environment in which the family have lived for a century or more. The Mossers have been sterling patriots in time of war, but in peace have chiefly devoted themselves to the land, its cultivation, and the duties of good local citizenship.

Daniel Mosser is living today on the spot where he was born, September 21, 1837. His grandfather, Nicholas Mosser, was a native of Germany, and came to America in Colonial times, locating in Lancaster County, Pennsylvania, where the City of Lancaster now stands. He left there and moved on west to the vicinity of Selhsyport, Maryland, where he died and was buried on the farm. The children of Nicholas Mosser were Nicholas, Chris, John, Mrs. Nancy Fike, Mrs. Elizabeth Teets and Mrs. Mollie Weimer.

John Mosser, father of Daniel Mosser, was born in 1786, either in Germany or Pennsylvania. His early education was in the German language, but he spoke English well. He was a good business man, a successful farmer, and left a fair estate at his death. It was John Mosser who entered the land and made the first improvements on the place where his son, Daniel Mosser, now lives. John Mosser was a soldier in the War of 1812, and drew a pension from the Government for that service. He was a democrat and a member of the Presbyterian Church. His first wife was Elizabeth Maust. Her two children were Jonas and Catherine, the latter becoming the wife of Samuel Fulk. They spent their lives at Grantsville and Salisbury, Maryland. The second wife of John Mosser was Susan Frankhouser. Her father, Nicholas Frankhouser, was a native of Germany and settled first at Iagerstown, Maryland, and subsequently came to West Virginia, and lived out his life near Brandonville, where the widow of his grandson, Henry, now lives. Susan Frankhouser was born on that farm, and died about 1869. Her children were: Rebecca, who became the wife of Joseph Thomas and died in Fayette County, Pennsylvania; Ann, who was the wife of Barclay McCollum and died near Pisgah in Preston County; Henry, a blacksmith, who died in Fayette County; Joseph, whose home was at Dawson, Pennsylvania; Sallie, who became the wife of Augustine Wolfe and spent her life at Harmony Grove in Preston County; Polly, who was the wife of Isaac Moyer and died in Fayette County; John and Jacob, who moved out to Illinois and died in McDonough County; Susan, who became Mrs. John Summers and spent her life at Clifton Mills, where she is buried; Elizabeth, who was married to John Eaton, went to Iowa and is still living in the vicinity of Chariton; Daniel; and Samuel, who was killed while a Union soldier. The soldier representatives of the family were Samuel and Henry, and Henry was a pensioner.

Daniel Mosser grew up on the home farm, was educated in the local schools, and for half a century, until the burden of years made him incapable, he continued the cultivation and management of the homestead in Clifton Mills. He was a successful grain and stock farmer, and the Mosser farm of 128 acres lies on the east side of the Big Sandy. This farm is now the property of his son, L. Harry Mosser. Daniel Mosser has always voted at election time and is a member of the Methodist Church.

He married Elizabeth Frances Frederick, a native of Eastern Virginia, daughter of Samuel and Rebecca (Der

J. H. Cushing.

(inger) Frederick. She was born in October, 1838, and died, August 9, 1885. Her children were: Samuel, of Andy Lake, Pennsylvania; Linley Harrison, everywhere known as Harry Mosser; John, who died unmarried; Matie, Mrs. J. J. Barnes, living at Morgantown; Lando Walter, of Vanderbilt, Pennsylvania; Dwight Roscoe, of Star Junction, Pennsylvania; and Hampton Frederick, who died at Clifton Mills, leaving three children. The second wife of Daniel Mosser was Mary Virginia Wheeler, and she died May, 1919, leaving no children.

L. Harry Mosser, successor to his father's farming activities and to the ownership of the old homestead, which has been in the Mosser family through three generations, was born on that farm, February 1, 1865, and has spent the fifty-five years of his life in the same locality. He was educated in the schools of Clifton Mills, and he is one of the sturdy and successful stock farmers in this section of Preston County. The residence in which he and his family reside was erected in 1873.

May 2, 1886, Mr. Mosser married Miss Elizabeth Boger, daughter of John W. and Clarissa (Smith) Boger. Her father was born on the Boger farm near Brandonville, son of Samuel and Elizabeth (Myers) Boger. The Bogers were of German ancestry, and all of the name have been farmers. John W. Boger was a Union soldier in Captain Clay Hagans' Company, and died in 1867, at the age of thirty-nine. He was survived by his widow until September, 1918, her death occurring when she was eighty-five. Mrs. Mosser was born December 16, 1858. Her two sisters are Mary Gatella, born April 10, 1860, who died as the wife of W. M. Collier, of Clifton Mills; and Barbara Ellen, born January 13, 1862, now Mrs. L. H. Kelley, of Fairbairn, Pennsylvania. Mr. and Mrs. Harry Mosser had no children. Jessie Clara died March 20, 1920, leaving a daughter Helen Lucile, by her marriage to J. M. Silbaugh. Her only son, Harold Ray Mosser, died in 1896, when four years of age.

WARNER W. CHAPMAN was reared in Lewis County, West Virginia, has had a varied experience in commercial affairs tending over several states, and is now permanently located at Weston, where he holds the office of justice of the peace, and is also a member of the Chapman Cigar Company, cigar manufacturers.

Mr. Chapman was born at Warsaw, Kosciusko County, Indiana, July 2, 1875, son of Charles and Phoebe J. (Woodford) Chapman. His father was born at Warsaw, Indiana, grew up there, was educated in Notre Dame University, Indiana, and while visiting in Weston, West Virginia, met Miss Phoebe J. Woodford, who was born in Gilmer County, West Virginia, September 22, 1856. They were married at Weston and returned to Warsaw, Indiana, where Charles Chapman was engaged in the abstract business. He was a member of the Presbyterian Church, was affiliated with the Knights of Pythias, and was a republican in politics. He and his wife are now deceased. They had three children: Paul W., owner of a cigar store at Weston; John W., of Indianapolis, Indiana; and Warner W.

Warner W. Chapman grew up in the home of Colonel W. Woodford, his maternal grandfather, in Lewis County. He acquired a public school education, also attended Salem College, and while his early experiences and training were connected with the farm he early sought other outlets for his energy and talents. For seven years he was manager for the National Graphite Company of North Carolina, and for one year was cashier of the Carolina Construction Company. For six years he was on the road as a traveling salesman. Finally he returned to Weston, where his principal business is the Chapman Cigar Company, of which he is secretary and treasurer. He has also taken an active interest in public affairs and has been elected twice to the office of justice of the peace.

March 18, 1901, he married Mae Ervin, a native of Lewis County. She and Mr. Chapman grew up in the same neighborhood. They are members of the Presbyterian Church. Mr. Chapman is affiliated with Weston Lodge No. 43, Knights of Pythias, and while living in North Carolina was chancellor of his lodge and a member of the Grand Lodge. He is a republican in politics.

JOHN WILLARD CUSHING was one of the first drillers attracted to the newly opened oil fields at Sistersville, and has been operating there and in adjoining fields for thirty years. He is one of the prominent oil men of this section and is active in the commercial and industrial enterprises that have made Sistersville one of the growing and prosperous cities of the state.

Mr. Cushing comes of a family of oil field workers, and was born in the heart of the old Pennsylvania petroleum district, at the Village of Petroleum Center in Venango County, December 27, 1870. He is of Irish ancestry. His grandfather, Morris Cushing, was born in County Tipperary in 1813. He married Bridget Donohue, of the same county. In 1851 they brought their family to America, locating in Guelph, Ontario, Canada, where they lived on a farm for a number of years. About 1866 they moved to Venango County, Pennsylvania, where Morris Cushing lived retired until his death in 1878. His widow died at Duke Center, Pennsylvania, in McKean County, in 1913. They were the parents of eight children and the four still living are: Mrs. Bridget Kelly, of Cleveland, Ohio, whose husband was a railroad man; Mrs. McElwee, of Clairmore, Missouri; Will, superintendent of the West Virginia Natural Oil & Gas Company at Claysville, Pennsylvania; and Timothy, who is in the oil well supply business at Tulsa, Oklahoma.

John Cushing, father of John W. Cushing, was born in County Tipperary in 1844, and was seven years of age when his parents went to Canada. He grew up there on a farm, and at the age of eighteen went to Venango County, Pennsylvania, where he married and became a teamster in the oil fields. In 1877 he moved to Bradford in McKean County, where he continued the same line of work, and in 1892 established his home at Washington, Pennsylvania, where thereafter he was an employee of the Manufacturers Light & Heat Gas Company until his death in March, 1920. John Cushing was a democrat and a member of the United Presbyterian Church. He married in Western Pennsylvania, Maria Jane Reed, who was born at Dempseytown, Venango County, in 1847, and died at Washington, Pennsylvania, in 1906. Of her children, John Willard is the oldest. Mary Jane is the wife of J. Wiley Sanders, a retired farmer living at Washington, Pennsylvania; Morris E. was an oil well driller and died at Washington at the age of twenty-two; Lester R. was also a driller in the oil fields and died at Spencer, West Virginia, aged twenty-nine.

John Willard Cushing spent his early life in Venango, McKean and Washington counties, Pennsylvania. He attended the rural schools of Venango, the public schools at Bradford, and at the age of eighteen finished his education in the Bradford Business College. On going to Washington he spent a year working on oil leases, and then for three years was in the oil fields of Lima, Ohio.

The first oil discoveries around Sistersville were made about 1890-91. In 1892 Mr. Cushing came to Sistersville, and during the following five years assisted in drilling a number of wells. After that he set up in business for himself as an oil well contractor, and worked in the fields of Tyler County and also in Ohio. He has been a producer since 1900. His varied interests in oil and other industrial affairs are indicated by his official connection with the following: Director in the Petroleum Exploration Company of Sistersville; director in the Wiser Oil Company of Sistersville; director of the Amity Gasoline Company of Sistersville; vice president of the Sistersville Boiler Works; director in the McKunkin Machine Company of Sistersville; stockholder in the Oil Review Publishing Company of Sistersville; and stockholder in the Tyler Traction Company.

Mr. Cushing has his offices in the Farmers & Producers Bank Building and owns a modern home at 307 Hill Street. He is a republican in politics, a member of the Presbyterian Church, and is affiliated with Phoenix Lodge No. 73,

A. F. and A. M., Sistersville Chapter No. 27, R. A. M., Mountain State Commandery No. 14, K. T., and Nemesis Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Parkersburg. He belongs to the Sistersville Country Club and the Kiwanis Club.

In 1895, at Sistersville, Mr. Cushing married Miss Cleo Fry, daughter of Joshua and Mary E. (Wherry) Fry, the latter living with Mr. and Mrs. Cushing. Her father was a teamster and died at Denver, Colorado. Three children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Cushing: Cleo Luella, who died at Sistersville in 1918 at the age of eighteen; John W., born in April, 1905, now a senior in high school; and Harry Fry, born September 30, 1908, a pupil in the grammar school.

JAMES RALSTON. One of the oldest commercial concerns at Weston is the jewelry business of which James Ralston is proprietor. This business was established by his father sixty-five years ago, and through all these years it has been a store adequate in stock and service for satisfying the demands and tastes of its patronage.

The founder of this business, the late Er Ralston, was a son of James Ralston and Ann (Lincoln) Ralston and was born in Ashland County, Ohio, January 23, 1834. When he was two years of age his parents moved to Richland County, Ohio, where he grew up, received his education and with some knowledge and experience in the jewelry business he moved to West Virginia and located at Weston, May 18, 1856. He was active in the business from that time until he retired in August, 1913, and he died October 14, 1914, in his eighty-first year.

November 8, 1859, he married Matilda Bailey, daughter of Minter and Sallie (Bastable) Bailey. To their marriage were born six children, the oldest, Lucy Ann, dying in infancy. The other children were Sallie Gilberta, James, Minter B., Genevieve and Ernestine.

James Ralston was born at Weston, May 15, 1863, grew up in his native town and acquired a public school education there. For about four years he was employed as a clerk in the general store of Barnes & O'Hara, and then worked in a hardware store at Weston for two years. Leaving West Virginia, Mr. Ralston went to the Southwest and at Chloride, New Mexico, put in his time for four years in a store and in work around the mines.

When he returned to Weston in 1889, he entered the jewelry store of his father, learned the business under the elder Ralston, and also took special courses of training in Chicago and Philadelphia. Nearly two years before his father's death he took over the active management, and for the past eight years has been proprietor. He owns the building and has a splendidly stocked store.

October 3, 1894, Mr. Ralston married Emma Hoffman Harrison, daughter of Matthew and Sarah E. Harrison. Of their four children, the oldest is Er, a graduate of high school, who spent two years in West Virginia University and is now associated with his father's business. Anna Maybury is a graduate of high school, attended Gunston Hall at Washington, District of Columbia, and finished her education in the Emerson College of Oratory at Boston. James G., the second son, graduated from high school and is now continuing his higher education in the State University. Richard, the youngest, is still in school. The family are members of the Episcopal Church and Mr. Ralston is a vestryman and trustee. He is a past master of Weston Lodge No. 10, A. F. and A. M., a member of Bigelow Chapter No. 4, R. A. M., is a past commander of St. John Commandery No. 8, K. T.; a member of Wheeling Consistory of the Scottish Rite, and Nemesis Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Parkersburg. His participation in politics has been as a democrat, and he is one of the directors of the Citizens Bank of Weston.

WILLIAM H. HALL. For a long period of years William H. Hall devoted his time and energies to his extensive farm. He still retains his land, does some business as a dealer and shipper of livestock, but enjoys an ample competence to enable him to live retired. He has a comfortable home at 352 Center Avenue in Weston.

Mr. Hall was born seven miles north of Weston, August 2, 1848, son of James M. and Nancy (Burnside) Hall. His father was born near Westfield, Lewis County, May 16, 1820, and his mother, near Goodhope in Harrison County, August 22, 1822. They grew up on farms and after their marriage lived for two years near Goodhope, on the William Burnside farm, and then moved to a tract of land near Freemansburg. Nancy Burnside Hall contributed a large share to the substantial fortune, which she and her husband accumulated, though they started life poor. She looked after her household and also took her place in the fields with her husband until they could feel sure of the future. James Hall in time accumulated about a thousand acres of good farming land. His first wife, Nancy, died during the war, in 1863. She was the mother of seven children: Sarah E., deceased, who married Norman A. Lovett; William H.; Mary Margaret, wife of H. D. Bailey; Minor J., a farmer in Lewis County; R. H. Hall, of Weston; Virginia, wife of George A. Custer; and Lot, a farmer on Polk Creek. James M. Hall married for his second wife Catherine Lovett, and the three children of this union are: Samuel G., a farmer in Lewis County; Ella, wife of Lloyd Allman, of Lewis County; and Bertha, wife of Lee Beech.

William H. Hall grew up on his father's farm, had a common school education, and he found his work and duties on the homestead until he married and started life for himself. August 25, 1870, Miss Mary E. Ervin became his wife. She was born in Pocahontas County, West Virginia, September 3, 1851. She died July 28, 1908, nearly thirty-eight years after her marriage. Of her six children, five are living: Cora, wife of A. D. Dent; James H., present sheriff of Gilmer County; A. F. Hall, a farmer in Ritchie County; Minor Roy, a merchant at Hurst; and Guy L., a farmer in Ritchie County. For his second wife Mr. Hall married Isa Somerville, widow of Albert Brown. She had three children by her first husband, Harry, Ruth and Pauline Brown. In the half century since he left his father's home Mr. Hall accumulated and still owns eight hundred acres including the best farming land in Ritchie County. For forty years he carried on an extensive outside business as a dealer and shipper of livestock, and was also a breeder of Hereford cattle. He sold out most of his livestock in 1912. He is a stockholder in the Exchange Bank of Auburn, West Virginia.

Mr. Hall is one of the prominent members of the United Brethren Church, has been a member fifty-eight years, was class leader, has been superintendent of the Sunday school at Weston and a delegate to the State Conference. He is affiliated with Troy Lodge No. 156, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and is a republican, having filled the office of justice of the peace several years.

JAMES J. LOGUE is a practical expert in the oil and gas industry, received his early training in the fields of Pennsylvania, for a number of years has been with the Reserve Gas Company and is now acting as superintendent for that company at Weston.

Mr. Logue was born in McKean County, Pennsylvania, July 26, 1880, son of James and Sarah (McQuillan) Logue and a grandson of Michael Logue, who came from Ireland. James and Sarah Logue were born and reared in New York State, and the former early took up the oil and gas business as a driller and producer. They were devout Catholics and he was a democrat. Of their six children four are living: Anna, wife of E. C. Byers of Texas; James J.; Joseph M., superintendent of the Magnolia Oil Company in Kansas; and Catherine, wife of W. J. Matych, of Tulsa, Oklahoma.

James J. Logue spent his boyhood in McKean County, Pennsylvania. He had a public school education, including two years in high school, and when he went to work it was in the oil fields in the capacity of a roustabout. He knew every phase of oil and gas production from the standpoint of personal experience, and this experience and his abilities have earned him his well deserved promotion. His first connection with the Reserve Gas Company was as a field foreman, and subsequently he was appointed superintendent of the company's business at Weston.

A. E. Hussey, M.D.

Mr. Logue is one of the popular citizens of Weston, is a democrat, and is affiliated with Clarksburg Lodge of Elks. September 11, 1907, he married Miss Edith Beall, of Gilmer County, West Virginia. They have two children: James, Jr., born August 30, 1908, and Edward Thorne, born January 11, 1922.

LEONIDAS H. BARNETT, one of West Virginia's well known attorneys, laid the foundation of his professional success at Glenville, where he practiced for a quarter of a century. He now lives at Weston, and still does a large business in the courts of the county and state.

Mr. Barnett was born in Doddridge County, May 5, 1868, son of Rev. Allison and Mary C. (Hickman) Barnett. His father was born in Taylor County and was an ordained minister of the Baptist Church. After his marriage he settled on a farm in Doddridge County, and his regular occupation was agriculture, though he had other interests outside of farm and church. He held the office of justice of the peace in Doddridge County, and at one time was president of the County Court. His wife was born at Warm Springs, Bath County, Virginia, in 1834, and was four years of age when her parents moved to Doddridge County, West Virginia, where she was reared and educated. She is still living at the old homestead. Allison and Mary C. Barnett had a family of fourteen children, and seven sons and four daughters are still living.

Leonidas H. Barnett spent his early life on the farm and had a common school education, but after that he learned to rely on himself for his advancement in school, profession and business. He owes much to the influence of his noble Christian parents, and the lessons he learned as a boy he has practiced steadily in all his years. Mr. Barnett graduated in law from West Virginia University in Morgantown in June, 1895, was admitted to the bar in the same year and located at Glenville in Gilmer County, where he maintained his law offices until May, 1920, at which date he removed to Weston. He served twelve years as prosecuting attorney for Gilmer County, and for two terms was mayor of Glenville. His reputation as a lawyer followed him to Weston, and he still represents a large and important clientele. Mr. Barnett has also accumulated considerable property, chiefly in the form of real estate investments.

He married Maud Coplin. His only child is Muriel M., born September 21, 1898. She is a graduate of the State Normal School at Glenville and is an accomplished musician, both vocal and instrumental. She received a thorough musical education, and is popular and in great demand at musicals and concerts, ranking with the best and celebrated artists in this section. On August 3, 1920, she became the wife of Lynn L. Allen. Mr. and Mrs. Allen live in Clarksburg, where he is a civil and mining engineer. Mr. Barnett has a past noble grand of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, has sat in the Grand Lodge, and in politics is a democrat.

ALEXANDER EWING McCUSKEY, M. D. While his time and talents have been completely exercised in his busy practice as a physician and surgeon for a quarter of a century, Doctor McCuskey, whose home for over twenty years has been at Pine Grove in Wetzel County, has also been a leader in politics and public affairs, is a former state senator, and is deeply interested in the educational advancement of his community.

Doctor McCuskey represents an old family of Marshall county, West Virginia, and was born on a farm there thirteen miles southeast of Wheeling, November 17, 1870. He is of Scotch stock, though a number of generations ago the McCuskeys left Scotland and settled in Northern Ireland and from there came to the United States. Grandfather George McCuskey was a life-long resident of Marshall County, a farmer, and married Miss Lindsay, who was also born and died in Marshall County. Alfred McCuskey, father of Doctor McCuskey, was born at Oak Hill in Marshall County in February, 1831, and devoted his entire life to his farming interests. He was reared and married in Marshall County, and lived there until 1914, when he retired and spent his last years in the home of his son at Pine Grove, where he died in December, 1916. He was a democrat, and all the years of his life was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. He was also affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. Alfred McCuskey married Mary Williamson Ewing, who was born at Sand Hill in Marshall County in 1834, and died in that county in 1913. The names of their children were as follows: Elizabeth, who died in infancy; George, who died as a child; Joseph, who died at the age of fourteen; Carl William, a steel mill worker living at McMechen in Marshall County; Alfred Franklin, who died of diphtheria at the age of eleven; Alexander Ewing; Virginia, wife of Isaac A. Wise, a farmer and a guard in the West Virginia penitentiary at Moundsville; James, who died in infancy; and Jesse Allen, who died when eleven years of age of diabetes.

Dr. Alexander Ewing McCuskey grew up on his father's farm and attended the rural schools, a select school at Moundsville, and from the age of eighteen to twenty-two taught in his home county. In the fall of 1893 he entered the Ohio Medical University of Columbus, where he graduated M. D., March 17, 1896. Doctor McCuskey has always been a student of his profession, and during 1913 he did post-graduate work in the New York Post Graduate School. After his graduation he practiced a year at Logansport in Marion County, and then located at Smithfield in Wetzel County until the spring of 1899, when he removed to Pine Grove, where he has been in practice for over twenty-two years. He owns a modern home and offices on Main Street, and other financial investments include a ranch of 320 acres in Grant County, Arkansas, and a third interest in the home farm in Marshall County.

Doctor McCuskey has been a member of the Democratic State Executive Committee since 1916. He was elected to the State Senate in November, 1912, serving in the regular sessions of 1913-15 and in several special sessions. In the Senate he was chairman of the committee on medicine and sanitation and a member of the committees on education, fish and game, railroads and corporations and others. Doctor McCuskey is a member of the Grant District Board of Education of Wetzel County. Fraternally he is affiliated with Cameron Lodge No. 17, A. F. and A. M., in Marshall County; Sistersville Chapter No. 27, R. A. M.; Mountain State Commandery No. 14, K. T.; and Osiris Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Wheeling. He is a past chancellor of Sylvan Lodge No. 130, Knights of Pythias, at Pine Grove and is a member of the Marshall County, State and American Medical associations. During the war Doctor McCuskey was commissioned a captain in the Medical Reserve Corps and was scheduled for active duty on December 1, 1918, but the signing of the armistice caused the order to be annulled.

July 9, 1901, at Moundsville, he married Miss Harriet Amanda Johnson, daughter of Anthony M. and Lucretia (Hammond) Johnson, now deceased. Her father was a Union soldier in the Civil war. Mrs. McCuskey is a graduate of the Moundsville High School. Their two children are Mary Lucretia, born January 14, 1905, now a senior in the Pine Grove High School, and Virginia Isabelle, who was born September 1, 1908.

E. T. W. HALL, M. D. A physician and surgeon with a long and honorable record of service, Doctor Hall has practiced many years in Lewis County, and is now located at Weston. He is one of the proprietors of Hall & Green Hospital on North Main Street.

Doctor Hall was born near Janelaw, West Virginia, August 24, 1864, son of William D. and Nancy S. (Law) Hall. His father was born in Lewis County in 1836, and died in 1888. The mother was born at Janelaw in 1844 and died in 1919. William Hall raised a company for the Union Army during the Civil war, and served three years as captain of Company C of the Tenth Volunteer Infantry. He was finally mustered out on account of disability. It was during the war, in May, 1863, that he married Nancy S. Law. When he was released from army service he settled on a farm on McCan's Run, and in 1870 bought another farm and was successfully engaged in agricultural pursuits until his death. He owned 507 acres of land. He is a staunch republican in politics, and was a member and local minister of the United Brethren Church. His family consisted of nine children, seven of whom are still living.

Dr. E. T. W. Hall grew up on his father's farm, and after the public school entered Otterbein College in Ohio, where he pursued the classical course for three years. He studied medicine at the University of Maryland at Baltimore, graduating M.D. in 1885. For the first eighteen months after leaving college Doctor Hall practiced at Buckhannon, and then moved to Freemansburg in Lewis County, where for thirty-three years he gave his time and talents to an extensive country practice, and for fifteen years of that time conducted a well appointed hospital at Freemansburg. In November, 1919, Doctor Hall moved his home and offices to Weston, where to a large extent his professional service is performed in the Hall & Green Hospital.

Doctor Hall owns considerable land in Lewis County and is a stockholder in the Weston Independent, the official republican paper of Lewis County. He is a republican, is affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, Knights of Pythias and the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, and he and his family are members of the United Brethren Church. In 1885 Doctor Hall married Fannie S. Bewazley, of Middlesex County, Virginia. She became the mother of five children: John W. P., who graduated from the Glenville Normal School, spent two years as a Government teacher in the Philippines, and is now an engineer; Alma, wife of Earl Butcher, of Weston; Henrietta, wife of Addison Weeks, of Cleveland, Ohio; Barnes E., a graduate of the Glenville State Normal, is principal of the high school at Oceana, West Virginia; and Frank E. is a farmer in Lewis County. The mother of these children died in 1892. The second wife of Doctor Hall was Edna J. Steinbeck, who is survived by one son, Herbert W. Hall. Herbert W. Hall was a student in Otterbein College when he enlisted and joined the One Hundred Forty-sixth Hospital Corps in the Thirty-seventh Division, and saw service along the front lines in France. The present wife of Doctor Hall was Martha S. Minich. They have two children: Irene, a student in Otterbein University in Ohio; and Richard M., attending high school. Doctor Hall served in the World war as captain in the Medical Corps, Surgical Section.

JAMES A. COPLIN, of the Flemington community in Taylor County, has continued the worthy work of his ancestors in this state. He is a successful grazer and stockman, his ranch being the old Brohard farm in Barry's Run, two and a half miles from Flemington.

He was born January 7, 1852, in Harrison County, near the old "Uncle Joseph" Morris place on Brushy Fork and close to the scenes where his ancestors performed their labors as pioneer developers of this region. It was the home of his grandfather, and his own father, Amaziah Coplin, was born just below Gasilla in that neighborhood.

Jacob Coplin, his grandfather, settled near Clarksburg in Harrison County about 1819. He and his brother Benjamin lost their property as sureties for borrowed money, and it is said that when these brothers left Clarksburg they had not even a bed and for a time slept on their overcoats. After locating on the Brushy Fork they recuperated their fortunes, taking up large tracts of land and building up a prosperous business as farmers and grazers. Jacob Coplin is buried at Bridgeport, where the family donated the land for the cemetery. He married a member of the Davidson family, and of their seven sons and five daughters the following are recalled: David, Andrew, Jacob and Amaziah; Matilda, who married John Dix, a Revolutionary soldier; Sarah, who married Andrew Ratliff and went to Ohio; while another daughter married and went to Texas.

Amaziah Coplin, one of the youngest sons, demonstrated his ability as a farmer on Brushy Fork, near Bridgeport, accumulated a fine body of land, and lived there until his death, March 13, 1865, being buried in the local cemetery. He married Emeline Mays, of Virginia, daughter of James Mays, whose home was on Cowpasture River, near the Bath

Alum Springs. She survived her husband many years, passing away in February, 1902. Of her children only two grew up, Nancy Ellen, who married J. B. Sandusky, of Bridgeport, where she died, and James Andrew.

Brushy Fork community was a somewhat primitive district during the youth and boyhood of James Andrew Coplin. He never had the opportunity to attend school three consecutive months. He and the other boys and girls sat on a slab bench, and among the teachers he recalls the names of John McKinney, Billie Morris and James Samples, and of these only Samples was a competent teacher. Outside of school he grew up in the "clearing," and the handling of ax and saw was almost a part of his daily activities. The family raised provisions for home use and grazed cattle, horses and sheep on the newly made pasture. After his marriage he continued working the old home place and he still owns the land and the home where he learned to work and laid the foundation of his success. When he finally abandoned that district he came to his present place in Taylor County.

He early established a reputation for honesty and efficiency, and his neighbors learned to confide in him and he was given places of trust and responsibility. He was a member of the Board of Education and was also overseer of highways. His father was opposed to slavery, was a Union man, and republican, while his mother was the daughter of a slaveholder and of distinct southern sympathies. When it came time for him to vote his first ballot went to General Grant, and in later years he came to share the doubt of many thinking men as to the sincerity of party creeds and platforms, and has paid more attention to the man than the party. In 1920 neither he nor his wife voted for president. Mrs. Coplin is a member of the Methodist Church.

July 8, 1876, in the "centennial year" Mr. Coplin married Miss Jane Pell, daughter of Kelso and Zeppie A. (Ross) Pell. Her mother was the sister of Cyrus Ross, a wealthy farmer and slaveholder. Kelso Pell grew up on Cheat River, near Albright, in Preston County, and died on his farm at Bridgeport, where he and his wife are buried. Their children were: Benjamin; Rebecca, wife of Morgan Lodge; Mrs. Coplin; Charles; Lillian, Mrs. Floyd Taylor; Mrs. Lot Swagger; and Mrs. Nannie Gawthrop. Mrs. Coplin was educated at Bridgeport, and had experience as teacher of a subscription school before her marriage.

The brief record of the children of Mr. and Mrs. Coplin is as follows: Emma, wife of Edward Thompson, of Clarksburg; Rosa, who married Bert Bond; Maggie, who is Mrs. John Parks; Ross, who married Ralph Pepper; Zeppie, who married Dorsy Brown; Olive, Mrs. Noah Parks; Pearl, wife of Ester Stout; Martha, wife of Albert Corder; Miss Edna, the only one at home; and Pauline, who married Brent Bailey, a World war soldier, and is the mother of one daughter. The other grandchildren of Mr. and Mrs. Coplin are nineteen in all: Mrs. Thompson has five; Mrs. Ross Bond, two; Mrs. Maggie Parks, two; Mrs. Pepper, two; Mrs. Olive Parks, a son; Mrs. Brown, two; Mrs. Stout two; and Mrs. Corder, three.

GEORGE D. HARDIN. Still active in his work as a farmer and stockman at Flemington in Booth Creek District of Taylor County, George D. Hardin spent the greater part of his career in Barbour County, where he was born and where the Hardins have been people of usefulness and influence for several generations.

Both his father and grandfather were named Nesto Hardin. Nestor Hardin, Sr., was a native of Pennsylvania and came from Fayette County, that state, to Barbour County, West Virginia. He was a farmer and for some years worked his plantation with slaves. In 1913, when he was well advanced in years, he took his darkies to Pennsylvania and liberated them. He was never affiliated with any church. His death occurred at the age of eighty-one and he was buried in the Martin graveyard in Cove District of Barbour County. He married Katie Hardin, a sister of the noted Ben Hardin of Kentucky. She was buried at the side of her husband. Of their children Absolom was a farmer in Barbour County, where many of his descendants ained; Hannah married Lunford Jones and lived in Taylor County; Isabel was the wife of Jacob Coffman, and they are buried at the old Fairview Church in Barbour County; Ailey married a brother of Jacob Coffman, moved to Ohio and died in Noble County of that state; Lydia came the wife of George Hardin, and they lived out their lives in Pennsylvania; the youngest child was Nestor, Jr. Nestor Hardin, Jr., was born in Barbour County, February 22, 1806. His education was limited, but sufficient for the transaction of business affairs as a farmer, and on old homestead he continued stockraising and grain-growing until advanced years overtook him. While not a soldier, he was a Union man to the core, and was a spectator of the Wheeling convention which decided the attitude of western counties of Virginia toward secession. During the portion of the war he was a wagon boss for the Government. His adherence to the Union was unalloyed. When the Confederate troops passed through his home town and he was at his allegiance, he replied: "I am a Union man, I, body and breeches," a sentiment which even the rebels admired, and they assured him that his property would remain untouched.

Nestor Hardin, Jr., who died October 12, 1886, married Margaret Stonaker, who survived him until October 6, 1911. He was a daughter of Andrew and Rachel (Holsberry) Stonaker, her father a native of old Virginia and for many years a farmer in Glade District of Barbour County, where he died. The children of Nestor Hardin, Jr., were: Katie, who married Thomas B. Mason, of Preston County; Rachel, who married George W. Deahl, removed to Childress County, Texas, but returned to West Virginia before her death; Andrew S., a farmer of Cove District of Barbour County; George D.; and Pollie, who died at the age of ten years.

George Dow Hardin was born in Barbour County, March 1854, and lived through boyhood and manhood in Cove District of that county, getting his education in the common schools. After his marriage he went to a home of his, but later succeeded to the old homestead, and was a successful stockgrower there until he was sixty-six years of age, when he sold out and moved to his present home in Taylor County. In addition to farming he bought some unproductive coal lands, but sold them before developing the mines. He has also been a stockholder and director in the First National Bank of Grafton. While in Barbour County he was president of the Board of Education in Cove District. He is a member of Mystic Lodge No. 15 of the Ionic Order at Grafton and while not a church member feels an obligation to support such institutions just as he pays taxes to the Government. He is a republican, and his father.

In Preston County, January 19, 1888, Mr. Hardin married Miss Clara Rush. She was born in Somerset County, Pennsylvania, March 4, 1867, but was reared and educated in Preston County, West Virginia. Her father, Evans Rush, native of Fayette County, Pennsylvania, served two enlistments a total of almost five years, in the Union Army during the Civil war, was a merchant in Pennsylvania, and moving to Evansville, West Virginia, operated a woolen mill, but finally returned to Pennsylvania, and died there May 24, 1919, and is buried at the Jersey Church in Somerset County. Mrs. Hardin's mother bore the maiden name of Martha Bowman, and she now makes her home with the Hardins. Her sister Catherine died as Mrs. John Mililton at Evansville, West Virginia; and her brother, John Bowman, died at Morgantown. Martha Bowman was a daughter of Jonathan and Mary (Knight) Bowman. Her father a native of Maryland, devoted his active life to the flour-mill industry, and died at Evansville at the age of seventy-three. Mrs. Hardin has two brothers: Elmer, Winchester, Virginia, and John, of Tarnon Springs, Idaho, and another brother, George Rush, died unmarried at Evansville.

Mr. and Mrs. Hardin have a family of three daughters, one son, and some half dozen grandchildren. Nora, the youngest child, is the wife of W. C. Shroyer, who operates the Hardin farm in Barbour County. Their children are Hester and Robert. Miss Kate C., who finished her education in Broadus College at Philippi, is at home with her parents. Hazel R., the youngest daughter, married George Campbell, a farmer in Cove District of Barbour County, and their three children are George Robert, Fred Hardin and Harold Kenneth.

William Edmund Hardin, the only son, had a fighting record as a soldier of the Great war. He was born at the Hardin homestead in Barbour County, August 18, 1893. He completed his junior year in the State Normal at Shepherdstown, and assisted his father on the farm until America joined in the war. He was called to the colors in 1917, joining Company F of the Three Hundred and Thirtieth Field Artillery in the Eightieth Division known as the Blue Ridge Division. He was trained at Camp Lee, went overseas from Newport News on the U. S. S. Siboney to Brest, had further training at Vannes, and went into action on the Meuse-Argonne front. The regiment began its fighting at Dead Man's Hill and then followed a period of fifty-one days of practically continuous and strenuous service until the signing of the armistice. He was sergeant of his company, his squad comprising sixteen men, all of whom went through the ordeal without loss, but all the fourteen horses comprising the original outfit were killed. W. E. Hardin was on the banks of the River Meuse the day of the armistice, remained at that point ten days longer, was then ordered back to Ance la Franc, where for four months his command was kept in training, and was then ordered to Brest and came home on the Zeppelin, landing at Norfolk and sent to Camp Lee for demobilization. He was discharged June 6, 1919.

During the following year and a half his efforts as a civilian were given to the farm, and he then engaged in business at Grafton, where he conducts the Hardin Garage. William E. Hardin married Juanita Shingleton, and they have a son, Edmund Barton.

SEPTIMIUS HALL, of New Martinsville, is the oldest delegate in point of continuous service in the West Virginia Legislature. He is one of the two or three surviving members of the Constitutional Convention of 1872, and upon all questions regarding the original conception of the organic law members of the Legislature have made a practice of referring to Mr. Hall as the chief authority.

For over seventy years members of the Hall family have been prominent at the bar of Wetzel County. Septimius Hall was born in Ritchie County, February 14, 1847. His grandfather, Samuel Gregg Hall, was born in 1803, in what is now Barbour County, West Virginia, where he was reared and married. He was a farmer by occupation. About 1840 he removed to Middle Island Creek in Tyler County, from there to Bond's Creek in Ritchie County, and in 1844 started for the Far West, floating his goods on a flatboat down the Ohio River to the mouth of the Wabash, and then up that stream to Lafayette, Indiana, whence he proceeded by canal from Lafayette to Logansport, and from there overland to New Buffalo, Michigan, by wagon. He and a half brother and some cousins jointly owned a lumber mill at New Buffalo. At that time New Buffalo, Michigan, was the promising rival of Chicago on the other side of the lake. The great trunk lines of railroads then building from the East were being influenced to establish their terminals at New Buffalo, but when they were constructed two or three years later they went around the southern end of the lake, and from that time New Buffalo steadily declined in importance. Samuel G. Hall died at New Buffalo in 1846, while the town was still one of great promise. He married Rachel Hudkins, who was born in Barbour County, January 9, 1805, and died at St. Marys, West Virginia, January 24, 1883.

Leonard S. Hall, father of Septimius, was born in Barbour County in September, 1824, and as a boy accompanied his parents to Middle Island Creek, at what is now Wait Joseph's Mills in Tyler County. At the age of fifteen he left West Virginia and joined his uncle, Thomas Hall, in Kosciusko County, Indiana. He returned from there and settled at Bond's Creek in Ritchie County, where he married and where he began the study of law. About 1849 he located in New Martinsville, where during the rest of his life he was a leader at the bar. He was a strong Southern man in sympathies, and was a member of the Secession Convention at Richmond in 1861, which passed the Ordinance of Secession, and continued a member of the Virginia Legislature during the war. For a number of terms he held the office of prosecuting attorney of Wetzel County, and he died at New Martinsville, November 10, 1875. In his younger years he was a member of the Methodist Church, and was affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. Leonard S. Hall married Jeanette McGregor, who was born in Ritchie County and died at Wheeling in her eighty-third year and now rests at New Martinsville. Septimius was the oldest of five children. William McGregor, the second, became a merchant and later a lawyer at New Martinsville, and died at Wheeling Hospital. Susanna is the wife of James W. Newman, a New Martinsville attorney. Bruce is a member of the New Martinsville bar. Addie is the wife of Wilbur P. Baggs, their home being on Wheeling Island. Mr. Baggs is a member of the firm, Spence, Baggs & Company, operating one of the old established foundries at Martins Ferry, Ohio.

Septimius Hall, who was born in Ritchie County, February 14, 1847, was an infant when his father began the practice of law in New Martinsville, where he attended the public schools. He studied law in his father's office and when just ready for examination for the bar he organized the Pittsburg State Company, and operated that industry at New Martinsville for about twelve years.

Mr. Hall has always been one of the leaders in the democratic party in this section of the state. He was chosen a member of the Constitutional Convention in October, 1871, in the last October election ever held in the state. He had an active part in drawing up the organic law, and was then elected a member of the first State Senate under the new constitution, serving throughout the long sessions of 1872-73. He was chairman of the committee on banks and corporations, and drew up the first general railroad law of the state, a measure that has stood the acid test of time and most of its provisions are still on the statute books. Mr. Hall represented the Second Senatorial District, including Marshall, Marion and Wetzel counties.

About ten years later he was elected a member of the House of Delegates, serving from 1881 to 1884, while the capital was at Wheeling. He was representative of Wetzel County. Mr. Hall also served as mayor of New Martinsville one year. In 1906 he was again elected to represent Wetzel County in the House of Delegates, and beginning with the session of 1907 has been continuously a member of that body, being now in his eighth consecutive term. He has been assigned to some of the most important committees in the Legislature, including taxation and finance, and was a member of the Virginia Debt Committee.

He is a past grand of Magnolia Lodge No. 42, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, is a past grand master of the Grand Lodge of the state, and has represented the State Grand Lodge in three meetings of the Sovereign Grand Lodge. He is also a Royal Arch Mason.

Mr. Hall and family reside at 705 Maple Avenue in New Martinsville. He married in June, 1875, at Moundsville, Miss Fannie Anschutz, daughter of Christian and Rebecca (Woodwell) Anschutz, now deceased. Her father for a number of years was owner of the Moundsville Flouring Mills. Mr. Hall has four children. Charles Leonard is an attorney for oil corporations at Tulsa, Oklahoma; Lulu, living with her parents, is the widow of Samuel Brice Blair, who was an attorney of Moundsville; Septimius, Jr., is connected with the Tulsa Mapping Company in Oklahoma; LaMoine is a constructive engineer at Muskogee, Oklahoma.

HARRY HAGER ROOME is proprietor of a large commercial establishment at Pine Grove, and for years has also been active in the oil and gas fields of West Virginia, chiefly as a drilling contractor, though he also owns some valuable production.

Mr. Roome was born at Little Rock, Arkansas, April 16, 1884, but represents an old West Virginia family. His grandfather, John Roome, was a pioneer farmer of Tyler County, where he died in 1860. He married Miss McCanless, who died in Tyler County in 1859. Their son, John W. Roome, was born in Tyler County, February 14, 1858, and as a young man followed farming in that county. For ten years he was foreman of metal yards for the Wheeling Steel Works, and in 1895 removed to Sistersville, during the oil boom, and for a quarter of a century has been active in the drilling of oil and gas wells. He spent four years in the Sistersville field, four years in the Piney Fork field of Wetzel County, two years at Pine Grove, and since then his work and experience have been in the Oklahoma and Texas fields and he now lives at Broken Ridge, Texas. He is a democrat, a member of the Methodist Church and the Knights of Pythias. John W. Roome married Esther Sines, who was born in Tyler County in 1861. They have three children: Nell, of Tulsa, Oklahoma, widow of H. C. Witherup, who was an oil field contractor; Harry H.; and John W., Jr., an oil well driller at Tulsa.

Harry Hager Roome attended public school at Benwood in Marshall County until he was twelve, and after that his education was completed with six winter terms in Tyler County. In the meantime, at the age of sixteen, he went to work in the oil field at Piney Fork as an employee of the Hope Natural Gas Company. While with this company he dressed tools, also drilled wells, and in 1903 he moved to Pine Grove. He still owns and operates two strings of drilling tools, representing an investment of $15,000, and has been a contractor in the drilling of oil and gas wells over a large scope of territory in West Virginia. On March 9, 1917, Mr. Roome established a general store at Pine Grove, and has since developed a large establishment, representing a heavy capital investment and with a complete stock of goods. He owns his store building on Main Street and also a stone business block which is the main business structure in the town. This is used for his wholesale feed and grain department. He also has three valuable lots in the Newman addition adjoining the high school, and in 1921 he erected three dwellings in the Alley addition of Pine Grove. He also has oil production in the Green district of Wetzel County and is a director of the Bank of Pine Grove.

Mr. Roome is a democrat, a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and in fraternal affairs is affiliated with Wetzel Lodge No. 39, A. F. and A. M., at New Martinsville; West Virginia Consistory No. 1 of the Scottish Rite at Wheeling; Osiris Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Wheeling; and is a past vice chancellor commander of Sylvan Lodge No. 130, Knights of Pythias, at Pine Grove.

On April 26, 1907, at New Martinsville, he married Miss Mena Balwanz, daughter of Fred and Ollie (Martin) Balwanz, residents of Chillicothe, Ohio, where her father is a farmer. Mr. and Mrs. Roome have two children: Harry Hager, Jr., born May 20, 1915; and Marylann, born in 1918.

BRUCE Y. BRANAHAN, superintendent of the Leevale Mine at Leevale, is one of the capable men and good citizens of Raleigh County whose courage and efficiency have been sorely tried during the disturbances in the coal industry. He was born at Acme, West Virginia, September 28, 1897, a son of John W. and Ella (Coimer) Branahan. The paternal grandfather, Shannon Branahan, was of Scotch ancestry. John W. Branahan was born in West Virginia, and his wife was a native of the same state. Beginning as a boy in a mine when about fourteen years of age, he came to Leevale in 1912 and gradually worked his way up through the various positions to that of superintendent, and was holding the latter at the time of his death. He was one of the influential men in the coal industry in his locality, and was for years a Mason.

After completing the eighth grade in the public school of his native place Bruce Y. Branahan went to Charleston, West Virginia, and took a business course at the Capital City Commercial College, completing it in 1914. Coming then to Leevale, he was bookkeeper and store manager for five years, and then was his father's assistant until the death of the latter, at which time he succeeded to the superintendency of the mine. During the period of the war was kept at the mine by the Government, who regarded his work there as more essential than service in the army. During the labor troubles of 1921 Mr. Branhan had some exciting experiences, and for weeks he and his family lived in fear for their lives. A gang of forty men, all armed with high-power rifles, visited the mine and demanded and took away with them all of the arms belonging to the company.

In December, 1916, Mr. Branhan married at Huntington, West Virginia, Miss Naomi Russell, a daughter of Don C. and Daisy (Derrick) Russell, both of whom were West Virginians. He is engaged in a real estate business. Mr. and Mrs. Branhan have two children, namely: Robert Lewis and Paul Frederick. Mr. Branhan is a Blue Lodge Mason, a member of the Scottish Rite of Wheeling, West Virginia, and of Beni-Kedem Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S. In politics he is a republican. He is a reliable man, experienced in his work, and faithful to the responsibilities resting upon him. As a citizen he is loyal to his home community, and anxious to do all within his power to improve conditions and advance its well being. Such men as he are a tower of strength in times of public stress, as well as those of normalcy.

ALFRED D. CALLIHAN. A brief outline of the personal career of Alfred D. Callihan recalls a number of the developments in the mining district of Southern West Virginia during the past thirty years. His intimate association with the coal interests of the state began in the New River field during the construction of the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad there in 1891. Mr. Callihan, whose home is at 713 Fifth Street, Huntington, is superintendent of the Paragon Colliery Company at Yolya, Logan County.

Mr. Callihan was born at Greencup, Kentucky, October 3, 1872, son of Daniel and Sallie (Willis) Callihan, both natives of Greencup County. His father was born in 1814 and died in 1892. The mother died July 20, 1920, at the age of eighty-six. Daniel Callihan was a farmer and country merchant, was a republican in politics and was a Methodist, while his wife was a Baptist.

Alfred D. Callihan, fifth in a family of seven children, attended school at Greencup until he was about eighteen years of age. At that time he entered the service of the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad Company as a water boy during construction work on the Eastern Cincinnati Division. Soon afterward he was in the train service in West Virginia, in the yards at Sewell, and there came successive promotions to more responsible work, leading from bill clerk to train master and the operation of trains over all his branches of the Chesapeake & Ohio leading into the various coal fields.

In 1897 Mr. Callihan became associated with coal production with the McDonald Colliery Company at McDonald and the Cranberry Fuel Company, being superintendent of both properties. In 1908 he took charge as superintendent of the White Oak Railroad and the Piney River and Paint Creek Road as joint superintendent for the Virginian Railroad Company and the Chesapeake & Ohio. While performing these duties his home was at Oak Hill.

In 1915 he took over the management of the Guyan Valley Coal Company at Crown in Logan County. This subsequently became the property of the W. E. Deegans interests. Then, in 1920, Mr. Callihan came to Yolya in charge of Paragon Mines Nos. 1 and 2. This is likewise Deegans property.

In 1902 Mr. Callihan married Janie Dixon, daughter of J. Dixon, of Price Hill, Raleigh County. They have a son, Dixon. Mr. and Mrs. Callihan are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church at Huntington. He is affiliated with the Masonic Lodge at McDonald, the Royal Arch chapter and Knight Templar Commandery at Huntington, the Shrine at Charleston, and in politics he is a republican.

MRS. JANE CHARLOTTE (WASHINGTON) WILLIS, of Charles own, Jefferson County, is a lineal descendant of Col. John Washington, the founder of the distinguished American family of which George Washington was a representative.

Mrs. Willis was born at Mount Vernon, Fairfax County, Virginia, and is a daughter of John Augustin Washington, Jr., who was born in what is now Jefferson County, West Virginia, at Blakeley, a son of John Augustin and Jane Charlotte (Blackburn) Washington, the latter a granddaughter of Thomas Blackburn. Corbin Washington, great-grandfather of Mrs. Willis, was a great-great-grandson of Col. John and Anne (Pope) Washington. Mount Vernon, the old homestead of the Washington family, was devised by Augustin Washington to Lawrence Washington, who gave to it the name of Mount Vernon in honor of Admiral Vernon of the English Navy. Lawrence Washington had no children, and he gave to his nephew, Bushrod Washington, the old family homestead. Bushrod Washington died childless, and gave the old home to his nephew, John Augustin Washington, Sr., who bequeathed the estate to his wife and she to her son John Augustin, Jr., father of Mrs. Willis of this review, he having been the last private owner of this historic property.

John Augustin Washington, Jr., attended the University of Virginia and also Princeton College, New Jersey. He did not adopt a profession, but busied himself with farm industry and continued to reside with his family at Mount Vernon until he sold the property to the Ladies Mount Vernon Association of the Union, which preserved the same as an American historic shrine. After the sale of this property Mr. Washington purchased and removed with his family to a farm in Fauquier County, Virginia. At the inception of the war between the states he entered the Confederate military service and served as a colonel on the staff of Gen. Robert E. Lee. While at the head of a reconnoitering expedition in 1861 he was killed by a Union force, on the 13th of September, his wife having died in 1860. After his death his children were taken into the home of his brother, Richard Blackburn Washington, at Blakeley, Jefferson County, West Virginia, as now constituted, and here Mrs. Willis remained until her marriage. Her mother, whose maiden name was Eleanor Love Selden, was a daughter of Wilson Cary Selden and Louise (Fontaine) Alexander Selden, and, as previously noted, her death occurred in 1860. Louise Fontaine, eldest of the children, is the widow of Col. Roger P. Chew, to whom a memoir is dedicated on other pages of this work, and the names of the other children are here entered in respective order of birth: Jane Charlotte, Eliza Selden, Anna Maria, Lawrence, Eleanor L. and George.

January 13, 1869, recorded the marriage of Nathaniel Hite Willis to Miss Jane Charlotte Washington. Mr. Willis was born at Rock Hall, Jefferson County, in 1842, a son of Thomas Hite Willis, who likewise was born in this county and who was the son of Carver Willis, the latter's wife having been a descendant of Yoist Hite, one of the first settlers in Virginia, now West Virginia. Thomas Hite Willis was for many years engaged in farm enterprise at Rock Hall, and was the owner of a goodly number of slaves. After his removal to Charles Town he lived retired until his death, in his eighty-fourth year. The maiden name of his wife was Elizabeth Ryland.

At the age of nineteen years Nathaniel H. Willis became a soldier of the Confederacy, and he served in Clark's Cavalry until he was captured by the enemy, he having thereafter been held as a Federal prisoner of war until the close of the great conflict, when he returned home and resumed farm operations at Rock Hall. In 1906 he removed to Charles Town, where he lived retired until his death, October 20, 1914, his widow still remaining in the pleasant home which he here provided. The religious faith of the family is that of the Protestant Episcopal Church. Mr. and Mrs. Willis became the parents of eight children: Elizabeth Ryland, Eleanor Love, Thomas Hite, Richard Washington, Eliza Washington, John Augustin, Pattie and Jean Charlotte.

COLUMBUS M. WARD. In the uniformly progressive career of Columbus M. Ward, a leading attorney of Beckley, several personal traits are quite noticeable, among which may be mentioned versatility of talents combined with thoroughness of preparation and depth of legal knowledge.

A man of broad education and experience, of high personal character, courteous and able, he is one of Raleigh County's strong citizens.

Mr. Ward was born on his father's farm, three miles from Beckley, and within sight of his present office, over the Post Office, February 3, 1879, being a son of Gilbert and Mary (Fitzpatrick) Ward, natives of Raleigh County. Gilbert Ward was born in 1850, shortly after the arrival of his father, Thomas Ward, from near Lynchburg, Virginia. Thomas Ward was a simple farmer who settled in the community of Beckley, then a straggling village. He applied himself conscientiously to his labors in the fields, sought no public office and was a faithful member of the Missionary Baptist Church. His son, Gilbert Ward, followed in his footsteps and was a farmer all his life, his death occurring in 1913, when he was sixty-three years of age. He was too young to fight during the war between the states, but two of his brothers were soldiers in the Confederate service. He was also a member of the Missionary Baptist Church. Mr. Ward married Mary Fitzpatrick, daughter of Timothy Fitzpatrick, who came in young manhood from Dublin, Ireland, to Boston, Massachusetts, and then moved to Raleigh County, West Virginia, where he engaged in farming. Of the ten children born to Mr. and Mrs. Ward nine are still living, and Columbus M. is the eldest. Mrs. Ward still survives her husband at the age of sixty-five years, and is living on the old home farm.

Columbus M. Ward attended the free schools of his locality, and afterward leaving, like numerous others who have reached successful positions along professional lines, he commenced his career as a teacher in the rural schools. He taught six terms, following which he spent one year at Grant University, Chattanooga, Tennessee, and completed his law course at West Virginia University, from which he was duly graduated with his degree. He was admitted to the bar in 1907, at which time he commenced practice at Beckley in partnership with A. P. Farley and S. S. Sutphin, but in 1909 this partnership was dissolved and since then Mr. Ward has been engaged in practice alone. He has a heavy professional business both in real estate and criminal law, and in numerous cases has shown himself a thoroughly capable and learned member of his profession. He is a member of the Raleigh County Bar Association and keeps fully abreast of his profession. As a youth he attended all meetings of the debating society of his locality and took part therein. His first case as a lawyer was before a rural justice of the peace and involved a boy's suit worth $90. Mr. Ward spent a day in looking up the case, and when he brought it before the rural court it was fully prepared. This custom he has always followed. His keen analytical mind affords him unusual facility in working out the details of a case, and it is said that before going into the courtroom he must know that he is thoroughly prepared for every development that may arise during the trial. His contemporaries are quick to acknowledge his special abilities and his high position among the lawyers of the county.

In 1909 Mr. Ward married Miss Nellie Collins, daughter of John C. Collins, a well-known family of Fayette County, West Virginia. Mrs. Ward died one year later, leaving one son, John C. In 1913 Mr. Ward married Miss Grace Monroe, daughter of Thomas J. Monroe, of Mercer County, West Virginia, who came from Lynchburg, Virginia. To this union there have been born three children: Helen, Charles and Janice.

NORRIS H. REARDON is representative of the second generation of the Reardon family in the petroleum industry. His work in the oil fields of Pennsylvania began when he was a boy, and about thirty years ago he came to West Virginia and is one of the thoroughly expert men in the handling of all phases of drilling, construction and practical field operations. Mr. Reardon lives at Jacksonburg and is field superintendent for the Kanawha Oil Company.

He was born at Hendersonville, Pennsylvania, November 23, 1873. His grandfather, Patrick Reardon, was born in County Clare, Ireland, in 1791, and was about thirteen years of age when his parents left Ireland in 1804 and came to America. The family lived for several years in

New York City and in 1808 they established their home in Clarion County, Pennsylvania. Patrick Reardon was reared in Pennsylvania, married in Clarion County, where he followed farming, and subsequently joined the exodus to California as a forty-niner. He lost his life as the result of an explosion in his gold mine in California soon after going there. His son, Arthur B. Reardon, was born near Shippensburg in Clarion County, Pennsylvania, in 1850, and grew up and married in his native community. Practically all his life he has been an oil operator and producer. His experience was in the Pennsylvania fields until 1885, and since then much of his time has been spent in South America. He has prospected for oil and gas all over the southern continent, and for two years was with Mr. White of Morgantown, West Virginia, in Brazil. He is still associated with a Brazilian company, and in November, 1921, he returned to South America for the purpose of completing a well which had been drilled to a depth of 1,605 feet twenty-three years before. This well is 263 miles from the coast inland from Sa-Opola. Arthur B. Reardon is a republican and a member of the United Brethren Church. He married Delilah Amsler, who was born near Fryburg in Clarion County, October 13, 1851. Since 1879 they have had their home at Bradford in McKean County, Pennsylvania. He is a member of the Masonic fraternity. Their children are: Harvey H., a contractor and producer in the oil fields of Oklahoma, with home at Winona; Norris H.; Sarah Naomi, wife of William G. Sisson, a real estate man at Olean, New York; John Milton, whose home is at Bradford, but whose work is as field superintendent for the Penn-Mexican Oil Company at Tuxpam, Mexico.

Norris H. Reardon was about six years of age when his parents established their home at Bradford, and he was reared and educated in that city. He left school at the age of seventeen, and his first employment in the oil fields was in the Timbuck fields of McKean County for the firm of Jennings and Roth. He did pumping for three months, and then became a pumper in the Bradford field for John P. Zane until 1892. In the latter year Mr. Reardon came to Sistersville, West Virginia, soon after the first oil had been produced in this section. He began here with the Kanawha Oil Company as a roustabout, was made gang boss and soon afterward farm boss. From 1903 to 1915 Mr. Reardon was superintendent for the Delmar Oil Company at Folsom, Wetzel County. Since 1915 his headquarters have been at Jacksonburg, while he has been field superintendent for both the Kanawha Oil Company and the Delmar Oil Company. Mr. Reardon has a force of forty-three employees under his supervision, his offices being a Buffalo Run in Jacksonburg. He has full charge of all the operations involved in drilling, construction work and lifting of the oil, and also has charge of four compressing plants.

Mr. Reardon is a republican and is affiliated with Littleton Lodge No. 131, A. F. and A. M.; Sistersville Lodge No. 333, B. P. O. E.; and Sistersville Tent No. 3, Knights of the Maccabees. Besides responding to the needs of the Government like other good citizens at the time of the war he did much additional work as a member of the oil and gas committee at Mannington in Marion County.

Mr. Reardon married at Mannington in 1903, Miss Maud Lemmons, who was born near Jollytown, Greene County, Pennsylvania. They have three children: William H. born July 12, 1905, in the second year of the Jacksonburg High School; Beulah N., born December 4, 1906, in her first year in high school; and Lillian, born June 28, 1908, in the seventh grade of the public schools.

WARD COOK. Aside from any consideration that may attach to him as a member of one of the old and prominent families of the southwestern part of West Virginia, Ward Cook has established himself in the confidence and regard of the people of Raleigh County by the manner in which he has discharged the duties of various public positions, particularly that of county assessor, in which capacity he has served since 1921. For many years Mr. Cook was engaged in agricultural pursuits, and in every avenue of activity has shown himself industrious, straightforward and capable.

Ward Cook was born October 18, 1869, two and one-half miles west of Beckley, where now is situated Cabell Station, on the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad, and is a son of George P. and Sarah Jane (Cook) Cook, and a grandson of Thomas Cook, who was born in Wyoming County, this state. George P. Cook was born on Rockcastle Creek, in Wyoming County, near Pineville, in 1844, and during the war between the states served for one year in the Union Army as a member of Company I, Seventh Regiment, West Virginia Cavalry. In 1866 he came to Raleigh County and settled on a farm on White Stick Creek, where he continued to be engaged in successful agricultural operations during the remainder of his life. He was a staunch republican in politics and a deacon in the Baptist Church, in the faith of which he died in 1903. Mrs. Cook, who was not related to her husband prior to their marriage, was born in Summers County, West Virginia, a daughter of John Cook, and died in 1904, at the age of sixty-three years. There were four children in the family: Marietta, the wife of D. S. Cline, engaged in agricultural pursuits at Mabscott, near Beckley; Nellie, the wife of A. M. Godhey, of Beckley, who occupies the post of Raleigh County jailer; Emma, who died at the age of twenty years as the wife of John C. Riffe, of this county, and Ward.

Ward Cook attended the home schools and at the age of nineteen years taught one term of school at Pineville, Wyoming County. During the next quarter of a century he applied himself to farming, first spending two years on his home farm and then purchasing a farm at Mabscott, Raleigh County, where he spent twenty-three years and made success of his operations. In 1909 he was appointed deputy county assessor, a position which he held under J. C. Miley until 1912. In 1917 he was chosen for the position of county jailer, which he filled very satisfactorily up to and including 1920, and in 1921 was elected county assessor, which position he holds at this time. Mr. Cook makes an excellent executive, courteous, industrious and efficient, and well merits the confidence in which he is held by his fellow-citizens. His office is located in the Court House at Beckley, and visitors thereto find him at all times ready to inform them regarding the business of his department and to help them in any way in the straightening out of their perplexities as to tax matters. In political affairs he is a staunch republican, and, with his family, is a member of the Baptist Church. He has several fraternal affiliations.

In 1890 Mr. Cook was united in marriage with Miss Julia Wills, daughter of Enoch Wills, of Wyoming County, and to this union there have been born six children: Lake Erie, the wife of G. R. Hutchison, of Beckley; E. H., who is his father's assistant in the assessor's office; Ethel, who is the wife of C. M. Bruce, of Beckley; Wanda, wife of L. L. Warden, of Stotesbury; and Rebecca and Rose, who are attending the public schools of Beckley.

KYLE M. JARRELL, M. D. Engaged in the practice of medicine at Beckley since 1914, Dr. Kyle M. Jarrell has gained a firm place in the confidence and esteem of the people of this community both as a physician and a citizen. He is recognized as a capable practitioner and a specialist in the line of children's diseases, and at present occupies a position on the staff of the King's Daughters Hospital. He was born near Dorothy, Raleigh County, West Virginia, October 15, 1881, and is a son of William H. and Lollie (Snuffer) Jarrell. His father, born in 1850, in West Virginia, has been engaged in agricultural pursuits all his life, and since 1887 has resided on a well-improved property at Clear Creek, where he continues his operations with the usual good management and industry that characterized his earlier years. He is a democrat in politics and one of his community's public-spirited citizens. He and Mrs. Jarrell are highly respected and are consistent members of the Presbyterian Church. They have three children. Dennis, a graduate of the College of Physicians and Surgeons, Baltimore, Maryland, class of 1915, entered the Army Medical Corps during the World war, trained at Camp Gretna, Georgia, where he received a lieutenant's commission, was promoted to a captaincy, spent two years overseas and saw service in first aid on the battle lines. Since his return in 1919 he has been associated with his brother in practice at Beckley. Bessie is the wife of Dr. J. F. Easton, also a graduate of the College of Physicians and Surgeons at Baltimore, and now engaged in practice at Clear Creek.

Kyle M. Jarrell received his early education in the little old log schoolhouse located on Clear Creek, following which he had the advantage of one year's attendance at Beckley Institute, where Professor White was his instructor. It was his youthful ambition to enter the medical profession, but the family finances were not in a condition to pay for his education, and he accordingly set out to earn the means of realizing his desires. For two years he taught school at Dorothy, saving $100 each year out of his small salary, and in the vacation periods worked in saw-mills and lumber camps. With the money thus earned, and a small amount borrowed from his father and long since paid back, he entered the medical college of the University of Maryland, from which he was graduated as a member of the class of 1906, receiving the degree of Doctor of Medicine. For one year following he was an interne at University Hospital, Baltimore, and then began the practice of his calling at his home community of Clear Creek. In 1914 he did special work at the Boston City Hospital and at the Infants Hospital, Harvard, and in the same year began practice at Beckley, where he has since remained. Doctor Jarrell has always been a great lover of children, and this has caused him to make a special study of the diseases of children, in which he is accounted an authority. He was president of the board of health of Raleigh County from 1908 to 1912, and was a member of the draft board of Raleigh County during the World war, and sent 4,000 soldiers to the training camps. Doctor Jarrell belongs to the various organizations of his profession and keeps in touch with the latest advancements made. He is an elder in the Presbyterian Church, and while living at Clear Creek was superintendent of the Sunday school. Fraternally he is affiliated with Beckley Lodge No. 95, A. F. and A. M.; Beckley Chapter, R. A. M.; Mount Hope Commandery, K. T.; Beni-Kedem Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S., and the Knights of Pythias; and also holds membership in the Kiwanis Club of Beckley and the Beckley Chamber of Commerce. In his political views he is a democrat.

On June 15, 1910, Doctor Jarrell was united in marriage with Miss Mabel D. Allen, of Lowell, Massachusetts, daughter of George F. Allen, and to them there have been born three children: Arthur P., Eileen Lucile and Kyle M., Jr.

JACKSON SMITH. After twenty-four years in the Court House of Raleigh County at Beckley, at the close of his present term in the capacity of county clerk, or two terms as circuit clerk and two terms as county clerk, the verdict of the people of this county is that Jackson Smith has rendered services that have been highly efficient, strongly conscientious, markedly faithful and at all times courteous. His record as a public servant is one that compares favorably with those of any other men who have held office in this part of West Virginia, and should serve as an example worthy of emulation by other men placed in positions of responsibility by the voters.

Mr. Smith was born on a farm which was situated on the present site of Pear, Raleigh County, October 21, 1868, a son of James and Susan (Bennett) Smith and a grandson of Jacob Smith. Jacob Smith was born in Rockbridge County, Virginia, and as a young man moved to Muddy Creek, Greenbrier County, West Virginia, whence he went to the present site of Quinimont, Fayette County. He was the owner of 1,000 acres of land, on a part of which was later built the towns of Prince and Quinimont. He carried on agricultural pursuits all his life and died in 1882. James Smith was born at Quinimont, West Virginia, in 1841, and as a young man engaged in farming. When the war between the states came on he enlisted in the Union army, and served until the close of the struggle, when he returned to agricultural operations. He was a capable business man and an able farmer and made a success of his career. He was a faithful member of the Baptist Church, and died in that faith in 1919. He married Susan Bennett, who was born at Pear, West Virginia, a daughter of Jacob Bennett, who was born in what is now Raleigh County, but was then Logan County, and owned a large tract of land, approximating 1,500 acres. He was well-to-do and highly respected and lived to a ripe old age. Mrs. Smith still survives her husband, at the age of eighty-two years, and is a member of the Baptist Church. She and her husband were the parents of the following children: Thomas L., who is engaged in the timber business in Fayette County, specializing in supplying timber used in the mines; Jackson, of this record; Ervin, who is engaged in mining at Glen Morgan, Raleigh County; Mary Ann, the wife of E. B. Stover, engaged in the timber business at Sylvia, Raleigh County; Nancy, who is the wife of Harvey Gill, a miner of Grand View, Raleigh County; Martha, the wife of Cyrus Houchins, a merchant at Pride, Mercer County; and Susan, the wife of Allen Bennett, a farmer on Meadow Creek, Summers County.

Jackson Smith attended a subscription school at home and one at Grims Landing in Mason County, and at the age of twenty years adopted the profession of teaching, his career in this connection beginning with a school at New, Raleigh County. During the next sixteen years he continued his educational work, and in that time taught eighteen schools. Many prominent citizens of Raleigh County went to school to Mr. Smith, who was at all times regarded as a very efficient and popular instructor of the young. In 1890 Mr. Smith began his public service to the citizens of Raleigh County by taking the census of Richmond District, and from that time to the present has been constantly before the people in some official capacity, in which he has given an excellent account of himself. In 1902 he was elected circuit clerk of Raleigh County, taking office January 1, 1903, and was re-elected in 1908, in which year, so well had he performed his duties, he was given the unqualified endorsement of three parties, the republicans, the democrats and the prohibitionists. In 1914 he was elected county clerk, an office to which he has since been re-elected. His first election, in 1902, was somewhat close, as he received a majority of only 550 votes, but at the present time his record is such that he is considered practically unbeatable. He is a republican in his political views, but has never allowed partisanship to affect the manner in which he discharges the duties of his office. Reared in the faith of the Christian Church, he has been active in the work thereof for a number of years and a teacher in Sunday schools for a long period, and since coming to Beckley has been a deacon.

In 1891 Mr. Smith was united in marriage with Miss Minnie May Hurt, who was born at Beckley, and to this union there have been born the following children: Aubrey Overton, who is chief clerk in the sheriff's office, formerly a student at the Officers' Training Camp at Morgantown; Thelma Harland, who is her father's assistant in the county clerk's office; Orllif Jaxon, who is attending the Beckley High School; Wendell Ware, attending Fishburne Military School, at Waynesboro; and Alma Evelyn, who is attending school. All the members of the family are active in the work of the Christian Church.

EDWARD J. FLANIGAN. The record of the business men of Wyoming County demonstrates that many of them have risen to places of responsibility because they have possessed more than average ability and have applied to their work a conscientious thoroughness which in the end justified the trouble and time expended. Competition has always been strenuous for people who have invaded the coal fields of West Virginia, but there have always been men who have risen to the occasion when demands have been made upon them, and one of these is Edward J. Flanigan, general manager of the Sabine Smokeless Collieries Corporation, with mines at Otsego on the Virginian Railroad in Wyoming County.

Mr. Flanigan was born January 10, 1874, in Schuylkill County, Pennsylvania. His father, Michael Flanigan, a miner, was born in Scotland, to which country his parents had removed from Ireland. As a young man he immigrated to the United States and settled in Schuylkill County, Pennsylvania, where he rose steadily from ordinary coal miner to general manager of the Lehigh Coal and Navigation Company. In 1906 he came from Pennsylvania to West Virginia and became superintendent of the King Coal Company and the Tidewater Coal and Coke Company in McDowell County, at Kimball, on the Norfolk & Western Railroad.

Edward J. Flanigan entered the mines at the youthful age of nine years, and therefore his educational training was somewhat circumscribed, but he made the most of his opportunities and gained a practical knowledge of the essentials of an education, which has since been supplemented by reading and self-teaching, so that he now has a broad knowledge of matters in general and possesses information on many useful subjects. When he began his career it was in the capacity of picking slate, and from then he has worked in every possible capacity up to the office of general manager, all of his promotions having been gained through real merit and industry. In 1896 Mr. Flanigan came to Glenalum, Mingo County, West Virginia, in the position of mine foreman and superintendent under his uncle, P. P. Flanigan. He remained in the Mingo field for about eight years, and was then appointed state mine inspector, with headquarters at Kimball. Later he opened the Lynwin Coal Company mines in the Winding Gulf District, as a stockholder and superintendent of the company, of which he later became manager. In 1919 Mr. Flanigan became associated with the Beckley Coal Mining Company in Fayette County, but in May, 1920, transferred his services to the Sabine Smokeless Coal Corporation. This concern's mines are at Otsego, Wyoming County, on the Virginian Railroad, but Mr. Flanigan makes his home at Beckley.

Mr. Flanigan is a member of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. While a good Irishman, he holds his American citizenship high. Throughout his career he has had the happy faculty of making friends, and especially so among the so-called common people, for his sympathies are frankly with the masses, whom he understands and with whom he can work in harmony. Of him it may be said that during his career he has never shrank from a duty or betrayed a trust, and that at all times he has been a respecter of the law. In his political tendencies he is inclined toward republicanism and supports the candidates and principles of that party in national and state elections but in purely local affairs generally prefers to use his own judgment in the choice of candidates and votes rather for the man than the party.

DAN BIAS. In the trying period of reconstruction after any great war one of the most serious problems confronting the officials is the enforcement of the laws, and the creation and maintenance of a proper respect for them. In some communities those in authority have lamentably fallen short of living up to very high standards, but Lincoln County, West Virginia, is fortunate in having as its high sheriff Dan Bias, whose utter fearlessness, high personal integrity and great popularity with all classes have given him prestige and secured for his section a remarkable record. Mr. Bias belongs to one of the old and honored families of the South, and he is very proud of it and his descent from men and women of stainless honor and courageous deeds.

Dan Bias is a native son of the county, where he was born July 5, 1855. His father, Anderson Bias, was born in West Virginia, while his mother, Mrs. Nancy (Bias) Bias was born in Virginia, and they were farming people, and for a number of years he was overseer of the poor of Lincoln County. The sheriff had two brothers to serve in the war between the North and the South, Enos and Linvil, the latter being a sergeant, and both were in the Third Virginia Cavalry, under Capt. John Witcher. They were in all of the campaigns in the Shenandoah Valley, and although participating in all of the heavy fighting, escaped any serious injury.

Completing his schooldays at sixteen, Dan Bias began working on the farm, and later became seriously interested in politics. He was appointed deputy sheriff under Sheriff Adkins, and served under him from 1896 to 1900, and was re-appointed under Sheriff H. H. Baker, and served until 1904. He then began farming on his own account, and continued in this occupation until his election to the office of high sheriff in November, 1920, and assumed the duties of his office in January, 1921. During the late war he rendered an appreciated service by operating his farm at full capacity.

On December 20, 1877, Mr. Bias married Emily Selvinas Alford, a daughter of James and Mary Jane Alford, Lincoln County farming people who came here from Virginia. Mr. and Mrs. Bias became the parents of nine children, eight of whom survive, namely: S. C., who married Maggie Powell, have four children and are living in Lincoln County, but Miss Powell came from Kentucky; A. M., who married Miss Polley, lives at Logan, Logan County, West Virginia; E. W., who married Ersie Johnson, and they had one child, and he was a brakeman on the Norfolk & Western Railroad when he was run over by a train in 1920 and killed; Queen Victoria, who married Frank Seites, of Lincoln County, and has six children; E. K., who married first Emma Galloway, had two children, and after her death he married Hattie Johnson, they have three children, and both wives were of Lincoln County; Crosby Ellis, who married Eva Johnson, of Lincoln County, has five children; Chauncey M., who married Essie Zigan, has two living children, their third one having died; Charles H., who is unmarried; and Otis O., who married Addie Hazelett, and has one child. Mr. Bias is not connected with any religious organization. He is a zealous member of Hamlin Lodge, A. F. and A. M., lives up to the highest ideals of his fraternity, and is a fine example of the Christian gentleman of the old school. While he is rigorous in his prosecution of a criminal, he is equally insistent in securing for each man fair treatment, and will not permit any persecution of anyone under his charge. Because of his well-known character and his stainless reputation the lawless element recognize that Lincoln County is not a profitable field for their nefarious operations, and as a rule give this region a wide berth. Such men as Sheriff Bias not only secure results for their own communities, but set an example which stimulates other officials to live up to their oath of office, and in this way their influence is much more than local.

HARRY F. HARTLEY. Straightforwardness of purpose and forcefulness in action combine for decisive results in the life of any individual. It is not always to the great that the most praise for correct living should be given. The men who discharge capably and cheerfully the responsibilities laid upon their shoulders and do their full duty in whatever walk of life destiny places them are entitled to as much credit as those whose names are household words. It is not always difficult to rise to a big occasion; the real courage and ability is found in everyday life, in the performance of the tasks relating to ordinary undertakings. Judged by these standards a career that has been exemplary is that of Harry F. Hartley, president of the Board of Education of Slab Fork School District, and one of the well-known and popular educators of Wyoming County.

Mr. Hartley was born at Lysander, Athens County, Ohio, March 31, 1882, and is a son of Samuel and Phoebe (Sprague) Hartley. Samuel Hartley was a life-long farmer in Ohio, where he applied himself industriously to the tilling of the soil, and where his death occurred June 30, 1918, when he was sixty-four years of age. He was greatly attached to his home and family, and never sought public honors or political preference, and much of his time was spent with his books, so that he became a very well-read man. He voted the republican ticket, and was a member of Graham Chapel of the Christian Church, as was his faithful and estimable wife, who died, greatly mourned, August 31, 1913, when fifty-five years of age. They were the parents of five sons and five daughters.

Harry F. Hartley attended the country schools in the neighborhood of his father's Ohio farm, and then pursued a course at Judson (Ohio) High School, where he took all the subjects of the curriculum. Following this he had the advantages of a business course at the Ohio University of Athens, and then returned to the home farm, where he remained until twenty-four years of age, in the meantime teaching school for four terms. After his commercial course Mr. Hartley was employed by the Raleigh Lumber Company of Raleigh, West Virginia, in the capacity of stenographer. This company in 1906 was absorbed by the Ritter Lumber Company, with which Mr. Hartley remained at Raleigh until 1908, when he went to Beckley with the same company as secretary to Harvey Derne, division superintendent. He remained at Beckley for five years, three years as secretary to Mr. Derne and the remainder of the time as secretary to William Pryor, and in August, 1913, came to Maben in the same capacity but with greater responsibilities, as the great plant at Maben is under his supervision a great deal of the time, he now being chief clerk and assistant to the division superintendent.

During all this time Mr. Hartley has maintained his interest in the cause of education, always a paramount interest with him. He taught his first school when only eighteen years of age, was appointed a member of the board in 1919 and elected in 1920, and since the inauguration of the Slab Fork School District has acted as its president. During his administration of the affairs of this position there have been built the high school at Mullens, a modern, well-equipped structure, a six-room school building at Ifman, a five-room school building at Milam and schools for colored children at Mullens and Ifman. He has been untiring and unselfish in his labors in behalf of the children of his locality in an educational way, and his interest has made him popular with teachers, parents and pupils alike.

On November 29, 1906, Mr. Hartley was united in marriage with Miss Rose K. Warren, of Federal, Athens County, Ohio, daughter of Rev. William J. Warren, a minister of the Christian faith at Federal. To this union there have been born four children: Clifford, Catherine, Mabel and Harry F., Jr. Mr. and Mrs. Hartley are active members of the Christian Church at Beckley, of which Mr. Hartley was an elder while residing at Beckley. They were the leading movers in the building of the Union Church for the people at Maben, and Mr. Hartley has served as Sunday school teacher or superintendent at various places for sixteen years. He is a Master Mason, having been initiated at Mullens.

SYDNEY HERBERT DAVIS. One of the best known men of Mullens is Sydney Herbert Davis, generally spoken of and to as Herbert Davis, who not only acts as station agent at this point for the Virginian Railroad, but is president of the Wyoming Baking Company and interested in numerous other enterprises. His career has been one of successful activity, and while he has been advancing himself in a material way he has attracted numerous lasting friendships.

Mr. Davis was born at Prospect, Prince Edward County, Virginia, November 22, 1878, and is a son of S. Baxter and Nannie B. (Brightwell) Davis. His father, who was born in 1851, learned telegraphy when still a youth, and was one of the first to develop into a Morse code operator, serving the Norfolk & Western Railroad for close to half a century, being at different times agent at Prospect and ticket agent at Farmville. He is now retired from active affairs, his home being at Dumbarton, Virginia. When a young man he utilized a fine voice in teaching singing in the rural districts. He was always active in church and Sunday school work, being a devout member of the Methodist faith. When he had retired from his work with the railroad Mr. Davis' energetic nature would not allow him to remain totally idle, and at the age of sixty-nine years, after he had applied for and received a life insurance policy on his own life, he became agent for the Equitable Life Insurance Company of Richmond, Virginia. He is also receiving compensation as a member of the retired list of the Norfolk & Western Railroad. In fraternal matters he affiliates with the Masons, and has been master of his lodge several times. He has four sons and a daughter, two of his sons being railroad men, while a third, Norwood, is chief clerk of the car allotment commission of Bluefield, West Virginia.

Sydney Herbert Davis spent his schooldays at Farmville and Prospect, and at the age of twenty years commenced his railroad career as an employee of the Norfolk & Western Railroad Company. Like his father, he had learned telegraphy early, and in addition to serving as an operator also worked as relief station agent. For two years he was located at Lynchburg, Virginia, and for a like period at Suffolk, that state, in the freight office at both places. Mr. Davis then transferred his services to the Virginian Railroad, being agent at Victoria, Virginia, for two years, and in 1912 was sent to Woodbay, Raleigh County, where he remained two years, his next location being Maben, Wyoming County, West Virginia. In 1918 he came to Mullens, and since then has acted as station agent and has taken a leading and important part in the public life of the community, the advancement of which he has aided in many ways. He has been a member of the city council, where he has worked constructively and to good effect in securing civic improvements and other benefits, has helped education as a member of the board of school directors, and in other directions has been a contributor to the general progress and welfare of the community. As a fraternalist he is a member of the Masonic Blue Lodge and Chapter at Lynchburg, Virginia, the Commandery at Mount Hope, West Virginia, and the Shrine at Charleston, and is also affiliated with the Knights of Pythias and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, in both of which he has many friends. His business connections include the presidency of the Wyoming Baking Company, a successful concern of Mullens, of which he was one of the founders.

On January 2, 1907, Mr. Davis was united in marriage to Miss Nan Katharine Poindexter, daughter of John Poindexter, of Bedford County, Virginia, and to this union there have been born three children: Mildred, Dexter and William.

EMERSON V. ROMIG. In the twenty years of his residence at Keyser Mr. Romig has made for himself and has been drawn into, through the votes of the people and by his public-spirited enterprise, a most vital relationship with the community. He is the present mayor, is the leading druggist of the town, and has devoted money and personal effort to the development of the fruit industry in this section of the state.

Mr. Romig is a native of Ohio, born in Tuscarawas County, October 4, 1875. His grandfather, Edward Romig, was of Pennsylvania-Dutch ancestry, but was perhaps a native of Tuscarawas County, Ohio, where the family settled between 1800 and 1803. Edward Romig married Elizabeth Auld, of a family of Harrison County, Ohio, of English ancestry. Their children were: Mrs. Sarah Welfley, who spent her life in Tuscarawas County; Elizabeth, who married Philip Myers and died in the same county; Isaiah, who was a Union soldier during the Civil war, and spent his last years in Texas; Aaron, mentioned below; Miss Mary, still living in Tuscarawas County; and Theophilus, who died at the old parental homestead.

Aaron D. Romig, father of the Keyser business man, was born in Tuscarawas County, and is living, at the age of seventy-five, on his farm at Warwick Township, that county. He married Melissa E. McCreery, daughter of James McCreery, whose ancestor came into Tuscarawas County on horseback when all the country was in the woods. The children of Aaron Romig and wife are: James S., of Pittsburgh; Emerson V.; Otto V., of Dover, Ohio; and Grace, at home.

Emerson V. Romig grew up on a farm and had the experience and training of an Ohio farm boy. From the country schools he entered the high school at Gnadenhütten in his native county, and gained his first knowledge of pharmacy as clerk in the drug business at Gnadenhütten. A year later he began the study of pharmacy in Seio College, a school since combined with the Pittsburgh College of Pharmacy. He graduated in 1899, and at once came to West Virginia, locating at Thomas in Tucker County, where he managed the drug store of Dr. O. H. Hoffman. Leaving Thomas, he went to Elkins in Randolph County, and for one year was clerk and pharmacist for William Nydegger.

In 1903 he came to Keyser, purchasing the drug business of Dr. J. W. Hall. In 1904 he organized the Romig Drug Company, capitalized at $10,000, but the capital has since been increased to $15,000. The company in 1905 bought the drug business of L. L. Kimes & Brother. Doctor Romig is secretary, treasurer and manager of this prosperous business, while R. G. Richardson is president of the company. Their store is one of the best equipped and stocked retail drug stores in this part of the state. Mr. Romig is a member of the West Virginia State Pharmaceutical Association and the National Association of Retail Druggists, and has participated in the program of discussions at various meetings of these bodies.

Reference has already been made to Mr. Romig's interest in the horticulture of this section. He is a stockholder and director of the Knobley Mountain Orchard Company, the Buckhorn Peach Company and the Park Orchard Company. These three companies have done some important development work in planting and maintaining commercial orchards, and the properties now owned by these companies constitute an imposing aggregate in the horticultural enterprise of this part of the state, though the maximum profits from the business have not yet been realized. The Knobley Mountain project embraces 700 acres, almost altogether in apples, there being 30,000 bearing trees. The Buckhorn Peach Company has some 200 acres, with 10,000 bearing peach trees. The Park Orchard is also given over to peaches, and is somewhat larger than the Buckhorn.

Mr. Romig was a member of the first council of Keyser under the commission form of government, and was elected and assigned to the department of finance. He served in that capacity four years. Then, after a lapse of several years, he was elected mayor, and began his term in 1921 as the successor of Mayor Pifer. In addition to the routine of municipal administration the chief concern of Mayor Romig is to increase the water supply at Keyser. He is a republican in politics, casting his first vote for Major McKinley. He has taken the Masonic degrees at Keyser in the lodge and chapter, and is a steward in the Methodist Episcopal Church.

At Keyser, October 4, 1905, he married Miss Catherine Grove, a native of Grant County, West Virginia, and daughter of John and Angie (Clark) Grove. Mrs. Romig is a graduate nurse of the Western Maryland Hospital at Cumberland, and was one of the first staff of nurses at the Hoffman Hospital at Keyser. Mr. and Mrs. Romig have three sons: Grove, David and Richard.

During the World war Mr. Romig was a "Dollar-a-Year Man" designated to solicit recruits for the Merchant Marine. He personally registered under the last draft, but had not received his questionnaire when the armistice was signed.

STEPHEN D. FRANTZ. As the demand for only sound banking institutions increases and the value of such institutions to the community is more and more appreciated, the character of the men who administer their affairs receives closer attention, and when these individuals have been found efficient and worthy confidence in their financial concerns is solidified. One of the sound and conservative institutions of this character in Wyoming County is the Bank of Mullens, the cashier of which, Stephen D. Frantz, has been identified with this banking house for ten years.

Mr. Frantz was born on a farm at Maywood, Fayette County, West Virginia, September 12, 1887, a son of Noah D. and Mattie (Hedrick) Frantz. His father, born in Franklin County, Virginia, died at Huntington, West Virginia, in 1921, aged sixty-seven years, while his mother, a native of Greenbrier County, West Virginia, survives her husband as a resident of Huntington, being sixty-five years of age. Noah D. Frantz was sixteen years of age when his parents moved to West Virginia, and as a young man he was employed by the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad Company at Stretcher Neck Tunnel. His first employment was as a mule driver, but before the tunnel was completed he had been advanced to the position of stone mason. Later he developed into a contractor, and as such built a bridge on the Sewell Valley Railroad, but finally turned his attention to farming, a vocation in which he won a gratifying success. In 1919 he retired from active labor and moved to Huntington, where he spent the rest of his life. He was a democrat in politics and was reared in the religious faith of the Junkards, while his widow is a member of the Methodist Church. Of their children six survive: L. N., who is vice president of the American Bank and Trust Company of Huntington; Elsie, who is the wife of W. L. Bailey, of Mount Hope, West Virginia; Stephen D., of this review; Edna, who is the wife of H. K. Miles, of Clifton, West Virginia; L. E., who is engaged in the insurance business at Mullens; and Truma, who is unmarried and makes her home with her mother at Huntington.

Stephen D. Frantz attended school in the vicinity of his birthplace in Fayette County, following which he supplemented this training with a commercial course at Denmore's Business College at Staunton, Virginia, which he completed in 1910. Previous to this he had worked on the farm at home, but then felt qualified for other employment and accepted a position in the office of the New River Lumber Company at McDonald, West Virginia. Later he was employed in the office of the P. M. Snyder Lumber Company at Mount Hope, where he remained until 1912, at that time joining the Bank of Mullens. This institution was organized in 1909, opening its doors for business January 1, 1910. Its first officers were: John Faulkner, president; V. E. Deegans, vice president; and L. N. Frantz, cashier. The present officers are: W. E. Deegans, president; L. N. Frantz, vice president; and Stephen D. Frantz, cashier. He is also a member of the board of directors of the Corine Coal Company.

Mr. Frantz has also been prominent in public affairs and has rendered efficient service to his community. He was its recorder of Mullens for three successive years, following which he refused to accept a re-election, and was also postmaster of Mullens for six years, during the administrations of President Wilson. His political tendencies make him a staunch democrat. A thirty-second degree Mason, Mr. Frantz is a past master of Mullens Lodge, A. F. and A. M., a member of Beckley Chapter, R. A. M., Mount Hope Commandery, K. T., and Wheeling Consistory. He also holds membership in Beni-Kedem Temple, A. O. N. M. S., in the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Knights of Pythias, in which latter he is a past chancellor.

DOUGLAS W. BROWN is a member of a Huntington law firm that handles perhaps as large a corporation and general practice as any other firm in the state. Mr. Brown has helped earn the high reputation and prestige of this firm, and his abilities have earned him wide popularity in the profession, which accounts for his present dignified honor of being president of the West Virginia Bar Association.

Mr. Brown was born in Western Virginia, at Hillsville, Carroll County, August 11, 1877. His ancestors were Scotch people and early sought a home in the western portions of old Virginia. The Huntington attorney has good reason to cherish the memories of both his grandfathers. His grandfather Rev. Lee C. Brown was born in Virginia in 1813, as a minister of the Presbyterian Church, preaching in Wythe and Carroll counties and located in Carroll County in 1852. In Carroll County he settled in the Pine Creek vicinity, becoming pastor of the Bethesda Presbyterian church, and at the same time he opened a school of the higher grades for young men, a school he named "Studium." A few years later he removed to Hillsville, where he became pastor of a Presbyterian congregation and also a member of the faculty of the noted Ben Thompson Academy. Rev. Lee C. Brown died in Carroll County in 1888. He married Pauline Hoge, a native of Virginia, who also died in Carroll County.

Their son, Douglas B. Brown, was born at Mechanicsburg, West Virginia, September 16, 1840, and was about twelve years of age when his parents removed to Carroll County. He acquired a very thorough academic training at the Studium and at the Ben Thompson Academy, and in 1859 began the study of law in the office of Col. A. J. Teadman, diligently prosecuting his studies until the spring of 1861. He volunteered with the first company of soldiers that went out from Carroll County under Capt. W. R. Jennings. This company became part of Kemper's Brigade, in Pickett's famous division, and Douglas B. Brown was one of the soldiers who participated in that immortal charge up the long hill at Gettysburg. He continued in the service until his command was surrendered at Appomattox in April, 1865. After the war Douglas B. Brown devoted his time largely to educational work, though he was always a newspaper publisher and for a number of years was principal of schools at Dover, Delaware. Then returning to his home county in Virginia, he was county superintendent of schools of Carroll County twelve years. From 1885 until 1892 he was a proof reader in the Government printing office at Washington. He spent his last years at Hillsville, where he died October 26, 1916. He was a democrat and a very devout Presbyterian. The crowning success of his life was his influence upon others, particularly the young. He was noted for his promptitude, punctuality and devotion to duty, and as a teacher he was distinguished as much by the inspirational qualities of his leadership as by the facts of learning. He was an instructor of rare tact and ability, and as father of a family it was his chief purpose and ambition to train and educate his children for real usefulness, and it was his good fortune that he lived to see them all fully embarked upon such careers, performing the part of intelligent and virtuous citizens, and earning both the esteem and respect of society.

Douglas B. Brown married Miss Mary L. Lindsey, who was born in Carroll County, September 13, 1841, and is still living, at the age of eighty years, at Hillsville. Of their children the oldest is Robert Lee, a teacher in the public schools at Hillsville. Charles H., the second son, is general agent at Columbus, Ohio, for the Norfolk & Western Railway Company. Bessie is the wife of Jesse H. Fugate, a merchant of Radford, Virginia. William H. lives at Norfolk and is tidewater manager of the New England Coal & Coke Company.

Douglas W. Brown, youngest of the family, received most of his early education in Washington, D. C., attending high school there until the senior year. He graduated in 1893 from the Wytheville Male Academy at Wytheville, Virginia. He then entered the law office of Frank S. Blair, former attorney general of the State of Virginia, at Wytheville. Mr. Brown was admitted to the Virginia bar in 1898. His professional career has been entirely in West Virginia. After his admission he practiced at Williamson in Mingo County until 1909, and in the latter year came to Huntington and formed a partnership with C. W. Campbell, and Cary N. Davis, under the firm name of Campbell, Brown & Davis. In 1919, there was a merger of the firms of Enslow, Fitzpatrick & Baker (Mr. Herbert Fitzpatrick being the sole survivor of such firm, and Campbell, Brown & Davis under the firm name of Fitzpatrick, Campbell, Brown & Davis. On March 1, 1922, Mr. Campbell retired from the practice of law, and the present firm of Fitzpatrick, Brown & Davis was formed.

This law firm is state counsel for the Chesapeake & Ohio Railway Company. Other prominent corporate interests represented by them as attorneys are the Western Union Telegraph Company, American Railway Express Company, Columbia Gas & Electric Company, American Car & Foundry Company, C. & P. Telephone Company, Huntington National Bank, First National Bank of Huntington, Huntington Development & Gas Company, Fidelity & Casualty Company, Standard Accident & Insurance Company, and Huntington Water Company. The firm is also financially interested in many business affairs.

Mr. Brown besides the honor he enjoys as president of the West Virginia State Bar Association is a former president of the Cabell County Bar Association, former vice president for West Virginia and member of the American Bar Association. He is a democrat, a member of the Presbyterian Church, Huntington Rotary Club and Guyandotte Club. During the war he was one of the "Four-Minute" speakers in Cabell County, and was ready with his time and means to further every patriotic drive.

On October 2, 1902, at Williamson, Mr. Brown married Miss Mary G. Williams, daughter of John E. and Flora

A. G. (Glidden) Williams. Her father was a leading coal operator at Williamson, where he died, and her mother is still living there. Mrs. Brown is a graduate of the Chicago Conservatory of Music and a proficient violinist. Six children have been born to their marriage: Walter L., born in 1903, is a graduate of the Huntington High School and now a sophomore in the University of Virginia. John E., born in 1905, is a student in the Augusta Military Academy at Fort Defiance, Virginia. Flora, born in 1907, is in the Huntington High School. The three youngest children are Charlotte, born in 1909, Douglas W., Jr., born in 1912, and Campbell, born in 1915.

HON. LEE DANIEL NEWMAN. Some individuals seem destined from the start to leave a strong impress upon their age and community and to become responsible for much that tends toward the highest possible form of general locality interests. Such men, of necessity, possess dominant personalities and trenchant characteristics, and through them guide others along paths of usefulness and successful and constructive operations. In this class undoubtedly stands Hon. Lee Daniel Newman, police judge of Huntington and city commissioner of health and charity, whose entire self-made career has been one well worthy of emulation.

Judge Newman was born February 14, 1882, at Sao Paulo, Brazil, South America, a son of Junius E. and Eugenia (Daniels) Newman. Isaac T. Newman, the grandfather of Judge Newman, was born in England, and in young manhood immigrated to the United States, settling in Mason County, West Virginia, where he became a successful agriculturist and extensive land owner, he and two others at one time owning practically the entire county. He died there prior to the birth of his grandson. In Mason County he married Mary Elizabeth Elliott, who was born in England and died in Mason County.

Junius E. Newman was born in 1819, in Mason County, Virginia (now West Virginia), where he was reared and educated, and where he early became a minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church. During the Civil war he served as a chaplain in the Confederate army, and following the close of that struggle he became a missionary and as such went to Brazil. There he met Eugenia Daniels, who was born in 1849, at Birmingham, Alabama, but whose parents, losing all they had in the great struggle between the North and South, had moved to Brazil. Because of failing health and advancing years Reverend Newman gave up his missionary labors in 1891 and returned to Point Pleasant, Mason County, West Virginia, where his death occurred in 1892. His widow survived him until November 25, 1921, when she passed away at Huntington. Reverend Newman was a democrat in politics and a member of the Masonic fraternity. He and his worthy wife were the parents of four children: Alfred E., a construction engineer of San Francisco, California; Lee Daniel, of this notice; Junius E., a newspaper publisher of Dayton, Ohio; and Kate, the wife of Frank McDoney, a train dispatcher at Huntington for the Chesapeake & Ohio Railway.

Lee Daniel Newman received his early education in the rural schools of Mason County, West Virginia, and this was later supplemented by a correspondence course in civil engineering in the International Correspondence School of Scranton, Pennsylvania, and a course in law with Putnam & Sons of New York City. In the meantime, at the tender age of eleven years, he had commenced to work on a farm in Mason County, and when he was seventeen years old secured employment with the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad Company at Huntington, in the service of which he worked his way up to the position of supervisor of electrical equipment. He resigned his position in 1916 and from January of that year until June, 1918, was the representative of organized labor for thirteen railroads in the southeastern part of the United States, his work necessitating the spending of much of his time at Washington, D. C. In May, 1918, Mr. Newman was elected commissioner of health and charity and police judge of Huntington, the duties of which positions he assumed in the following month. His offices are situated in the City Hall. Judge Newman has brought to the discharge of his duties a conscientious effort to bring about movements for the general welfare, and his sincerity, zeal and energy have won him countless supporters and admirers.

Politically Judge Newman is a democrat, and his religious connection is with the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. He is a member of Marshall Lodge No. 121, I. O. O. F., of Huntington; Huntington Lodge No. 313, B. P. O. E., and the Guyan Country Club of Huntington. He has a business interest in the Enterprise Garage of this city. Judge Newman's modern home is situated at No. 1619 Tenth Avenue in one of the desirable residential districts of the city.

CLARENCE AUBREY BROCKMAN. Circumstances turned C. A. Brockman when a youth into a career associated with the great coal industry of West Virginia, and in the past twenty years he has risen high in the ranks of the leading coal operators of the state.

Mr. Brockman, whose home is in Charleston, was born in Louisa County, Virginia, in 1881, and was reared and educated in his native county. In 1900 he came to West Virginia and entered the service of the Victoria Coal & Coke Company at Caperton, Fayette County. During the next succeeding two years he filled practically every position in the coal mining industry, including that of mine superintendent. So well did he acquit himself in his service for others that he was admirably qualified to become a coal operator on his own account.

Mr. Brockman established his home in Charleston in 1914 and from that city he conducts his coal operations. He is president of the Stone Cliff Collieries Company, which was incorporated in December, 1921, with a capital stock of $50,000. The company mines are at Stone Cliff, in Fayette County, on the main line of the Chesapeake & Ohio Railway. The production in normal times runs about 60,000 tons annually.

An interesting and perhaps unique distinction is accorded Mr. Brockman among West Virginia coal operators. He was the first operator in West Virginia to establish a profit sharing system in his mines and among his men. The properties are operated on this basis, and with a degree of satisfaction and profit that has put the system beyond an experimental stage, and in one form or another it has been widely copied and is undoubtedly one of the most munificent principles introduced into American industrial management.

Mr. Brockman is also receiver of the Beury Brothers Coal & Coke Company of Charleston. Outside of business interests he is very deeply concerned with Sunday school work. For several years he has been prominently connected with the Kanawha County Sunday School Association. He is Sunday school superintendent of his home church on the south side of Charleston, the Elizabeth Memorial Methodist Episcopal Church.

In 1907 Mr. Brockman married Lucy Morton Watt, daughter of Rev. Charles E. Watts, of Virginia. They have four children, Clarence A., Jr., Winnie Preston, William Watts and Lucy Virginia.

JAMES D. WOODROE is a lawyer by profession, and was a active member of the Charleston bar for about five years but since then has been busily and extensively engaged in real estate operations as a member of the incorporation of Potet & Woodroe, of which he is vice president and treasurer.

Mr. Woodroe was born at Waco, Texas, in 1875. His parents, both of Scotch ancestry, were Joseph I. and Elizabeth (Foyles) Woodroe, natives of North Carolina. In the early '70s they removed to Texas and lived in Waco until 1877 when they returned to Wilmington, North Carolina. James D. Woodroe was reared and educated in the City of Wilmington. He studied law in the National University at Washington, and, coming to Charleston in 1903, was admitted to the bar in that city in 1904. Thereafter he practised as a law partner of W. L. Ashby until about 1909. But after 1908 he became associated with Mr. L. C. Potet, another Charleston lawyer, in the firm of Potet & Woodroe, real estate. Their first important achievement in the real estate field was marketing the new townsite of South Charleston. They also did a considerable business real estate auction and special sales, but in recent years their operations, involving a thorough and systematic organization, have been in the sub-division field, supplemented by a general brokerage business and the building of houses.

Potet & Woodroe was incorporated in 1921 with an authorized capital stock of $300,000. The purpose of the corporation was to develop more adequately the growing interest involved in the building of moderately priced homes. The facilities of the organization in this respect are probably not excelled by those of any similar firm in West Virginia. The officers of the corporation are L. E. Potet, president, J. D. Woodroe, vice president and treasurer, and Hugh W. May, secretary.

Since its organization Mr. Woodroe has been one of the moving spirits of the Charleston Real Estate Board. He was the first secretary and vice president of the board, and has also served as president. He has been president of the West Virginia Real Estate Association and a member of the executive committee of the National Association of Real Estate Boards. He is a member of the Edgewood Country Club. Mr. Woodroe is a communicant of St. John's Episcopal Church and also has charge of the affairs of St. Matthew's Church on the South Side. St. Matthew's was founded as a mission of St. John's, but is now an independent parish.

Mr. Woodroe married Miss Jane Welles May, of Savannah, Georgia, daughter of Dr. William F. and Catherine (Cohen) May, of that city. Their five children are Elizabeth, William, Clarence, Mary and Jane.

GEORGE E. MILLER, a resident of Charleston, came to West Virginia over twenty years ago, bringing with him a long and thorough experience in the oil industry, and in this state he has had a prominent share in the oil and gas production in the various fields.

Mr. Miller was born at Spartansburg, Crawford County, Pennsylvania, in the very heart of the original oil fields of America. His boyhood was spent in the atmosphere of oil production, and from that environment he undoubtedly discovered what has been his main business in life. As a boy he learned telegraphy. He was appointed agent and telegraph operator at Petroleum Center, Pennsylvania, in the heart of the old oil fields. Petroleum Center was a famous oil town and a large one in its early days, though now hardly anything remains to show its former glory. After two years as agent for the railway company there he entered the service of the National Transit Company on a pump station in Clarion County. From there he came to West Virginia in 1900, and since then has been continuously engaged in the oil industry here.

His first location was at Fairview in Marion County, where he was associated with the South Penn Oil Company of Pittsburgh. He was with that corporation ten years, and then engaged in the oil and gas business for himself. While his interests have included oil and gas production, for a number of years his chief activities have been the handling of royalties and oil and gas leases in the West Virginia field. He established his home in Charleston in 1916. He and his family have become prominent members of the social and business interests of the capital city. He is public spirited in all his attitudes and relationship and is a member of the Kiwanis Club, a thirty-second degree Scottish Rite Mason, a Knight Templar and a Shriner.

Mr. Miller married Miss Cordelia Griffith, of Maryland. Their two children are George E., Jr., and Miss Ruth. George E. Miller, Jr., is a graduate of the University of Wisconsin and is now an engineer with the State Road Commission of West Virginia. Ruth is a graduate of the New England Conservatory of Music at Boston, and is now instructor in music at Coker College, Huntsville, South Carolina.

LEWIS VAN GILDER GUTHRIE, M. D. While all medical men are nominally dedicated to the service of humanity, there are in every state a few outstanding men who have in a peculiar degree made their work truly a ministry of service. In the nature of circumstances such work cannot be broadly appreciated. Normal conditions are those of health and well being, and the healthy and prosperous seldom know much of the unfortunate substratum of humanity. It is within the membership of the medical profession itself, officials of the State Board of Control, interested visitors from abroad, and the families of unfortunate patients who know and value properly the great and noble service performed by Dr. L. V. Guthrie for twenty-five years as superintendent of West Virginia's Hospitals for the Insane. For twenty years his work has been with the Huntington State Hospital, and those who have observed his treatment of the unfortunate there have counted it a revelation. Possessing a scientific knowledge unsurpassed in his calling, Doctor Guthrie multiplies his value by a kindly sympathy and firmness that endears him to all concerned with the success of such an institution as that at Huntington.

Doctor Guthrie inherited traditions of honorable service and grew up in a home atmosphere calculated to arouse in him high ideals. His father was the late Judge Francis Asbury Guthrie, who died at Point Pleasant, West Virginia, in 1904, after forty years of honorable professional and public service for the state. He was born in Tyler County, West Virginia, April 12, 1840, son of Francis Guthrie, grandson of Dr. Nathan G. Guthrie and a descendant of John Guthrie, who came from Edinburg, Scotland, to Boston, Massachusetts, in 1682. Francis Guthrie was a native of New York State, and for forty years was a minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church in West Virginia, where he died at the age of eighty-four. Judge Francis A. Guthrie left the college at Meadville, Pennsylvania, to enlist as a private in the Union army, September 10, 1861, in November, 1862, was promoted to first lieutenant and in March, 1863, to captain of Company E, One Hundred and Eleventh Pennsylvania Infantry. At the close of the war he entered the University of Michigan, graduated in law, and thereafter practiced his profession at Point Pleasant. He served as state prosecuting attorney, and in 1880 was elected judge of the Seventh Judicial Circuit, and twice re-elected, his death occurring at the close of twenty-four years of consecutive service on the bench. Judge Guthrie married Clara Van Gilder, and their only child is Lewis Van Gilder Guthrie.

Doctor Guthrie was born at Point Pleasant, West Virginia, January 8, 1868. He was educated in the free schools, in the Virginia Polytechnic Institute at Blacksburg, in Roanoke College at Salem, Virginia, and in 1889, at the age of twenty-one, graduated from the College of Physicians and Surgeons at Baltimore, where as an undergraduate he was assistant resident physician at the Maternity Hospital. For nine years Doctor Guthrie enjoyed a successful private practice at Point Pleasant. On June 1, 1897, he was appointed superintendent of the second hospital for the insane at Spencer, now known as the Spencer State Hospital. On June 4, 1901, Doctor Guthrie accepted his first office as superintendent of the Huntington Hospital. This institution had been established in 1897 as the West Virginia Asylum for Incurables, but in 1901 the scope of its service was modified so that it has since been an institution for epileptics and other incurable mental defectives. It was Doctor Guthrie who eventually succeeded in getting the change of name, eliminating the word asylum, to Huntington State Hospital.

In and for this state hospital Doctor Guthrie has labored with unflinching zeal now for twenty years and, including his previous service at Spencer, he has been under seven different governors, a fact that to persons understanding the fluctuations of politics is peculiarly significant of Doctor Guthrie's splendid abilities and consecration to his task. While the great work of treatment, restoration of mind and character, recovery to good citizenship of many pronounced incurable, and the amelioration of conditions surrounding those permanently afflicted might properly be considered in any personal sketch of Doctor Guthrie, it will be rather the purpose of this article to indicate some of the distinctive honors paid Doctor Guthrie by his profession and his individual contributions to the growing body of knowledge that will be used by future generations of those entrusted with the guardianship and care of the mentally defective.

On November 9, 1918, Doctor Guthrie volunteered for the Medical Reserve Corps, but owing to his official position his services were retained in this country. He acted as a member of the Medical Advisory Board of the Third District, and volunteered as a private in the Home Guards during the active period of the war. He was appointed acting assistant surgeon of the United States Public Health Service, of which he is now consulting neuro-psychiatrist. He is consulting psychiatrist of the United States War Risk Insurance for West Virginia, is medical examiner of the Cabell County Lunacy Commission and chairman of the advisory committee of the State Conference of Charities and Corrections. He is a Fellow of the American Medical Association, a Fellow of the American Psychiatrist Association, of which he is auditor and member of the Council, is a member of the West Virginia State and Cabell County Medical societies, and is chairman of the West Virginia Mental Hygiene Commission. In July, 1921, Doctor Guthrie was appointed medical advisor for the State Board of Control.

Besides his various official reports Doctor Guthrie is author of papers and addresses and pamphlets that are included in permanent medical literature. He is author of "Insanity More Preventable than Curable," published in 1914; "Dementia Praecox—Observation and Treatment," read at the fiftieth annual meeting of the West Virginia Medical Association in 1917; the "Feeble Minded, with special reference to Juvenile Delinquency and Venereal Diseases," a paper read at a Red Cross Home Conference at Morgantown in 1918; "Maniac Depressive Psychosis," read at the fifty-third annual meeting of the State Medical Society in 1920; "The Mental Defective in West Virginia, as Found by a Recent Survey," read at the fifty-fourth annual meeting of the State Medical Association, Charleston, West Virginia, May 24, 1921, and "The Mental Defective in Relation to the Commonwealth," read at the annual meeting of Woman's Club, held at Huntington in 1921. He was chairman and author of the "Report of the Committee on Nursing," presented at the seventy-sixth annual meeting of the American Medico-Psychological Association at Cleveland in 1920.

While at Spencer Doctor Guthrie was president of the Bank of Spencer and in Huntington is vice president of the First National Bank and interested in a number of other corporations. He is a republican, and his first political appointment came from President Harrison, who made him local pension examining surgeon. Doctor Guthrie is a Knight Templar and thirty-second degree Scottish Rite Mason. On June 15, 1889, at Point Pleasant, he married Margaret Lynn English, daughter of Judge John W. and Fannie (Lewis) English. Her father was a distinguished West Virginia jurist, at one time a member of the Court of Appeals. Doctor and Mrs. Guthrie have two daughters: Kathleen Lewis, wife of Frank W. McCullough, and Fannie Elizabeth.

W. A. DRIEHORST. Two attractive residential districts on the National Road, now included within the corporate limits of the City of Wheeling, are Fulton and Birch Lynn, and he whose name initiates this paragraph is vice-president of the Bank of Fulton, besides being engaged in the grocery business at Birch Lynn and Edgewood, all of these places being attractive suburbs of Wheeling.

Mr. Driehorst claims Wheeling as the place of his nativity, his birth having here occurred January 4, 1851, and he being a representative of an old and honored family of this section of the state, as data on other pages of this publication clearly indicate. He gained his early education in the schools of his native city and as a young man became identified with the retail grocery business, in which he eventually became one of the principals in the Albert Stolze Company, with which he continued his connection twenty-five years, he having been in the employ of the concern fifteen years and having then been admitted to partnership. Eventually he became the sole owner of the business, which he incorporated under the title of the W. A. Driehorst Company. Thereafter he continued the enterprise at the same location until about 1915, when he erected his present store as a branch establishment. About three years later he sold the store and business in the city and has since concentrated his mercantile interests in the suburban stores. The establishment is one of large capacity, with the best of stock at all times, and commands a substantial and prosperous business, in the conducting of which about fifteen employees are retained. Mr. Driehorst is president of the company, is a director of the Wheeling Wholesale Grocery Company, and is vice-president of the Fulton Bank & Trust Company. For the past five years he has been treasurer of St. John's German Evangelical Church, of which he and his wife are zealous communicants. Mrs. Driehorst, whose maiden name was Nellie Leonhardt, is a daughter of the late Adam Leonhardt, who was a tailor by trade and who came to Wheeling from Marietta, Ohio, at which latter place Mrs. Driehorst was born. Mr. and Mrs. Driehorst have four sons: Leonhardt is now an interested principal in the grocery company of which his father is the executive head; Howard is employed in the Dollar Savings & Trust Company's offices at Wheeling; and Robert and William A., Jr., are attending the public schools. Mr. Driehorst is affiliated with the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks and the Ancient Order of United Workmen.

JOHN S. NAYLOR COMPANY. Up and down the Ohio Valley and over portions of the several states that regard Wheeling as their wholesale and distributing center, there is perhaps no organization more suggestive of permanence, the bed-rock principles of commercial integrity, and efficiency of the service implied in a wholesale, jobbing and importing firm than the John S. Naylor Company. There are merchants who regard it as a distinction that they have had uninterrupted dealings with this concern since they started in business, and there are not a few wholesalers who acknowledge the great value of their foundation experience as employees or traveling representatives of this old house. A brief sketch of the business will therefore be generally appreciated.

Historically the present company is a continuation of the enterprise started during the decade of the '30s by two brothers, T. and H. Hornbrook, who conducted a little notion jobbing house at Wheeling when that city derived its chief importance from its location on the Ohio River and the national road. The John S. Naylor Company, therefore, can claim a history of nearly ninety ears. The Hornbrooks were succeeded a few years before the Civil war by George K. Wheat. About 1869 the late John S. Naylor acquired a fourth interest in the business, the firm being known as Wheat, Issett & Naylor. Some half a dozen years later Mr. Naylor bought the Issett's interest, and the firm, Wheat & Naylor, continued until about 1889, when, with the retirement of Mr. Wheat, the business was continued as John S. Naylor and Company. In 1907 John S. Naylor, with three of his sons, A. G., Joseph R. and Wilson, and Mr. H. L. Henderson, as officers and principal stockholders incorporated the business as the John S. Naylor Company. These successive changes are a very brief historical comment upon a business that has rendered service from the time of the administration of President Andrew Jackson to that of President Harding of the present day. The trade territory of the modern firm is a large part of West Virginia, Western Pennsylvania and Eastern Ohio, and the house is represented by fifteen traveling salesman. The present officers of the company are Joseph K. Naylor, president; H. L. Henderson, vice president; Wilson Naylor, treasurer; and George J. Eberts, secretary.

The late John S. Naylor, who was actively associated with the business for nearly half a century and was the leading spirit in its modern development, was born in Morgan County, Ohio, in 1843. His father, Joseph R. Naylor, was a teacher in early life, and for some years was a merchant at Wellsburg, West Virginia. He died at the age of sixty-seven. John S. Naylor acquired a common school education, during his boyhood and early youth worked at farming and as clerk in a general store, and in 1865 came to Wheeling and for about a year was a salesman in the whole ale business of George K. Wheat. Subsequently he acquired an interest in the partnership, and for nearly thirty years was the real head of the business.

John S. Naylor, who died November 25, 1916, at the age of seventy-three, was one of the incorporators and a director of the Wheeling Title & Trust Company, subsequently merged with the Dollar Savings & Trust Company. While ever aspiring to political office, as a democrat he was active, serving as chairman of the County Committee, as a delegate to the National Democratic Convention and as a presidential elector. He was one of the three West Virginia Commissioners to the World's Columbian Exposition at Chicago in 1893. He was a trustee of Bethany College, and was an earnest member of the First Christian Church at Wheeling. He was a successful business man with high ideals of citizenship.

At Marietta, Ohio, in 1868, he married Miss Anna Wendelken. They were the parents of three sons: R. B., A. G., Joseph R. and Wilson.

NORMAN GARRISON. The home and farm of Norman Garrison are located on Pedlar Run, a mile south of Core Post Office, Clay District of Monongalia County. Mr. Garrison has lived there practically all his life, but his influence and activities have not altogether been confined to the farm. He has been one of the efficient citizens of Monongalia County, and the people of the county particularly remember his work as deputy and chief assessor of the county.

Mr. Garrison was born in this vicinity, August 18, 1869, son of Captain Alpheus and Charlotte (Henderson) Garrison, who moved to the farm where Norman lives when the latter was an infant. Captain Garrison was born in Greene County, Pennsylvania, February 26, 1833, son of David and Katherine (Ingal) Garrison. David Garrison was one of several brothers who came from Ireland, was reared in Greene County, Pennsylvania, in early life moved to Guernsey County, Ohio, and subsequently to the Pedlar Run section of Monongalia County, West Virginia. He finally went to Tyler County, West Virginia, where he died when old. Capt. Alpheus Garrison was still a lad when his parents came from Ohio to West Virginia, and as a youth in Monongalia County he taught four winter terms of school. At the outbreak of the Civil war he was chosen provost marshal and served one year and then became second lieutenant of Company E of the Seventeenth West Virginia Infantry. He helped raise that company and subsequently was promoted over a first lieutenant to captain, and had command of his company during the remainder of the war. Most of the time he was stationed in the southern part of the state, and had charge of scouting detachments and frequently came in contact with details of the enemy, involving much fighting and danger. He was mustered out at Wheeling at the end of the war, and about 1870 he settled on the present farm of Norman Garrison. In connection with farming he established in 1873 a general store, known as the Pedlar Run or Garrison Store, and was also postmaster of Pedlar Post Office. He continued his store and his other business there for twenty-seven years. Pedlar Run acquired its name from the fact that during one extreme winter in the early days two pack pedlars were found frozen to death along its banks. Captain Garrison lived retired or a number of years and died January 21, 1917. His widow, Charlotte, is still well preserved, though in her ninetieth year. She was born in this locality, daughter of David and Elizabeth (Morris) Henderson. Captain Garrison and wife reared six children: Marion Simon, a former sheriff and prominent public leader in Monongalia County, now retired at Morgantown; Celina Ann, who died at the age of twenty-three, wife of Philip Michael; Elizabeth Catherine, wife of Perry M. Johnson, of Pentress; Narcissus Wendence, wife of William F. Blair, of Waynesburg, Pennsylvania; David Luther, of Morgantown, and Norman.

Norman Garrison grew up on the farm, acquired a common school education and has found in farming an agreeable and profitable outlook for his business energies. He first became acquainted with the responsibilities of comparing the assessment rolls of the county as deputy under County Assessor, Peter W. Core, after four years he was reappointed deputy under E. W. Griffith, and after eight years as deputy he was elected county assessor in 1913, being the regular republican nominee. Mr. Garrison distinguished his incumbency of the assessor's office by making some changes in the interests of efficiency, simplifying the office routine, reducing the working force, and particularly created a stir in official circles at the Court House by introducing a typewriting machine, which the County Court refused to pay for the first year, though they allowed it as an item of expense the second year, after Mr. Garrison had thoroughly demonstrated its value. After retiring from the office of county assessor Mr. Garrison was defeated for nomination for county sheriff. He is still active as a party worker, but since leaving Morgantown has given careful attention to his farm. He has an oil well on the farm, but the coal resources have not yet been developed. Mr. Garrison is a member of the Dolls Run Christian Church.

At the age of twenty-two he married Ettie Barriekman, daughter of John C. and Barbara (Michael) Barriekman. Her father, who is still living, was a deputy sheriff four years during the eighties. Mr. and Mrs. Garrison have nine children: Robert Rex, an oil man at Core; Charlotte Catherine, wife of Arthur Shiveley, of Weston; John Irad, an oil operator who lives at home; Alpheus Link, an oil man in Harrison County; Alma Cecil, wife of Harry M. Davis, an oil man at Core; while the four younger children, all at home, are Freda Bess, Mary J., Mildred Irene and Virginia Ruth.

CHARLES HILLEGAS CORE is a factor in the continuation of farming, merchandising and other activities that have been carried on in the Clay District of Monongalia County at Core Post Office for a long period of years.

His birthplace was a farm a mile from his present home, where he was born March 14, 1875, son of Edgar Wilson and Landora Olive (Sturgeon) Core. Edgar W. Core was born in the same vicinity February 16, 1837, and died April 23, 1919, in his eighty-third year. His father, Michael Core, was also a native of Monongalia County, born near Cassville. The first generation of the family in this part of West Virginia was represented by Stoffie, another name for Christopher Core, who came from the Shenandoah Valley and located in a wilderness still infested by Indians. Stoffie Core lived here and died at good old age. Michael Core lived out his life in that vicinity, dying when past seventy, and his wife, Christina Shriver, also died when old. They had six sons in all: Asa, who became a pioneer in Nebraska, where his descendants still live; Christopher, who died in middle life in Monongalia County; Isaac, who had operated a grist mill on Dunkard Creek and in old age moved to Tyler County, West Virginia; Abe, who lived most of his life in Tyler County, where he still has descendants; and Benjamin, who, like the other brothers, followed farming and lived at the old homestead at Core. There was also a daughter, Mrs. Wash Tennant, who died, leaving no children.

Edgar Wilson Core grew up in the Clay District and married a neighbor girl, Landora Olive Sturgeon, daughter of William Sturgeon. She died in 1885, when about thirty-eight years of age. Edgar W. Core early in his married life established his home where his son Charles now lives, owning about three hundred acres and engaging in general farming. His farm was also developed for oil, and there are two small wells producing today and paying royalties. About twenty years ago the Pittsburg vein of coal underneath the farm was sold, but has not yet been developed. Edgar W. Core never sought the honors of public life, was a republican, a member of the Home Guard during the war, and a working member of Dolls Run Christian Church. Core Station was named in his honor, and for thirty years previously a star route post office had also been designated Core. Edgar W. Core in early life was a cattle drover, assisting his father in taking many droves over the mountains to Philadelphia, and they were in that business until the building of railroads gave an improved means of transportation. The family of Edgar W. Core consisted of three sons and one daughter, and three reached mature years. Harry Michael was a farmer who died at the age of thirty-five, and by his marriage to Clara Lemley left two children, Earl and Carl. Plummer Core, a merchant at Core Station, married Elizabeth Lemley, and their two children are Phyllis and Leland.

Charles H. Core is associated with his brother Plummer in business, but they have divided their responsibilities, Plummer having the management of the store while Charles looks after the farming operations. They have about four hundred acres, and cattle and sheep grazing has always been a feature of their business. For thirty years they have been breeders of high grade Shorthorn cattle, many of their animals having been exhibited with honors at local fairs. Mr. Charles Core built his substantial brick home in 1913.

He was married at the age of twenty-four, he and his brother having taken sisters for brides. His wife was Gertrude Lemley, daughter of Alexander and Lucy (Tucker) Lemley, both of whom died at the age of sixty-five. Mr. and Mrs. Charles Core have three children: Campbell Lemley, now associated with his father on the farm, was in vocational training service at the University during the war, and married Gillie Wright; Arthur Lynn, a freshman in the State University; and Doris, a high school girl. Mr. Core is a republican, and his church affiliation is with his father's old church, the Dolls Run Christian Church.

EDWARD L. ZIHLMAN is president of the Huntington Tumbler Company, one of the important manufacturing concerns lending to the industrial and commercial preeminence of the City of Huntington, and he is one of the liberal and progressive business men of this city.

Mr. Zihlman was born at Cumberland, Maryland, February 5, 1883, and is a son of Anthony and Charlotte (Schindler) Zihlman, the former of whom was born in Switzerland, in 1840, and the latter of whom was born in Switzerland Township, Monroe County, Ohio, in 1845, her death having occurred at Cumberland, Maryland, in 1888.

Anthony Zihlman was reared and educated in his native land and there gained his initial experience in connection with glass manufacturing. He arrived in the United States on the 17th of March, 1866, and found employment in a glass factory at Bellaire, Ohio, one of his fellow employees and friends at that place having been a man named Owens, later distinguished as the inventor and patentee of an improved machine for the blowing of bottles. By actual experience of practical order Anthony Zihlman learned all details of glass manufacturing, and in 1881 he removed to Cumberland, Maryland, and established the Cumberland Glass Works, his associate in this enterprise having been his brother Joseph. They continued to operate this factory until 1900, when Anthony Zihlman came to Huntington, West Virginia, and organized the Huntington Tumbler Company, of which he continued the president and general manager until his death, in 1912. He was a man of resourceful energy, and developed a substantial and successful manufacturing industry that is being continued under the executive direction of his son. He was a democrat in politics and was a communicant of the Catholic Church, his first wife having been a member of the Lutheran Church. Of their three children the two daughters died young, and thus Edward L., of this review, is the only surviving member of the immediate family. For his second wife Anthony Zihlman married Miss Margaret Rank, who was born at Cumberland, Maryland, and who continued her residence at Huntington. Of the second marriage were born five children: George, a skilled artisan in the factory of the Huntington Tumbler Company, served in the Signal Corps with the Eighty-first Division (known as the "Wildcats") with the American Expeditionary Forces in France in the World war, he having been in active service in the Argonne sector and having been with his command in France for a period of eighteen months. Charles, vice president of the Huntington Tumbler Company, likewise was in the nation's service in the World war, he having been a radio electrician in the navy and having assisted in the laying of mines in the North Sea, his service of eighteen months having been principally on the United States ship "Koonoke." William is foreman in the decorating department of the plant of the Huntington Tumbler Company. Henrietta and Clara remain with their widowed mother.

Edward L. Zihlman acquired his early education in the rural schools of Switzerland Township, Monroe County, Ohio, and under the direction of a private tutor at Cumberland, Maryland, where also he was graduated in the Central Commercial College in 1898. Under the able direction of his father he thereafter learned the trade of glassblower, and in the passing years he gained experience in all details of glass manufacturing, so that he was well fortified in a technical and executive way when the death of his father led to his assuming the office of president of the Huntington Tumbler Company, the plant and offices of which are situated at the corner of Madison Avenue and Fifteenth Street. In this factory, of the best modern equipment, are manufactured tumblers, goblets, bar glassware, tankards, nappies and a general line of lead-blown tableware. The factory is a substantial brick structure covering one-half of a city block, employment is given to 170 workmen, and products are shipped to all parts of the United States, as well as to Cuba, Porto Rico, England, Holland and even far-off Java. Mr. Zihlman is president of the company, his brother Charles is vice president, and Charles W. Kerr is secretary and treasurer.

The democratic party receives the loyal allegiance of Mr. Zihlman, and his religious faith is that of the Lutheran Church. In the Masonic fraternity his affiliations are as here noted: Huntington Lodge No. 53, A. F. and A. M.; Huntington Chapter No. 6, R. A. M.; Huntington Commandery No. 9, Knights Templars; West Virginia Consistory No. 1, A. A. S. R., at Wheeling, in which he has received the thirty-second degree; and Beni-Kedem Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Charleston. He is a member also of Huntington Lodge No. 313, B. F. O. E., and holds active membership in the local Chamber of Commerce and the Guyan Country Club. His name still remains enrolled on the list of eligible bachelors in Cabell County.

J. F. SMITH. An interesting example of reclamation work resulting in restored and built up soil, an attractive home and a substantial addition to the agricultural resources of Monongalia County, is found in the dairy farm of J. F. Smith, two miles east of Morgantown, in the Morgantown District on the Kingwood Pike.

Mr. Smith is in every sense a practical man of affairs though he also recognizes the value of a broad and comprehensive view as to the lines and methods of progress. He was born in Marion County, West Virginia, January 11, 1872, son of Levi Smith, who lost his life in a coal mine though he was not a miner. J. F. Smith was only a child when his father died. His mother, Lizzie Lowe, daughter of William Lowe, of Grant District, Monongalia County was born there and is the last survivor of the Lowe family in the county. She now lives with a son in Morgantown.

J. F. Smith when about ten years of age moved to Morgantown, grew up there, acquired a common school education, and learned the butcher's trade with his brother H. L. Smith. That trade was his business and vocation until in 1903 he bought his present farm. This farm comprises 205 acres of the old George Dorsey farm, which in ante-bellum days was a great plantation worked by slave labor. Several generations of cultivation had decidedly impoverished the soil, and the land was in a state of depletion when Mr. Smith bought it. For several years he used the land chiefly for grazing cattle, feeding for the export trade but for the past seven years has conducted it as a model dairy farm. He has a herd of from thirty-five to forty cows and contributes about seventy gallons of milk daily to city patrons at Morgantown. His farm is also underlaid by the Pittsburg vein of coal, and the coal rights have been sold to operators.

May 18, 1896, Mr. Smith married Virginia Wells. She was born at South Park, Monongalia County, March 4, 1877, daughter of William J. and Rebecca (Garrett) Wells, being the youngest of their three children and the only one born in West Virginia. The other two, John, now of Morgantown, and Margaret, wife of Frank Jeffers, who died at the age of forty-two, being natives of Washington County, Pennsylvania, near Brownsville, where her parents were also born. On coming to Monongalia County her father bought the old DeMain farm, now included in South Park. He died July 12, 1896, at the age of seventy-six. Her mother died April 20, 1916, at the age of seventy-three. Mrs. Smith's father was one of the extensive sheep growers of this section. In company with his brother John and with "California" J. Morris, Mr. Wells had gone to California as a forty-niner, but was shipwrecked on the voyage, and after reaching the Pacific Coast was called home on account of his mother's death and then took charge of the homestead farm. Mr. and Mrs. Smith have four children: Jeannette E., Ralph J., Mary Virginia and William Page, all living at home. Jeannette is the wife of G. D. Hastings.

E. J. G. H. H. H. H. H.

During his ownership and operation of eighteen years Mr. Smith has actually transformed his farm so far as the productive side is concerned and also to a large degree its home facilities. He has treated the soil liberally with limestone, and this has rejuvenated the land in connection with careful cultivation. He has remodeled the house, and altogether the Smith home is one of the very desirable ones in the rural section of Monongalia County.

WEBSTER P. FLEMING. Few families have testified by their good works and influence more markedly in Taylor County than the Flemings. Their original home was in Wales. Born in Wales, James Fleming came to the American colonies a few years before the Revolution. Shortly after the close of that struggle he moved from Hampshire County to Taylor County, and took up hundreds of acres in the vicinity of what is now Flemington, and in the improvement of this estate passed the remainder of his life. His first home occupied the site of the old West Virginia College, now the property of the Flemington School District. His body lies in the Fleming graveyard on the land of Doctor Curry at Flemington. Toward the close of his life he married for his second wife Polly Whitehair, then only eighteen, and she survived until 1904, her home being near the old college building at Flemington. The first four permanent settlers in the Flemington locality were James Fleming, Polly Whitehair's father, Mr. Prunty and Mr. Bailey.

James Fleming, the pioneer, was not a man of education, and in managing his extensive property in Taylor County he depended chiefly on his son James, who had accompanied him hither. This James became one of the very prominent men, possessing education and strong native talents. He served as squire, was the owner of many slaves, and besides farming owned a mill on Simpson Creek and had a blacksmith shop. His home was west of and in sight of the Village of Flemington. By his marriage to Elizabeth Welch there were eight daughters and three sons: Patrick, Minor S. and Johnson C. Johnson's daughter became Mrs. Curt Davidson and was the mother of the late Doctor Davidson of Parkersburg, one of the prominent medical men of the state, who inherited the home property of his grandfather but died without heirs.

Patrick Fleming, who continues the line of this branch of the family, was a farmer and miller. He was born in 1800 and died December 14, 1872. He married Margaret McDonald, daughter of James McDonald. She died in 1859, the mother of eight children: Lurana, who married Lemuel E. Davidson; James, who died unmarried; William and Mary, who died in childhood; Benjamin, whose record follows Sanford B., of Ritchie County; Johnson, who died in childhood; and Elizabeth, who married Chasteen Clevenger and is now deceased. Patrick Fleming's second wife was Mrs. Catherine (Bartlett) Spegler, and their children were Claude and Lucetta, the latter the wife of William Peter of Harriaron County.

Benjamin Fleming, who was born in the Flemington community, November 2, 1834, became one of the trustworthy and honored citizens of Taylor County. Having a good rudimentary education he joined his father in farming for some years and later for himself. He continued to live at Flemington until April 9, 1865, the day that Lee surrendered, when he moved to the farm between Webster and Pruntytown, where his son Webster now lives. He died there October 12, 1909. He was a staunch republican, had served as a home guard during the Civil war, and he and his wife were life-long members of the Flemington Church. October 6, 1857, he married Elizabeth Powell, daughter of Elijah Powell, of Flemington. She was born November 12, 1837, and died May 27, 1921. They were the parents of two sons, Hayward and Webster Patrick.

Hayward Fleming, who was born July 28, 1858, attended Flemington College, then taught district school at Shelby Run, which he had attended as a boy, and then taught the Robinson School in Knottsville District. During 1882 he was a student in the Pruntytown School. After serving several years as county surveyor he taught the Webster school during the winter of 1887-88, and in the fall of 1889 entered the West Liberty Normal School, where he graduated in June, 1891. For three years following he was a student in West Virginia University, specializing in civil engineering. For a portion of the years 1894-95 he did normal work for teachers at Flemington, and for one year was principal of the Grafton High School. The day after the school term closed he started for Tennessee to do some surveying for the Penn Oil Company, a subsidiary of the Standard Oil Company. At the close of the summer's work he returned to Grafton, continuing as principal of the high school two years, and was then given the additional duties of superintendent of schools, including the east and west sides of the river.

He concluded his school work in 1905, and for a time he was connected with the Grafton Banking & Trust Company, and on July 23, 1907, was appointed deputy to County Clerk Kitzmiller. In 1908 he was elected clerk of the County Court, and served a six year term. Subsequently for a time he was deputy under Sheriff Melvin Newlon, but resigned January 7, 1918. Among other noteworthy services he was a member of the County Schoolbook Board twelve years, from 1897 to 1909; was notary public from the fall of 1885 to the fall of 1919; and was one of the appraisers of the Adolphus Armstrong estate in 1907. He became a stockholder in the Home Building & Loan Association in 1902, and was its secretary from June, 1903, to January 11, 1921. He is a charter member of the Grafton Banking & Trust Company. He is a republican and for forty-eight years was an official in the Webster Missionary Baptist Church. August 23, 1896, Hayward Fleming married Miss Lucie Newlon, who was born July 11, 1864, daughter of James B. and Margaret Jane (Sharpe) Newlon, of Flemington, where her grandfather settled on a farm adjoining that of James Fleming, the pioneer.

Webster Patrick Fleming, whose record concludes the family history, has never married and was a devoted son to his parents as long as they lived. He was born at Flemington, September 17, 1859, and since he was about six years of age has lived on the old homestead near Webster. He acquired his education there, and since early manhood has been a practical farmer, handling and growing cattle and sheep. He has lived up to the standards of progressive citizenship, is a republican, and a member of the Webster Missionary Baptist Church.

TIMOTHY S. SCANLON. As a road builder and contractor Timothy S. Scanlon has had a very interesting and important connection with West Virginia's good roads history. His time and energies have been chiefly bestowed on this line of work for twenty-two years. His home is at Huntington, but recently Grafton has become almost his business headquarters while performing his duties as general supervisor of Taylor County's good roads construction program.

He was born at Harrisonburg, Virginia, November 15, 1853, son of Timothy and Norie (Mahony) Scanlon. His parents were both born in County Kerry, Ireland, near the River Shannon. Coming to the United States about 1853, they located in Virginia, where Timothy Scanlon was employed on construction work for the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad. When he died in 1861, at the first tunnel west of Covington, Virginia, he left a family of nine children, some of whom fortunately were old enough to bear the burdens of supporting the household. The widowed mother soon moved to Greenbrier County, West Virginia, living for a time on a farm there, and after two years accompanied some families to Red House on the Kanawha River, and subsequently further up the river to a point opposite St. Albans, where she remained until 1870. Her children were: Catherine, who married R. C. Gayer; Patrick J., who for some years was a railroad contractor but spent the great part of his life in charge of the P. C. Buffington estate at Huntington, where he died; Ellen, whose first husband was John Gohen, and she died as the wife of John Haloran; Norie, wife of Charles Dyer, living at Montgomery, West Virginia; Margaret, wife of John J. Lee, of Huntington; John, who died in childhood; Edward, who was a locomotive engineer out of Hinton when he died at the age of thirty-one; Samuel, who died unmarried at Hinton; and Timothy S.

Timothy S. Scanlon has been a resident of West Virginia since 1861. He had no opportunity to attend school until he was eight years old, and for the next five years, during two or three months each year, he was a pupil in a school opposite St. Albans on the Rocky Fork of Pocahontas River. Even then he was doing work that was a practical contribution to the support of the household. His early interest in construction work was derived from employment as driver of a cart and other duties under his brother Patrick while the latter was building a short piece of the Chesapeake & Ohio west of Montgomery, and another bit at Sandstone. As a result of this early industry and his thrift he had saved about $200 before he was fifteen years old. A better education was his chief object and ambition just then, and for ten months he was a diligent student, simply "living with his books," in an excellent school known as the Old Academy on Gospel Hill, Staunton, Virginia. Mathematics was his chief subject, and he left school with a good knowledge of algebra and some of the higher branches, a training that was invaluable in later years.

After thirteen months as a Chesapeake & Ohio brakeman he was promoted to freight conductor, 3½ years later was made yardmaster at Hinton, and in a little while, before he was quite twenty-one, was raised to the responsibilities of trainmaster, with jurisdiction over eighty miles in each direction from Hinton. He continued these duties three years, and might have become one of the conspicuous railroad officials of the country but for the affliction of rheumatism, which caused him to give up railroading. About that time he established his home in Huntington, in 1883.

Mr. Scanlon was a shoe merchant at Huntington for about twenty years, until his growing interests in other directions caused him to dispose of that business. His first connection with road construction was as an employee of Doctor Hale in the manufacture of the brick used in the first brick road ever laid in the United States, on Summers Street in Charleston. Mr. Scanlon states that this road was laid on a base of four or five inches of pit gravel sand and gravel natural mixture, covered with two-inch tarred boards, then a sand cushion of two inches, on which were laid ordinary two-inch brick, the brick being made in oil molds from common river-bottom clay. While perhaps not adapted to the heavy traffic of modern streets, this brick pavement stood the test of time and wear for at least thirty-five years.

His next experience in practical road-building was due to his election in 1892 by the people of Huntington, regardless of politics, to act as city treasurer in carrying out the provisions of the first bond issue for paving the city. Out of brick made by the city some seven miles of permanent streets were constructed. After the satisfactory completion of this work Mr. Scanlon refused a re-nomination for the same office, and he soon engaged in road building and general contracting on his own account. Roads, streets and sewer building have comprised his field, and among many important contracts handled by his organization in subsequent years were paving jobs in Hinton and Huntington, hard-surface roads in Wayne County between Ceredo and the Cabell County line; a highway contract at Ronceverte; five miles of main sewer in Huntington; ten miles of 16-foot brick road in Cabell County; five miles of concrete road in Lincoln County; and many miles of permanent road in several other states.

He was appointed by Governor Cornwell a member of the West Virginia State Road Commission, and was associated for some fifteen months with A. D. Williams of Morgantown and about nine months with the chairman, Maj. C. P. Fortney. They organized the commission, selected the "Class A" roads in the state, perfected the state standard of specifications since in use, and provided for the automobile license regulation as well as it could be done with funds made available by the Legislature.

As noted above, Mr. Scanlon's active association with Taylor County's good-road building program is as general supervisor over the expenditure of the $100,000 bond issue with the contribution of the Federal Government. In that capacity he supervised in 1921 the building of 6½ miles of hard-surface roads and the grading, draining and bridging of 4½ miles in preparation for the hard-surfacing in 1922. Mr. Scanlon has always contended for a good sub-base and good drainage as essential to the life of any road structure. In 1922 Taylor County advertised and let contracts for thirty miles of new road, and this, too, is under the supervision of Mr. Scanlon.

During his experience as a contractor Mr. Scanlon took some large jobs of road building while the World war was in progress, and completed them in the face of the fluctuations due to rapid inflation and deflation, taking his share of loss in the general slump. In his home city of Huntington, besides his service as city treasurer, he was later elected to the city council and then as one of the city commissioners. He was commissioner of finance and public utilities three years. During this term twenty miles of street paving was laid, three miles of main and twenty miles of lateral sewer built, the South Side Park was laid out and improved, and provision made for the sale of the old fire department and city hall headquarters and the erection of a new city hall and fire station that would be a credit to a city several times the size of Huntington. The same commission proved its adequacy in the emergency created by the flood of 1913, handling the situation at a cost of $18,000, and in the following winter put such vigor into the administration of the department of health that a smallpox epidemic took a toll of only two lives. In these and other practical measures of administration the commission expended $1,250,000 annually, but in such a way as to satisfy the people of the real economy of true efficiency.

Mr. Scanlon was one of a committee to get up the plan for the construction of the Huntington Chamber of Commerce, and for eight years he served the chamber without pay. He is still an active member of this body, and of the Huntington Rotary Club, has filled the various chairs in the Knights of Columbus, and is past consul and for eight years was state lecturer for the Modern Woodmen of America. He voted for General Hancock, the democratic nominee for president in 1880, and has been a democrat with liberal tendencies through all his mature career.

At Huntington, June 15, 1885, Mr. Scanlon married Miss Jennie V. White, who was born and reared on the site of Huntington, daughter of John and Elizabeth (Stewart) White. The Whites were Maryland people while the Stewarts came from Bath County, Virginia. Mr. and Mrs. Scanlon had two children, the daughter Drusilla dying in infancy. Charles M., the son, is in the oil field of Tampico, Mexico. Over a period of many years Mr. and Mrs. Scanlon have opened their hearts and their hospitable home to about twenty orphan children. His interest in such children extended beyond those under his own care. For many years he was president of the West Virginia Colored Orphans Home. When a private institution supported by the colored race was about to fail, Mr.

William E. Long.

Scanlon and a few other white men assumed control and financed it until they could persuade the state to take it over.

WILLIAM ELLSWORTH LONG. As farmer, business man, banker and county official William Ellsworth Long has made splendid use of the special opportunities that have come to him in his active career. He represents an old and prominent land holding family of Tyler County, but apart from the credit due to the achievements of others of his name his own career has been of sufficient importance to stand alone among the very influential citizens of the county.

Mr. Long was born at Wick in Tyler County, April 25, 1870. His grandfather, George Long, was a native of Greene County, Pennsylvania, and was among the pioneer settlers of Tyler County, Virginia, now West Virginia. He married a native daughter of Greene County, Lydia Johnson. Soon after his marriage he came on horseback from Greene County to Tyler County, West Virginia. He was a man of great industry, possessed sound business ability, and at one time owned more good farming land in Tyler County than any other individual. During the Civil war he was a drum major in the recruiting service for the Union armies. Both he and his wife died at their old homestead at Wick, and of their eight children three are still living: Johnson G.; Ruth, wife of Benjamin F. Clovis, a farmer at Glenville in Gilmer County; and George W., a retired farmer at Middlebourne.

Johnson G. Long was born at Wick, March 12, 1845, and has spent practically his entire life on one farm in that vicinity. Farming has been with him a real business, and he has conducted his operations on an extensive scale and though retired is still living at his country home. He is an honored veteran of the Union Army, having enlisted and served the last two years of the war in Company E of the Fourteenth West Virginia Infantry, participated in the battle of Gettysburg and was with Sherman on the March to the Sea. As a republican he has been elected to and has filled a number of local offices, and for a number of years was a member of the Board of Education for the Meade district. Johnson G. Long married Angeline Smith, who was born at Sanecho in Tyler County in 1846 and died at Wick, December 25, 1909. Of their nine children William E. is the oldest. Martha F. is the wife of Emerson Hill, a veterinary surgeon at McKim, Tyler County; Mary A. is the wife of James H. Robinson, a painter and farmer at Wick; Okey W. is a farmer and raiser of thoroughbred sheep at Wick; Minnie G., who died at McKim, October 10, 1905, was the wife of Rymer Mead, now living in Harrison County; Myrtle is the wife of Sampson C. Gorrell, a farmer on Sanecho Creek, who has made more than a local reputation through his pure blooded cattle and sheep; Maude, single and a trained nurse; Lydia A., the eighth child, died in infancy; and Golden R., operating the home farm at Wick, married Bessie Hadley, of Sanecho.

William Ellsworth Long attended the rural schools of Tyler County and finished with a business course in Mountain State Business College at Parkersburg. Up to the age of twenty-three he found his work and interests on the old homestead. Then for nine years he was in the employ of the Eureka Pipe Line Company, the last five years as construction foreman. In 1900 he was elected county assessor of Tyler County, serving a four-year term, and up to 1902 continued his duties with the Pipe Line Company. In 1904 he was re-elected assessor for a second term of four years. From this county office he was promoted by election in November, 1908, to sheriff, and served the constitutional limit of four years, from 1909 to 1913. On retiring from the office of sheriff Mr. Long bought a farm half a mile west of Middlebourne, and owned and conducted this property until he sold in January, 1921. In the meantime, in 1916, after an interval of four years, he was recalled to the office of sheriff, and served a second term, beginning in 1917 and ending in 1921. Since retiring from the office of sheriff Mr. Long has been a concrete contractor, handling a large volume of work in Middlebourne and over Tyler County.

In the banking affairs of the county he has been a director of the Bank of Middlebourne since 1909. This bank was organized in 1898 and is the second oldest bank in the county. Mr. Long has been president of the bank since January, 1914. He is owner of much real estate in Middlebourne, including a modern home on Main Street.

Mr. Long has always been interested in the success of the republican party. He was for two terms sergeant-at-arms of the State Senate, from January, 1907, to January, 1909, and again from January, 1915, to January, 1917. He is a member of the Christian Church, Sistersville Lodge No. 333, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, the Middlebourne Lodge of Odd Fellows, and the Knights of Pythias.

April 25, 1899, Mr. Long married Miss Lucy M. Seckman at Alma in Tyler County, where her parents, John and Adaline (Crane) Seckman still live on their farm. Mr. and Mrs. Long have one daughter, Mabel, born June 27, 1900, a graduate of the Mountain State Business College at Parkersburg.

DANIEL L. WOTRING, in charge of the credit department of the Whittaker Wholesale Grocery Company at Terra Alta, has had a progressive career in commercial affairs since young manhood, and represents one of the very old and honored families of West Virginia.

He is a descendant of Abraham Wotring, who left the German Palatinate in 1732 and joined a colony in Pennsylvania. His descendants have since become widely scattered over Pennsylvania and West Virginia and other western states. One of them was Daniel Wotring, who spent all or nearly all his life in Union District of Preston County. He was a tanner and also a manufacturer of harness and horse collars. In a day of limited industry he conducted a thriving business, chiefly for supply of local needs. He was a good business man and also an influential citizen in Union District. He married a member of another prominent family of Preston County, the Cores, and his wife became widely known as a ministering angel in the succor of the helpless and sick of her locality. She had a considerable knowledge of medicine as well as being a thorough practical nurse, and she spent much of her time responding to calls for aid. Her children were: John W.; Mary, who became the wife of John Flint; Jacob, whose home was in Preston County; Rebecca, still living in Preston County; Laura, who died in Preston County, wife of Andrew Pifer; and Luther, a resident of Los Angeles, California.

John W. Wotring was born August 23, 1844, attended the old fashioned schools, and toward the close of the Civil war entered the Union army and was assigned chiefly to guard duty until the close of hostilities. After the war he busied himself with his farming interests in Union District, was a stanch Methodist, a republican, was affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and Knights of Pythias, and enjoyed a reputation for wisdom in his community that made him sought out by many of his neighbors for advice and counsel. He married Jemimah Catherine Adams, daughter of Daniel Adams, a farmer of Tucker County, who also had a record as a Union soldier. Mrs. John W. Wotring, who died in October, 1916, at the age of sixty-four, was the mother of the following children: Mary Ann, born November 16, 1870, died in Preston County, leaving three children by her marriage with Joshua Stemple; Sarah Priscilla, born April 15, 1872, died as the wife of Andrew Miller, leaving three children; Carrie, born February 3, 1874, lives at Elkins and has five children by her first husband, M. A. Mason; Columbia, born May 6, 1874, is the wife of Oliver England, of Beverly, and has a son; Summers Hayes, born April 19, 1877, a lumberman and business man at Elkins; Bertha Susan, twin sister of Summers, is the wife of William Kismar, of Los Angeles, California, and the mother of five children; Rose Grace, born August 25, 1878, is the wife of Delbert Greynolds, of Clarksburg, and has one son; Daniel Luther is the next in age; Savilla Agnes, born January 26, 1881, has five children by her marriage to O. B. Miller, of Tucker County; Cyrus Tasker, born March 25, 1882, is an employe of the Whittaker Grocery Company of Terra Alta; Dora Ruth, born September 13, 1883, was first married to William Dumire and is now the wife of Harry Grimes, of Elkins, and is the mother of two children; Melvina Lutitia, born February 8, 1885, left three children by her marriage to Harry Grimes; Effie Belle, born June 27, 1886, is the wife of Delbert Moore, of Oklahoma, and they have three children; Pearl Maud, born September 10, 1887, is the mother of four children by her marriage to T. C. Morrison, of Canton, Ohio; Margaret, born June 1, 1890, died at the age of eighteen; and Della Myrtle, born January 18, 1892, is the wife of Cecil Hill, of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania.

Daniel Luther Wotring was born October 27, 1879, in Union District and on the same farm as his father. He lived there until past his majority, and in the meantime made the best possible use of the country schools. On leaving home he was employed as a saw mill hand by R. Chaffee at William, West Virginia, with him three years and then became sawyer for the Keystone Manufacturing Company at Carmel, West Virginia. After about a year he gave up that line of business on account of an explosion in the mill, and then entered the Mountain State Business College at Parkersburg to fit himself for a commercial career. He graduated in bookkeeping in 1904, and soon afterward became a bookkeeper with the Pugh & Beavers Grocery Company at Terra Alta. When J. W. Whittaker bought the Pugh & Beavers Company he remained as credit man and in charge of the office and detail work of the Whittaker Grocery Company.

Mr. Wotring has been one of Terra Alta's busy and public-spirited men. He has served on the town council and also as town recorder, and during his official connection the town voted bonds for paving and other improvement. He has used his influence and efforts in behalf of good government and efficient men in public life. In national politics he is a republican, having cast his first vote for William McKinley in 1900. Mr. Wotring is a steward in the Methodist Church, is an Odd Fellow, and has been especially active in the Knights of Pythias and the D. O. K. K.

At Terra Alta, June 11, 1907, Mr. Wotring married Miss Daisy Matheny. They have one son, Joseph William, born July 21, 1911. Mrs. Wotring is a member of one of Preston County's oldest and most widely known families.

Joseph M. Matheny, her father, now living retired at Terra Alta, was born near Valley Point, December 3, 1843. His grandfather, Elijah Matheny, represented either the first or second generation of the Matheny family in Preston County. He married Susan Crist, and one of their children was Elijah Matheny, father of Joseph M. Elijah Matheny was born in Preston County July 16, 1818, was a hard-working and quiet farmer and good citizen, an active member of the Methodist Church, and in politics was first a know nothing and later a republican, and one of the staunchest Union men in the county, three of his sons being Union soldiers. He married Christina DeWitt, a daughter of John DeWitt, and their children were: John, who was a Union soldier and three times wounded while a member of the Third West Virginia Cavalry and afterward followed farming in Doddridge County; George, who was for eight months in the Fourth West Virginia Cavalry and afterward a minister of the Methodist Church; Joseph Marcellus; Harmon Brooks, who was a farmer and was accidentally killed; Rebecca, living near Valley Point, widow of Elijah Bishop; Joanna K., who married Ezra Hartsell and both died in Monongalia County; Rachel, living at Cowan, widow of Thomas Howard; Mary A., wife of Thomas Martin, of Uniontown, Pennsylvania; and Susan, Mrs. John Feather, of Fayette County, Pennsylvania.

Joseph M. Matheny had a few short terms of subscription school taught in an old log cabin schoolhouse, where he studied the text-books consisting chiefly of United States speller, McGuffey reader and an arithmetic. In 1861 he enlisted in Company B of the Fourth West Virginia Cavalry, under Capt. Jeremiah Simpson and Col. Sam Snider. From Wheeling the regiment went to Parkersburg, then to New Creek or Keyser, and for the greater part of the war the regiment was broken up into squads for guard duty. Mr. Matheny was with his comrades at Moorefield when the surrender at Appomattox occurred, and he was then sent back to Wheeling and honorably discharged in July, 1865. He was once wounded while in the army, a bullet striking his left shin. Mr. Matheny has for many years been identified with his old comrades in the Grand Army Post.

After the war he resumed farming at Valley Point, and after his marriage lived at the place now occupied by David Bishop and for a year conducted a grist and saw mill near Kingwood. For a dozen years after that he was a farmer and stock raiser in the Sugar Valley community and then moved to a farm near Terra Alta where after thirteen years of labor and activity he turned over the farm and all hard work to a younger generation and retired to enjoy his well-deserved leisure in Terra Alta. Joseph M. Matheny has always voted as a republican and cast his first vote while in the army for Abraham Lincoln. He has done a great deal of jury service in the county. He and his wife have long been active in the Methodist Church, and he has been a trustee and one of the builders of the Sugar Valley Church.

March 26, 1870, in Preston County, Joseph M. Matheny married Clementina Parsons, the ceremony being performed by Rev. Joseph B. Feather. She was born in Randolph County, June 30, 1846, daughter of Jonathan and Mary (Neville) Parsons, of Hardy County, but who reared their family on a farm near St. George in Randolph County. Mrs. Matheny was one of ten children and had a country school education. Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Matheny's children were: Clarence M., who died while in the jewelry business at Thomas, West Virginia, and was survived by his wife, Catherine Skunk; Troy M., a carpenter at Terra Alta, who married Susan Trickett, and their children are Herbert, Regenia and Evelyn; Clyde, who married Margaret Miller and has two sons, Lloyd and George; Russell, who married Jessie Taylor and has three children, Willis, Ruth and Elsworth; and Mrs. Daniel L. Wotring.

ANDREW FLETCHER HAYNES, M. D. In the thirty years that have elapsed since he graduated in medicine Doctor Haynes employed the first twenty years as a physician and surgeon to coal companies, and since then has been established in the enjoyment of a large private practice at Huntington.

An interesting story is told of the American origin of this branch of the Haynes family. While the American Revolution was in progress five brothers from the Province of Hesse, Germany, were enlisted as mercenaries by the British Government and sent across the water to fight the American Colonists. These Hessians had no particular interest in the cause for which they were fighting, and soon, being attracted to the opposite side, they all deserted, became loyal Americans, founded homes and families, and probably a majority of the Haynes families in this country today are descended from that group of brothers. The brother who was the direct ancestor of Doctor Haynes on deserting hid himself in a stack of corn stalks in a field. The British instituted a search and looked into every shock except the one under which he was hidden.

Members of the Haynes family came early into what is now West Virginia. Doctor Haynes' grandfather, Joseph Haynes, was born in Monroe County, and in 1835 moved to Meadow River, Fayette County, where he lived until his death, at the age of eighty-eight. In Fayette County he owned and operated a grist and saw mill and carding machines. He married Miss Nellie Stewart, a native of Monroe County, who died in Fayette County. Andrew J. Haynes, father of Doctor Haynes, was born in Monroe County in December, 1829, was reared from childhood at Meadow River and became a very extensive farmer in that section. He was a confederate soldier for eighteen months, always voted as a democrat, and was a local minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. He died in Nicholas County, West Virginia, December 14, 1917, at the age of eighty-eight. His first wife was Martha Campbell, who was born and died in Fayette County. Their children were: Becky N., of Fayette County, widow of Jacob Props, a farmer; Sarah France, of Sioux City, Iowa, where her husband, Jacob Amick, a farmer, died; Mary Ellen, living on her farm in Greenbrier County, widow of Caperton Haynes; Eliza, who died in Northwestern Iowa, wife of John Sydenstricker; Elizabeth, wife of Andrew Dorsey, a farmer in Nicholas County; and Matilda, who died in infancy. The second wife of Andrew J. Haynes was Tabitha Suddarth, who was born near Charlottesville, Virginia, in 1832, and died in Nicholas County, West Virginia, in 1915. Of her children Andrew Fletcher is the oldest. Ledona, who died in Fayette County at the age of twenty-nine, was the wife of Charles Otis Haynes, an oil well driller now living in Monroe County; Eva, who died in Nicholas County aged thirty, was the wife of John Odell, a farmer in that county; Willie is the wife of Will Lemon, a farmer now living at Charleston; Laura is the wife of Grant Odell, a farmer and merchant in Nicholas County; Alice's first husband was Herbert Odell, a farmer and merchant in Nicholas County, and she is now the wife of Robert Lanham, an insurance agent at Charleston; Robert is a blacksmith at Fayetteville, West Virginia; Thomas Jackson was a minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and died at Antead, Fayette County, aged twenty-six; and Effie, the youngest, died when eight years old.

A. H. Haynes

Andrew Fletcher Haynes was born in Fayette County, September 6, 1860, attended the rural schools there, and his tasks and responsibilities were associated with his father's farm until he was twenty, going then to Northwestern Iowa. For two years he also worked around coal mines in West Virginia. Realizing the need of a better education, he attended a select school one year, and in 1888 entered the University of Louisville, where he graduated M. D. in 1891. While in active practice he has returned three times to his alma mater for post-graduate work, specializing in diagnosis, children's diseases and obstetrics. On beginning practice he became surgeon to the Royal Coal & Coke Company at Prince in Fayette County, remaining at this post of duty nine years and ten and a half months. Following that for eight years and eleven months he was surgeon to the Sun Coal & Coke Company in Fayette County. Doctor Haynes in 1911 removed to Huntington, and has since gained a fine reputation in this city for his work as a general physician and surgeon. For two years, however, 1913-5, he was located at San Antonio, Texas. He is a member of the Cabell County and State Medical Associations.

Doctor Haynes is vice president and a director of the Pureka Coal Company of Prestonsburg, Kentucky. He is a democrat, member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and is affiliated with Huntington Lodge No. 53, A. F. and A. M., Huntington Chapter No. 6, R. A. M., Huntington Commandery No. 9, K. T., and Beni-Kodem Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Charleston.

In 1893, in Caroline County, Virginia, he married Miss Follie Beasley, who was born in that county in 1860, and led there in 1887. Her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Beasley, were farmers in Caroline County. In September, 1891, at Louisville, Kentucky, Doctor Haynes married Miss Ella Clark, a native of Kentucky and a graduate of the Louisville High School. Doctor and Mrs. Haynes have two daughters. Louise, a graduate of the art course from Marshall College in Huntington and the Huntington Business College, is bookkeeper for the Glass Tumbler Company at Huntington. The younger daughter, Ella, is a student at Marshall College.

JOHN H. CAMPBELL. While one of the younger business men in Charleston, John H. Campbell has had an unusually broad and successful experience in commercial and industrial affairs in the state, and in public life as well.

Mr. Campbell, who is manager of the Consolidated Insurance Agency, was born in Boone County, West Virginia, 1880, son of S. H. and Nancy Jane (Meadows) Campbell, two natives of West Virginia. When John H. Campbell was two years of age his parents moved to Kanawha County, and here he was reared and educated, though he finished his college course in Marshall College at Huntington. On leaving school he engaged in the coal mining industry, and to that he devoted several years in the Kanawha Valley and also in Eastern Ohio. For seven years he was connected with the Jeffery Manufacturing Company of Columbus, Ohio, manufacturers of coal mining machinery, representing that corporation with headquarters at Huntington in West Virginia and Eastern Ohio.

For four years, 1914 to 1918, Mr. Campbell was chief office deputy in the office of William Osborne, United States marshal for the Southern District of West Virginia at Charleston.

The Consolidated Insurance Agency was established in January, 1921, with Mr. Campbell as manager. He has become one of the prominent insurance men of the city and state. The president of the agency is Mr. J. G. Bradley, of Dundon, one of the state's most prominent coal operators and president of the National Coal Operators' Association. The Consolidated Agency also maintains branch offices at Huntington and Logan. Under Mr. Campbell's vigorous management the agency has built up a large and important clientele, and looks after the fire protection for many of the leading commercial and industrial concerns of the state.

Mr. Campbell is a member of the Insurance Division of the Charleston Chamber of Commerce, is a member of the Credit Men's Association, and fraternally is worshipful master of Chelyan Lodge No. 158, A. F. and A. M., and is also a Knight Templar and a Shriner. His home is at Chelyan in Kanawha County, where he has had some investments and other interests for a number of years. He married Miss Blanche Calvert, daughter of James T. Calvert, of Kanawha County. They have a son, named John H., Jr.

WILLIAM JONES as a young man accepted employment in the coal industry, and through the routine of experience he studied and fitted himself as a practical mining engineer. Mr. Jones has been more or less interested in the coal business ever since, though his long association with business at Charleston has made him best known as an insurance man. He is president of the Meridian Insurance Company of Charleston, with offices in the Charleston National Bank Building.

He was born near Huntsville, Jefferson County, Alabama, in 1863, son of Thomas and Lucy (Williams) Jones, his father being of Welsh ancestry. William Jones was left an orphan when a young boy, and had to work his way through school, and after qualifying in a measure as a mining engineer he removed to Kentucky and for sixteen years was a mining engineer for mine operators in the coal sections of that state. Leaving Kentucky, he came to West Virginia in 1894, and since then has been a resident of the capital city. For several years coal mining continued to occupy his time and energies, and his connection with that industry is represented by financial interests in a number of coal mining companies and he is secretary and treasurer of the Middle Creek Coal Company.

Since 1900 Mr. Jones has been district agent in West Virginia for the great Fidelity & Casualty Company of New York, and records of the company give him a high standing among its district agents. Mr. Jones was also the principal organizer and for several years was vice president and general manager of the Provident Life & Casualty Company of Charleston, a West Virginia enterprise. Selling his interest in this in May, 1920, he soon afterward organized the Meridian Insurance Company, of which he is president. This company issues accident, casualty and health insurance policies, has an authorized capital of $125,000, and associated with Mr. Jones as directors and stockholders in the company are some of Charleston's most substantial citizens.

Mr. Jones is a member of the Charleston Chamber of Commerce and Rotary Club, is a thirty-second degree Scottish Rite Mason and Shriner and an Elk. He married Miss Gertrude M. Myers, of Myersdale, Pennsylvania, a town that was named for her grandfather.

FRANK D. FORTNEY, M. D. A capable teacher for several years, finishing his literary education meanwhile, then pursuing the full medical course at Baltimore, Doctor Portney since graduating, for nearly twenty years, has enjoyed an exceptionally large practice at Newburg in Preston County, though for nearly a year he was absent from duty as a medical officer in the army.

Doctor Portney is a native of Preston County and a member of one of the older families here. His great-grandfather came from Maryland more than a century ago and is buried in the old graveyard at Bethlehem, near Reedsville, in Preston County. His son, Daniel R. Portney, was born in that community, and for many years was a prominent minister of the Methodist Protestant Church. The home of his later years was at Kingwood, and he died in 1902, at the age of eighty-three. As a youth he had limited opportunities to attend school, and his education was largely the result of his eager intelligence and ambition to perfect his knowledge. He was an extensive reader and was noted for his knowledge of history, especially sacred history and the New and Old Testament. Daniel R. Portney married Mahala Pell, daughter of John Pell, representing another early family in Preston County. Their children were: Francis Asbury, father of Doctor Portney; Amariah Pell, who spent his life as a farmer near Kingwood; Isaiah Kirk, who was a railroad man with the Baltimore & Ohio and later an oil operator and died at Parkersburg; William Fairfax, who was a farmer at Eglon; and Emma, the only daughter, died near Kingwood, wife of Solomon P. Hawley.

Francis A. Portney was born near Kingwood, January 23, 1837, and he came to manhood with a country school education. His record as a Union soldier is one that will always be cherished by his descendants. Early in the war he enlisted in Company C of the Third West Virginia Infantry, and for three years was with the Army of the Potomac. He was a musician. He was in the first battle of Bull Run and in a number of others, until finally he was taken prisoner and at the close of his service he was in Andersonville, where he endured greater hardships and sufferings than in all his marchings and fighting. He was a mere skeleton and completely broken in health when released. Following the war and after recovering his strength he was a worker in the oil district at Burning Springs, Wirt County, and from there returned to Preston County and resumed his place on a farm near Kingwood, and during the rest of his active years was devoted to agriculture and the duties of a good citizen in that locality. He cleared the timber off a large part of the land he cultivated. He always voted as a republican but was never concerned in partisan politics and was a member of the Methodist Church. Francis A. Portney, who died February 28, 1917, at the age of eighty, married Virginia L. Pickering, a native of Wirt County, and daughter of Daniel Pickering, an old settler there and descended from an American family whose record runs back into the early history of Boston, Massachusetts. Virginia Portney died in August, 1916. They were the parents of four sons and four daughters: Dr. Clark S., of Hundred, West Virginia; Ellen, wife of Claud E. Keefover, of Reedsville; Dr. Frank D.; Rebecca, whose first husband was A. A. Pell and she is now Mrs. James Phillips, of Independence, West Virginia; Florence, wife of George W. White, of Kingwood; Evelyn B., a trained nurse at Terra Alta; Dr. Millard H. and Milford D., twin brothers, the former at Arcola, Illinois, and the latter a dental student and a farmer.

Frank D. Portney was born at the old homestead near Kingwood, January 27, 1875. The farm was his environment until he was twenty years of age. While growing up he attended country schools, qualified as a teacher, and in the intervals of teaching attended the Fairmont State Normal. Doctor Portney at the age of twenty-four left teaching to enter the Baltimore Medical College, now the medical department of the University of Maryland. He graduated in 1904 and for six months was an interne in the Maryland General Hospital at Baltimore. With this very thorough equipment for practice Doctor Portney located at Newburg, but has since kept in touch with the advanced work in his profession by various post-graduate courses, spending twelve weeks in the Johns Hopkins Hospital at Baltimore, three months in the University of Illinois, one month in the New York Post-Graduate School, and one month in Harvard Medical College in Boston.

In July, 1918, Doctor Portney was commissioned a captain in the Medical Corps, and during his active service was attached to the Base Hospital at Camp Shelby, Mississippi. He received his honorable discharge on December 28, 1918. Doctor Portney since the war has been a member of the Board of Examiners for soldiers' pensions, and is a member of the County, West Virginia State and American Medical associations.

The affairs of his home town as well as his profession have not been neglected. He is a member of the Board of Education of Lyon District, and this board built the new Lyon District High School. He has served on the town council. Doctor Portney gave his first presidential vote to Major McKinley. He is one of the trustees of the Methodist Episcopal Church and is affiliated with the Masonic Lodge.

In Preston County, April 12, 1920, Doctor Portney married Miss Lula B. DeMoss, daughter of Frank H. and Kate (Shafferman) DeMoss. Her people have lived in Preston County for several generations. Mrs. Portney was educated in the Newburg public schools and was a teacher before her marriage. They have two children, Elihu S. and Catherine L.

CHAUNCEY W. HUSTON. Three successive generations of this branch of the Huston family have been identified with the building trades, primarily as carpenters. Some buildings dating from Civil war times in Morgantown attest the skill of the family. Chauncey W. Huston, of the present generation, was also a carpenter and contractor, but in later years has broadened his field to general real estate development.

He was born in Morgantown, June 3, 1863, and is descended from Peter Huston, a native of Ireland who came to America before the close of the eighteenth century and located in Somerset County, Pennsylvania. His son, Chambers Huston, was born in Somerset in 1809, and was both a carpenter and cabinet maker. He died in his native county in 1889. He married Margaret Pritts, who died in 1896. They were the parents of thirteen children, including two pairs of twins.

The late Samuel P. Huston, their third child, was for many years prominent as a contractor and builder and substantial citizen of Morgantown. He was born in Somerset County, Pennsylvania, January 3, 1835. As a youth he learned the carpenter's trade and in 1858 moved to Morgantown, where in after years he became one of the leading building contractors. He was senior member of the firm Huston & Demain, which was organized October 1, 1881, and continued in business until 1910, a period of thirty years during which they handled many of the important building contracts in this section of the state, and in conjunction they also operated a lumber yard, planing mills and did an extensive business in builders' supplies. Samuel P. Huston always did his part as a public-spirited citizen, served on the city council, and was an active leader in the Methodist Episcopal Church and in the Sunday School. He died November 22, 1912. On March 1, 1861 he married Louise Murphy. To their marriage was born two sons and a daughter, Chauncey W.; Charles R., born February 18, 1865; and Louise, born August 8, 1875, who became the wife of Louis T. Krebs.

Chauncey W. Huston was reared in Morgantown, where he attended the city schools and West Virginia University. He became a carpenter, and during the existence of the firm Huston & Demain was active in its extensive business. After the firm dissolved he concentrated his attention on his growing real estate interests. Mr. Huston was an associate of Judge I. G. Lazzelle, Dr. S. S. Wade, John W. Wills and the late Col. James Frazier in organizing the Morgantown Bridge Improvement Company. This company built the South Park Bridge and developed South Park, putting in all the paving and sewerage and the marketed what is today the most beautiful and finest restricted residence section of Morgantown. Mr. Huston is low president of the company while Doctor Wade is vice president, and Donald Lazzelle is secretary and treasurer. Mr. Huston is also interested in oil properties in West Virginia and later extended his holdings in this industry to Oklahoma and Kansas.

Mr. Huston married Mary E. DeTar, daughter of M. S. DeTar, of Kansas. Mr. Huston is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church and is affiliated with Morgantown Lodge No. 411, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks.

STEPHEN F. ELKINS. With large business interests ably managed, Stephen F. Elkins, prominent in financial affairs and officially identified with many of the important industries of Morgantown and Monongalia County, is one of the representative men of this part of West Virginia. He was born in New York City, August 26, 1880, and is a son of Nathan and Rebecca (Pan Tell) Elkins, and is of the third generation of his family in America.

Stephen F. Elkins was reared in New York, attended the public schools and New York College, in preparation for Columbia University. For a time he was a glass salesman and afterward became interested in the manufacture of glass in Pennsylvania and Ohio. He came to the coal mining sections of West Virginia and became interested in the coal industry. A document in his possession, on which Mr. Elkins places great personal value, is his first class course from the West Virginia Bureau of Mines as a practical mine manager. He is a member of the Morgantown Wholesale Coal Association, and of the American Wholesale Coal Association.

On May 6, 1920, Mr. Elkins married Miss Anna Mary Urslove, who is a daughter of Samuel and Lydia Purslove, of St. Clairsville, Ohio. Mrs. Elkins' parents came from England to the United States about forty years ago. He is a member of the Episcopal Church.

Mr. Elkins is a member of Morgantown Union Lodge No. 1, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, Morgantown Commandery No. 18, Knights Templar, and Osiris Temple, Mystic Shrine, Wheeling, West Virginia. He belongs to the Kwanian and Old Colony Clubs, and to the Morgantown Chamber of Commerce. He has proved his worth as a tizen in many ways since coming to Morgantown, where sterling traits of character are quickly recognized. He is essentially a business man and possesses in large degree those qualities which tend to encourage and energize effort, a valuable asset to any community. As a personality, he is genial, liberal minded and charitable.

BASIL E. SWIGER M. D. A skillful physician and surgeon whose work has been done in his native state since he graduated in medicine in 1905, Doctor Swiger is one of the capable members of his profession at New Martinsville.

He was born at Sardis, in Harrison County, December 4, 1878. This is a Colonial American family of German origin. William and Mary Swiger immigrated from Germany to Pennsylvania in 1768. William Swiger developed wholesale drygoods business at Uniontown, Pennsylvania. While abroad on a trip to Germany for the purpose of buying a cargo of goods he was lost at sea. The grandfather of Doctor Swiger was Abel Swiger, who was born in Marion County, West Virginia, in 1803, the family having in the meantime moved from Pennsylvania to this state.

He spent the greater part of his life as a farmer in Harrison County, and died near Sardis in 1891. His wife, Elizabeth Haney, was a native of Marion County, and also died at Sardis.

Blackburn G. Swiger, father of Doctor Swiger, was born at Horners Run, in Marion County, in 1850, was reared and married in Harrison County, and owned and conducted a large farm there. He was a democrat and an active member of the Baptist Church. Blackburn Swiger, who died at Sardis in 1916, married Emeline Drummond, who was born in Tyler County in 1851 and died at the old home at Sardis in February, 1921. She was the mother of six children. Flora B., is the wife of George Douglas, who spent his active life in the regular army and is now being retired at Abbeville, South Carolina.

Basil E. Swiger spent his early life on his farm in Harrison County, attended rural schools there, and later entered the Baltimore Medical College, from which he graduated M. D. in 1905. He is a member of the Alpha Omega Delta medical fraternity. From 1905, the year he graduated, until 1914 he practiced at Brown in Harrison County, and then for four years was surgeon for the Hutchinson Coal Company at Dover in the same county. His professional work has been done at New Martinsville since 1918. He has his offices in the Masonic Temple Building on Main Street, and he is a member of the various medical societies. Doctor Swiger is a democrat, a member of the Baptist Church, and is affiliated with Shinnston Lodge No. 24, F. and A. M., and Dover Lodge, Independent Order of Odd Fellows.

His home is at 448 Linden Avenue. In 1904, at Baltimore, before he graduated from Medical College, he married Miss Edna English, daughter of John and Sarah (Thompson) English, now deceased. Mrs. Swiger, who died at Brown, West Virginia, is survived by three children: Clair, born February 5, 1906, a student in the New Martinsville High School; Ruth, born March 28, 1908; and Esther, born November 23, 1912. In 1914, at New Martinsville, Mr. Swiger married Miss Virge Burlingame, daughter of Thomas and Amanda (Burgess) Burlingame, residents of New Martinsville, where her father is a retired merchant. Mrs. Swiger is a graduate of the New Martinsville High School. They have a little daughter, Betty Jane, born October 16, 1917.

ANDREW JOHNSON JONES, wholesale grocer in the City of Moundsville, Marshall County, is a grandson of Thomas S. Jones, whose parents were natives of Wales. Thomas S. Jones married Miss Shinn, a member of the family for which Shinnadoh, West Virginia, was named. He was born in the Shenandoah Valley of Virginia in 1801, and died in 1897, at the patriarchal age of ninety-six years. He came to what is now Doddridge County, West Virginia, and became the owner of a large farm property on a branch of Arnold Creek. He was one of the extensive farmers of that county, and gave to each of his sons a good farm. He and his wife died on the old homestead, and their large family of children became somewhat widely scattered. The son William S. was born in 1832 and died in 1911, he having been a successful merchant at Central Station, Doddridge County and having also been for forty years one of the leading physicians in his native county. In 1861 Doctor Jones married Martha Isabel Bond, of Shenandoah, Virginia, and she died in 1903, after a married life of forty-two years. Doctor Jones later married Mrs. Lucy Hall, the widow of a lawyer of that name, her family name having been Manning. She survives her second husband and resides at Moundsville. The only child of the second marriage is Manning Jones, a graduate of the Moundsville High School. Of the eleven children of the first marriage of Doctor Jones two daughters and two sons are living: Z. W. is associated with a glass manufactory at Moundsville, and the other son is the subject of this sketch.

Andrew J. Jones gained his early education in the public schools of Doddridge and Marshall counties, and he was for twenty-two years in the employ of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Company, having served as telegraph operator and station agent and having been for a time superintendent of the company's shops and station at Grafton, besides which he was for a time station agent at Morgantown. In 1892 he was made agent for the company at Moundsville, and here he became interested in the sand and gravel business. In 1902 he resigned his railroad office, and thereafter he continued his extensive sand-production operations until the five pits were exhausted, the enterprise having involved the shipping of twenty carloads a day. In 1913 Mr. Jones engaged in the wholesale grocery business in this city, and he also conducted several retail grocery and produce stores, two of which he continues to operate. He has developed a large and prosperous wholesale trade in groceries, feed, seeds, etc. In 1906 he became one of the organizers of the Mound City Bank, and he is secretary of its board of directors. He is a director also of the American Building & Loan Association, which has provided a greater number of homes for citizens of Moundsville than has any other one agency. He was one of the original stockholders in the United States Stamp- ing Company, and is still one of its substantial stock- holders, besides which he has other important financial and real estate interests at Moundsville. He has been the loyal supporter of measures and enterprises tending to advance the general welfare of his home city, has served as a member of the city council, is a republican in politics and is affiliated with the Masonic fraternity.

At the age of twenty-eight years Mr. Jones wedded Miss Grace Virginia Jeffers, of Salem, this state, and they have had three sons: Lynn E., John Marshall Kingdon and Andrew Johnson, Jr. Lynn E., who is now associated with his father's business, is a graduate of Bellefonte University in the State of Pennsylvania. John M. K., the second son, died at the age of seventeen years. The young- est son is, in 1921, a student in high school. Mrs. Jones is a daughter of J. M. Jeffers, formerly of Kingwood, this state, and her maternal grandfather, Mr. Davidson, was a clergyman of the Missionary Baptist Church, of which she herself is an earnest member. Mrs. Jones is secretary of the Woman's Club of Moundsville and is a graduate of Broadus College, one of the excellent educational institu- tions of West Virginia.

RUSSELL B. HIXENBAUGH is one of the aggressive young business men of Hundred and is proprietor of a hard- ware store that is the leader in that line of merchandise for all this section of Wetzel County.

Mr. Hixenbaugh represents an old and substantial family in this section. His grandfather, George Hixenbaugh, was born near Hundred in 1810, spent all his life as a prosper- ous farmer in that vicinity and died in 1892, at the age of eighty-two. George W. Hixenbaugh, father of the Hun- dred merchant, was born in the same vicinity in 1851, and is still living on his farm. He has acquired and im- proved some of the valuable land in this locality and is now developing an extensive orchard for the production of fancy high grade fruit. He is a republican, a promi- nent member of the Christian Church and is affiliated with Hundred Lodge No. 200, Independent Order of Odd Fel- lows. In the paternal line Russell B. Hixenbaugh is a descendant of the Church family, one of the very first to establish homes in Wetzel County. George W. Hixenbaugh married Mollie Elizabeth Johnson, who was born near Hundred in 1864. Russell B. is the oldest of their three children. Miss Aera E. is at home and Clement Stanley was for several years in the banking business and recently traveled to California for his health.

Russell B. Hixenbaugh was born on the farm near Hun- dred August 17, 1888. As a boy he attended the country schools, spent three terms in the Fairmont State Normal School, and in 1909 graduated from the West Virginia Business College at Clarksburg. After completing his edu- cation Mr. Hixenbaugh entered business at Hundred by purchasing the hardware store of White & Henderson, and in a dozen years has greatly extended the trade and volume of business done by this store until it is a leader in its line over the district between Mannington and Camerons.

Mr. Hixenbaugh lives on Cleveland Street in a residence owned by his mother. He is the present city recorder of Hundred, is a republican, is a past grand of Hundred Lodge No. 200, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, a member of Littleton Encampment, and is a past chan- cellor of Hundred Lodge No. 84, Knights of Pythias.

On August 23, 1911, at Moundsville, he married Miss Irene Evans, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Michael D. Evans, now living at Folsom in Wetzel County. Her father is passenger agent for the Burlington & Ohio Railway. Mr. and Mrs. Hixenbaugh have had three children: Kenneth, who died at the age of four years, Florence Lee, born in January, 1917, and James Keith, born in 1918.

OKEY L. HUDKINS, M. D. To his chosen profession Dr. Hudkins has brought in addition to a thorough training some fine natural qualifications, has always enjoyed a good practice and a high reputation, and has also made good use of his talents in a business way. He is one of the leading professional men of Lewis County.

Doctor Hudkins was born at Chapel in Braxton County, West Virginia, November 23, 1881, son of Minter T. and Josephine (Young) Hudkins. His father was born in Braxton County, February 4, 1856, while his mother was born in 1861 and died at the age of fifty-one. Minter Hudkins, who now lives at Salem in Harrison County, was reared on a farm, and after his marriage made farming his permanent vocation. He owned a good place of 12 acres. He is a past noble grand of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, has sat in the Grand Lodge, is a republi- can and a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Minter Hudkins has seven living children. Ida is the wife of John H. Moore. Wirt, who for seventeen years has been a teacher in the public schools, is now deputy county assessor of Braxton County. Wilbur is a farmer and ear- penter. Guy, formerly a teacher, is now a farmer. Nina, who also taught school, is the wife of E. I. Knight. Lu- cile is a graduate of the Glenville Normal School and a teacher.

Doctor Hudkins grew up on a farm, had a public an- normal school training, and followed the traditions of the family by teaching school for five years. He employe the vacation seasons in the practice of farming. He bega the study of medicine in 1905, entering the medical de- partment of the University of Louisville, where he was graduated M.D. in 1908. For thirteen years Doctor Hud- kins practiced his profession at Flatwoods, Braxton County, though during the year 1912 he practiced in Iowa. On November 8, 1920, he moved his home and offices to Weston. Doctor Hudkins is a member of the County, State and American Medical associations.

November 25, 1914, he married Catherine V. Scanlon, who is a graduate nurse. They are members of the Meth- dist Episcopal Church at Weston. Doctor Hudkins is affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, the Improved Order of Red Men, Modern Woodmen of America, and is a republican. In a business way he is director in the Mountain State Gas Company, the Ris- Oil and Gas Company, and individually owns four pro- ducing gas wells. He is a stockholder in the Home National Bank of Sutton and is the possessor of considerable real estate, including his modern home at Weston.

WILLIAM E. WHARTON is proprietor of the leading up- dertaking service and equipment in Wetzel County, at Ne- Martinsville. He has been associated with this profes- sion and business since boyhood, and is a former member of the State Board of Embalmers.

Mr. Wharton was born at Valley Mills, Wood Count- West Virginia, April 11, 1869. The Wharton ancestry is Irish but the family was established in Pennsylvania Colonial times. His grandfather, Daniel Wharton, was born in Greene County, Pennsylvania, in 1813, and mar- ried there Miss Hoy, who was born in 1820. Soon after- ward they moved to Wood County, West Virginia, and lived the rest of their lives on a farm there. Daniel Whar- ton died on Laurel Creek in 1904 and his wife in 1911. Isaac Wharton, their son, was a life-long resident of Wo- County, a very successful farmer, he was living practical- retired at the time of his death, although he still own his farm at Valley Mills. He was born in Mononga- County, West Virginia, January 17, 1845, and died Mar- 24, 1922. He was a youthful soldier of the Union Arm- during the Civil war, going into the West Virginia Caval- and participating in the battle of Shiloh, later Chickama- Lookout Mountain and Missionary Ridge, and was with three miles of Appomattox when Lee surrendered. He wa a republican in politics. Isaac Wharton married Ameri- Victoria Rice, who was born near Valley Mills in 1845 at- died at her home there March 23, 1919. William E. is th- oldest of their children. Josephine died at Valley Mi- at the age of thirty-six, and Miss Rose Anna died Fe- ruary 7, 1922. She was living with her father at the ti- of her death.

William E. Wharton made good use of his education opportunities in the public schools of Valley Mills and in the Mountain State Business College at Parkersburg, which he attended in 1889. When only thirteen years of age he was doing duty as an assistant undertaker near Valley Mills. He has made a thorough study of the science of embalming and is one of the recognized leaders in the profession. He was a general merchant and undertaker at Waverly until 1902, and in that year he moved to New Martinsville and bought the furniture and undertaking establishment of Stanford Brothers. In successive years he made this a recognized center for reliable merchandise as well as an unexcelled service in undertaking, and in time the combined business became too severe a tax upon his energies as sole proprietor and recently he sold his stock of furniture and now gives his entire time to undertaking. He owns the well equipped parlors at 300 Main Street, and has all the facilities of a high class funeral director, including motor equipment. His service as a member of the State Board of Embalmers of West Virginia came through appointment by Governor A. B. White. He was on the board four years. Mr. Wharton owns a very comfortable home at 242 Clark Street. He is a republican, served two years on the City Council of New Martinsville, was for 9½ years treasurer of the Presbyterian Church and is now president of its Board of Trustees. He was worshipful master in 1916 of Wetzel Lodge No. 39, A. F. and A. M., is a member of Parkersburg Chapter, R. A. M., Calvary Commandery No. 3, K. T., at Parkersburg, has taken eighteen degrees in the Scottish Rite Consistory at Parkersburg, and is also affiliated with Magnolia Lodge No. 42, Independent Order of Odd Fellows.

In 1899, at Parkersburg, he married Miss Eva C. Ogden, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Louis Ogden, now deceased. Her father was a well to do farmer near Waverly. Three children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Wharton: Ray Hunter, born February 27, 1901, graduated from West Virginia University Medical School in June, 1921, at the age of twenty, is now an assistant instructor in the medical department, and in the fall of 1922 expects to enter Jefferson Medical College at Philadelphia. During the war he was in the Reserve Officers Training Camp at the university and is still in the Reserve, and will receive rank as second lieutenant at the age of twenty-one. The two younger children of Mr. and Mrs. Wharton are Willa, born in 1906, attending the Magnolia High School, and Eva America, born in 1909.

WILLIAM H. GREENE, M. D. A well established physician and surgeon at Weston, Doctor Greene was a captain in the medical corps during the World war, and is well known in Lewis County on account of his professional activities in town and country.

Doctor Greene was born in Braxton County, West Virginia, January 5, 1878, son of William H. and Mary (Griffin) Greene, his father born in Upshur County in 1841 and his mother in 1843. Both are now deceased. William H. Greene, Sr., was reared on a farm, had a public school education, at the age of seventeen began teaching, and continued that service until he had completed forty-three terms of school work. He was one of the prominent educators of Braxton County in his day. He also did some farming, and after retiring from the schoolroom lived on a farm until his death. He was a member of the Catholic Church, a democrat, and served fifteen years as a justice of the peace in Braxton County. Of his nine children one died in infancy and seven are now living: Dr. William H.; Madge, formerly a teacher, now the wife of M. A. Hennessy; John, an oil well driller; Edward, who was a teacher, went to England in 1918 in the employ of the United States Fuel Administration, and is still abroad; Winifred, formerly a teacher, is the wife of Clarence Marsh, of Braxton County; Michael A., now teaching at Wheeling, was a second lieutenant in the World War; and Bridget is a trained nurse living at Baltimore.

Dr. William H. Greene grew up on a farm, acquired his public and academic training at Burnsville, and for four years taught school. He then entered the University of Louisville Medical School and was graduated in 1908. Doctor Greene began his professional practice at Camden in Lewis County, and was the principal physician in that country community for nine years. Early in the World War he accepted a commission as captain in the medical reserve corps and subsequently was assigned to active duty at a base hospital in New York City, where he served a year and a half. After leaving the army Doctor Greene resumed his practice at Camden one year, and in 1920 established his home and offices at Weston. He is a member of the County, State and American Medical associations and the Southern Medical Association, is a Catholic, Knight of Columbus and in politics a republican.

In 1909 he married Miss Beatrice Murray. Their five children are Marie, Irene, William H., Jr., Geraldine and Charles.

PHILANDER K. TETER, a resident of Lewis County for half a century, was at one time in the railway mail service, was also in business at Weston, but now devotes his time to his stock farm, where he makes a specialty of breeding pure bred Hereford cattle. He has one of the best herds of beef stock in the state.

Mr. Teter was born in Harrison County, West Virginia, July 4, 1860, son of David and Asenath (Lang) Teter. His father was born in Harrison County in November, 1830, and his mother in December, 1820. Both lived long and useful lives, the father dying in 1913 and the mother in 1911. After their marriage they settled on a farm, and began with practically nothing. David Teter possessed an unusually well balanced character, had good judgment, great industry, and in the course of years he accumulated a competence and 600 acres of good farming land. He was one of the pioneer live stock dealers in this section, and was well known through his dealings over Harrison, Taylor, Doddridge and Lewis counties. He shipped stock to the eastern markets of Baltimore, Philadelphia and New York. During the Civil war he served in the Union army as a teamster. In 1872 he moved with his family to Lewis County, and at one time was superintendent of the Poor Farm, and conducted that institution with such efficiency and economy that for the first time it accumulated a surplus in the treasury, though an unusually large number of dependents had to be cared for. David Teter was a republican and a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Of his four children one died in infancy. Jesse H. is a Lewis County farmer living in Weston. Margaret is the wife of E. C. Fisher, of Lewis County.

Philander K. Teter was twelve years old when the family moved to Lewis County on April 13, 1872. He acquired a district school education, and his working activities were in association with his father until he was about twenty-eight years old. It was on leaving the farm that he became a railway mail clerk. This was during the administration of President Harrison. He had charge of the first standard mail car run over the division from Clarksburg to Buckhannon and Weston. He was in the mail service for several years, and when he resigned he started a feed barn at Weston and gradually increased that to a general livery barn. He conducted this for twenty years, and incidentally also had a meat market and barber shop. He traded these holdings in Weston for a farm, and for another five years conducted a boarding barn. Selling that property, he bought one of his present farms, comprising 214 acres, and has still another farm of 208 acres. His first important venture in the stock business was the breeding and growing of ponies, and his farm became widely known as the Hill and Dale Farm. He has abandoned the pony industry and now makes a specialty of Hereford cattle and Duroc swine, his place being known among breeders as the Smith Run Hereford Farm.

March 28, 1890, Mr. Teter married a daughter of Dr. Philip F. Pinnell. She was reared at Buckhannon and graduated in music at Pittsburg. They have one daughter, Mabel, born February 26, 1892, a graduate of the Weston High School and now the wife of T. M. Alker of Jersey City, New Jersey. Mr. and Mrs. Alker have a son, Philander K. Alker, seven years old. Mr. Teter is a member of Weston Lodge No. 43, Knights of Pythias, and for the past fifteen years has been master of the exchequer of his lodge. He was for 2½ years a school commissioner, but resigned that office. In politics he is a republican.

HENRY BLUMBERG is manager of the Hub Department Store at Weston. This is one of a chain of mercantile enterprises owned and directed by members of the Blumberg family, the headquarters of the business being at Baltimore.

Henry Blumberg was born in Russia, October 5, 1885, and was three years of age when his parents, Hyman and Mary (Kramer) Blumberg, came to America. They located in Baltimore, where Hyman Blumberg for many years has been one of the prosperous and successful merchants and is still active in the wholesale business, associated with his sons. He is a member of the Jewish Synagogue at Baltimore. The four children are: Alexander, who finished his education in the public schools of Baltimore, is now president of the mercantile corporation of the family, a company operating four large stores, one at Baltimore, one at Fairmont, West Virginia, one at Weston and one at Charleston. The second son, M. M., is manager of the Fairmont business. Henry is at Weston, while Martin is a partner in the business at Baltimore, having a business college course. In 1909 Henry went into business for himself at Grafton, West Virginia. He remained there three years and since 1912 has been active head of the Hub store at Weston. The business at Weston was established by his older brothers, Alexander and M. M., in 1902, and has had a steady growth and prosperity for twenty years.

In 1910 Mr. Henry Blumberg married Rose Rubenstein, a native of Philadelphia, where she was reared and educated. They have four children, named Minerva, Bernard, Anita and Eleanor. Mr. Blumberg and family are members of the Baltimore Congregation. He is active in the Rotary Club and Chamber of Commerce at Weston and is an independent voter.

GEORGE SNYDER, M. D. In the county where he was born and reared Dr. George Snyder has practiced medicine and surgery with credit and success for upwards of thirty years, and he ranks high among the professional men of Weston and his public spirit in community affairs has been on a par with his professional enthusiasm.

Doctor Snyder was born on a farm two miles northwest of Weston, October 24, 1863, son of Robert and Lucinda (Fisher) Snyder. His mother was a native of Lewis County, while his father was born in Rockingham County, Virginia, and was brought as a boy to Lewis County, West Virginia. The parents of Doctor Snyder died when he was an infant, his mother in 1865 and his father in 1866. George was the youngest of three children. As orphans they were reared in the home of their maternal grandmother Fisher.

Dr. George Snyder had the farm as his youthful environment, and his opportunities in the public schools improved him so well that he qualified as a teacher and for two years taught school. For one year he attended the Glenville Normal, and then began the study of medicine with Dr. W. Gaston of Clarksburg. After his preliminary studies he entered medical college in the fall of 1887, was graduated in 1889, and for eight years he conducted his private practice at Freemansburg in Lewis County. From 1897 to 1899 Doctor Snyder was assistant superintendent of the West Virginia State Hospital. On retiring from that office he located at Weston, where he has now practiced for twenty-two years, and his office has always been in the same building.

He married Lulu Gibson, daughter of J. J. Gibson. She became the mother of four children: Ava, a graduate of the Weston High School and of the Mountain State Business College at Parkersburg, is the wife of Charles

A. Jennings, of Akron, Ohio; Madge, a high school graduate and a graduate of St. Joseph's School for Nurses at Baltimore, is the wife of J. B. Brown; Robert G. graduated from high school, spent one year at Randolph-Macon College, then attended Washington and Lee University, and is now in the Government service in the Philippines; Wilma, the youngest, is a high school graduate. After the death of the mother of these children Doctor Snyder married, March 28, 1907, Irene B. Turner. They are members of the Baptist Church. Doctor Snyder is a past chancellor of the Knights of Pythias Lodge, a republican, and is a stockholder in the Lewis County Bank.

BERTRAM A. KOBLEGARD. The name Koblegard has been a prominent one in commercial affairs in West Virginia for a long period of years. Its distinctive associations over the state at large were with the wholesale grocery business. Bertram A. Koblegard is a son of the wholesale merchant, was with his father in business for a time but now conducts a leading fire insurance agency at Weston.

Bertram A. Koblegard was born at West Union in Doddridge County, West Virginia, March 11, 1874, son of Jacob and Isophene (Powell) Koblegard. Jacob Koblegard was born in Denmark, October 5, 1848, and came to the United States at the age of sixteen. He had a fair education, a bent for industry, but had literally no money. For several years he worked on farms in Ohio. He then came to West Virginia, and by successive steps became a prominent factor in the wholesale grocery business, and for thirty years was connected with the firm Ruhl Koblegard & Company, with branch offices in Weston, Clarksburg and Grafton. He sold out his interest in this business in 1904. For a number of years he was also president of the National Exchange Bank of Weston and was president of the Crescent Window Glass Company of Weston. Jacob Koblegard finally went back to Denmark, and died at Copenhagen, September 4, 1919. He was a member of the Masonic Lodge, and he and his wife were Methodists. His wife was born in Harrison County, West Virginia, in 1855. They were the parents of four children: Bertram A.; Manie C., wife of E. R. Minshall, of Tulsa, Oklahoma; Rupert N., of Washington, D. C.; and Thorne F., of Weston.

Bertram A. Koblegard has lived most of his life in Weston, where he attended the grammar and high schools, and for two years was a student in Gettysburg College in Pennsylvania. In 1896 he graduated A. B. from Ohio Wesleyan University at Delaware, and then returned to Weston to participate in his father's wholesale grocery business. When his father retired he established an office to handle fire insurance, and in that business has found a congenial as well as profitable field. He has several financial interests, and is a man of unusual gifts, displayed particularly in literature. He has written several novelettes, one play, and a number of short stories that have been contributed to magazines. In religious matters he is a liberal. He has been active in the democratic party, was a member of the city council, and was defeated with the rest of his ticket as candidate for county clerk in 1908. He is a member of the Ancient Order of United Workmen.

In 1897 Mr. Koblegard married Flora Davison. They have two sons: Jacob, a graduate of the Weston High School and now in the automobile business in New York City; and Edwin, also a high school graduate, and a clerk in the Weston postoffice.

A. F. WHELAN has to his credit a record of practically half a century of active participation in the commercial affairs of Weston. He is now retired from merchandising though the business goes on under the management of his son, A. F., Jr. Mr. Whelan among other honors is a veteran Union soldier.

He was born in Berkeley County, West Virginia, January 22, 1840, son of James and Johanna (Welsh) Whelan, the former a native of County Kilkenny and the latter of County Waterford, Ireland. They grew up and were edu-ated and married in Ireland, and came to the United States in 1829. They lived in New York for a time, where James Whelan was a laboring man. For three years he worked on the Washington and Cumberland Canal, and subsequently leased a farm in Pennsylvania and worked it seven years. He then moved to Preston County, West Virginia, and was a foreman in the building of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, and subsequently located at West Union, where he was superintendent of construction for the west end of the tunnel two years. When he gave up railroad work he bought a farm in Lewis County, on Mud Lick, three miles southeast of Weston, and in that country district continued his activities as a farmer until the end of his life. He then moved to Weston, and both he and his good wife died there. They were devout Catholics and he was a democrat. He was one of the substantial farmers of Lewis County, owning at one time 400 acres of land. Of his eighteen children six are still living: A. F. Whelan; Margaret, widow of John Morrison; Dr. M. E. Whelan, of Roanoke, West Virginia; Thomas, of Weston; Miss Julia; and Martin, of Jefferson, Texas.

R. M. Adams.

A. F. Whelan grew up on his father's farm, and attended the parochial schools. He lived at home until the Civil war came on, and he joined the Union army and for 2½ years served as a brigade wagon master. On July 3, 1865, soon after the close of the war, he married Mary McGill. She was born in Ireland and came to the United States with her parents when she was a girl.

After his marriage Mr. Whelan bought the property where he now lives in Weston. For three years he was manager of the store of P. M. Hale, and then, in 1868, engaged in business for himself. He continued in business until nearly all his early contemporaries had retired, and finally he retired himself, turning the business over to his son Andrew F. Mr. Whelan was one of the organizers of the Citizens Bank of Weston, one of the substantial financial institutions of the state, and he is still vice president. Mr. and Mrs. Whelan had seven children, and the five now living are: Alice W., wife of William McGary, of Weston; Mary J., wife of Walter A. Edwards, of Weston; Andrew F., Jr., successor to his father in business at Weston; Catherine, widow of Luther Sleigh; and Thomas A., who is cashier of the Citizens Bank. The deceased children are: James Joseph, who died at Thomasville, Georgia, in young manhood, and one child that died at birth. The family are members of the Catholic Church and Mr. Whelan is a democrat in politics.

JOSEPH B. COX is one of the most substantial business men and citizens of Weston. His business interests and activities have taken a rather diversified form during his active career, but for many years have been directed in the furniture business at Weston.

Mr. Cox was born on Sand Fork in Lewis County, West Virginia, June 7, 1857, son of Thomas and Margaret (Gillooly) Cox. His father who was born in County Roscommon, Ireland, April 26, 1815, was reared in Ireland, liberally educated, and was a teacher both in his native country and after coming to the United States. He was also a surveyor by profession. When he came to this country he located at Fairmont, West Virginia, where he met and married his wife. She was a native of the same county in Ireland, and after coming to the United States had lived in New York City for a time. After his marriage Thomas Cox worked with Owen Gillooly at Fairmont and later moved to Sand Fork, West Virginia, in 1855, and bought a farm. Farming was his vocation the rest of his life. He and his wife died in the same year, she in January and he in December, 1892. They were faithful Catholics, and he was a democrat in his political affiliation. There were eleven children, and the five now living are: James W., a retired oil producer in Weston; Patrick, a former coal miner, also living at Weston; John H., of Hot Springs, Arkansas; Miss Mary A.; and Joseph B.

Joseph B. Cox spent his early life on the farm on Sand Fork and attended the local public schools. He remained at home until he was twenty-three, and after leaving home he secured employment as a carpenter at the State Hospital at Weston. Altogether he was in the service of the hospital for seven years. After his first period of employment he went into business for himself for a time, and having saved some capital he bought a farm of 183 acres on Sand Fork. He still owns that property, though he occupied it and operated it only for a year and a half after his marriage.

On November 24, 1884, he married Ella Mellett. On leaving the farm he resumed his connection with the hospital and subsequently bought a property on the ground where his present furniture store is located. He built a business room there in 1896, and for seven years was associated in the furniture business with his brother. He then bought out his brother's interests and has since conducted one of the best stocked and most prosperous enterprises of its kind in Lewis County. He owns one of the finest homes in the city, at the corner of Third and Main streets, and has a number of other improved properties. His prosperity is the direct result of his great energy and good management, since he started life with practically no capital. He is a democrat and his family are all Catholics.

His first wife died in 1899, leaving two daughters, Mary and Ella, both of whom finished their educations in Mount de Chantel Academy at Wheeling. Ella is a graduate nurse but is now the wife of Charles Green in Mississippi. Mary is the wife of H. P. Henry, of Weston. Mr. Cox subsequently married Catherine Tully. They have five children: Margaret, James, Joseph, Catherine and Nora A. Margaret is also a graduate of Mount de Chantel Academy.

JOHN R. DAVIS is secretary-treasurer of the Davis Lumber Company, one of the larger concerns operating in the lumber sections of West Virginia, the band mill being at Centralia in Braxton County. Mr. Davis has charge of the company's office and business at Weston.

He was born in Somerset County, Pennsylvania, at Ursina, July 7, 1877, son of Joseph B. and Sophia (Walker) Davis. His parents were also born in Somerset County, were reared and educated there, and after their marriage Joseph Davis went into the mercantile and lumber business. For a number of years he continued the business under the name of J. B. Davis & Sons at Ursina, and is still active in the business and the director of the County Trust Company at Somerset. He has served as a trustee of the Lutheran Church and is a republican. Joseph B. Davis and wife had six children: Bertha C., a graduate of high school, also attended college; Edgar C., a graduate of the State Normal School at Indiana, Pennsylvania; John R.; Frank W., president of the Davis Lumber Company; and Claude W. and Wilbur L., both associated with the Davis Company.

John R. Davis grew up at Ursina, Pennsylvania, attended the grammar and high school there and the State Normal at Indiana, and after finishing his education served his practical apprenticeship in the lumber business under his father. Since 1911 he has looked after the company's business at Weston.

He married Miss Bertha Brannon, a native of Weston. They have five children, named William B., Adelaide W., Elizabeth C., John R., Jr., and Martha Hughes. Mr. Davis is a vestryman of St. Paul's Episcopal Church, affiliated with Weston Lodge of Masons, Bigelow Chapter No. 4, R. A. M., St. John Commandery No. 8, K. T., and is a thirty-second degree Scottish Rite Mason and a noble of Nemesis Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Parkersburg. He is a republican, and for two years was a member of the City Council of Weston, but declined a re-election. He is a member of the Weston Rotary Club, of which he served as a director in 1921-1922.

RUSSELL UPDEGRAFF ADAMS has had a progressive association with various industrial organizations in the Upper Ohio Valley for nearly twenty years. For several years his home has been at Sistersville, where he is secretary and treasurer of the Young Torpedo Company, a corporation manufacturing quantities of the explosives used in the oil and gas districts.

Mr. Adams was born at Wheeling, March 4, 1888. His family has been in Wheeling since pioneer times. His grandfather, Jack Adams, who was of Scotch-Irish ancestry, was born at Wheeling in 1837, and spent all his life there. For many years he was a mail clerk on Ohio and Mississippi river steamboats. He died at Wheeling in 1891. Jack Adams married Emma McNell, who was born at Wheeling in 1845, and is still living on Wheeling Island. Their son, Archie L. Adams, was born in March, 1866, at Wheeling, and has spent his life in that vicinity. He was first employed by a Wheeling druggist, Alexander Young, but in 1891 moved out into the country, seven miles from Wheeling on the New Bethany Pike, near Clinton, and for several years conducted a general store there. In 1898 he returned to Wheeling, where for a short time he was employed by the Traction Company, and since then has been in merchandising, and now has charge of the clothing department of Wheeling's great department store of Watkins & Company. His home is at 28 Zane Avenue. A. L. Adams is a democrat and a member of the Presbyterian Church. He married Effie Russell Updegraff, who was born at Wheeling, June 19, 1864. The Updegraffs were a family of Holland Dutch ancestry, descended from Peter Updegraff, who settled in Pennsylvania in Colonial times. The maternal grandfather of R. U. Adams was Israel Updegraff, a native of Pennsylvania, who went to Wheeling when a young man and was in the lumber business there the rest of his life. He married Letitia Ramnage, who was born near Wheeling, October 8, 1828, and is still living, at the age of ninety-three, at St. Clairsville, Ohio. Archie L. Adams and wife were the parents of five children. Russell U.; Jack R., who was a first lieutenant in the Air Service during the war and now lives with his parents and is an employee of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Company; Reed McCullough Baird, a cadet in the Annapolis Naval Academy; Eleanor, who died at the age of five years; and Lawrence, who died when three years old.

Russell Updegraff Adams lived until he was ten years of age with his parents in the country near Wheeling, attended the rural schools of Ohio County, and completed the eighth grade in the Madison School on Wheeling Island. He was in the Wheeling High School through the sophomore year, but in 1901 left school and the following ten years was an employee of the National Tube Company. He was assistant storekeeper when he resigned, and the next two years he was chief clerk for the J. E. Moss Iron Works of Wheeling. Then for a year he was secretary and a stockholder of the Saturn Foundry & Machine Company at Wheeling, after which for six months he returned to the Moss Iron Works as purchasing agent.

Mr. Adams came to Sistersville in June, 1917, as assistant manager of the McJunkin Machine Company. He was promoted to manager in February, 1918, and had charge of the business until September 1, 1919, when he was made manager of the Young Torpedo Company, a Sistersville corporation, with main offices in the Farmers & Producers National Bank Building. In January, 1922, he was made secretary and treasurer of the company. The company manufactures nitro glycerine, and its product is shipped to all the adjacent oil and gas districts of West Virginia and Ohio.

A young business man just getting a foothold in commercial and industrial affairs, Mr. Adams has not neglected other interests that have a legitimate claim on a good citizen. He was city accountant of Sistersville from 1917 to 1920 and again appointed to that office in March, 1922, is an active member of the Presbyterian Church and teacher in its Sunday school, and while in Wheeling was deacon of the Second Presbyterian Church. He is a democrat in politics; a member of Phoenix Lodge No. 73, A. F. and A. M.; Sistersville Chapter No. 27, R. A. M.; Mountain State Commandery No. 14, K. T.; Sistersville Lodge No. 333, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks; Wheeling Lodge No. 114, Knights of Pythias; and is a member of and the second president to hold the office in the Sistersville Kiwanis Club. He lent his aid to the various drives and campaigns during war times.

October 20, 1909, at Wheeling, Mr. Adams married Miss Daisy Dell Hilton, daughter of Jacob and Josephine (Gill) Hilton, residents of Warwood, Wheeling, where her father operates a bank or surface coal mine. Mrs. Adams is a graduate of the Elliott Business College of Wheeling. Four children have been born to their marriage: R. Baird, born December 28, 1910; Ewing, who died at the age of five months; Dorothy, born September 10, 1914; and Effie, born May 29, 1918.

CLAUDE LEANDER SMITH is a successful lawyer and business man of Charleston, is one of the best educated men in the profession in the state, and enjoys a growing fame as an orator and speaker.

Perhaps Mr. Smith inherits some of the wit, humor and eloquence of his distinguished ancestor, James Smith, who was one of the signers of the Declaration of Independence. James Smith was a native of Ireland but was reared and educated in Pennsylvania, was a lawyer and surveyor, and for many years the only practitioner at the bar of York, Pennsylvania. He was a leader in the Revolutionary movement and a member of the first constitutional convention of Pennsylvania and of the Continental Congress and later a judge of the Pennsylvania Court of Appeals. He died at York in 1806. Claude L. Smith is also a native of York, Pennsylvania, where he was born in 1890, son of E. H. and Mary J. (Simpson) Smith. In the maternal line he is a member of the prominent Simpson family of Eastern Ohio, of which Ulysses Simpson Grant was a kinsman. Mr. Smith's mother was a daughter of Dr. R. A. Simpson and a niece of the late Bishop Simpson of the Methodist Church.

Claude L. Smith has degrees from some of the foremost institutions of learning in the country. He graduated from high school at York, received his A. B. degree from Antioch College at Yellow Springs, Ohio, in 1909, and was awarded the Master of Arts degree by Clark University of Worcester, Massachusetts, in 1911. He pursued his law studies chiefly in Cumberland University at Lebanon, Tennessee, where he graduated LL. B. in 1913.

Soon after graduating he came to Charleston, was admitted to the bar, and has been steadily in practice and is one of the ablest business lawyers in the state. In 1915 he was made secretary and general counsel for the Commercial Security Company of New York and Chicago. Mr. Smith is vice president of the Moss Construction & Supply Company, secretary-treasurer of the Houghton Cement Block Company, president of the Nitro Supply Company and a director of the Virginia Savings & Loan Company.

He is an enthusiastic republican, is a Mason, an Elk, a member of the Lutheran Church, and is vice president of the Billy Sunday Men's Club of Charleston.

Mr. Smith enlisted as a private in the army in 1917. After nearly two years of service he received an honorable discharge in 1919, with the rank of first lieutenant. He then resumed his practice at Charleston. He handles a general practice in the various state and federal courts. As a speaker his abilities have been called upon for addresses on many occasions and particularly in political campaigns. During the presidential campaign of 1920 he was engaged by the Republican National Campaign Committee for a long series of speeches.

BOYCE MILLER. An organization that represents the most complete and modern facilities in the broad field of general real estate at Charleston is Boyce Miller & Company, realtors. The head of this firm is one of the youngest and most aggressive business men in the capital city, Boyce Miller, who has been a factor in Charleston only half a dozen years. In that time his associates have come to admire his tremendous energy and his remarkable faculty for getting things done and organizing and directing large affairs.

Mr. Miller was born in Logan County, West Virginia, in 1896, son of R. B. and Columbia (James) Miller. As a boy he attended public school at Alderson, West Virginia, graduating from high school, and also attended the University of Richmond, Virginia. He has been making his own way since an early age, and consequently his career is longer than might be normally expected of a man of his age. While at Alderson he learned the printer's trade in the office of the Alderson Advertiser, and as an apprentice received a dollar a week. He was in the wholesale candy and stationery business at Alderson for a time. Like many successful men, he has learned by his mistakes, and he freely acknowledged that he had "failed before he was twenty." In the meantime between school sessions he worked as solicitor of bank accounts in Charleston for the National City Bank and the Charleston National Bank, first coming to the capital city in 1913, at the age of seventeen.

In 1915 he located permanently in Charleston, becoming a salesman for the real estate firm of Poter & Woodroe, with whom he remained about a year. Then with two partners he went into the real estate business for himself, and in 1920 he bought out his partners and has since conducted Boyce Miller & Company personally. This is a business representing every important feature of a modern real estate organization, and includes a mortgage loan department, city brokerage department, rental department, construction department and sub-division department, each department equipped for an adequate service in the line corresponding to its name. Mr. Miller's firm also has charge of the investment of funds on mortgage loan security in Charleston and vicinity for Eastern financial corporations, and act as mortgage loan agents for the Security Bank & Trust Company of Charleston. Mr. Miller is president of the Miller Development Company, a holding corporation owning considerable property in the Kanawha Valley.

Mr. Miller was the leader in organizing and was the first president of the Charleston Real Estate Board. A temporary organization was effected late in 1918, of which Mr. Miller was made chairman, and the permanent organization was completed in 1919, with Mr. Miller as president. The Charleston Real Estate Board is a public-spirited organization working for the growth and broader development of Charleston, and its usefulness has been exemplified in many directions. Mr. Miller has also served as president of the West Virginia Real Estate Association and was formerly a member of the license committee of the National Association of Real Estate Boards. This committee drafted what is known as the Ideal Real Estate License Law, for licensing real estate brokers. This law has already been adopted by twelve states.

Mr. Miller is a member of the Chamber of Commerce and is affiliated with the Order of Elks. He married Miss Florence Thompson, of Charleston. Their two children are Boyce, Jr., and Florence Gale.

CARL SCHOLZ, whose technical and practical experience gives him a position as one of the foremost mining engineers in the country, has been identified more or less closely with the coal industry of West Virginia for thirty years. He has recently returned to Charleston, where he has his home and offices.

His first work as a mining engineer and mine operator in West Virginia was in the Kanawha District, beginning about 1890. He worked as mining engineer at Powellton in Fayette County and later, in association with J. L. Dickinson, C. A. Cabell and James R. Thomas, opened mines on the K. & M. Railroad. Later this syndicate sold the coal properties lying north of the Kanawha River to the Morgan interests of New York. From 1902 to 1917 Mr. Scholz had most of his professional interests in the West as engineer and expert with the mining and fuel department of the Rock Island Railroad. On June 1, 1917, he became consulting mining engineer for the Burlington Railroad Company and general manager and director of the Valier Coal Company. While with the Burlington system Mr. Scholz equipped in Franklin County, Illinois, what is known as one of the largest coal mines in the world, producing the famous Franklin County coal.

In 1919, returning to the private operation of mines, Mr. Scholz became vice president and general manager of the Raleigh-Wyoming Coal Company of Charleston. He built the mines of this company in Raleigh and Wyoming counties, and the production of coal began on November 5, 1919. This company owns 9,000 acres of coal land at the head of Marsh Fork of Coal River, south of the fork of Hazy Creek in Raleigh County. Coal measures of this property run from the Eagle Seam up to the No. 5 Block. The other operation is on a tract of 9,000 acres located in Wyoming and Raleigh counties, at the headwaters of the Laurel Fork of the Guyandotte River. The second mine is on the Beckley seam, which lies at a depth of 650 feet, and with an average thickness of seven feet.

The coal from these two mines is renowned for its high quality. It has a very low percentage of ash, running from one and a half per cent to as low as half of one per cent and less of ash. These two mines are among the most modern and complete in the United States. They represent the last word in equipment and loading facilities, and mining engineers have pronounced them as models of construction and thereby pay a high compliment to the ingenuity and technical skill of Mr. Scholz.

Carl Scholz was born at Slawentzitz, Germany, July 2, 1872, son of Paul and Nanette (Schneider) Scholz. He acquired a technical education before coming to America in the Royal Gynasium of Benthien, where he studied mining engineering under Doctor Schmiedecke. He came to America in 1889, and the following year became associated with the coal industry of West Virginia. As a consulting engineer of the United States Bureau of Mines he was sent to Europe in 1910 to investigate and report on mining conditions. Aside from his many technical reports on mine operation and mine engineering Mr. Scholz has contributed numerous articles to the general press on labor and related problems affecting the mining industry. He is a member of the American Institute of Mining and Metallurgical Engineers, the Western Society of Engineers, and is member and former president of the American Mining Congress. He is a republican, a member of the Presbyterian Church, and belongs to the Chicago Athletic Club in Chicago, where he formerly had his residence. He is also a member of the Elks, the Edgwood Country Club and the Kanawha Country Club of Charleston. On March 4, 1917, he married Mae A. Fleming, of Chicago.

J. H. LOVE. Probably no city in the state has had a bigger building boom, represented by costly and substantial structures of an industrial, commercial and residential character, than Charleston. A conspicuous participant in this development has been J. H. Love, a contractor and builder of Charleston for over fifteen years.

Mr. Love's business was developed out of his early experience as a journeyman carpenter, a trade he learned during his youth in his native county of Mason, where he was born in 1872. After his apprenticeship he worked in various towns and cities, and since 1905 has been in business as a contractor and builder at Charleston.

Much of his finest and most important work has been done within the last two or three years, while Charleston has been experiencing a phenomenal extension and expansion of building growth. During 1921-22 he was contractor for the construction of the hotel, theater and business building owned by G. E. Ferguson on Washington Street, between Sherwood and Broad streets, this being one of the finest and most attractive of Charleston's modern buildings. He also erected two business buildings on East Washington Street for E. D. Haywood, comprising a prominent addition to the newly developed East Charleston section. He built the double residence at 1628 Quarrier Street, and a new residence for E. F. Dalton, and in 1921 built the parsonage for the new Lawrence Methodist Episcopal Church. These buildings are noted primarily to indicate the scope and character of the work Mr. Love does as a building contractor. However, the list might be expanded almost indefinitely by quoting many other examples that testify to his business energy during the fifteen years he has been a contractor and builder in this city.

JAMES DENTON DINSMOOR. With the development of the oil district around St. Marys no name has been more prominently identified than that of Dinsmoor. James Denton Dinsmoor is associated with his brother in the firm of Dinsmoor Brothers, and their father, during his last years, was also a participant in this development. The Dinsmoor brothers do not confine their operations as producers to St. Marys, or even to West Virginia, their holdings being scattered extensively over nearly all the settled oil districts of the Middle West.

James D. Dinsmoor has been permanently located at St. Marys for a number of years, is a banker of that city and also represents this district in the State Senate. He is of old New England ancestry, members of the family, Scotch-Irish descent, having settled in New Hampshire in Colonial days. One of his ancestors was an officer in the Revolutionary war. His grandfather was a soldier in the War of 1812, was born in New Hampshire, and throughout his active career followed teaching and was an old fashioned and highly educated schoolmaster. For many years he was identified with the schools of Warren County, Pennsylvania, where he died.

John C. Dinsmoor, father of Dinsmoor Brothers, was born in Warren County in 1837, was reared and married there, and first engaged in the lumber business. In 1872 he located at St. Petersburg in Clarion County, where he began mining coal from his own mine, and was interested in some of the pioneer oil well operations there. In 1886 he removed to the Tarkill oil field in Venango County, Pennsylvania, where he was one of the leading producers. Associated with his sons, he extended his interests to the St. Marys field of West Virginia, and in 1906 he moved to St. Marys to look after his business in this district. In 1908 he established his home at Williamstown in Wood County, where he lived until his death in 1918. As an oil producer he had interests throughout the Ohio and West Virginia fields. He was a republican, held the office of school director in Clarion County, Pennsylvania, and was a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and Loyal Order of Moose. John C. Dinsmoor married Jane Holt, who was born in Warren County, Pennsylvania, in 1838, and died at St. Marys in 1906. James Denton and Lyell E. are the only two sons of this marriage and comprise the firm of Dinsmoor Brothers at St. Marys. John C. Dinsmoor married for his second wife Miss Nellie Finny, a native of Pleasants County and now living at Marietta, Ohio. She has three young children.

James Denton Dinsmoor attended school in Clarion County and high school at St. Petersburg, but after the age of fifteen he turned from books and book studies to a scene of action. For several years he was a telegraph operator and station agent with the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, being on duty at Jefferson, Turkey City and other stations in Clarion County. When he was twenty Mr. Dinsmoor began his long and thorough apprenticeship in the oil industry. He began as a pumper in the fields of Clarion and Venango counties, and then successively was a driller, rig builder, tool dresser and even had experience in the mills where the pipe and castings for oil wells are manufactured.

Associated with his brother and father Mr. Dinsmoor came to St. Marys in 1901 and began buying settled oil production. Dinsmoor Brothers have for several years been by far the largest producing concern in the county, and they rank among the very largest in the entire state. Mr. Dinsmoor is a senior partner, and his word is accepted as the ultimate authority in fourteen different oil companies operating through Ohio, West Virginia, Illinois and Pennsylvania. He and his brother were also pioneers in the development of the oil resources of Eastern Kentucky, but they sold their interests in that state in 1919. Mr. Dinsmoor is vice president and a member of the executive committee of the Keener Oil & Gas Company of Ohio. Dinsmoor Brothers, whose offices are on Second Street in St. Marys, own a number of farms, two in Pennsylvania and over 1,000 acres in Pleasants County. Mr. Dinsmoor is vice president of the First National Bank of St. Marys, is a director of the People's Bank & Trust Company of Marietta, Ohio, and holds stock in two other banks. His home, the finest in St. Marys, is situated on a commanding eminence on Second Street.

Mr. Dinsmoor was elected on the republican ticket to the State Senate in November, 1920, beginning his duties in January, 1921. During the first session he was a member of the committees on finance, mines and mining, labor and railroads, and was one of the Senate sub-committee of three which drafted the Gross Sales Tax Bill. During the war Mr. Dinsmoor was ready and welcomed every opportunity to contribute or aid in any way the Government in the successful prosecution of the war. He is a member of the Pleasants County Automobile Association; St. Marys Lodge No. 41, A. F. and A. M.; St. Marys Lodge No. 22, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and he has been a member of the Odd Fellows since he was twenty-one years of age, joining at Oil City, Pennsylvania.

In 1905, at St. Marys, he married Miss Nelle Gallaher, daughter of Silas and Rosa J. (Porter) Gallaher, the latter living in the home of Mr. and Mrs. Dinsmoor. Silas Gallaher was a farmer who died at St. Marys, and a portion of that city occupies his old farm. Five children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Dinsmoor: Carlton G., born in July, 1906; James Denton, Jr., born May 1, 1908; Gordon H., born in 1912; Mary Louise, born in September, 1915; and Jane Elizabeth, born in July, 1918. The oldest son, Carlton, is a student in the Culver Military Academy of Indiana.

JOSEPH WILLIAM LIVELY for many years was one of West Virginia's able educators, and is still to a degree identified with educational affairs as West Virginia manager for the Virginia School Supply Company. In handling this business throughout the state his headquarters and home are at Charleston.

Mr. Lively was born in Lincoln County, West Virginia, in 1879, son of Mark and Sarah (Midkill) Lively. The Livelys are a family of Scotch-Irish origin, with several generations of residence in old Virginia. His paternal grandfather came from Virginia to Lincoln County, and still later moved to Ohio, but returned to Lincoln County and spent the rest of his life there. Mark Lively was a native of Lincoln County, where he and his wife still reside.

J. W. Lively attended the public schools of Lincoln County, and subsequently continued his education in Marshall College at Huntington and the West Virginia University at Morgantown. For eighteen years he was active in the profession of teaching, beginning in a country school in Lincoln County and ending his career as a school man as superintendent of schools at South Charleston. He resigned this office in 1920, and in April of that year was appointed state manager for the Virginia School Supply Company of Richmond. He now has entire charge of the company's business in West Virginia.

The Virginia School Supply Company are manufacturers and wholesale distributors of school, opera and church furniture, including all school supplies and everything needed for the school room. Mr. Lively's talent for business, coupled with his many years experience in the school room, makes him exceptionally well qualified for a work in which he has brought distinctive success to his company. Mr. Lively married Miss Nora Hilbert, of Lincoln County. His business offices are in the Odd Fellows Building at Capitol and State streets. He is a member of the orders of Odd Fellows and Knights of Pythias, and a member of the Christian Church.

ELMER C. STOTTS is associated with Mr. A. H. Dangerfield as manager and proprietor of the Charleston Business College, an institution that ranks foremost as one of the leading business training schools in the state. Both are graduate Masters of Accounts, and have had a wide training in actual business as well as in the teaching of commercial subjects.

The Charleston Business College represents a broad and generous policy in the training of men and women for successful careers in the ever widening field of commerce and industry. Training for business is now coming to be recognized as in every important essential training for life a phrase upon which so much emphasis was placed by older educational systems. The service rendered by the Charleston Business College is in strict line with this ideal, and its generous patronage has been a complete justification of the plans and policies of its managers. This school occupies the entire third floor of a new building at 1010-12-14 Quarrier Street, which has been especially arranged for the teaching of business subjects—more than 6,000 square feet of floor space used by this school each day. The staff of instructors and the curriculum offer exceptional facilities for a broad business training, and also for specialized training in preparation for work in technical industries by the introduction of office training devices such as the mimeograph, multigraph, electric posting machine, adding machine, calculating machines, filing devices, etc. The many graduates who fill responsible positions are in themselves the highest testimonial and asset to the work and dignity of the institution.

The managing director of the Charleston Chamber of Commerce has this to say of the managers of the Business College: "We are glad to say that Mr. A. H. Dangerfield and Mr. E. C. Stotts, who are managers of the Charleston Business College, are citizens of the highest integrity and efficiency in our community. Both Mr. Dangerfield and Mr. Stotts have been personally and favorably known to the writer for ten years, and they have done much toward the upbuilding of the commercial life of this community. The Charleston Chamber of Commerce takes pleasure in unhesitatingly recommending them as expert business college men, as first class citizens, and as men who from the practice of their profession will render credit to any community."

Elmer C. Stotts was born in Noble County, Ohio, and was reared on a farm. He taught for a number of years in the rural schools of Ohio. He finished his education in the Marion Normal College, Marion, Indiana, of which he is a graduate, and in which he subsequently pursued a post-graduate course. He has been continuously engaged in teaching since 1902. He was a business college teacher at Marietta, Ohio, for several years, and for three years was associated as teacher with the famous Dunsmore Business College of Staunton, Virginia. During that period he also taught certain classes in the exclusive girls' school, the Mary Baldwin Seminary.

Mr. Stotts came to Charleston in 1917 to engage in the business college work, and in 1919 he founded the Charleston Business College.

A. H. DANGERFIELD is a native of Mercer County, West Virginia, and received his early education in the public schools of Mercer County and later graduated from the Princeton Collegiate Institution. At the age of twenty he began his business career by pursuing a course in the Dunsmore Business College, from which institution he was graduated, receiving the degree of Master of Accounts. Following this training he was auditor for a number of years for a large coal syndicate in the Norfolk & Western coal fields.

In 1909 Mr. Dangerfield came to Charleston with the Glasscock administration, as chief clerk in the state treasurer's office under Mr. E. L. Long. After filling this position with credit for four years he embarked in the business college work. Having experienced both the practical and theoretical side of business, Mr. Dangerfield is particularly well qualified for training young people along business lines. He has been both an employer and an employee, and therefore readily appreciates the delicate duties involved upon him from time to time in connection with the training of bookkeepers and stenographers and the placing of them with the right employer at the right place and at the right time.

Mr. Stotts and Mr. Dangerfield have broad ideas as to the possibilities of the City of Charleston and the future growth of the Charleston Business College. They have pledged their "bottom dollar" that the Charleston Business College is destined as a great leader in commercial training, and judging from the growth of this institution and the excellent standing it has among the business men of Charleston and Southern West Virginia no prediction would appear to be too flattering. Mr. Stotts is a member of Kiwanis Club of Charleston and Mr. Dangerfield is a member of the Rotary Club.

LUCIAN EMROW POTEET is a native of West Virginia, was educated for the law and practiced his profession for about ten years, but since then has been a prominent figure in real estate business and real estate development at Charleston. He is president of Poteet & Woodroe, Incorporated.

He and his partner have been associated in the real estate business for a number of years, but in October, 1921, they incorporated under the above title and the corporation is an instrument through which they carry out a broad and well considered program of civic and building development, particularly designed to supply the home building and housing facilities which Charleston so much needs. Besides performing a general brokerage business the company has taken up the laying out and development of subdivisions, and maintains a well organized building department. During the past dozen years Charleston has grown from a city of 12,000 to over 75,000, with a proportionate wide range of increasing valuations for property frontage. The addition of new industries has proceeded faster than housing development, and no organization has entered the field to supply this evident need under more auspicious circumstances than Poteet & Woodroe, Incorporated.

Mr. Poteet was born on a farm in Fayette County, West Virginia, in 1878, son of John and Frances (Painter) Poteet. His father was a soldier in the Confederate army throughout the war, and the Poteets have been represented in all the American wars beginning with the Revolution. The Poteet family is of French Huguenot origin, and the first of the family to come to America identified themselves with the French Huguenot colony at Charleston, South Carolina. A number of the descendants are still living in South and North Carolina. Mr. L. E. Poteet is related to two distinguished educators who, however, spelled their name Poteat, E. M. Poteat, a former president of Furman University and an eminent leader in the Baptist Church, and W. L. Poteat, president of Wake Forest College, North Carolina.

Lucian E. Poteet grew up on a farm. To secure as good an education as possible is traditional in the Poteet family, and he studied under Professor W. G. Brown and Professor Bernard H. White at Oak Hill Academy, attended Barboursville College in this state, and then entered the University of West Virginia, where he took both the academic and law courses, graduating from the law school in 1899. Mr. Poteet practiced law successfully for eight years in Fayetteville and Fayette County. On retiring from practice he established his home in Charleston in 1908, and since then has been in the real estate business, at first in the firm of Poteet & Woodroe and now as president of Poteet & Woodroe, Incorporated.

In civic and state affairs Mr. Poteet's special hobby is good roads. A magnificent improvement of the highways in and around Charleston has been effected since he came to the city, and he has been active in furthering all those enterprises. He is chairman of the good roads committee of the Chamber of Commerce, and is on the board of directors of that institution. He is also a member of Midland Trail Association. Mr. Poteet married Miss Pearl E. Blake, of Charleston. Before her marriage she was one of the popular teachers in the city schools.

FRANK J. MALONE. Efficiency is the keynote of some men's success. Prosperity and honors do not come to them through outside influence or the forcible pressure of money backing, but because of their own innate capability and knowledge of the affairs they are called upon to administer. There has been no easy road for these men to travel. Each step forward has been made by an appreciable effort, but with them there have been few backward tracings. One of the men of Huntington who has thus achieved success is Frank J. Malone, now well known as a coal operator of Huntington, who is secretary-treasurer of the Malone-Elkhorn Coal Company of Beaver Creek, Kentucky, and of the Logan Thin Vein Coal Company of Logan, West Virginia.

Mr. Malone was born at Huntington, West Virginia, October 22, 1891, and is a son of Patrick H. and Sallie M. (Johnson) Malone. His paternal grandfather was a native of Ireland, whence he immigrated to the United States in young manhood and settled at Pottsville, Pennsylvania, where he resided for several years. Later he lived at Richmond, Virginia, and Charleston, West Virginia, and as a pioneer of the early days located at Marmet, West Virginia, where he was the stone contractor on the bridge work for the Chesapeake & Ohio Railway Company in the New River District. He died at Marmet prior to the birth of his grandson. His wife, Allie Malone, who was born in Ireland in 1818, died at Glen Jean, West Virginia, at the home of her son, in 1914.

Patrick H. Malone, now a resident of Huntington, was born February 22, 1858, at Pottsville, Pennsylvania, and was reared and educated at Richmond, Virginia, and Charleston, West Virginia. When still a young man he accompanied the family to Marmet, West Virginia, where he was married, and where he resided for a time while employed as a locomotive engineer by the Chesapeake & Ohio Railway Company. Later for a time he lived at Charleston, and then came to Huntington, still continuing to be employed by the same line. When he left the Chesapeake & Ohio it was to join the Norfolk & Western Railway, and for a time he lived at Dingess, West Virginia, but in 1897 returned to Huntington, and in addition to working as an engineer also engaged in business as a stone-cutter and contractor, having been trained along that line by his father when a youth. In 1903 he gave up railroadng and became superintendent of mines for the New River Company of MacDonald, West Virginia, although residing at Stuart, West Virginia. In 1904 he moved to Glen Jean, this state, where he held the position of deputy sheriff of Fayette County for four years. On January 1, 1909, he became justice of the peace, an office which he held until December 31, 1912, and was then appointed state prohibition agent of Fayette County, occupying that position until 1916. Mr. Malone then took a vacation of about two years, and in 1918 returned to Huntington and became a traveling salesman for the Keystone Lubricating Company of Philadelphia, covering the Norfolk & Western, the Guyan Valley and the Kentucky fields. On January 1, 1920, he entered the field as a coal operator, and at the present time is president of the Malone-Elkhorn Coal Company, with mines at Beaver Creek, Kentucky. He resides in a pleasant and attractive home at No. 625 Sixth Avenue, Huntington. Mr. Malone married Miss Sallie M. Johnson, who was born at Covington, Virginia, and to them there have been born the following children: Annie, the wife of Philip A. Taggart, of Mount Hope, West Virginia, a freight conductor for the Chesapeake & Ohio Railway Company; Rosa, who is unmarried, resides with her parents; James W., who during the World war was in the locomotive engineers' branch of the service for one year at Carter, Illinois, and is now cashier for a wholesale commission house at Washington, D. C., married Juanita Masoncup, of Staunton, Virginia; Patrick O., who saw sixteen months of overseas service during the World war, going over with the Nineteenth Division, A. E. F., with the rank of lieutenant while in France, and in Germany was a member of the Motor Transport Corps, Army of Occupation, now a resident of Hinton, West Virginia, and a locomotive engineer for the Chesapeake & Ohio Railway; Frank J., of this review; Eddie, superintendent of mines for the Whipple Collieries Company, of Whipple, West Virginia, who married Pansy Rogers, of Winona, this state; Alice, who is unmarried and resides with her parents; William A., manager of a commissary for the miners at Beaver Creek, Kentucky; Kathleen, a graduate of the Huntington High School and of a normal school course at Marshall College, Huntington, and now a popular and efficient teacher in the public schools of Huntington; John, a student at Fishburne Military Academy, Waynesboro, Virginia, who resides with his parents; and Nellie, a student in the Huntington Junior High School.

Frank J. Malone received his early education in the public schools of Fayette County, West Virginia, following which he pursued a course at the Dunsmore Business College, Staunton, Virginia, and was graduated therefrom in 1910. He then entered the employ of the New River Company of MacDonald, West Virginia, where he was a clerk until September, 1910, and at that time became associated with his father, who was serving as justice of the peace and with whom he remained for a period of three years. Mr. Malone was then appointed by the late Judge S. D. Littlepage as auditor at Charleston for the liquidation of 2-cent railroad fares, and held that position until May 5, 1914, when he became assistant sales agent for the New River District for the Chesapeake & Ohio Coal and Coke Company of New York City, retaining that post until 1917.

On July 10, 1918, at Richmond, Virginia, Mr. Malone enlisted in the United States Army, and shortly thereafter was sent to Gettysburg, Pennsylvania, where he was assigned to the Tank Corps. He embarked for overseas October 6, 1918, arriving in England fifteen days later and in France, October 28. He was sent to Northern France with the Three Hundred and Eightieth Tank Corps Replacement Company at Longeau, France, but was transferred to the Three Hundred and First Brigade, Company A, Three Hundred and Twenty-ninth Battalion. Mr. Malone, who was advanced to the rank of sergeant, returned to the United States with a splendid record March 13, 1919, and was honorably discharged at Camp Meade, Maryland, April 9, 1919. At that time he returned to Huntington and was pay-roll auditor for all the mines of W. E. Deegans coal interests, but resigned February 1, 1920, to become a coal operator. He is now secretary-treasurer and a director in the Malone-Elkhorn Coal Company of Beaver Creek, Kentucky, and in the Logan Thin Vein Coal Company of Logan, West Virginia. He likewise is a partner in the Beaver Creek Mercantile Company, a leading general store at Beaver Creek. His Huntington offices are situated in the Deegans-Noonan Building, 1122½ Fourth Avenue. Mr. Malone is a stockholder and director in the Floyd County Bank at Allen, Kentucky, and the Bank of Glen Jean, West Virginia. Fraternally he is affiliated with MacDonald Lodge No. 103, A. F. and A. M.; Sewell Valley Chapter No. 24, R. A. M., Thurman, West Virginia; Mount Hope Commandery No. 22, K. T., of Mount Hope, West Virginia; and Beni-Kedem Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S., of Charleston. He is unmarried.

DAVID HALL COURTNEY, M. D. No better lesson relative to the value of honorable effort intelligently directed can be given than that offered by the review of the life and accomplishments of a man who has risen to a position of prestige through his own initiative and who in so doing has taken with him many others who, through their association with him, have been able to achieve much more than would have been possible had they been forced to depend upon themselves. It matters little along what channel the stream of such a man's life flows, for he will succeed no matter how it may be directed. Some men of this character instinctively turn toward one or another of the learned professions, others develop into public men, while still others, and they are in the majority, devote themselves to the development of commercial and industrial enterprises and become the heads of large concerns that provide honest labor to large numbers and place and keep in circulation immense sums of money. Morgantown has a notable example of the last-named class in Dr. David Hall Courtney, who, starting his career as a physician, has become one of the leading men of his part of West Virginia in the development of the state's natural resources.

Doctor Courtney is in the fourth generation of his family in Monongalia County, his great-grandfather having immigrated to America from Ireland and settled in this county in pioneer days. William Courtney, the younger, son of the pioneer William, was fourteen years of age when he accompanied his parents to this country. For a time the family stopped in New Jersey, but then journeyed over the mountains into Monongalia County, at that time in old Virginia. Amos S. Courtney, son of William Courtney, the younger, was born in Cass District, Monongalia County, May 1, 1823, and died January 1, 1879, after many years spent in successful agricultural operations. He married Sarah Jane Hall, who was born near Taylortown, Greene County, Pennsylvania, in 1824, and died in 1902. She was a daughter of David Hall, a member of an old Greene County (Pennsylvania) family.

David Hall Courtney attended the public schools of Cass District, and subsequently enrolled as a student at the

D. H. Courtney

University of West Virginia, from which he was graduated with the degree of Bachelor of Arts in 1882. His medical studies were prosecuted at Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, from which he received his degree of Doctor of Medicine as a member of the graduating class of 1886. Later he took post-graduate work in Philadelphia, in 1893. He entered the practice of medicine at Mount Morris, Greene County, Pennsylvania, in 1886, and made rapid strides in his profession, but while so engaged became interested in the oil industry. In this direction he began to develop abilities heretofore not suspected, and his interests soon became so large that he abandoned the profession of medicine in order to give his entire attention to his business affairs. He purchased large tracts of oil land in Pennsylvania, and as a member of the firm of Courtney, Lowrey and McDermott began drilling for oil and gas. He is now president of the Randall Gas Company of Morgantown, and in 1913 was one of the purchasers of the Seneca Gas Company. He is a director and one of the owners of the Union Traction Company of Morgantown; was formerly president and is now treasurer of the Economy Tumbler Company of Morgantown; is one of the owners of the Sesame Coal Company; half owner of the coal that is operated by the Consumers' Fuel Company; and a director of the Bank of the Monongahela Valley and of the Bank of the Monongahela Building Company. Doctor Courtney has always been interested in civic and public affairs, and has discharged his duties fully in the matter of good citizenship and conscientious public service. In 1910 he was chosen by his fellow-citizens in Monongalia County to represent them in the West Virginia Legislature, Lower House, and as a member of that body worked faithfully in behalf of his community, his constituents and his state. He is a member of the Board of Trustees of the First Methodist Episcopal Church of Morgantown. Fraternally he is a Knight Templar Mason and a member of Union Lodge No. 4, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, and of Morgantown Commandery, and socially he holds membership in the Morgantown Country Club and the Kiwanis Club.

Doctor Courtney was united in marriage with Miss Lizzie Hite, daughter of Isaac and Catherine (Hennen) Hite, of Morgantown, and to this union there have been born five children: Grace M., who married O. H. Davis, of Charleston, West Virginia; Catherine, who married Capt. Philip E. Brown, United States Army; and Frances, David H., Jr., and Joseph H., who reside with their parents.

HENRY T. DIEHL. To the upbuilding of so enterprising a city as Huntington large enterprises have contributed, and for their development and solidity men of clear intellect, steady purpose and personal integrity have been demanded. Not always have their names been heralded, but nevertheless it has been their ability and influence that have composed one of the vital elements controlling policies and making for business prosperity. Among the institutions which occupy a very conspicuous position in the commercial life of Huntington is the department store of the McMahon-Diehl Company. The member of the firm controlling this big business venture is Henry T. Diehl, and very general is the recognition of his business sagacity, resourcefulness, foresight and wise judgment.

Mr. Diehl was born at Huntington, West Virginia, December 11, 1885, a son of Albert L. and Sophia (Gebhardt) Diehl. His grandfather, Louis Diehl, was born in 1808, in Germany, and as a young man immigrated to the United States and first settled at Allegheny, Pennsylvania, where he was married. In 1858 he came to what is now Cabell County, West Virginia, where he became a pioneer farmer, and in 1872 became an early resident of Huntington, where he engaged in extensive mercantile operations. He took an active and constructive part in the development of the east part of Huntington, and was a man who was universally held in high esteem. A staunch republican, he was active in civic affairs, and when he died, in 1891, Huntington lost one who had done much for its welfare and progress. Mr. Diehl's wife, Rosa, was also born in Germany, in 1829, and was a young girl when brought to the United States by her parents, who settled in Pennsylvania, where she met and married Mr. Diehl. She died at Huntington in 1909, having been the mother of two daughters and four sons. Two children still survive: Albert L.; and Robert, who is a merchant of Dayton, Kentucky.

Albert L. Diehl was born at Allegheny, Pennsylvania, June 21, 1852, and was about six years of age when brought by his parents to what is now Cabell County, West Virginia, where he was reared, educated and married. In 1872 he came to Huntington and found employment in a minor capacity with the Chesapeake & Ohio Railway Company, with which line he has been identified for a half a century, being now foreman of the truck department. He is one of his company's most trusted employees and a man of sound principles and enlightened views. In politics he is a republican, and his religious connection is with the First Presbyterian Church, of which he is an active supporter and regular attendant. Fraternally he belongs to Huntington Lodge No. 64, I. O. O. F. Mr. Diehl married Miss Sophia Gebhardt, who was born in 1864, in Cabell County, and to this union there were born the following children: Ruby M., who is unmarried and resides with her parents; Henry T., of this notice; Edward H., of Huntington, one of the owners and operators of the firm of Carter & Turner, bicycle, motor cycle and sporting goods dealers of this city; Irvin R., of Huntington, an electrician at the Chesapeake & Ohio Railway shops, Huntington; William M., head bookkeeper at the Huntington National Bank; and Vincent M., assistant secretary of the McMahon-Diehl Company, Huntington.

Henry T. Diehl attended the public schools of Huntington and then enrolled as a student at Marshall College, but did not complete the full course, dropping his studies in 1902, while in his junior year, to accept a position with the wholesale grocery firm of Blake, Van Bibber & Company of Huntington. After spending two years with this firm as a clerk he entered the First National Bank, where during six years he rose from draft clerk to the post of teller. Resigning in 1910, he entered the employ of the Licking River Lumber Company of Huntington, and spent one year as auditor at this city and one year in the same capacity at South Bend, Indiana. Mr. Diehl's next connection was with what is now the Croft-Standard Company, wholesale dry goods merchants of Huntington, with which he remained as assistant treasurer until 1915, when he joined J. R. McMahon in founding the McMahon-Diehl Company. In February, 1922, Mr. McMahon, who was president of the organization from its incorporation, died of pneumonia at New York City, and in March, 1922, Mr. Diehl was chosen as president. This company started operation on the corner of Eighth Avenue and Twentieth Street, and in 1916 opened at 1017-19 Third Avenue. The Eighth Avenue store was sold in 1921 and at the same time a Tenth Street entrance was added to the Third Avenue store. Preparations are now under way to install this store in the new I. O. O. F. Building, work on which will be started at Huntington in March, 1924. This business has become one of the leaders in its line in the Tri-State region, and in the capacity of president Mr. Diehl has contributed materially to its success through his splendid business talents, energy and progressiveness.

In politics Mr. Diehl is a republican, although he has not sought public office or preferment at the hands of his party. He is a member of the First Presbyterian Church of Huntington, Huntington Lodge No. 313 of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks and the Guyan Country Club of Huntington, and is a member of the board of directors of the Huntington Chamber of Commerce. He is the owner of a modern residence at No. 1250 Fifth Avenue, a comfortable and attractive home.

On June 21, 1916, Mr. Diehl married at Morganfield, Kentucky, Miss Polly Richards, daughter of Phil and Eva (Cox) Richards, the latter of whom is a resident of Morganfield, where the former, now deceased, was an extensive farmer, being one of the largest landholders in Union County. Mr. Diehl is a graduate of the Morganfield High School and attended Oxford (Ohio) College two years. Mr. and Mrs. Diehl have two children: Ruth, born April 17, 1917; and Polly, born May 8, 1921.

HARRY EDWARD CRAGG. Association with certain lines of established endeavor gives individuals familiarity with details and renders them potent factors in the upbuilding and development of special branches. Such desirable conditions are seldom reached by any royal road to fortune, but along the highway of constant industry and persistent endeavor. Native ability counts for much, but unless combined with an appreciation of the value of experience and willingness to labor it counts for little in the long run. The prominence which has been reached by Harry Edward Cragg, secretary of the Fidelity Insurance Agency of Huntington, in his special field of endeavor is due in large part to the possession of qualities which have fitted him peculiarly for his vocation, but can also be attributed to the fact that industry has always played a large part in his career.

Mr. Cragg was born at Charleston, West Virginia, August 7, 1892, and is a son of Harry Edward and Nannie Elizabeth (Fullerton) Cragg. His grandfather, Edward Cragg, was born in 1834, in England, and was about nineteen years of age when he immigrated to the United States and settled as a pioneer business man at Charleston, where he attained success as a meat packer. He was a democrat in politics and a consistent member of the Episcopal Church. His death occurred at Charleston in 1902, when he was sixty-eight years of age. Harry Edward Cragg, the elder, was born at Charleston, in 1860, and was reared, educated and married in that city, where he embarked upon a successful career. During the short span of his life he won prosperity and position, and his future seemed a bright one, when he was taken with ill health. In an endeavor to recuperate he went to Florida, but died in that state in 1894, when but thirty-four years of age. He was a democrat in politics and a devout member of the Episcopal Church. Mr. Cragg married Nannie Elizabeth Fullerton, who was born in 1872, in Liverpool, England, and who survives him as a resident of Charleston, West Virginia. Her father was William Fullerton, a native of England, who came in young manhood to the United States and was educated in the College of Physicians and Surgeons at Baltimore, Maryland, following which he returned to England and was married. He then again came to the United States and settled at Charleston, where he became a distinguished physician and surgeon and was engaged in practice until his death. He also served for two terms as United States pension examiner for the State of West Virginia. Two children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Cragg: Harry Edward, of this review; and Edna, who died in infancy.

Harry Edward Cragg attended the public schools of Charleston, including the high school, after which he pursued a one-year course at the Maryland State College, College Park, Maryland. Later he was a student of Bliss Electrical School, Washington, D. C., from which he was graduated with the class of 1912, receiving the degree of Electrical Engineer. In 1912 he accepted a position with the Virginia Electrical Machine Company at Charleston, remaining with this concern for six months, and was then with the West Virginia Inspection Bureau at Charleston for a period of five years. Later he received an offer of a position with the Standard Fire Insurance Company of Hartford, Connecticut, and upon his acceptance thereof was made special agent for West Virginia, Ohio and Kentucky, with headquarters at Charleston. He was with this concern for one year, and June 8, 1918, enlisted in the United States Navy and was sent to Norfolk, Virginia, where he was made a machinist's mate, second class. After two weeks he was transferred to Philadelphia, where he remained for one month, and then to New York City, where he was stationed until January, 1919, when he was mustered out as chief machinist's mate. During all this time he was attending the Officers' Material School, engineering department. In January, 1919, Mr. Cragg came to Huntington and secured a position with the Fidelity Insurance Agency of Huntington, of which he was made secretary in March, 1919, a position which he still retains. His offices consist of a suite of rooms at No. 1028 Fourth Avenue. He has increased the business of his company materially in his secretarial capacity, and is accounted one of the skilled and thoroughly experienced insurance men of his city. Mr. Cragg is a democrat in his political convictions, while his religious faith makes him an Episcopalian. He is fraternally affiliated with Huntington Lodge No. 313, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, and he also holds membership in Huntington Post No. 6, American Legion; the Guyan Country Club and the Huntington Chamber of Commerce.

In February, 1918, Mr. Cragg married Miss Edna McGee Cole, daughter of Charles F. and Oley (McGee) Cole residents of Huntington, where Mr. Cole is an oil operator. Mr. and Mrs. Cragg have one daughter, Edna Cole, born February 8, 1919.

MATHEW MISER. There has been no lengthy interval since he was thirteen years old when Mathew Miser has not been identified with some useful occupation or business in the City of Huntington. His early experience was in the railroad shops, and then for a long period of years was on the road as a commercial salesman. His business today is the public business of the city, as commissioner of streets and sewers.

Mr. Miser is a native of Cabell County, born at Le Sage, September 18, 1879. His grandfather, John Miser, was a native of Pennsylvania, and as a young man removed to Germano, Ohio, where he owned and operated a large farm until his death. Andrew Jackson Miser, father of the city commissioner of Huntington, was born at Germano, Ohio, in 1840, was reared and married there, and as a young man enlisted in the Sixth Ohio Infantry, and served as a Union soldier until the close of war. In the fall of 1865 he married, and then located at Millersport, Ohio, where he conducted a general blacksmith and wagon making shop. In the early '70s he came to Cabell County, West Virginia, continued his trade at Le Sage, and on March 20, 1891, removed to Huntington, where shortly afterward he was elected justice of the peace, and served that office for about ten years, until his death on May 27, 1901. He was a man of substantial character, business-like and efficient in everything he undertook and popular as well. He was a republican, a member of the German Lutheran Church, was a charter member of Huntington Lodge No. 313, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, and was the first member of that lodge to die. His first wife, whom he married in Ohio, was Miss Zeller, a native of Jefferson County, that state. She died at Le Sage, West Virginia, and of her six children the four now living are: Andrew C., a blacksmith of Huntington; Charles, a machinist at Huntington; Commodore Hall, a molder living at Cleveland; and Mary, wife of William M. Lake, a painter in the coach department of the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad at Huntington. In 1877 Andrew J. Miser married at Le Sage Miss Sarah Johnson, who was born in Cabell County in 1857, and is now living at Huntington. She became the mother of four children: Mathew; James G., a plumber who died at Huntington in 1921, at the age of thirty-nine; Harry Blaine clerk at Huntington; and Robert E., who died at Huntington in 1917, at the age of twenty-two, was a pipe fitter and had charge of a crew of men for the Westinghouse Company during the construction of the Huntington shops of the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad.

Mathew Miser attended school at Le Sage, and was about twelve years of age when the family moved to Huntington. The following year he began earning his own living, and for six years worked in the shops of the Chesapeake & Ohio and for two years longer in the Huntington plant of the American Car & Foundry Company. For a year or so after working hours he devoted his time to the study of pharmacy, and he had practical employment as pharmacist for three years in the drug store of C. A. Yates at Huntington. Then he went on the road as a traveling salesman as representative for J. N. Murdoch, wholesale druggist of Parkersburg. For this firm he covered an extensive territory in the southern part of the state for ten years and nine months. He resigned to assist in organizing the Huntington Drug Company, and while the organization was underway he served as treasurer during 1913, but when the business was established he resigned that office to go on the road as its traveling representative, again cover ing Southern West Virginia and built up an extensive clientele for the company. He remained a member of the board of directors.

Mr. Miser was drafted for the municipal service of Huntington in 1918, and elected commissioner of streets and sewers, public utilities and public buildings and public grounds. He entered the office for a term of three years in June, 1918. In 1919 the city charter was amended, changing it from a non-partisan to a partisan form of government. In 1921 Mr. Miser was made commissioner of streets and sewers for a term of one year, which expires the second Monday in June, 1922. Under the new charter there is another commissioner for public utilities and public buildings. Mr. Miser has his offices in the city hall. He was a member of the last city council before the adoption of the commission form of government in 1909.

Mr. Miser is a republican, is on the Official Board of the First Methodist Episcopal Church of Huntington, is affiliated with Western Star Lodge No. 11, A. F. and A. M., Huntington Lodge No. 6, R. A. M. Huntington Commandery No. 9, K. T., Huntington Lodge of Perfection No. 4 of the Scottish Rite, and Beni-Kedem Temple of the Mysto Shrine at Charleston. He also belongs to Huntington Council No. 53, United Commercial Travelers, Huntington Camp No. 8373, Modern Woodmen of America, and Huntington Lodge, Ancient Order of United Workmen. He is a member of the Huntington Kiwanis Club. Mr. Miser has acquired considerable real estate in the city and county, and his home is a modern residence at 512 Fourth Street.

On March 27, 1904, at Ironton, Ohio, he married Miss Erma Messenger, daughter of Hiram and Margaret (McWhorter) Messenger. Her mother lives at Huntington, where her father, who was a carpenter, died. Mrs. Miser finished her education in Marshall College at Huntington. They have one child, John Allen, born April 18, 1906.

ROBERT FERGUSON ADAMS is a native of Lawrence County, Ohio, having been born at Ironton, June 2, 1874. He comes of distinguished old stock, his father, Hamlin Miller Adams, being a direct descendant of the famous old Adams family of Massachusetts, and also of General Tupper, renowned Indian fighter of pioneer days. The paternal grandfather of Hamlin M. Adams was a cousin of John Quincy Adams, and his grandmother, Luvice Tupper, was a niece of General Tupper. Volney Adams, the paternal grandfather of Robert F. Adams, came to the Muskingum Valley from Massachusetts and settled at Marietta, Ohio, where Hamlin M. Adams, the father of Robert F. Adams, was born. Later the family removed to a point near Beverly, Ohio, where Volney Adams engaged in farming. He died in the evening of life, in the State of Washington.

Hamlin Miller Adams was born in 1840 and died in March, 1905, at the age of sixty-five years. He spent his boyhood days upon the farm. He received his education at Marietta College, from which institution he was graduated in 1866. In the winter of 1863 he left college to enter the Union Army, remaining therein until the close of the war. In the fall of 1864 he was severely wounded in a skirmish at City Point, now Petersburg, Virginia. He returned to college in 1865 and graduated therefrom in 1866, having received a good classical education. Several years later his alma mater conferred upon him the honorary degree of Master of Arts. In 1867 he entered Lane Seminary at Cincinnati for the study of theology, but being without funds and too proud-spirited to accept aid he left the seminary and engaged in teaching at Ironton, Ohio, being connected with the public schools at that point. Later he left the schools and became editor of the Ironton Journal. Still later, in 1877, he became president of Augusta College, Augusta, Kentucky, removing from thence to Huntington, West Virginia, in 1879. Here he established a private school, but later disposed of it to enter the grocery business in Huntington with his brother Gus M. Adams, under the firm name of Adams & Brother. He took a prominent part in the political affairs of the state, being a staunch republican in politics, and in 1889 was appointed postmaster of Huntington by President Harrison. It was under his administration that free delivery service of mail matter was begun in Huntington. He was an elder in the First Presbyterian Church and a member of the Odd Fellows and the Masonic fraternity. In 1873, at Ironton, Ohio, he was united in marriage with Miss Jennie Ferguson, daughter of James M. and Elizabeth J. (Wood) Ferguson, the latter of whom survives and is a resident of Los Angeles, California. Miss Jennie Ferguson was born in 1852. Four children resulted from this union: Robert Ferguson, of this review; Augustus Hamlin, of Huntington, a merchandise broker specializing in mining machinery; Frances, a sister, who is unmarried and resides with her widowed mother; and Norton Meredith, who is engaged in the newspaper business at New Orleans, Louisiana.

Robert Ferguson Adams received a high school education in the public schools of Huntington, but was obliged to leave school on account of his health shortly before the completion of his senior year. In the fall of 1892, at the age of eighteen, he became a letter carrier at Huntington, having worked his way up to this position, starting as errand boy, then working as special delivery messenger and night clerk at the Post Office. He occupied the position of a letter carrier for eighteen years, during which time he rose from the lowest paid to the highest salaried position attainable in this branch of the postal service. In 1904 he became interested in a small weekly newspaper established in Huntington, with which he acted as advertising manager, giving to this work such of his time not required for his postal duties. Later he disposed of his interest in this publication and devoted such spare time as was available to the study and practice of the work of an advertising agent. In 1910 he resigned his position with the Post Office department to engage in a mercantile business, with which he was identified for about one year, having carried on simultaneously his advertising business. In 1911 he severed his connection with all other business ventures to devote his time exclusively to his chosen profession of advertising. In 1911 he founded the Adams Advertising Agency, the pioneer enterprise of its kind at Huntington, which under his management and direction has attained the position of leadership in its field, he having been engaged in the study and practice of advertising since 1907. His plant and offices are located in the Miller-Ritter Building, Huntington, where he plans and executes advertising campaigns, places accounts in newspapers and magazines, does commercial multigraphing and direct-by-mail advertising, and handles theatre and screen advertising.

Mr. Adams is a republican. With his family he belongs to the First Presbyterian Church of Huntington, in which he is an elder. He is a thirty-second degree Mason, belonging to Huntington Lodge No. 53, A. F. and A. M., and to West Virginia Consistory No. 1 of Wheeling, and being secretary of the Scottish Rite bodies of Huntington. He is also a member of Beni-Kedem Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S., of Charleston, of Marshall Lodge No. 121, I. O. O. F., of Huntington, of the Guyan Country Club, and of the Rotary Club of Huntington, in which he has held the post of secretary since 1916. During the great World War Mr. Adams took an active part in all local war movements, Liberty Loan drives, etc. He was chairman of the U. S. Navy Local Advisory Committee, and chairman of the War Savings Advertising Committee of Cabell County, a capacity in which he handled and produced the advertising for the sale of War Savings Stamps throughout the county. For his work in this capacity Mr. Adams received letters of the highest commendation from the National War Savings Advertising Bureau and the bureau drafted for reproduction nationally and for the assistance of other War Savings advertising committees, a numerous portion of the advertising matter having been prepared by Mr. Adams.

In 1895 Mr. Adams entered Marshall College for additional study, arranging his daily occupation so as to be able to engage in the classes in the branches of study desired. It was during this year that he met Miss Mamie Baker, a daughter of Dr. Morgan and Annie (Marcum) Baker, the latter of whom resides at Huntington, where Doctor Baker, now deceased, was a well-known physician and surgeon. Miss Baker graduated from Marshall College in 1895 and was united in matrimony to Mr. Adams in April, 1893, shortly after the recovery of Mr. Adams from a sickness of nearly a year, which resulted from injuries received in the letter carrier service. Two daughters have blessed this union: Mary Elisabeth and Virginia, the former of whom graduated from Wooster College, Wooster, Ohio, in 1922, with the degree of Bachelor of Arts, and the latter of whom is a student at the same college.

PURLA V. BESWICK, administrator of the estate of his father, the late Samuel Beswick, incidentally has the active management of the substantial lumber business which was established by his father in the City of Huntington and which is still conducted under the title of Sam Beswick, which had been adopted by the father.

Mr. Beswick was born in Gallia County, Ohio, February 10, 1878. His father, Samuel Beswick, was born at Stockport, Morgan County, that state, May 14, 1855, and died at Huntington, West Virginia, December 2, 1921. Samuel Beswick was reared and educated in his native place and was a young man when he removed to Gallia County, Ohio. At Pomeroy, Meigs County, that state, his marriage occurred and he was thereafter identified with operations in the oil fields of that county until his removal to Marietta, Ohio, where he found employment in a cooping establishment, as did he later at New Brighton, Pennsylvania. In 1877 he returned to Gallia County, Ohio, where he was engaged in farm enterprise until the following year, when he came to West Virginia and engaged in farming near Greenbottom, Cabell County. There he continued his successful operations until January, 1883, when he removed with his family to Huntington and entered the employ of the Ensign Manufacturing Company, the title of which is now the American Car & Foundry Company. In 1886 he here established himself in business as a contractor and builder, and with this enterprise he continued his active alliance until 1892, when he founded the retail lumber business which is still conducted under his name and which he developed into one of the most substantial and important enterprises of its kind in the city. He erected his office building on Fourteenth Street, between Second and Third avenues, and the lumber warehouses extend from the corner of Fourteenth Street and Second Avenue for a distance of 210 feet to the east of Fourteenth Street, on Second Avenue, and 140 feet on Fourteenth Street. Mr. Beswick was a loyal and public-spirited citizen and aggressive and successful business man, was a democrat in politics, and he served as a member of the City Council of Huntington from 1895 to 1898. He was affiliated with Huntington Lodge No. 64, I. O. O. F.; Huntington Lodge No. 33, Knights of Pythias; Huntington Camp No. 5257, M. W. A.; and with the local organization of the Improved Order of Red Men, besides which he was an active and popular member of the Huntington Chamber of Commerce. His widow, whose maiden name was Augusta Kuhn and who still resides at Huntington, was born in Washington County, Ohio, May 14, 1855. Of their children the first-born is Clyda, who remains with her widowed mother; the subject of this sketch was the next in order of birth and is the only son; and Addie is the wife of K. A. Runion, of Huntington.

Purla V. Beswick supplemented the discipline of the Huntington public schools by attending Marshall College, in which he continued his studies until he had partially completed the work of his senior year. He left college in 1895 and became actively associated with his father's lumber business, his experience thus fortifying him effectively when he was called upon to assume the active management of the business upon the death of his father. He is found loyally aligned in the ranks of the democratic party, is an active member of the Huntington Chamber of Commerce, and is affiliated with Huntington Camp No. 5257, Modern Woodmen of America; Huntington Lodge No. 313, B. P. O. E.; and with the local organization of the lumbermen's fraternity, the Concatenated Order of Hoo Hoos. He is a member of Central Christian Church, and his wife is a member of the Fifth Avenue Baptist Church. In 1922 he completed the erection of his handsome and modern residence on Fifth Avenue, in one of the most attractive residential sections of the city.

November 17, 1903, recorded the marriage of Mr. Beswick and Miss Annette Norton, who was born in Kanawha County, this state, October 14, 1880, and whose death occurred July 23, 1909, no children having been born of this union. On the 13th of September, 1918, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Beswick and Miss Blanche Rogers, daughter of Samuel Rogers, who is living retired at Mount Sterling, Kentucky, his wife being deceased. Mrs. Beswick was born near Mount Sterling, Kentucky, August 14, 1886, and was reared and educated in the fine old Blue Grass State and in Marshall College. She is the gracious and popular chataleine of the beautiful home at Huntington, and is actively identified with the representative social life of the community.

Samuel Beswick, grandfather of the subject of this review, was born in Stockport, England, and died at Stockport, Ohio, September 22, 1867, he having been a young man when he came to the United States and settled at Stockport, Ohio, where he became a pioneer merchant and hotel proprietor, the owner of a wharboat, a contractor in the construction of county roads, and a promoter in the local oil fields. The maiden name of his wife was Emily Thorniley, and she likewise died at Stockport. The great-grandparents, James Beswick and Elizabeth Gaywood Beswick, were born in England and came to this country in 1818.

JOSEPH GIBBS GARDINER. One of the well-known insurance men of Huntington is Joseph Gibbs Gardiner, manager of the Consolidated Insurance Agency. His connection with this position has gained him a wide acquaintance, among whom his genial disposition and loyalty have made him a general favorite. A peculiar and particular genius is necessary to the man who would acquire success in the insurance field. The business is like unto no other, and many men who have risen to prominence in other lines have scored naught but failures in insurance. Mr. Gardiner possesses the necessary qualities of acumen, a pleasing personality, perseverance and an insight into human nature. With these he has achieved a worth-while success.

Mr. Gardiner was born at Augusta, Georgia, January 14, 1882, a son of Gibbs and Margaret (DeCottes) Gardiner. His father, also a native of Augusta, was a college graduate and a man of superior education, who at times followed the profession of law and also acted in an editorial capacity on several newspapers at Augusta, where he passed his entire life and where his death occurred in 1891. He was a democrat in his political sympathies. Reared in the faith of the Presbyterian Church, in later years he joined the Roman Catholic Church. Mr. Gardiner married Margaret DeCottes, who was born at Hamburg, South Carolina, and died at Augusta, Georgia, in 1891. They were the parents of three children: Margaret, who died at Augusta, Georgia, aged thirty-nine years, as the wife of James M. Triplett, now a traveling salesman of Columbia, South Carolina; Joseph Gibbs, of this review; and Susanna, the wife of Dr. Joseph B. Palmer, a well-known physician and surgeon of Thomasville, Georgia.

Joseph Gibbs Gardiner attended the public schools of Augusta, but was only nine years of age when his parents died, and two years later, when only eleven years old, left school and went to work as office boy in a fire insurance office. Later he was advanced to clerk, and remained with the Allen Agency for a period of fifteen years, during which time through integrity, industry and fidelity he worked his way steadily upward to the position of manager. In 1908 he became special agent and adjuster for the Continental Insurance Company of New York, and in this double capacity traveled through South Carolina, Georgia and Florida until 1918. In that year he formed a connection with the Underwriters Inspection Bureau, with headquarters at Atlanta, as special agent, and remained with that concern until October, 1921, covering South Carolina, Florida and Virginia. In October, 1921, he came to Huntington, West Virginia, as manager for the Consolidated Insurance Agency, a position which he still retains, his offices being situated at Rooms 918 and 919 Robson-Pritchard. His territory not only covers the State of West Virginia, but extends into neighboring states. During the period of his management the business of the company has grown to substantial proportions, and Mr. Gardiner has fully maintained the reputation which he established in other fields of endeavor prior to locating at Huntington. Mr. Gardiner is a democrat in politics, and a member of the Johnson Memorial Methodist Episcopal Church, South, of Huntington. He belongs to Huntington Lodge No. 53, A. F. and A. M., and Feramorz Grotto No. 1 of Huntington, and is also a director of the Huntington Masonic Club.

C. HARRISON SMITH. Ever since 1914 one of the leading contributors to the upbuilding and development of the City of Huntington has been C. Harrison Smith, a prominent building contractor. A man of long and comprehensive experience in his line, Mr. Smith has brought to his labors an enthusiasm and care for detail that have materially contributed to the architectural improvement of the city, while as a practical business man he has worked his way to the forefront among the progressive men of his time and locality.

Mr. Smith was born at Shrewsbury, York County, Pennsylvania, November 3, 1873, and is a son of Henry N. and Mary A. (Hildebrand) Smith. His grandfather, Henry Smith, was born in 1820, in Westphalia, Germany, and immigrated to the United States at the age of thirty-four years, shortly after his marriage. He settled in York County, Pennsylvania, where he became a successful farmer, and died at York, in that county, in 1893. Mr. Smith married a Miss Nieman, who was also a native of Germany, and who died in York County.

Henry N. Smith was born in 1844, in Westphalia, Germany, and was ten years of age when brought by his parents to the United States, his boyhood home being York County, Pennsylvania, where he was reared and secured his education in the public schools. He was married there and took up his residence at Shrewsbury, where he succeeded in the building and contracting business, and in 1892 came to Ceredo, Wayne County, West Virginia, where he followed the same line of business. In 1899 he went to Newport News, Virginia, where he remained two years, and then returned to West Virginia and settled at Morgantown, where he died in the following year. He was a republican, was fraternally affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and his religious connection was with the Lutheran Church. Mr. Smith married Miss Mary A. Hildebrand, who was born in 1846, in York County, Pennsylvania, and died at Ceredo, West Virginia, in 1914, and they became the parents of the following children: Milton A., who is proprietor of a furniture establishment at Johnstown, Pennsylvania; Edward E., the proprietor of a motion picture theatre at Ceredo, West Virginia; Cora, deceased; C. Harrison, of this notice; Charlotte, the wife of B. E. Morse, an electrical engineer of Detroit, Michigan; William W., an attorney of Huntington; Jesse B., a railroad employe of Roanoke, Virginia; August, who conducts a conservatory of music at Washington, D. C., and Charles J., who died at the age of twenty-one years at Morgantown, West Virginia.

C. Harrison Smith attended the public schools of York County, Pennsylvania, and graduated from Marshall College, Huntington, West Virginia, as a member of the class of 1897. This was supplemented by a business course at the same institution in 1898, following which he secured employment as bookkeeper and stenographer with the Emmons-Hawkins Hardware Company of Huntington, a concern with which he was identified until 1902. At that time his father died, and Mr. Smith resigned his position to take charge of the elder man's business, which he conducted at Morgantown until 1914, when he came to Huntington and engaged in the same line. He has a very extensive business as a building contractor, and among the large contracts which he has handled successfully may be mentioned two business blocks for Dr. I. C. White on Main Street, Morgantown; the Lutheran Church at Charleroi, Pennsylvania; the college building for the Colored Institute near Charleston, West Virginia; the Children's Home at Athens, Ohio; the Simms School, Huntington; the dormitory building for the Huntington State Hospital; the South Junior High School, Huntington, one of the finest school houses in the state, completed in 1922, and many other business buildings and private residences not only at Huntington, but in other cities in West Virginia, Kentucky, Ohio and Pennsylvania. His offices are situated at No. 608 Robson-Pritchard Building, Huntington. Mr. Smith owns a modern home at No. 631 Eleventh Avenue, where his many friends always find a sincere and hearty welcome. He is a republican and takes a good citizen's interest in politics, as well as in civic affairs. His fraternal affiliation is with Reese Camp No. 66, Woodmen of the World, Huntington, and with his family he belongs to the First Presbyterian Church of Huntington.

On December 26, 1906, Mr. Smith was united in marriage with Miss Helen B. Smith, of Charleston, a graduate of the West Virginia State University, Morgantown, and a daughter of Charles B. and Mary (McConihay) Smith. Mrs. Smith's mother resides with her daughter and son-in-law. Charles B. Smith, now deceased, was formerly a prominent attorney of Charleston, and at one time served as prosecuting attorney of Kanawha County, West Virginia. Two children have come to the union of Mr. and Mrs. C. Harrison Smith: Helen Virginia, who was born May 7, 1909; and C. Harrison, Jr., born July 31, 1912.

CHARLES CLIFFORD HARROLD. To administer capably the affairs of large enterprises requires sound judgment, executive ability and a capacity for earnest work. Especially is this true when the interests of others are involved, for in such a case the individual so circumstanced has to consider their rights as well as the general welfare and the exigencies of certain conditions. Among the most important phases of business life is that which deals with credits, and the responsibilities devolving upon the secretary-treasurer of the Huntington Association of Credit Men are therefore numerous and significant. This office is held by Charles Clifford Harrold, who has passed his entire career at Huntington, where he has gained advancement through the possession of the qualities noted above.

Mr. Harrold was born at Huntington, May 31, 1883, and is a son of Charles B. and Georgia Lee (McCullough) Harrold, and a member of a family which originated in England and was founded in Virginia during Colonial days. James Madison Harrold, the paternal grandfather of Charles C. Harrold, was born in 1821 in Virginia, and was a pioneer in what are now Kanawha and Mason counties, West Virginia, where he was engaged in business as a salt manufacturer. During the war between the states he served in the Quartermaster's Department of the Confederate Army. In or about 1887 he retired from business activities and took up his residence at Huntington, where he became a well-known and highly respected citizen and served for some time as a member of the board of education. In politics he was a democrat. Mr. Harrold died in 1897. He married Jane Turner, who was born in North Carolina and died at Huntington.

Charles B. Harrold was born in Kanawha County, Virginia (now West Virginia), April 5, 1855, and was reared there and in Mason County, where he received a public school education. He accompanied his parents to Cabell County and attended Marshall College, from which he was graduated as a member of the class of 1872, and then engaged in the grocery business at Huntington, in which he has continued to the present. He now resides at No. 1118 Tenth Street. Mr. Harrold is a democrat in politics. He has always shown an interest in education and was formerly secretary of the board of regents of Marshall College for a number of years. He belongs to Johnson Memorial Methodist Episcopal Church, South, of Huntington, and fraternizes with the Masons. Mr. Harrold married Miss Georgia Lee McCullough, who was born February 3, 1861, at Huntington, and died here July 21, 1921. They became the parents of five children, of whom two died young, the survivors being: Charles Clifford; Frank L., a resident of Huntington; and Grace Christine, the wife of George T. Sigler, a locomotive engineer residing at Huntington.

Charles Clifford Harrold attended the public schools of Huntington, this being subsequently supplemented by a commercial course at Marshall Business College. In the meantime, at the age of fourteen years, he began work with D. E. Abbott & Company, in the aluminum printing department, where he remained six years. On June 1, 1904, he engaged in the grocery business with W. B. Wilson and others under the corporate name of the W. B. Wilson Company, with which he was identified for two years, and then accepted a position with the Adams Express Company, with which he was identified for a short time. Mr. Harrold next became night baggage agent for the Chesapeake & Ohio Railway Company, a position which he held from November 21, 1906, until August 14, 1907, when he went into the Chesapeake & Ohio shops as general foreman's clerk. On October 20, 1907, he was promoted to general timekeeper of the shops, and remained in that capacity until January 1, 1912, when he was again promoted, becoming accountant for the store departments, covering territory known as the Western General Division. On October 17, 1917, he was made storekeeper for the West Virginia General Division, with headquarters at Huntington. Mr. Harrold left the Chesapeake & Ohio, September 16, 1919, to become assistant manager of the Tri-States Credit and Adjustment Bureau, and February 21, 1921, was elected secretary and treasurer of the Huntington Association of Credit Men, an office to which he was re-elected February 20, 1922. The Tri-States Credit and Adjustment Bureau and the Huntington Association of Credit Men are affiliated interests. He is generally recognized as one of the best informed and most capable credit men in this part of the state.

Mr. Harrold is a democrat. He belongs to the Johnson Memorial Methodist Episcopal Church, South, of Huntington, and sings in the church choir. During the World war he assumed the responsibility of keeping war material and supplies moving for general railroad repairs, and nineteen hours a day was not unusual for him to work in this connection. In addition he found time to assist in all the drives, and was a liberal contributor to all movements. He is the owner of a modern residence at No. 937 Eleventh Avenue, Huntington, and has other real estate in the city and a one-third interest in the grocery store situated at No. 1001 Sixteenth Street.

On June 26, 1907, Mr. Harrold married Miss Iva C. McCaffrey, daughter of William S. and Jeannette (Smith) McCaffrey, both of whom are now deceased. Mr. McCaffrey fought as a Union soldier during the war between the states. Three children have come to Mr. and Mrs. Harrold: Jeannette Lee, born April 25, 1909; Darwin Abbott, born April 17, 1912; and Charles Clifford, Jr., born March 6, 1919.

JOHN F. RATCLIFF is vice president of the corporation of Hagen, Ratcliff & Company, which conducts in the City of Huntington one of the important wholesale grocery establishments of West Virginia. He was born at Glen Hayes, Wayne County, this state, November 27, 1867, a son of William Ratcliff, whose father, Daniel Ratcliff, was one of the sterling pioneer settlers in that county, where he established his home about 1796. William Ratcliff was born on the site of the present town of Glen Hayes, on May 19, 1802, and he passed his entire life in his native county, his death having occurred at Glen Hayes in 1885. He became one of the extensive agriculturists and stock-growers of Wayne County, and prior to the Civil war had owned a large number of slaves. He was a democrat, served many years as local magistrate, and also gave effective service as president of the County Court. He was a leader in the local councils of the democratic party, and was elected to the Virginia Legislature in 1860. He represented his county in the Second Wheeling Convention, which convened June 11, 1861. He also represented his county in the Provisional Legislature which met at Wheeling on July 1, 1861. Both he and his wife were earnest members of the Baptist Church. His first wife, whose maiden name was Nancy Garred, was born near the present Town of Clifford, Kentucky, and died at the old home at Glen Hayes. They became the parents of two sons and eight daughters, all of whom are now deceased. For his second wife William Ratcliff wedded Rachel Vinson, who was born in 1831 and who passed her entire life in Wayne County, where she died in 1912, the subject of this review being the only child of this union.

The public schools of Glen Hayes afforded John F. Ratcliff his early education, and he continued his association with the activities of his father's farm until he was twenty years of age. Thereafter he was employed five years as clerk in a store at Louisa, Kentucky, and he then engaged in the wholesale grocery business at that place, where he remained until 1901, when he came to Huntington, West Virginia, and purchased H. C. Harvey's interest in the wholesale grocery business of Harvey, Hagen & Company, the title of the concern being then changed to its present form, Hagen, Ratcliff & Company, and the business being now one of the largest of its kind in the state. H. B. Hagen is president of the company, John F. Ratcliff is vice president, W. O. Wiatt is treasurer, and D. S. Sayre is secretary. The well equipped offices and warehouses of the company are in a substantial building at 1018-20 Third Avenue. Mr. Ratcliff is also vice president of the Community Savings & Loan Company, one of the representative financial institutions of Huntington. His political allegiance is given to the democratic party, and he is actively identified with the Huntington Chamber of Commerce, the Rotary Club, the Guyandot Club, of which he is president, and the Business Men's Club. His Masonic affiliations are as here noted: Huntington Lodge No. 53, A. F. and A. M.; Huntington Chapter No. 6, R. A. M.; Huntington Commandery No. 9, Knights Templars; and West Virginia Consistory No. 1, Scottish Rite, at Wheeling, in which he has received the thirty-second degree.

Mr. Ratcliff was one of the vigorous workers in support of the various patriotic activities in his home city and county during the World war period, and gave much time to promoting the Government bond and Red Cross drives.

In 1892 Mr. Ratcliff wedded Miss Mary B. Burchett, daughter of Maj. Drewry James Burchett, who served as a major in the Union Army in the Civil war, and who is now engaged in the banking business at Mount Sterling, Kentucky, his wife being deceased. Mr. and Mrs. Ratcliff have two children. Anna is the wife of Luther T. Long, who is junior member of the firm of J. H. Long & Son, publishers of the Huntington Advertiser. John D. is (1922) a student in the Massachusetts Institute of Technology in the City of Boston.

FRANK NIXON MANN. In that growing list of industries that distinguish Huntington among the busy cities of the state, one of the important ones, due to volume of the business and wide distribution of products, is the Huntington Sash, Door & Trim Company, of which Frank Nixon Mann is president and general manager. Mr. Mann has been a lumber manufacturer and planing mill operator for many years, and came to Huntington from the eastern part of the state.

He was born in Greenbrier County, July 19, 1861. Back in Colonial times three brothers left Scotland and came to America, one locating in Pennsylvania, another in Maryland, while the direct ancestor of the Huntington manufacturer established his home in Gloucester County, Virginia where he intermarried with the Page family. The grand father of Frank Nixon Mann was Billie Thomas Mann, who was born in Bath County, Virginia, in 1784, was reared there, was married in Monroe County, West Virginia, and was one of the early farmers established in the Fort Spring neighborhood. At one time he owned a third of all the land in Fayette County. This land later turned out to be exceedingly valuable on account of its coal deposits. He died at Fort Spring in 1866. His wife was Miss Alexander, a native of Virginia.

James Mann, their son, was born in Greenbrier County, near Fort Spring, in 1832, and when a young man he left that vicinity and spent three years as a farmer in Edge-

Frank R. Mauer

County, Illinois. About a year after his marriage there he returned to Greenbrier County, and conducted his extensive operations as a farmer, but about 1878 moved into Alderson, and supervised his farm from that point until his death, which occurred at Alderson, Monroe County, in January, 1910. He was a democrat, served three terms as a magistrate, and was for many years an elder in the Presbyterian Church. James Mann married Elizabeth Nixon, who was born at Springfield, Illinois, March 11, 1838, and is now eighty-four years of age, a resident of Alderson. Frank Nixon is the oldest of her three children. Her daughter May E. is the wife of Dr. Charles P. Nash, a retired physician and surgeon at Alderson. Bessie A. died at Alderson at the age of twenty-five, and her husband, Mr. Lide, is now a merchant in Birmingham, Alabama.

Frank Nixon Mann acquired a rural school training in Greenbrier County, took his preparatory course in a private school in the same county, and then entered Hampden Sidney College in Prince Edward County, Virginia. He remained there until in his senior year, when he left, in 1884, to take up active business. For about thirty years Mr. Mann was a lumber manufacturer and farmer living at Alderson. His planing mill there burned in 1911, and in 1912 he moved to Huntington and established the Huntington Sash Door and Trim Company, building the plant at Nineteenth and Second Avenue. He is principal owner and president and general manager of the company, which is the West Virginia corporation. Others associated with him in the official personnel are: J. W. Lawton, vice president, and F. L. Faust, secretary and treasurer. This is a large industry with complete machinery equipment for the manufacture of all planing and mill work products including stair, porch work, window frames, store fixtures, mouldings and interior trim. The output commands a large sale all over West Virginia and is shipped even to Ohio and Michigan points.

Mr. Mann is a democrat, is an elder in the First Presbyterian Church of Huntington, and since moving to that city has acquired some interests in real estate, including his home at 1621 Fifth Avenue. In September, 1892, at Alderson, West Virginia, he married Miss Nancy B. Murray, daughter of Rev. Patrick Murray, who married a Miss Graves. Both her parents are now deceased. Her father was a minister of the Baptist Church. Mrs. Mann is a graduate of the Woman's Western College of Hamilton, Ohio. Without children of their own, Mr. and Mrs. Mann reared two adopted children. The first, Nancy, is now the wife of Garland B. Johnson, a resident of Lynchburg, Virginia, and general sales manager of the Lynchburg Pipe and Foundry Company. The second is Elsworth F., now a student in the Military Academy at Augusta, Virginia.

GEORGE W. BOCK, a broker and dealer in flour, feed, hay and grain at Weston, is a native of Marion County. He started to make his fortune when a boy, and has achieved a definite and satisfactory progress through the years, all of which accounts for the high standing and esteem paid him as a citizen.

Mr. Bock was born in Marion County, West Virginia, July 20, 1865, son of Jackson and Lyda (Pyles) Bock, natives of the same county. His father, who is still living, was born in 1830. Both parents were reared on farms, had common school educations, and after their marriage settled on a farm in Marion County, where Jackson Bock continued his active responsibilities until he retired. Both have been faithful and earnest members of the Christian Church, and in politics the father is a democrat. Of the nine children born to their marriage three are still living: George W.; Mrs. Lena Basnett, of Worthington, West Virginia; and Charles S., a miner at Worthington.

George W. Bock grew up on a farm and acquired a common school education. He went out for himself at fifteen and gradually his experience led him into the lumber business, and for some years he conducted a lumber plant as manager and proprietor. In 1914 he engaged in his present business as a broker in flour, feed, hay and grain at Weston. He is also a stockholder in the Benson Oil Company. In February, 1891, Mr. Bock married Mintie Skinner, a native of Lewis County. They have four children: Walter R., who is a graduate of the Port Clinton High School and is now chief chemist in the great paint works of Sherwin-Williams Company of Cleveland; George L., a graduate of the Weston High School, has charge of the meter department of the West Virginia Central Gas Company; Virginia, also a high school graduate, is the wife of Harry S. Vanderbilt, Jr., of Weston; and Frank R. is a graduate of the Weston High School and is now the business partner of his father in the brokerage trade. The family are members of the Christian Church. Mr. Bock is affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and has filled the office of noble grand three times. He has been a working member of the democratic party for many years, and was his party's nominee for the State Senate to represent the Twelfth Senatorial District.

WALTER H. WARREN, who was with the hospital service in France during the World war, is a well known business man of Weston, member of the real estate firm of Lively & Warren. He has been engaged in the real estate business ever since he left school except for the time he spent with the colors.

Mr. Warren was born in Lewis County, July 27, 1886, son of Allan A. and Mary M. (Harrison) Warren. His mother was born at Weston, June 2, 1856. His father was born at St. Louis, Missouri, October 2, 1851, but was reared in Richmond, Virginia, where he attended school. As a young man he located at Weston and was in the hardware business for thirty years, but since retiring from merchandising has been in the fire insurance business as head of the firm, A. A. Warren & Son. His wife was reared at Weston, attended the public schools there and is a graduate of an Episcopal School at Winchester, Virginia. They are members of St. Paul's Episcopal Church, and he is affiliated with the Knights of Pythias. As a democrat he served on the City Council for twenty years. A. A. Warren and wife had six children: Edward H., purchasing agent with the Midwest Oil & Refining Company at Casper, Wyoming; Allan A., Jr., deceased; Elise, a high school graduate and wife of Cecil L. Orr, of Weston; Jeanette, a graduate nurse who was on duty for six months during the World war; Gertrude, a graduate of high school and wife of Eugene Grant, of Weston.

Walter H. Warren grew up at Weston, and after completing a high school education entered the insurance and real estate business, and in many transactions has proved his notably good judgment and has made a most gratifying success in his chosen field.

Mr. Warren is a member of Weston Lodge No. 10, A. F. and A. M., Bigelow Chapter No. 4, R. A. M., and Weston Lodge No. 43, Knights of Pythias, of which he is a past chancellor. He is unmarried. He takes an active interest in the democratic party of the county. When he joined the Medical Corps during the war he was given his training at Chickamauga Park, Georgia, and Camp Taylor, Louisville, and embarked for overseas with Base Hospital No. 119. He left October 31, 1918, and landed in France November 10, 1918, the day before the armistice was signed. He was stationed in the largest hospital in France, at Savenay, eight miles from St. Nazaire, and was on duty there for eight months. He returned to the United States June 27, 1919, and received his honorable discharge at Camp Sherman, Ohio, July 26, 1919.

JOHN WARD EAKIN is secretary and treasurer of the Eakin Lumber Company of Weston, an important corporation whose executive officers are chiefly members of the Eakin family and whose field of operation extends over a considerable area of Webster and Nicholas counties.

Mr. Eakin was born in Lewis County, West Virginia, July 22, 1888, son of J. and Victoria (Ward) Eakin. His father was born near Mount Morris, Pennsylvania, and his mother in Lewis County, West Virginia. J. Eakin was a boy when his parents moved to West Virginia, and soon after leaving public school he became interested in the lumber industry and is still active therein. He now makes his home at the mills of the Eakin Lumber Company. For many years the family home was in Weston, where his wife died in 1917. She was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. J. Eakin is a democrat. He is the father of seven children: Peter E., who is a graduate of Wesleyan College at Buckhannon and is president and manager of the Eakin Lumber Company; Ceph, who attended public school and business college, is vice president of the company; Maude, a high school graduate is the wife of John A. Fisher; Pearl is the wife of O. E. Hunkle; Edna is the wife of G. C. Hammon; Leah is the wife of R. C. Blair; and John Ward is the youngest.

John Ward Eakin grew up in Lewis County, acquired a public school education, attended Wesleyan College and Business School and practically all his business energies have been bestowed upon the lumber industry. The Eakin Lumber Company is incorporated with Peter E. Eakin, president; Ceph Eakin, vice president; John Ward Eakin, secretary and treasurer; while the other directors are O. E. Hinkle, F. B. Mathews, W. A. Jackson and S. P. Bishop. The company owns and operates as an adjunct to its lumbering operations the Erbacon & Summerville Railroad.

May 13, 1913, Mr. Eakin married Nelle Craig, who is a graduate of the Weston High School and attended a business college at Marion, Ohio. They have four children: Joe, born in 1914; Frances, born in 1915; Mildred, born in 1917; and J. W., Jr., born in 1920. Mrs. Eakin is a member of the Catholic Church. He is an affiliated member of the Knights of Pythias and Modern Woodmen of America, belongs to the Chamber of Commerce and is a democrat.

HENRY BREWSTER has been a factor in the natural gas industry of West Virginia for the past twenty years, and is district foreman at Weston for the Hope Natural Gas Company.

Mr. Brewster was born in Athens County, Ohio, November 10, 1863, son of Sherman and Nancy (McLaughlin) Brewster, his father a native of Massachusetts and his mother of Athens, Ohio. Sherman Brewster was a member of the distinguished Colonial family of Brewster, a direct descendant of Elder William Brewster, one of the most distinguished of the passengers on the Mayflower. Sherman Brewster was reared and educated in Massachusetts, became a teacher there, and after he removed to Ohio combined teaching with farming until his death, at the age of forty-eight. He and his wife were active members of the Christian Church. He died in 1904. They had five children: Alice, wife of G. B. Dye; Edward, now retired at Columbus, Ohio; Ellen, wife of F. M. Tipton, of Des Moines, Iowa; Henry; and Cyrus, a farmer at Torch in Athens County.

Henry Brewster lived on his father's farm in Ohio, attended the public schools, and had one year of study in Ohio University at Athens. Following his college course he did farm work, and on October 10, 1890, at the age of twenty-seven, he married Mary McCain, a native of Ohio. After their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Brewster lived on a farm in Ohio and in 1900 he removed with his family to Moundsville, West Virginia, and has since been connected with the oil and gas industry. From a worker in the field he became a district foreman, and for several years past has been a resident of Weston.

Mr. and Mrs. Brewster have five children: Frank M., a graduate of the Weston High School and the West Virginia University, who served as a first lieutenant with the Fifteenth Engineers in France and is now a foreman for the Hope Natural Gas Company at Miletus, West Virginia; Pauline, a graduate of high school and the State University, wife of R. H. Pritchard; John M., who completed his education in the high school and university at Morgantown; Virginia and Ruth, the former a graduate of and the latter a student in the Weston High School. The family are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Mr. Brewster is affiliated with Weston Lodge No. 10, A. F. and A. M., Bigelow Chapter No. 4, B. A. M., St. John Commandery No. 8, K. T., and Nemesis Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Parkersburg. In politics he votes independently.

PORTER OWEN DUNCAN is one of the energetic young business men of Huntington. The Duncan Box & Lumber Company, of which he is one of the proprietors, is a large and important industry, and while he has had other commercial experience Mr. Duncan now gives practically all his time and energy to this business.

He was born at Green Sulphur Springs in Summers County, West Virginia, September 22, 1887, but for the greater part of his life has lived at Huntington. His family is one that has been in West Virginia since pioneer times. His father, Michael L. Duncan, was born in Summers County, February 10, 1852, was reared to and up to 1895 followed farming in Summers County, and in January, 1895, removed to Huntington, where he became associated with his brother-in-law, John W. Graham, in establishing the Beader Box Manufacturing Company. In 1898 he bought his partner's interest, and in 1917 the business was changed to the Duncan Box and Lumber Company, and since that year the firm has also done a retail business in lumber. The sole proprietors are M. L. Duncan and his son Porter Owen. The business has had a steady growth and its success is largely due to improving the opportunity for a special line of manufacture. While the factory has facilities for the making of all kinds of wooden boxes, the chief output is the bottle boxes, and in that respect this is the largest industry in the state. The output is shipped all over West Virginia and into sections of Virginia, Kentucky and Ohio. M. L. Duncan is also a member of the firm Duncan & Griffith, paving contractors, a firm that has handled a large amount of paving in Huntington. In politics he is a republican. He was twice married, and both times in Summers County. His second wife, Sydney A. Graham, was born February 8, 1863, near Pence Springs in that county. Of their children Porter O. is the oldest. Frederick enlisted in May, 1918, went to France, and died of influenza two weeks after reaching there, when twenty-eight years of age. Homer A., the other soldier son, lives with his parents and is superintendent of Hanley's Garage. He served in France as an automobile mechanic from September, 1918, to April, 1919. The fourth child, Sara Irene, died in infancy. Dolores is a teacher in the public school of Huntington, and Luella Audren is stenographer for the Duncan Box and Lumber Company. The first wife of Michael L. Duncan was Miss McNeer, who was born at Green Sulphur Springs in 1854 and died there in 1883. The children by her were Bertie, wife of George Surbaugh, a farmer of Green Sulphur Springs; Hattie, wife of Charles Gwinn, a farmer near Barboursville, West Virginia; James E., a plumber, proprietor of the West Virginia Sanitary Plumbing Company of Huntington, and also in the real estate business; and William E., who is engaged in the plumbing business as a member of the firm Duncan & Graham at Logan, West Virginia.

Porter Owen Duncan was educated in the public schools of Huntington, attended Marshall College two years, and left there to enter the service of the Chesapeake & Ohio Railway Company as a telegraph operator. He was with that company three years and then with the Baltimore & Ohio until 1915. On leaving the railroad he organized the West Virginia Feed & Produce Company, was in that business two years and in 1917 became a partner in the Duncan Box & Lumber Company. The offices and mill of this concern are located at the corner of Van Buren Avenue and Fourteenth Street, West.

Mr. Duncan is a republican, is affiliated with Huntington Lodge No. 313, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks; Huntington Camp No. 8373, Modern Woodmen of America, and is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, the Chamber of Commerce, the West End Commercial Club of Huntington.

At Webster Springs, West Virginia, in June, 1913, Mr. Duncan married Miss Eva Lowe, daughter of Alonzo and Mary (Seebert) Lowe. Her mother lives at 1078 Adams Avenue in Huntington, and her father, who died in Monroe County, Ohio, was a farmer, merchant and coal dealer. Mr. and Mrs. Duncan are the parents of four children: Owen Lowe, born June 1, 1914; Mary Sydney, born November 25, 1915; Helen Louise, born February 17, 1919; and Frederick Alonzo, born March 27, 1921.

The maternal grandfather of Porter O. Duncan was David

T. Duncan

Graham, who was born in Monroe County, West Virginia, in 1821, spent his active life as a farmer in Summers County, and died at Huntington in 1914. He was a whig in politics, later a republican, and for a number of years served as county surveyor of Summers County. He was of Scotch ancestry. His wife was a Miss Alderson, a native and lifelong resident of Summers County.

JAMES FITZGERALD is superintendent of the West Virginia Central Gas Company at Weston. He was born and reared on a farm in Western Pennsylvania, but early forsook the farm as a vocation, attracted by the dominating industry, oil production, and has been a practical man in every phase of this industry for many years.

Mr. Fitzgerald was born at Bradford, Pennsylvania, June 1, 1874, son of Patrick and Mary (King) Fitzgerald, natives of Ireland. They were brought to the United States by their parents at the respective ages of ten and thirteen, grew up in Pennsylvania, acquired public school education and after their marriage located on a farm four miles from Bradford. Patrick Fitzgerald owned and occupied his farm of fifty-eight acres for fifty years, and then retired to Bradford, where he died in 1912. Mary King was his second wife, and she died in 1913. They were devout Catholics, and he followed the fortunes of the democratic party. By his first wife he had three sons, and of the ten children of his second marriage seven are living: John, an oil producer of Bradford; Anna, wife of H. L. Stoner; Mary, wife of Frank Pescunmyer; Ella, wife of M. D. Carmody; James; and Ed and Martin, oil producers.

James Fitzgerald acquired a public school education, and at the age of eighteen attended a night school for six months. He then left the farm to go to the work in the oil fields, learned and performed nearly every duty required of an oil man, worked as a pumper, and was a tool dresser and driller. On October 13, 1909, he connected himself with the West Virginia oil and gas fields, and began with the West Virginia Central Gas Company as field foreman. He has been superintendent of that corporation at Weston since April, 1918. Mr. Fitzgerald has other business interests, particularly in the line of his chief experience, and is a stockholder in the Benson Oil Company, the Riddle Oil Company, the Royal Oil Company, the Rex Oil Company, and the Cayton Oil & Gas Company.

He married Mabel Curry, of Lost Creek, West Virginia. Their four children are named James, Jr., Harry E., Martha, and John R. The family are members of the Catholic Church. Mr. Fitzgerald is a Knight of Columbus and an expert in politics is a republican.

JOSEPH C. HOOD is a member of the firm of Hood-Dent Company, garage proprietors and automobile dealers at Weston. Mr. Hood is a progressive young business man, and for a number of years before taking up the automobile business his time and energies were devoted to the management of an attractive farm in Lewis County.

He was born at Lumberport, Harrison County, West Virginia, May 17, 1887, son of William C. and Mary V. (Gusman) Hood. His parents were also natives of Harrison County, his father born near Shinnston in 1850 and his mother near Janelaw April 4, 1859. Both were liberally educated, Mary Gusman being a graduate of the Broadus Institute of Clarksburg, while William Hood supplemented his public school training in the State University of West Virginia. After their marriage they located at Lumberport, and William Hood was for many years, until his death, a member of the general mercantile firm of Horner & Hood. He was a democrat, and he and his wife were faithful Baptists. They had two children. The daughter, Hannah P., a graduate of the Buckhannon Seminary and the wife of John D. Smith of Harrison County.

Joseph C. Hood grew up on a farm, attended public schools and Richmond College, and after his college career took the active management of his grandfather's farm, comprising over eight hundred acres. He did farming and stock raising on a large scale, and later for a time was in the oil business. After his marriage he located at Weston, and now gives his time to the growing business of the Hood-Dent Company.

Mr. Hood married Lucy M. White, sister of George E. White. She is a graduate of Broadus College of Clarksburg and of Dennison University at Granville, Ohio, and also did post-graduate work at Lutherville, Maryland. Mr. and Mrs. Hood have one child, William Clark, born December 18, 1917. The family are members of the Baptist Church. Mr. Hood is affiliated with Jackson Lodge No. 35, A. F. and A. M., at Good Hope, with the Royal Arch Chapter and Knight Templar Commandery at Weston, the Scottish Rite Consistory at Wheeling and Nemesis Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Parkersburg. He votes as a democrat.

JAMES W. WILSON has been a prominent oil well contractor and operator in several fields of West Virginia during the past quarter of a century. He began his operations in the Sistersville District, but for a number of years past has made his home and headquarters at Weston, where his qualities as a business man and citizen are thoroughly appreciated and have gained him high esteem.

Mr. Wilson was born in what is now West Punxsutawney, Pennsylvania, January 25, 1865, son of Capt. John Garner and Amanda F. (Winslow) Wilson. In the maternal line he represents the distinguished Colonial family of Winslow, the recorded lineage of which in England runs back to William Winslow, who lived in the fourteenth century. A later generation was represented by Kenelm Winslow, a brother of the famous Edward Winslow, one of the founders of the Pilgrim Colony in Massachusetts and governor of that colony. This Kenelm Winslow had a son, Lieutenant Job, whose son was James, and James had a son James. The last named James had a son named Carpenter, born May 22, 1766, and died November 19, 1827, at Punxsutawney, Pennsylvania. His children were Charles, George, Carpenter, Jr., David, Reuben, James, Ebenezer, Caleb and Joseph. Of these James Winslow was the maternal grandfather of James W. Wilson. His children were named Miller, Mary, Amanda, Lydia, Adelia, Charles, Oscar and Martha. Amanda Winslow was born October 12, 1825, at Punxsutawney, Pennsylvania, was reared there and became the wife of Capt. John Garner Wilson.

Capt. John Garner Wilson was born near Bennington, Vermont, and as a young man removed to Pennsylvania. October 23, 1861, he enlisted as a Union soldier, and was employed in recruiting duty, and raised several companies for Pennsylvania regiments. He also took part in the battle of Pollocks Mills before Fredericksburg April 23, 1863. He was at Chancellorsville May 2, 1863, where his company occupied a position exposed to the heavy fire of Confederate sharpshooters. He was mustered out and discharged August 14, 1863, but re-enlisted and for one year was captain of Company B of the Seventy-fourth Pennsylvania Infantry. He received his last honorable discharge at Harrisburg, Pennsylvania, March 14, 1865, returning to civilian pursuits with an enviable record as a brave and resourceful soldier and officer.

After his marriage Captain Wilson located at Brookville, Pennsylvania. He was a republican in politics. Captain Wilson and wife had the following children: Mary, Frank, Lydia, Charles, Alonzo and James W.

James W. Wilson remained at home until he was eighteen. After he left home he spent three years in Nebraska working in stores and on ranches. He then returned to Pennsylvania, and soon afterward connected himself with the oil industry. In 1895 he went into the Sistersville field of West Virginia, and later Parkersburg. In the fall of 1900 he moved his home to Weston and became a contractor for oil wells. He is still in the contract business and also is interested in the production of oil and gas. Mr. Wilson owns a half interest in over six hundred acres of farm land in Lewis County, and is a prominent stockman and a member of the Lewis County Farm Bureau. He is interested in gas, electric light and ice plants and is a stockholder in the National Exchange Bank of Weston.

In May, 1901, at Parkersburg, he married May A. Hughes. They have three sons: James W., Jr., born November 8, 1903, and a graduate of the Weston High School; Hughes W., born in 1907; and George S., born in 1913. Fraternally Mr. Wilson is affiliated with Phoenix Lodge No. 73, A. F. and A. M., at Sistersville, with Jerusalem Chapter No. 3, R. A. M., at Parkersburg, Cavalry Commandery No. 3, K. T., at Parkersburg, Lodge of Perfection of the Scottish Rite at Parkersburg and West Virginia Consistory No. 1 at Wheeling. In politics he is a staunch republican.

MELVIN B. SPRIGG at the age of forty has achieved definite success in several lines and is one of the prominent lumber dealers in the State of West Virginia. He is president and manager of the Sprigg Lumber Company at Weston and is officially identified with several other kindred business enterprises in that section of the state.

Mr. Sprigg was born in Braxton County, West Virginia, November 14, 1881, a son of James D. and Sarah J. (McCoy) Sprigg. His grandfather, Edward G. Sprigg, was a pioneer of Braxton County, where he erected a saw mill, flouring mill, carding mill, and provided a tremendous stimulus to manufacturing and industrial affairs in that section of the state. He conducted these various factories until the Civil war, when his plants were destroyed. Thereafter he lived the quiet routine of a farmer.

James D. Sprigg, father of Melvin B., was born in Jacksonton, Lewis County, January 3, 1840, and was a child when the family moved to Braxton County. He grew up in the atmosphere of his father's mills, but after his marriage he turned to farming and later became a maker of harness and saddles and shoes, and conducted this business at Salt Lick Bridge. His wife was born in Braxton County in June, 1846. They were devout members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. James D. Sprigg was a democrat, and served two terms as county assessor of Braxton County. In the family were four children: Flora, wife of C. B. Heater; Minnie J., wife of A. C. Squires; M. L., a merchant and dealer in timber lands at Holly, West Virginia; and Melvin B.

Melvin B. Sprigg spent his early life on the farm and acquired a common school education. At the age of eighteen he went to work with J. H. Brewster in the Sun Lumber Company. He utilized this working experience as an opportunity to gain a thorough knowledge of the lumber business in every detail, and in 1913 he organized the Sprigg Lumber Company, Incorporated, with himself as president and manager; M. A. Bailey, vice president; G. W. Riddell, secretary; Walter A. Edwards, treasurer; and J. J. Ervin, director. This company bought a planing mill, and its business has grown rapidly, involving an increase on the original capital of $15,000 to its present status of $150,000. In 1916 Mr. Sprigg established the Glen-Elk Lumber Company at Clarksburg, succeeding the former business of the Johnson & Garrett Company. Mr. Bailey has charge of the Clarksburg business. These two companies manufacture and handle a varied line of building materials. In 1920 Mr. Sprigg organized the Westwood Manufacturing Company at Weston, of which he is vice president. This company makes a specialty of the manufacture of hardwood flooring.

August 21, 1907, he married Miss Iva Lowe. Mrs. Sprigg is a graduate in music from Cornell University. Mr. Sprigg is a democrat. He is prominently active in Masonry, is worshipful master of Weston Lodge No. 10, A. F. and A. M., a past high priest of the Royal Arch Chapter, a member of the Knights Templar, Commandery, Scottish Rite Consistory No. 1 at Wheeling, and Nemesis Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Parkersburg.

FRANK AGNEW. For over ten years Frank Agnew has been enrolled among the active business men of Huntington. His hat store is one of the few successful specialty shops in the retail district, and in recent years he has established a factory producing a widely known line of men's headgear, sold in his own store and through the jobbing trade.

Mr. Agnew was born at Bethel, Connecticut, July 10, 1870. His father, also named Frank Agnew, was born at Ogdensburg, New York, May 3, 1836, was reared there and as a young man went to Connecticut, was married in Canaan of that state, where he followed the trade of carpenter for a number of years, and after his removal to Bethel was a successful building contractor. He was a local leader in the democratic party, held a number of offices, and manifested hardly less interest in the Congregational Church, of which he was a devout member. He was affiliated with the Masonic Order. Frank Agnew, Sr., who died at Bethel, Connecticut, December 1, 1918, married Mary Allen, who was born in May, 1841, in Northern Ireland and came to America when a girl. She died at Bethel in October, 1899, mother of one daughter and two sons. The daughter, Jennie, born in 1863, was a teacher in the Institution for the Blind at New York City, where she died in 1903. The two sons are Frank and George W., the latter an employe in the hat factory at Huntington.

Frank Agnew attended public schools in Bethel until he was eighteen, and his first business experience outside of school was in a grocery store at Bethel, where he remained one year. For two years he was in the feed and coal business conducted by his uncle, Chauncey Donalds, and then for two years was road salesman for hay and grain over the State of Connecticut. In this line of business he then extended his interests to dealing in hay on a commission basis, and he shipped hay from the West to Eastern points until 1911. In the meantime, from 1900 to 1911, his home was at Orange, New Jersey.

Mr. Agnew came to Huntington in January, 1911, and at once engaged in the retail hat business. His present store is the outgrowth of the business he established more than ten years ago, and is located at 825-827 Fourth Avenue. Soon after engaging in the retail hat business he installed a facility for reblocking hats, and that led to the establishment of his factory for the making of men's hats. This is the largest hat manufacturing business between Philadelphia and Louisville. The factory is at 831 Court Street.

Mr. Agnew is a director in the Planters Tobacco Warehouse of Huntington. He is a republican, a trustee in the Congregational Church, is a member of Huntington Lodge No. 313, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, and Huntington Chamber of Commerce. He owns some real estate in Huntington, including his substantial residence in the restricted district at 549 Adams Avenue.

In October, 1915, Mr. Agnew married at Huntington Miss Viola M. Durant, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James Durant, now deceased. Her father had been a hatter in Bethel, Connecticut. Mr. Agnew had the misfortune to lose his wife in June, 1916.

CHARLES WELLS STRICKLAND. Shortly after finishing his education Mr. Strickland went to work with the engineering department of a coal mining corporation, and successive years of training and experience with different organizations have brought him increasing responsibilities of a technical and executive nature. For several years past he has been located at Huntington as general manager of the mining interests of Cunningham, Miller and Enslow.

Mr. Strickland, who was born at Morristown, New Jersey, October 29, 1880, was named for his maternal grandfather, Charles F. Wells who was born in New Jersey in 1836 lived at Morristown and later moved to Philadelphia where for many years he conducted an extensive business as a building contractor, and where he died in 1914.

Allen S. Strickland, father of the Huntington business man, was born at Morristown, New Jersey, in 1854, and while living at Morristown developed an expansive business as a grain merchant, with offices in Philadelphia, and finally removed to that city in 1886, living there until his death in 1902. He was a republican and a member of the Masonic fraternity, being affiliated with St. Johns Commandery, Knights Templars, of Philadelphia, and Lulu Temple of the Mystic Shrine in Philadelphia.

Allen S. Strickland married Laura Virginia Wells, who was born at Morristown, New Jersey, December 13, 1866. She was the mother of four children: Charles W.; Mabel, wife of George Hane, an artisan living in Philadelphia; James, who died at the age of nine years; and John, cabinet maker in Philadelphia.

Charles Wells Strickland attended the public schools

Frank Agnew

Philadelphia, and in 1899 graduated from the Central Manual Training School, where he was given some of the technical training which proved valuable to him in his early experience in the mining industry. For about a year after leaving school he was employed in the maintenance department of the Pennsylvania Railroad. On February 1, 1900, he became a rodmán on the engineer corps of the Mitchell Coal & Coke Company at Gallitzin, Pennsylvania. He remained there until December, 1902, in the meantime being promoted to assistant chief engineer. For a number of years Mr. Strickland's field of work was in Kentucky. At Sturgis he was a mining engineer for the Crittenden Coal & Coke Company until 1905, in the latter year became assistant engineer of the West Kentucky Coal Company at Sturgis, and in 1911 was promoted to chief engineer. He left these duties and came to Huntington on February 1, 1918, since which date he has been general manager of the mining interests of the widely known firm of coal operators and coal land owners, Cunningham, Miller & Enslow. The bulk of the interests of this firm are situated in the mining fields of Kanawha and Logan counties. Mr. Strickland's offices are in the First National Bank Building of Huntington. He is also a director in the Bengal Coal Company.

Mr. Strickland is a republican, a Presbyterian and a member of the Guyandotte Club of Huntington. His fraternal affiliations are in Sturgis, Kentucky, where he is affiliated with Kelsey Lodge No. 653, A. F. and A. M., is a past high priest of Sturgis Chapter, R. A. M., and past chancellor of Silver Lodge No. 68 of the Knights of Pythias.

On December 26, 1905, at Gallitzin, Pennsylvania, he married Miss Mary K. Gunning, daughter of James and Mary Gunning, her mother a resident of Gallitzin. Her father, now deceased, was a hotel proprietor there. Mrs. Strickland finished her education in the Mount Aloysius Academy of Crescent, Pennsylvania. The two children of their marriage are: Mary, born June 22, 1913; and Virginia, born September 15, 1919.

PAUL HARDY acquired his early experience in the steel, iron and mining industry in his native state of Ohio, and for a number of years past has been the leading business man of Huntington, where he is president of the Steel Products Company.

He was born at Columbus, Ohio, January 7, 1879. His grandfather, George Hardy, was a native of Scotland, came as a young man to America and settled at Lebanon, Ohio, where he was a merchant and where he married. He died at Lebanon in 1840. His son, Charles James Hardy, was born at Lebanon in 1828, and was twelve years of age when he lost both his parents by death. He arrived in Columbus, Ohio, shortly afterward in a stage coach, before the days of railroads, was reared and educated there, and became a distinguished factor in the life and affairs of the capital city of Ohio. Banking was his chief business, and when he finally retired from service he had the distinction of being the oldest bank cashier in point of distinguished years of service in the country. He was for many years cashier of the Deshler National Bank of Columbus. He was a republican in politics and one of the leading members of the Trinity Episcopal Church. Charles James Hardy, who died at Columbus, Ohio, in 1914, married Emily M. Carpenter, who was born at Lindonville, Vermont, in 1854, and died at Columbus in 1918. They were the parents of four children: Chester, associated with the Peoples Savings Association of Columbus; Jean M., wife of A. W. Forrest, a real estate man at Columbus; Caroline C., of Cleveland, Ohio; and Paul.

Paul Hardy graduated from high school in Columbus in 1895. He continued his education for two years in Ohio State University, and then followed a period of two years in which he was an employee of the Otis Steel Company at Cleveland. In 1898 he re-entered the Ohio State University, remaining until he graduated in 1902, with the Mining Engineer's degree. He is a member of the Sigma Chi college fraternity. After graduating he spent two years as chief engineer for the Columbus and Hocking Coal & Iron Company and one year as field man for the Jeffrey Manufacturing Company of Columbus. Mr. Hardy's first business interests in West Virginia were as chief engineer for the U. S. Coal and Oil Company, now the Island Creek Company, at Holden. He was promoted to general superintendent, then to general manager and finally consulting engineer, and continued with the corporation until 1914. In that year he organized the Coal River Coal & Coke Company at Dobra, West Virginia, and was president of that business until it was sold in 1916. In the meantime he organized the Monte Coal Company at Ottawa, West Virginia, became president of the company and sold out in 1921.

Mr. Hardy has been a resident of Huntington since 1914. In 1915, in conjunction with others, he organized the Steel Products Company of Huntington, and is president of that important industry. He is also a director and general manager of the Hardy Burlingham Mining Company, owning some large coal mines in Eastern Kentucky; and is a director of the Huntington National Bank.

His business offices are in the Loop Building. Mr. Hardy is an independent voter, is a member of the Episcopal Church, and is owner of considerable real estate in Huntington, including a very attractive home on Washington Boulevard. During the World war he had some responsible duties in supervising the manufacture of high explosive shells in the plant of the Steel Products Company. Two hundred men were employed in this department of the business at the time.

In 1907, at Columbus, Mr. Hardy married Miss Anne Brown Huff, daughter of Winfield S. and Anne Huff. Her father is a retired insurance man of Columbus. Mr. and Mrs. Hardy have one son, Paul, Jr., born August 21, 1914.

ROBERT H. PRITCHARD, an ex-service man who was a lieutenant in his division in France, is one of Lewis County's most popular young citizens, and is one of the proprietors and the managing editor of the Weston Democrat.

Lieutenant Pritchard was born at Weston April 14, 1892, son of William L. and Catherine (DeVaney) Pritchard, who were also natives of Weston. The mother died in 1917. The father was born March 10, 1863, and is now retired. The family are Methodists, and the father is a republican in politics and a member of the Modern Woodmen of America. Of eleven children seven are still living.

Robert H. Pritchard grew up in his native city, attended the public schools there, and after graduating from high school entered West Virginia University, where he took the classical course and had three years of preparation for the A. B. degree. He left his studies in university to enter the Second Officers Training Camp at Fort Benjamin Harrison, Indiana, was commissioned a second lieutenant and assigned to the Eighty-fourth Division, Camp Taylor, Louisville, Kentucky. From June to August, 1918, this division was in training at Camp Sherman, Chillicothe, Ohio, and then went overseas. After arriving in France Mr. Pritchard was made first lieutenant, was assigned to the Fortieth Division and had duty near Amiens during the last weeks of active hostilities. He was returned to the United States in April, 1919. For two years after his return he was instructor in French and English at the Weston High School.

On June 1, 1921, Mr. Pritchard and Andrew Edmiston, Jr., bought the Weston Democrat. The paper is now owned by an incorporated company, of which Andrew Edmiston, Jr., is president and manager, Mrs. Pauline B. Pritchard, wife of Lieutenant Pritchard, is vice president, Mrs. Merle W. Edmiston is secretary, with Robert H. Pritchard as managing editor.

In June, 1920, Mr. Pritchard married Pauline Brewster, who was born in Ohio but was reared in Weston and is a graduate of the local high school and received her A. B. degree from West Virginia University. She is a member of the Scholarship Honorary Fraternity Phi Beta Kappa. They have one daughter, Mary C., born April 1, 1921.

Lieutenant and Mrs. Pritchard are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church. He is affiliated with the local lodges of Masons and Knights of Pythias, is a democrat in politics, and served as the second commander of Weston Post No. 4 of the American Legion. He is a stockholder in the Gem Oil & Gas Company of Burnsville, West Virginia.

FRANK R. YOKE is superintendent of public schools at Weston, in his native county of Lewis, where various members of the Yoke family have been connected with school work for many years.

Mr. Yoke was born on a farm in Lewis County July 3, 1880, son of S. G. and Helen A. (Wolverton) Yoke. His father was born in Lewis County January 19, 1847, and his mother in Calhoun County, West Virginia, January 9, 1859. Both parents availed themselves of the best possible educational opportunities of their day, and both were teachers for some years. After their marriage they located on a farm, and S. G. Yoke continued teaching in addition to running the farm. He became a well known citizen of Lewis County, served eight years as county assessor, was active in the democratic party and in the Methodist Protestant Church, and was affiliated with the Masons and Odd Fellows. He was the father of three children, all of whom are college graduates. The oldest is Frank R. Grace finished her education and specialized in education at West Virginia University at Morgantown, and is now the wife of W. H. S. White, president of the State Normal School at Shepherdstown, West Virginia. The youngest child, French, is a graduate of the State University with the A. B. degree, and is now superintendent of schools at Piedmont, West Virginia.

Frank R. Yoke grew up on a farm and attended the common schools until he was fifteen. In 1899 he graduated from the Fairmont State Normal School, and for one year taught in a rural district. He then entered West Virginia University at Morgantown, graduating A. B. in 1903, and in 1904 received the LL. B. degree from the Law School. He took his Master's degree in 1907. Mr. Yoke after graduating opened an office and practiced law at Morgantown for a year, but left that profession to resume school work. He was elected and served two years as superintendent of the Richwood public schools. Then for a year he was assistant prosecuting attorney at Morgantown, and from this state went to Alabama and for one year was principal of the Coosa County High School. At Kingwood, West Virginia, he was superintendent of schools two years, and in 1913 was elected superintendent of public schools at Weston. He has been in charge of the city school administration for eight years, has throughout improved and raised the standards of efficiency, and largely for his work in Weston has a state wide reputation in educational circles.

Mr. Yoke married Edna Jenkins, of Kingwood, Preston County. She is a graduate of the Kingwood High School. They have one daughter, Ann, born August 26, 1918. Mr. and Mrs. Yoke are members of the Episcopal Church. He is a past chancellor of the Knights of Pythias Lodge and has sat in the Grand Lodge and has been deputy grand chancellor of his district. He is affiliated with the Modern Woodmen of America and the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, and is a democrat in politics.

HOWARD LLEWELLYN SWISHER, general manager of the Morgantown Building Association, has been for a quarter of a century actively identified with the growth and development of the fine little city that is the judicial center of Monongalia County. He is one of the leading representatives of real estate enterprise at Morgantown, and is essentially loyal and progressive as a citizen.

Mr. Swisher was born in Hampshire County, West Virginia, September 21, 1870, and is a son of David W. and Mary Katherine (Bonnifield) Swisher. David W. Swisher was born in Augusta County, Virginia, April 29, 1822, of Swiss-German ancestry, and in 1838 he came from his native county to what is now Preston County, West Virginia, but a few years later he purchased land and made permanent settlement in Hampshire County, where he developed a productive farm and where he passed the remainder of his life. In 1846 he married Mary Katherine Bonnifield, daughter of Dr. Arnold Bonnifield, of St. George, Tucker County, and she survived him by several years.

In 1892 Howard L. Swisher graduated from the West Virginia State Normal School at Fairmont, and thereafter was for two years a teacher in the public schools of California. Upon his return to his native state he entered the University of West Virginia, and in the same was graduated in 1897 with the degree of Bachelor of Arts. After leaving the university Mr. Swisher opened a book and stationery store at Morgantown, and in 1898 he here organized the Acme Publishing Company, of which he continued the president for a number of years. In 1904 he organized the Main Street Building Company, which erected the fine business block now known as the Strand Building. He organized and incorporated the Howard L. Swisher Company in November, 1914, and organized the Morgantown Building Association in November, 1918, with an authorized capital of $250,000, and of this company he has since been the general manager. Each of the corporations thus formed by Mr. Swisher has done effective service in furthering the material development and upbuilding of Morgantown. The Morgantown Building Association has been especially influential in aiding citizens of Morgantown to become the owners of excellent homes, as it has done a large amount of building and offered effective cooperation to home-buyers. Mr. Swisher was one of the organizers and is secretary of the Royalty Oil Company, which owns mining rights and also upward of sixteen thousand acres of prospective oil lands in the South and Southwestern states.

Mr. Swisher is affiliated with Morgantown Union Lodge No. 4, Free and Accepted Masons; Morgantown Lodge No. 411, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, and is a member of the local Chamber of Commerce, the Kiwanis Club, the Country Club and the Old Colony Club, in which latter he is a member of the National Advisory Council. He is affiliated with the Sigma Chi college fraternity.

In 1898 Mr. Swisher wedded Miss Mary Dering, daughter of Edward A. and Cordelia (Walker) Dering, of Morgantown, both the Dering and Walker families having been founded in Virginia in the early Colonial period of our national history.

JAMES A. TIERNEY. The name Tierney has long been an influential one in Weston. The Tierney family was established here by Patrick Tierney, an Irishman, a man of great energy, public spirit and business acumen, who enjoyed accepted leadership among people of Irish nativity and lineage and was one of the most prominent members of the local Catholic Church.

His son, James A. Tierney, has had a successful career as a pharmacist, but is now practically retired from active business. He was born at Weston April 2, 1867, son of Patrick and Mary (Malloy) Tierney. Both parents were born in County Galway, Ireland, and the mother was brought by her family to Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, at the age of eleven years. Patrick Tierney was educated in Ireland, and for a number of years was an agent for the National Steamship Line. After locating in Weston he conducted a hotel, a popular place of entertainment known as the Tierney House. He was also a farmer, a contractor and foreman for the Baltimore & Ohio Railway, and built two sections of that road. He accumulated much property but was always liberal and public spirited in behalf of church and community affairs. He was a democrat in politics. Of his nine children six are still living.

James A. Tierney attended public school at Weston and at the age of seventeen began working in a drug store. After three years he went to Baltimore, and while clerking in a drug store attended the Maryland College of Pharmacy paying all his expenses while in school. He graduated with the degree Ph. G. in 1888, and was then offered and accepted a place as a pharmacist in the Bayview Hospital of Baltimore. He remained there for ten years, and on his return to Weston engaged in the retail drug business. One of his brothers was in partnership with him, and while they started with one store they soon established another and also had a similar business at Glenville. The Glenville business Mr. James Tierney still owns, though he sold his Weston interests in 1921.

In 1904 Mr. Tierney married Miss Jessie C. Norris, of Glenville. They have two children, James A., Jr., a high school student, and Jessie Norris, attending the grammar school. The mother of these children died in 1912. I.

Howard L. Swisher

1914 Mr. Tierney married Martha E. Williams, of Plymouth, Michigan, who is a graduate of a Chicago University. They have one son, William Hopkin, born April 2, 1917. Mr. Tierney is a member of the Catholic Church and has always been an interested party man as a democrat. At one time he held the office of mayor of Glenville. He was the delegate representing the Third Congressional District of West Virginia at the National Convention of the party at San Francisco in 1920.

COMMODORE PERRY LUNSFORD. In the citizenship of Lewis County, Commodore Perry Lunsford has been a well known and esteemed figure for many years, grew up here, was for a time a traveling salesman, subsequently in business for himself at Weston, and was elected assessor of Lewis County after eight years of experience as deputy assessor.

Mr. Lunsford was born in Lewis County, August 20, 1876, a son of Andrew and Almira (Hudson) Lunsford. His father was born in old Virginia May 2, 1847, while his mother was born in Lewis County in September, 1838. Both grew up on farms in Lewis County, had a common school education, and after their marriage they settled on a farm. Andrew Lunsford started life without capital, but his industry and good management as a farmer and cattleman brought him ultimate prosperity in the ownership of a good farm of 325 acres. He was a democrat, a Knight of Pythias and he and his wife were members of the Methodist Episcopal Church. His four children were: Dora B., deceased wife of H. B. Wagoner; W. O., a Lewis County farmer; A. J., a railway engineer with the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad.

Commodore Perry Lunsford, the youngest of the children, grew up on his father's farm and acquired a common school education. He had the routine duties of the homestead until he was twenty-one, and then sought employment in different lines and for nine years was a traveling salesman with the Standard Oil Company. On leaving the road he located at Weston and conducted a feed store and dairy business until he was appointed deputy county assessor in 1912. Mr. Lunsford was deputy for eight years, and in November, 1920, was elected county assessor, beginning his first official term in January, 1921.

Mr. Lunsford is a democrat, is affiliated with Weston Lodge No. 43, Knights of Pythias, and he and his family are members of the Methodist Protestant Church. On September 7, 1898, he married Hadee L. Brown, who was born in Lewis County in August, 1881. They have three children: Bertie E., wife of Clay Smith; Harry E. and Margaret A.

W. KIRK SPAUR is county road engineer for Lewis County, an office he has filled to the satisfaction of all for eight years. He was born and reared in Lewis County, and besides his technical qualifications has an expert general knowledge of road and highway conditions, and has done much to advance the good roads movement in his section of the state.

He was born on a farm in Lewis County December 15, 1873, son of Greenberry C. and Margaret V. (Alkire) Spaur. The first American ancestor of the Spaur family was Anthony Spaur, a native of Germany, who came to the United States when a young man, first locating in the Valley of Virginia, on the south branch of the Potomac River, and finally moved over the mountains to Lewis County, West Virginia, settling on Big Skin Creek. He was a local minister of the Methodist Protestant Church as well as a farmer. His family consisted of three sons: Anthony R., Hezekiah and Alpha. The son Anthony R. Spaur married Sarah Bonnett. Their family consisted of seven sons and three daughters: Gideon D., Jacob, John, Gilbert, Able, Greenberry C., Lafayette, Virginia, Johama and Nancy.

Of these Greenberry C. Spaur was born in Lewis County December 9, 1845, and died August 16, 1908. He had a farm rearing and training, possessed a meager education, but had sound sense and judgment and after his marriage began life on a tract of twenty-five acres given him by his father. His energy enabled him to prosper, and he acquired other land until he had a farm of 125 acres, which he sold, and then bought the L. L. Wilson farm of 245 acres, where he lived until his death. He was a democrat, and he and his wife were members of the Methodist Protestant Church. Greenberry Spaur married Margaret V. Alkire, who was born January 23, 1853, and died in 1902. Her parents were Oliver and Jane (Carter) Alkire, the former a native of Lewis County and the latter of Roane County, West Virginia. After their marriage they settled on a farm on Big Skin Creek, where Oliver Alkire did his work as an agriculturist and millwright. In the Alkire family were six children: Mandane, Tabitha J., Margaret V., Jeannette, John and Newton. Greenberry Spaur and wife had ten sons and three daughters, all of whom grew to maturity and eleven of whom are living. A brief record of this large family is as follows: Florence, born June 15, 1871; W. Kirk; Etta, born in 1874, now deceased; Earl A., born December 15, 1876; Arch A., born in 1877; Lloyd J., born March 7, 1882, now deceased; Ernest N., born in 1883; Ray O., born in February, 1884; John B., born in 1885; Myrtle M., born in 1887; George O., born in 1889; Dent R., born in 1891; and Terry, born in December, 1896.

W. Kirk Spaur grew up on his father's farm, attended the public free schools, and was a factor in the management of the homestead until his father's death. Ambition prompted him to prepare himself for a larger career than that offered on the home farm, and he did much to advance his education by private reading and for a period of about sixteen years while residing on the farm he taught in the public free schools in Lewis County. He has made a deep study of engineering, especially as connected with road building. His practical knowledge and qualifications led to his appointment as county road engineer in March, 1913. He was appointed for one year, but by reappointment has been kept in office now for eight years.

On March 24, 1912, Mr. Spaur married May Harold. Their three children are William L., born May 11, 1913; Willis H., born August 27, 1915; and Greenberry H., born December 6, 1919. Mr. Spaur is a democrat in politics and is affiliated with Vandalia Lodge No. 322, Independent Order of Odd Fellows.

OLIVER P. WHITE, sheriff of Lewis County, is a native of that section of West Virginia and has enjoyed a growing appreciation among his fellow citizens for his integrity of character and the energy with which he was handled every undertaking.

Mr. White was born on Alum Fork in Lewis County in March 13, 1883, son of Americus and Caroline (Hartley) White. His father was born on Freemans Creek in Lewis County January 31, 1852, was reared on a farm, had a common school education and as a young man engaged in the sawmill business. In 1894 he bought a farm and was employed in its operation until 1900, when he sold out and removed to Troy in Gilmer County, West Virginia, where he continued farming until his death in 1917. He was twice married, and had eleven children by his first wife and six by the second, and fifteen of the children are still living. The mother of Sheriff White was born at Shinnston in Harrison County, West Virginia, in 1858, and was reared and educated in that county. She was a member of the Methodist Church, while Americus White belonged to the Non-sectarian Church and was a democrat in politics.

Oliver P. White was reared on a farm, and after the common schools he acquired an advanced education by correspondence courses and by one term of attendance at the Fairmont State Normal. At the age of seventeen he qualified as a teacher, and was a popular and successful worker in the public schools for nine years. On leaving the educational profession he went with the Hope & Resette Natural Gas Company, was employed in different departments, and only left this business upon his election as sheriff of Lewis County in November, 1920. He took up his official duties January 1, 1921. Mr. White was elected as a democrat in a county that is normally republican by thirteen hundred. He received a majority of sixty-three votes, a fact that speaks for itself in regard to his popularity as a citizen and his evident qualifications for office.

On March 19, 1905, Oliver P. White married Delphia May Douglass. Eight children have been born to their union: Carrie V., Kent D., Iweita T., Wanda L., Floretta Mae, Arthur Wayne, and twin sons named Woodrow W. and Warren G. Mr. White is a member of Weston Lodge No. 10 A. F. and A. M., Bigelow Chapter No. 4, R. A. M., St. John's Commandery No. 8, K. T., Nemesis Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Parkersburg, and he and Mrs. White are members of the Eastern Star.

ROY R. HALE, who retired from the office of sheriff of Lewis County on the 1st of January, 1921, after an effective administration of four years, is now a contractor in road construction and is one of the well known and highly esteemed citizens of his native county, which he represented as a soldier in the Spanish-American war. The Hale family was founded in America in the early Colonial period, and representative of the same gained distinction as patriot soldiers in the war of the Revolution, by reason of which fact the subject of this review is eligible for and is affiliated with the Society of the Sons of the American Revolution.

Mr. Hale was born at Weston, judicial center of Lewis County, on the 8th of August, 1876, and is a son of Curtis P. and Margaret (Tierney) Hale, both likewise natives of Weston, where the former was born July 12, 1852, and the latter April 8, 1857. Presley M. Hale, grandfather of Roy R., was born in Monongalia County, Virginia (now West Virginia), August 26, 1826, and was a delegate to the first convention, at Wheeling, that took action and brought about the organization of West Virginia as an independent state. He represented Lewis County as a member of the first Legislature of the new commonwealth, and was largely instrumental in framing the first free-school law of the state. He married Dinah Shore, of Fairmont, Marion County. In 1849 he became prominently identified with business enterprise at Weston, where the passing years found him associated with several different lines of business. He was one of the early directors of the National Exchange Bank of Weston, was a republican in politics from the time of the organization of the party, and he and his wife were members of the Universalist Church. Their children were Curtis P., Flora and Thomas W. Curtis P. still resides at Weston, as does Flora, who is the wife of Joseph Starrick, and Thomas W. maintains his home at Indianapolis, Indiana.

Curtis P. Hale gained his preliminary education in the Weston schools and thereafter attended the Fairmont Normal School. He was long and actively engaged in contracting enterprise, in which he was associated with his father for a number of years, and he is now living virtually retired, as one of the old and honored citizens of Weston. Of their nine children seven are living, Roy R., of this sketch being the eldest; Dr. Presley E. is engaged in the practice of medicine at Portland, Oregon; Mary is the widow of Lewis Newberger; Regina is the wife of Wilber Canaga, of Hammond, Indiana; Margaret is the wife of Foster McLynn, of Portland, Oregon; Josephine, now Mrs. French Fox, is a resident of Weston; and Matthew was graduated in a medical college in Philadelphia as a member of the class of 1922.

In the public schools of Weston Roy R. Hale continued his studies until his graduation from the high school, and at the inception of the Spanish-American war he enlisted in Company F, Second West Virginia Volunteer Infantry, in which he became first sergeant of his company and with which he continued in service until the close of the war, the regiment not having been called to the stage of active conflict. After his return to Weston Mr. Hale finally became agent and general yard master of the local station of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, and he continued in this service until 1915. He was elected county sheriff in 1916, an office of which he continued the efficient incumbent for the prescribed term of four years, his retirement therefrom having come on the 1st of January, 1921. Mr. Hale is a democrat, he and his wife are members of the Presbyterian Church. His Masonic affiliations are as here noted: Weston Lodge No. 10, Free and Accepted Masons; Bigelow Chapter No. 4, Royal Arch Masons; St. John's Commandery No. 8, Knights Templars; West Virginia Sovereign Consistory No. 1, Ancient Accepted Scottish Rite, at Wheeling; and Nemesis Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Parkersburg.

December 27, 1899, recorded the marriage of Mr. Hale and Miss Maude Vandervoort, who likewise was born and reared at Weston and who is a graduate of the local high school. They have three children: Marjorie, Robert and Margaret.

CHARLES P. SWINT, who is engaged in the practice of his profession at Weston, judicial center of Lewis County, has gained secure vantage-ground as one of the able and representative members of the bar of this section of the state, and his status is the more pleasing to note by reason of the fact that he early became dependent upon his own resources and by his own ability and efforts worked his way forward to the goal of success.

Mr. Swint was born at Catskill, New York, on the 8th of July, 1876, and is a son of Peter and Caroline (Winkler) Swint, the former of whom was born in the Grand Duchy of Luxemburg, Holland, February 22, 1850. He was an infant at the time of his father's death and was thirteen years old when he accompanied his widowed mother to the United States and made settlement in the State of New York, where he was reared to adult age and where his marriage occurred. He became a skilled workman as a painter and decorator, and as such was engaged in West Virginia prior to his marriage. He returned to New York for his bride, and upon his return to West Virginia he purchased land and engaged in farm enterprise in Randolph County, besides continuing in the work of his trade to a considerable extent. He finally removed from his farm to Weston, where he has since lived virtually retired. He is a republican in politics, and both he and his wife are zealous communicants of the Catholic Church. Of the children the eldest is Miss Minnie, who is a trained nurse by profession; Charles P., of this review, was the next in order of birth; Louis is engaged in farm enterprise in Randolph County; John, a college graduate, has taken post-graduate work also, is in charge of St. Patrick's Church and parochial school at Weston, and was recently appointed Bishop of this diocese; Peter is a mechanic and farmer in Lewis County; Mary is a Sister and teacher in the Catholic convent in the City of Wheeling, as is also her sister Agnes; Dr. Benjamin H. is a successful physician and surgeon in the City of Charleston; and Josephine is the wife of Rupert Cannon, of Logan, West Virginia.

Charles P. Swint remained on the home farm until he was fifteen years of age, when the family removed to Weston. Here he continued his studies in the public schools until his graduation from high school, and thereafter he entered the law department of the University of West Virginia, in which he was graduated as a member of the class of 1900, his reception of the degree of Bachelor of Laws having been virtually coincident with his admission to the bar. He forthwith opened an office at Weston, where he has since continued in the successful practice of his profession, with a representative clientage, and where he served one term as prosecuting attorney of the county. He is a leader in the local councils of the republican party, and has served several terms as chairman of the Republican County Committee of Lewis County. He and his wife are active communicants of St. Patrick's Catholic Church in their home city.

On the 12th of June, 1909, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Swint and Miss Agnes Cleary, who graduated from the Weston High School and who had been a popular teacher in the public schools prior to her marriage. They have two children, Mary C. and Agnes C.

FENTON BROTHERS. The origin of glass manufacture is of so ancient a date that it is lost in the dim shadows of time. That the process was known in Egypt and other Oriental countries as far back as 5000 B. C. has been proved by specimens taken from ancient tombs, and that generations later the secret of manufacturing ornamental glass was claimed by many European cities. The history of this industry in the United States begins with primitive attempts as early as 1608, but the perfection of the art, as exemplified in the great art glass manufacturing plant of Fenton Brothers at Williamstown, West Virginia, was not reached until generations later, and the discovery of the manufacture of iridescent glassware was left for very modern days, the Fenton Brothers being the originators of the process.

The importance of a concern to the community in which it is situated may be estimated when it is stated that the Fenton Brothers' works at Williamstown transact an annual business of from $300,000 to $400,000, and have but one real competitor in the United States. The history of the founding and growth of the business is interesting, illustrating, as it does, the value of technical skill in combination with exceptional business ability.

To James Fenton, a merchant at Indiana, Pennsylvania, six sons were born: Robert C., John W., James E., William H., Charles H. and Frank L. They were educated in the public schools of Indiana and afterward found employment in various useful lines. The youngest son, Frank L. Fenton, entered a glass manufacturing establishment at Indiana, and there secured a practical knowledge of glass making. He had a natural talent for art, and at the end of one year was at the head of the decorative department of the company. From there he went to Steubenville and from there to Wheeling, gradually perfecting himself in this line and reaching a high degree of artistic skill.

In 1905 John W., Charles H. and Frank L. Fenton formed a decorative glass concern, the original firm that embarked in business at Martin's Ferry, Ohio, where they prospered beyond their expectations. Up to the time of coming to Williamstown the Fentons had been buying supplies of various firms that in a small but crude way were also doing decorative work, but when the latter, resenting the growth of the Fenton business, refused to sell wares to them the latter felt compelled to seek a new location, and after wise consideration selected Williamstown. Within eighty-eight days after starting their plant here they had their first furnace going and sixty hands at work. The business prospered from the start, and in time two additional furnaces were added, and at present 200 or more hands are employed. Upon coming to Williamstown, two brothers, Robert C. and James E. Fenton, became stockholders. Marvelous progress had been made since the business was founded at Williamstown in October, 1906. Instead of general glass making the Fentons confine their activities to the manufacture of art glass, table ware, vases and innumerable articles of beauty and value, and their products are shipped all over the civilized world. The special sand from which their glass is made is procured from Berkley Springs, West Virginia, and the other ingredients from various points where close investigation has found them most suitable.

Robert C., James E., Charles H. and Frank L. Fenton are residents and property owners at Williamstown. Frank L. Fenton was born March 24, 1880, married Miss Lillian M. Muhleman, and they have seven children: Martha Elizabeth, Dorothy Jane, Lillian Maria, Carol Margaret, Frank M., Ruth and Marjorie. Mrs. Fenton is a daughter of Rudolph Muhleman, of Bridgeport, Ohio. In addition to his manufacturing interests Mr. Fenton is president of the Farmers & Mechanics National Bank. He is a republican in politics, as are all his brothers, and is a thirty-second degree Mason and a Shriner.

Robert C. Fenton married Miss Grace Dudley, of Marion, Ohio, and they have three children: James D., Ethel Marie (wife of Daniel Reynolds, of Parkersburg), and Robert C. Mr. Fenton is a thirty-second degree Mason and a member of the Mystic Shrine.

Charles H. Fenton married Miss Lulu P. Davis, of Steubenville, Ohio, and they have one surviving son, Charles H.

James E. Fenton, born, reared and educated at Indiana, Pennsylvania, like his brothers, was married there to Miss Nettie Clawson, who at death left four children: Edward L., Eva, Herbert and Violet. Mr. Fenton's second marriage was with Miss Flora Legleitner, of Gravel Bank, Ohio, and they have three children: James, Richard and Mary.

The Fentons are all men of substantial business standing and high personal character, church members, interested in educational progress and hearty encouragers of all movements that promise social betterment and advancement of the welfare of city, state and nation.

THE HENDERSON FAMILY of Wood County, West Virginia, of which Wallace P. Beeson of Williamstown is a descendant was one of the earliest Scotch families to become established and prominently recognized in the neighborhood of Colchester, Virginia. Alexander Henderson, the settler, was born in Scotland in 1659, a son of Rev. Richard Henderson, a noted clergyman of his time in Glasgow, Scotland. He came to Virginia in 1756, was an importing merchant and settled at Colchester and later at Dumfries. Before the Revolutionary war he served in the Virginia House of Burgesses, and was one of the five members of a committee appointed to determine the boundary line between Virginia and Maryland, his associates being: George Washington, George Mason (of Mason-Dixon Line fame), Thomas Jefferson and James Madison. The work of this commission is historically known as the "Compact of 1785." He was not only a political supporter of Washington, but a personal friend and associate. He later moved to Alexandria, Virginia, and he was a vestryman in Christ Church, where his name appears on a pew in that church. He married Sarah Moore, and three of his sons, John, Alexander and James, all came to what is now Wood County, then known as Harrison County, and helped to later set off and lay out Wood County.

Alexander Henderson, or "Sandy," as he was familiarly known, located on the Little Kanawha River in April, 1799, and built cabins for himself and his servants, returning then to his former home at Dumfries, Virginia. On May 25, 1801, he married Jane Hutchinson Lithgow and brought his bride to Wood County. It was a new experience for her. She had been reared in luxury and was a petted beauty, unused to any kind of hardship. She took up the duties of life with good cheer and resourcefulness, and in her cabin in the wilderness, five miles distant from a neighbor, learned to spin and weave, and some examples of her handiwork are still preserved and treasured by her descendants. For many years Alexander Henderson was a magistrate in Wood County. Socially they were identified with many leading people of the time and section, frequently visited Blennerhassett Island and in turn hospitably entertained the Blennerhassetts on their Little Kanawha plantation. They were both summoned as witnesses in the noted trial of Aaron Burr.

The children of Alexander (Sandy) Henderson and his wife were: George W., John A. and Mary Page, the two latter dying when young. George Henderson was educated at Athens, Ohio, attending college there from 1814 to 1818. He married Elizabeth Ann Tomlinson, a daughter of Joseph Tomlinson, also a pioneer, and they became the parents of a large family: Joseph Tomlinson, Mary Page, Alexander, Georgianna, Alexander Lithgow, Anna Maria, Lucy Lithgow, Margaret Wallace, George Washington, Henry Clay, Jock Bedell and Arthur Taylor. Mary Page, the mother of Wallace P. Beeson, died January 4, 1922. Jock Bedell and Arthur Taylor are residing on the old home place three miles below Williamstown, West Virginia. Jock married Anna McIntosh and Arthur T. married Olinda McIntosh. Mary Page Henderson July 29, 1849, became the wife of Benjamin Tomlinson Beeson, to whom eight children were born: Lucy McMahon died in infancy; Elizabeth Rebecca married George W. McDougle; Georgianna Henderson; Ida Drusilla; Mary Isabella, dead; Benjamin Meade; Wallace Page; and Mary Winifred. The father of the family was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, while the mother was a member of Christ Church (Episcopal), of Williamstown, West Virginia.

Samuel and Joseph Tomlinson from whom this line descends were the first pioneers, blazing the first trees as far south as this on the Ohio River in the year 1771, opposite where the later settlement of Marietta, Ohio, was made. They brought with them their sister Rebecca who afterwards became the wife of Isaac Williams, a pioneer scout. The present site of Williamstown was given Rebecca by her brothers, where she and her family dwelt, and from whom the town of Williamstown (at first called Williamsport) took its name.

John G. Henderson, a brother of Alexander (Sandy) Henderson married Drusilla Williams, a daughter of Isaac and Rebecca Williams. They died childless.

WALLACE P. BEESON. It is a fine trait in human nature that leads one to take pride in his ancestors, ignoring their possible faults and remembering only their virtues and their unusual achievements in the face of danger and hardship. The early settlement of what is now Wood County, West Virginia, was brought about by sturdy effort, resourcefulness and great personal courage and in the record of those early days no names more frequently or honorably appear than those of Tomlinson, Williams, Beeson and Henderson, all of which are still worthily represented in West Virginia.

Wallace P. Beeson, capitalist, vice president of the Fenton Art Glass Company and identified with numerous other important business enterprises at Williamstown West Virginia, was born January 21, 1861, on the banks of the Ohio River in West Virginia, near where the Parkersburg Steel Mills now stand, in the same house in which his father was born on January 8, 1820. His parents were Benjamin Tomlinson and Mary P. (Henderson) Beeson.

The great-grandfather of Wallace P. Beeson was the founder of the family in West Virginia, a member of the same family that founded Uniontown, Pennsylvania, at that time a Quaker community. Great-grandfather Beeson was accompanied from Pennsylvania by his two sons, Jonas and Jacob. He bought a tract of land in what is now the northern part of Parkersburg, separated in two portions, with a 100-acre strip of land running between, and these two strips of land were deeded to his sons, Jonas receiving the strip in Beechwood and Jacob the strip at Redwood. It was the father's idea that by separating the land in this way the brothers would never be tempted into any land disagreement in the future. Jacob Beeson read law and practiced at Wheeling. He became the grandfather of the "Jackson boys," famous in West Virginia history. Federal Judge John J. Jackson, Governor Jacob Beeson Jackson and Judge James Monroe Jackson, and the latter's statue now stands in front of the Court House in Parkersburg, West Virginia. Jonas Beeson was a farmer and lived on his land all his life. He married Rebecca Tomlinson and they had a large family, five children reaching mature years, one of whom, Benjamin Tomlinson Beeson, was the father of Wallace P. Beeson. He was a well known farmer and stock dealer and in early days drove his cattle to Maryland and marketed them in Baltimore. He was a man of influence but would never consent to become a candidate for public office. He moved his family to Williamstown in 1887. His death occurred December 6, 1909, when nearing the ninetieth year of his age. His wife Mary P. (Henderson) Beeson survived until January 4, 1922, living at Williamstown. In spite of her advanced age, ninety-three years, she was as alert in mind as one but half her age and retained her mental faculties up to the closing hours of her life.

Wallace P. Beeson was reared on the home farm and attended the common schools. In 1890 he came to Williamstown to take up his residence here, and has been active in business and prominent in politics ever since. He was one of the original members of the Fenton Brothers' firm at Williamstown and has been one of the leading stockholders and is vice president of the Fenton Art Glass Company. For many years he has been more or less engaged in oil and gas production and has additional interests.

Mr. Beeson was married October 29, 1896, to Miss Mary Fawn McIntosh, who was born at Fernandina, Florida, and is a daughter of John Travis and Mary D. (Johnson) McIntosh, natives of North Carolina, later residents of Florida, the former deceased and the latter now residing at Williamstown. Both Mr. and Mrs. Beeson are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church. In politics a lifelong democrat, Mr. Beeson has been more than once honored by his party with public office and has served as mayor of Williamstown with great business efficiency.

WALTER A. EDWARDS, cashier of the Bank of Weston, at Weston, the county seat of Lewis County, was born in this fine little city on the 13th of October, 1872, and is a son of Thomas A. and Mary O. (Hoffman) Edwards, the former of whom was born near Oakland, Maryland, September 10, 1834, and the latter was born at Weston, West Virginia, February 16, 1840. Thomas A. Edwards was a young man when he came to West Virginia, and at Weston was solemnized his marriage to Miss Mary O. Hoffman, a graduate of Mount de Chantal Academy. At Weston Mr. Edwards was for several years engaged in mercantile pursuits, and thereafter he became editor and publisher of the Weston Democrat, which he made an effective exponent of local interests and of the cause of the democratic party. He served as a member of the County Court, and gained prestige as one of the progressive and influential citizens of Lewis County. He was an earnest communicant of the Catholic Church, as is also his widow, who still resides at Weston. Of the four children Walter A., of this sketch, is the third in order of birth; James H. is engaged in the oil and gas business in this section of the state; Miss Louise G. remains with her widowed mother; and Thomas A. is a member of the firm of Edwards & Edwards, engaged in the general insurance business at Weston.

After having profited fully by the advantages of the public schools of Weston, Walter A. Edwards became a clerk in the office of the auditor of the West Virginia & Pittsburgh Railroad, and in 1895 he resigned this post to accept that of teller in the National Exchange Bank at Weston. He won promotion to the office of cashier, and continued his service in this capacity until 1907, when he effected the organization of the Bank of Weston, with a representative corps of stockholders, and he has been cashier of this institution from the initiation of its business, on the 1st of April, 1908. His personal popularity and his executive ability along financial lines have inured greatly to the success of this substantial institution. The other officers of the bank are as here designated: President, Porter Arnold; vice president, George W. Wilson; assistant cashier, J. G. G. Heaver. Mr. Edwards continued a member of the directorate of the National Exchange Bank of Weston and is a director also of the Weston Electric Light, Power & Water Company, besides which he is treasurer of the Sprigg Lumber Company, director of the Glen Elk Lumber Company at Clarksburg, and one of the owners of the Monarch billiard parlor at Weston. His political allegiance is given to the democratic party, he is affiliated with the Knights of Columbus and the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, and he and his family are communicants of the Catholic Church.

On the 16th of April, 1895, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Edwards and Miss Mary J. Whelan, who was reared at Weston and who received the advantages of the excellent public schools of this city. Mr. and Mrs. Edwards became the parents of seven children, of whom five are living: Mary O. is a graduate of the Weston High School, as is also Thomas A., who is, in 1922, a student in the great Catholic University in the City of Washington, District of Columbia; Eugene H. likewise is a graduate of the local high school; and Alice G. and Katherine are attending the Catholic parochial school at Weston.

EARLE REGER is a native of Lewis County, and here has the distinction of being postmaster of the fine little City of Weston, judicial center of the county. He was born on his father's farm June 9, 1887, and is a son of William and Mary E. (Jones) Reger, the former of whom was born in Upshur County, this state, and the latter in Lewis County, in 1844. William Reger was reared on a farm, received a common school education, and as a young man went forth as a gallant soldier of the Union in the Civil war, in which he continued his service until the close. After the war he continued as one of the substantial and honored representatives of farm industry in Lewis County until the time of his death, both he and his wife having been zealous members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and his political allegiance having been given to the republican party. Of their children all except one are living: Thomas L. is employed in the accounting department of the Pennsylvania Railroad in the City of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania; Avis is the wife of George C. Hinzman; Charles H. resides in the City of Philadelphia, as an employe in the accounting department of the Pennsylvania Railroad; Mattie is the wife of Albert M. Crothers; Robert B. is bookkeeper for the Clarksburg Casket Company at Clarksburg, West Virginia; W. F. is postmaster at Berryburg, Barbour County, where he is also manager of the Consolidated Coal Company; S. S. conducts a general store at Burkburnette, Texas.

Earle Reger was reared on the old home farm, and was afforded the advantages of the public schools of his native county. He continued to be associated with the work of the farm until he was nineteen years of age, when he became mail carrier on rural free delivery route No. 4 from Weston. After thus serving six months he was appointed a clerk in the Weston postoffice, and in fourteen years of continuous service he gained an accurate knowledge of all departments and details of the service, so that he was a logical candidate for office when, on the 5th of June, 1920, he was appointed postmaster, under civil service examination and under the administration of President Wilson. His long experience and personal popularity give him special prestige in this office, and his administration is giving unqualified satisfaction.

Mr. Reger is a republican in politics, is an active member of the Weston Chamber of Commerce, is affiliated with Weston Lodge No. 10, Free and Accepted Masons, and Bigelow Chapter No. 4, Royal Arch Masons, and he and his wife hold membership in the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

In 1910 Mr. Reger married Miss Mamie F. Jones, whose death occurred in 1917 and who is survived by one child, Christine F. In September, 1919, Mr. Reger wedded Miss Mary Louise Stephens, of Parkersburg, West Virginia, and she is the gracious and popular chataleine of their pleasant home, which is known for its generous hospitality and good cheer.

PORTER ARNOLD, president of the Bank of Weston, at Weston, judicial center of Lewis County, was born in this attractive little city on the 25th of October, 1866, and is a son of George J. and Anna (Swick) Arnold. The former was born in Virginia, in 1817, and was reared and educated in what is now Lewis County, West Virginia, where his father became a pioneer farmer and substantial and honored citizen. George J. Arnold received the advantages of the common schools, and his early experiences were those of the farm, his wife, who was born in this county, in 1837, having likewise been reared on a farm. As a young man George J. Arnold studied law and gained admission to the bar. He and his wife established their home at Weston, and here he continued in the practice of his profession until he retired and returned to his farm, where he passed the remainder of his life. He became a representative member of the bar of Lewis County, and was a man of marked business ability also. He was one of the largest landowners of Lewis County at the time of his death. Both he and his wife were earnest communicants of the Protestant Episcopal Church, and he was a leader in the local councils of the democratic party. He served one term in the State Legislature, and was also nominated for county judge, but was defeated. Of the eight children five are living, the subject of this sketch being the eldest of the number: Genevieve is the wife of Dr. T. J. W. Brown, of Washington, District of Columbia; Maude, a graduate of the college at Winchester, Virginia, is the wife of E. A. Gillen; Jackson, who was graduated in law, is now at the head of the state police of West Virginia; and Flora, the widow of Lee Gowell, resides at Sutton, Braxton County.

After completing his studies in the public schools Porter Arnold entered Rockhill College, near Baltimore, Maryland, and after leaving this institution he had charge of his father's farm until the time of his marriage, February 14, 1900, to Miss Bernice Alkire, who is a graduate of Luthersville College. After his marriage Mr. Arnold not only continued his association with farm enterprise and the buying and shipping of live stock, but also engaged in the mercantile business at Weston, where he is still identified with this line of business. He served for a long period as a director of the National Exchange Bank, and in 1908 he became one of the organizers of the Bank of Weston, of which he has since served consecutively as the president, George W. Wilson being vice president and W. A. Edwards, the cashier, the directorate including these officers and also Charles M. Snaith, Lot Hall, Frank Mertz and Riley Gugg. Mr. Arnold is the owner of a fine landed estate of 1025 acres in Lewis County. He is a staunch democrat, and was at one time his party's candidate for county sheriff. He is affiliated with the local lodge of Knights of Pythias, and he and his wife are communicants of the Protestant Episcopal Church. They have five children: Eugenia, Margaret, Elizabeth, John P. and Samuel J. Eugenia is a graduate of the exclusive school of Stewart's Hall, Virginia, and Margaret is a graduate of the Weston High School. The family home is a center of gracious hospitality and is the stage of much of the representative social life of the community.

JAY L. POLING, deputy sheriff of Lewis County, has been actively identified with business enterprises at Weston, the county seat, and is one of the well known and popular citizens of the city. Mr. Poling was born in Barbour County, West Virginia, on the 8th of February, 1877, and is a son of Rev. Hamilton Poling and Alma (Johnson) Poling, the former of whom was born in Rockingham County, Virginia, in 1837, and the latter was born in Barbour County, Virginia (now West Virginia), in 1838. The father was educated in a leading college maintained under the auspices of the Methodist Episcopal Church in Virginia, and he became a clergyman of this church, in the active work of whose ministry he continued thirty-six years, his death having occurred February 22, 1912. After his marriage he held various pastoral charges in Virginia, West Virginia and Pennsylvania, and he served in the Confederate army during virtually the entire course of the Civil war. He was affiliated with the Masonic fraternity. His wife is a daughter of Peter T. Johnson, who was one of the first to make a survey across the Blue Ridge Mountains and who became a pioneer settler and extensive landholder in Barbour County, West Virginia. Rev. and Mrs. Hamilton Poling became the parents of six sons and three daughters, and the following are living at the time of this writing: Nicholas C. owns and operates a large farm in Barbour County; Sylvester is engaged in the mercantile business at Parsons, Tucker County; Della is the widow of John Haynes and resides at Morgantown, this state; M. D. is foreman for the Cherry River Lumber Company; and Jay L., of this review, is the youngest of the number.

Jay L. Poling gained his early education in the public schools of the various towns where his father held pastoral charges, and supplemented this by attending a normal school. Thereafter he was for several years identified with the lumber business at Weston, where mercantile and other lines of enterprise likewise received his attention for varying periods. In January, 1917, he was appointed deputy sheriff, in which position he served four years under Sheriff R. R. Hale, and since which he has held the same position under Sheriff O. P. White. He is a democrat of utmost loyalty, is a past master of Walkersville Lodge No. 46 Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, besides being affiliated with the Scottish Rite Consistory in the City of Wheeling, and with the Shrine of Nemesis Temple. He is also affiliated with the Western Lodges of the Knights of Pythias and Independent Order of Odd Fellows. Mrs. Poling is an active member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and holds membership in the Order of the Eastern Star and the Woman's Temple at Parkersburg.

February 27, 1897, recorded the marriage of Mr. Poling and Miss Edna Weaver, of Monongalia County, and they have six children: Grace graduated in the Weston High School and thereafter attended summer normal school, she being now a successful teacher in the public schools; Harry and Mabel likewise are graduates of the Weston High School, in which Arthur, the next younger, is a student in 1921; and the two younger members of the parental home circle are Doris and Chloe.

ANDERSON P. JONES, M. D. County health officer of Ritchie County, with a record of half a century of conscientious and skillful work as a physician and surgeon, Doctor Jones represents a professional service that has been continuous from father to son through three generations and covering a period of eighty years or more in West Virginia. He was associated with his father for many years, and for the past fifteen years his own son has shared with him the burdens of an extensive practice.

Anderson P. Jones was born on a farm in Tyler County, West Virginia, December 6, 1852, son of Dr. William N. and Jemimah (Smith) Jones, the former a native of Virginia and the latter of Ohio. William N. Jones acquired his early advantages in the subscription schools of that day, became a teacher, later graduated from medical school and practiced for a number of years at Sistersville, West Virginia, and in Ohio. Later he moved to Pleasants County and had a large practice over that district. He died at Hebron in Pleasants County. He was a member of the Methodist Church, and was a captain of militia during the Civil war. Dr. William Jones was the father of sixteen children, and the only son now living is Dr. Anderson P. of Pennsboro.

Anderson P. Jones was reared in Pleasants County, attended the common schools there, took up the study of medicine with his father, accompanied him on his rounds and later graduating from the College of Physicians and Surgeons at Baltimore. For about fifteen years he was the active associate of his father in practice, until the death of the latter in 1887, and he then carried the burdens of the professional work there alone until 1903, when he removed to Pennsboro, and for nearly twenty years has been one of the recognized leaders in the medical profession of Ritchie County. Doctor Jones, in addition to his private practice and his services as county health officer was the examining physician of the Local Draft Board during the World war, is health officer of the Town of Pennsboro, has been president of the Ritchie County Medical Society, and is a member of the West Virginia State, Southern and American Medical associations. He served on the United States Pension Examining Board for several years. He is vice president and director of the Pennsboro Wholesale Grocery Company. He is a republican, a member of the Methodist Church, and is affiliated with Hebron Lodge of Masons.

In 1878, Doctor Jones married Jaqueline Williamson. She died May 2, 1917, leaving two children, Alma O., of Pennsboro, and Dr. Latimer P.

Dr. Latimer Jones is a graduate of Marietta Academy in Ohio and also a graduate of his father's alma mater, the College of Physicians and Surgeons at Baltimore, with the class of 1908. Since then he has been associated with his father. During the World war he volunteered for medical service, was commissioned a first lieutenant and three months later promoted to a captaincy. He was mustered out as such December 22, 1918. He is a republican, and is affiliated with Harmony Lodge No. 59, A. F. and A. M., and Odell S. Long Chapter No. 25, R. A. M. Dr. Latimer Jones married May Louise Waltham, of Baltimore. They have a son, James P., born May 25, 1910.

WILLIAM J. SMITH has long been a representative member of the bar of Lewis County and is serving as prosecuting attorney of the county, he having previously served four years in this office.

Mr. Smith was born on a farm in Monongalia County, West Virginia, June 11, 1855, and is a son of George W. and Dorcas (Amos) Smith, both likewise natives of what is now the State of West Virginia. George W. Smith was born in Monongalia County, June 8, 1820, and died December 25, 1907. His wife was born in what is now Marion County, West Virginia, in 1830, and she likewise is deceased. After their marriage the parents settled on a farm in Monongalia County, and the father won success through his own ability and efforts, as he was with but meager financial resources at the time of his marriage. In Monongalia County he became the owner of a farm of 212 acres, and after selling this property he came with his family to Lewis County, where he improved a valuable farm of 292 acres, the ownership of which he retained until his death. He was a republican in politics and was a local preacher of the Methodist Episcopal Church. He was twice married, and of the seven children by the second marriage five are living.

William J. Smith was reared to the discipline of the farm and was a sturdy youth of sixteen years at the time of the family removal to Lewis County. Here he finally diverted his attention from farm enterprise to take up the study of law, and since his admission to the bar he has been engaged in the practice of his profession at Weston, where he assumed, on the 1st of January, 1921, the office of prosecuting attorney of the county, an office in which he had made an excellent record in a previous term of four years, 1904-8. He has been a loyal and active worker in the local ranks of the republican party, and he is affiliated with the Masonic fraternity and the Knights of Pythias. Though not formally a member of any religious organization, he attends and supports the Presbyterian Church.

The first marriage of Mr. Smith was with Lizzie Bartlett, of Clarksburg, and her death occurred in 1909. She is survived by two children: Florida is the wife of Frank Cutright, a science teacher of considerable note; Miss Emily is a nurse by profession and now resides in the State of Texas. For his second wife Mr. Smith wedded Miss Cameo Pearl Romine, and her death occurred March 3, 1921. She is survived by three children—Catherine Pearl, William J., Jr., and Ruth.

GEORGE E. WHITE is a member of the bar of Lewis County, and at the time of this writing, in the autumn of 1921, is state senator from the Twelfth Senatorial District, comprising Lewis Doddridge and Harrison counties. He was born in Lewis County, November 4, 1884, and is a representative of one of the old and honored families of this section of West Virginia, his paternal great-grandfather, John White, having married an aunt of General Thomas J. (Stonewall) Jackson. Clark White, father of him whose name initiates this paragraph, was born and reared in Lewis County, and his widow, whose maiden name was Catherine Rohrbough, was born in Upshur County. She was reared in Buckhannon County, and her early educational advantages included those of De Sales Academy at Parkersburg. After their marriage the parents settled on a farm in Lewis County, and the father became one of the leaders in the promotion of agricultural and live stock industry in this section of the state. He was the owner of a valuable landed estate of 1,200 acres on Freeman's Creek, and was a leader in the breeding and raising of Polled Angus cattle. Clark White remained on his homestead farm until 1900, when he removed to Weston, where he passed the remainder of his life, he having been one of the founders of the Lewis County Bank, of which he was a director at the time of his death. While residing on his farm he was a trustee of the Baptist Church of the locality, his political allegiance was given to the republican party, and while he never sought office he gave effective service as deputy sheriff of Lewis County and was influential in public affairs in his community. He received the thirty-second degree of the Scottish Rite of the Masonic fraternity, his maximum York Rite affiliation having been with the Commandery of Knights Templars at Weston. His widow likewise is an earnest member of the Baptist Church. Of the two children the subject of this sketch is the younger. The daughter, Lucy, was graduated in Broadbush College, with the degree of Bachelor of Science, and was graduated also in the musical department, after which she studied music and art in Dennison University. She is now the wife of J. Cline Hood, of Weston.

George E. White was reared on the farm to the age of fifteen years, and after leaving the public schools he continued his studies in Broadbush College at Clarksburg, in which he was graduated with the degree of Bachelor of Science. For three years thereafter he was a student in the literary department of the University of Virginia and for two years a student in its law department. Later he attended the University of West Virginia during one year. He was admitted to the bar of his native state, and in 1909 opened a law office at Weston, where he has since maintained his home and where he still continues in the practice of his profession to a certain extent. Since the death of his honored father he has had the active management of the family farm estate of 1,200 acres, besides which he is vice president of the Lewis County Bank at Weston, and one of the three partners in the garage business with the local York Rite bodies of the Masonic fraternity, including the Commandery of Knights Templars, and has made advancement also in the Scottish Rite division of Masonry, besides which he is affiliated with the Knights of Pythias and the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. He and his wife hold membership in the Baptist Church in their home city.

A leader in the councils and campaign activities of the republican party in this section of the state, Mr. White was elected in 1912 a member of the State Senate, in which he served until 1916. In November, 1920, he was again chosen to represent his district in the State Senate. In 1914 he was the republican nominee for Congress. In the election with three candidates in the field, he was defeated by less than 500 votes in the district which gave a total of 52,000 votes. He was for two years editor and publisher of the Weston Independent, a republican paper of influence and prominence under his regime.

The year 1912 recorded the marriage of Mr. White and Miss Genevieve Chidester, who was graduated in Mount de Chantel Academy. Mr. and Mrs. White have three sons and one daughter: George E., Jr., John Clark, Andrew J. and Jane.

JOHN L. ROBINSON, of Grafton, spent his early life in and about the mines, is still a coal operator and producer, and for the past decade has done an extensive business in general contracting.

Mr. Robinson was born at Pruntytown, the old county seat of Taylor County, December 5, 1867. His father, Christopher Robinson, was born in Yorkshire, England, was associated from early youth with the coal mines of that region, and when about thirty years old came to the United States, in 1849. As a practical miner he did work in the George's Creek District of Pennsylvania, and in 1859 went West to participate in the mining excitement of the Pike's Peak region. He spent a year in the mountains without finding any considerable wealth, and on his return came down the Platte River on a raft to Omaha, thence by the Missouri to the nearest railroad and back to West Virginia. He resumed mining in Marion County, and in 1861 located at Pruntytown, where he leased coal lands and became an operator, continuing active in the industry the rest of his years. He died at Pruntytown at the age of sixty-eight. As an American citizen he was in thorough sympathy with the abolition movement, and always voted as a republican. He was reared in the Church of England, and in this country was an Episcopalian.

In Marion County Christopher Robinson married Miss Mary A. Barnes, daughter of Abram and Mary (Hall) Barnes. Her father came from New Jersey, and lived for many years and died on his farm near Fairmont. Mrs. Christopher Robinson died in 1905. Her children to grow up were: Albert M., who lost his life in the mines and left four children by his marriage to Augusta J. Utt; Mary M., who died in Pruntytown, wife of Thomas M. Cooper; John L., the only surviving member of the family; Charles J., who was a miner and then a mine operator and died at Grafton unmarried.

John L. Robinson was reared in Pruntytown, where he attended the free schools and was a pupil of the high-class private school conducted by Professor McPheters. The coal mines of this district afforded him his apprenticeship in mining, and in them he did all the routine duties from mule-driver to mine foreman and superintendent. He is president of the Gabe Fork Coal Company of Grafton, organized in 1918, and is also director and superintendent of the Jerry Run Coal Company, organized in 1920 and developing a property at Rosemont.

Since 1911 Mr. Robinson has given much of his time and energy to the general contracting business, particularly paving and road work. His first contract was excavating and furnishing material for the construction of the Grafton High School as a sub-contractor to the Roach-Brune Company of Cincinnati. He has performed a large amount of excavating and street work in Grafton, including a portion of the paving of West Maine Street to the river bridge. He is junior member of the firm Withers & Robinson, who in recent years have handled several large contracts for Taylor County. Mr. Robinson is a sterling citizen and has been an interested worker in republican politics since boyhood. He cast his first presidential vote for Benjamin Harrison in 1888.

At Cincinnati, December 2, 1912, Mr. Robinson married Miss Olga Meister. Her father, Emil Meister, was a jeweler in the City of Zurich, Switzerland, being descendant of a family that has lived in this little republic for more than eight centuries. He died at Lake Lagano, Switzerland, in 1921. He called himself an international grandfather, from the fact that his children had become so widely dispersed. His oldest son, Otto, was for six years in charge of a corps of civil engineers in China, then as a mechanical engineer had charge of an office at Kobe, Japan, and is now in charge of an office for Sulzer & Bush at Shanghai. Emil is an artist in Germany. Hans is a grocer in Switzerland. Edward continues the business of his father at Zurich. Leonora is the wife of Fred Gamper, a banker in London, England, Herman is an architect in Paris, France.

Olga Meister was liberally educated, and became proficient in both the French and German languages. While visiting an uncle at Garfield, New Jersey, she answered an advertisement for a teacher of French and German in the Hutchinson family at Fairmont, West Virginia, and while in that work she first met Mr. Robinson. After leaving the Hutchinson family she was a trained nurse at Morgantown five years, and engaged in a similar capacity at Birmingham, Alabama, three years. The three older children of Mr. and Mrs. Robinson are: Elizabeth Meister, Mary Virginia and Edward Lee. Mrs. Robinson died February 6, 1922, leaving a baby boy, John L., Jr., who was born on the day his mother died, which was also her birthday.

VIRGIL LEE HIGHLAND began his career in Clarksburg some thirty odd years ago. For twenty years he has been a banker, and an officer in a number of business and industrial organizations of this section. Over the state he is known not only for his success in business but as a leader in politics and public affairs, and for some years has been the national republican committeeman of West Virginia.

Mr. Highland was born at West Milford in Harrison County, August 31, 1870, son of John Edgar and Lucy Earl (Patton) Highland. His grandfather, Jacob Highland, was a farmer, and the same occupation was followed by John E. Highland, who was born at West Milford, October 19, 1832, and died May 4, 1903. During the Civil war he served as a teamster in the Union army, was always a staunch republican, a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church and the Masonic fraternity.

Virgil L. Highland grew up on a farm, attended the common schools in the country, later took a business course at Delaware, Ohio, and finished his education in Seio College of Ohio. He was a young man of twenty when he came to Clarksburg in 1890 and entered the service of R. T. Lowmnds and Company, merchants, as bookkeeper, remaining with that firm for seven years. While thus employed he became interested in local politics, was elected and served a term of six years as county clerk of Harrison County.

Mr. Highland was instrumental in organizing and became president of the Empire National Bank of Clarksburg in 1903. He has made that one of the strongest banks of the state. Other important commercial organizations which he has helped establish and conduct are the Clarksburg Telegram Company, publishers of the Clarksburg Daily Telegram, of which he is secretary and director; the Union Gas and Carbon Company, of which he is treasurer and director, the West Chevy Chase Land Company and the Union Land Company, being treasurer and director in both; and is a director of the Valley Coal and Coke Company, the Wilbur Coal and Coke Company, the Monongahela Valley Traction Company, the Elkhorn Coal Corporation and the West Virginia Metal Products Company.

Mr. Highland has been intimate in the affairs of the republican party for many years. He has preferred work within the party to any other form of public service, though he was appointed, in 1913, on account of his recognized business standing, as the first chairman of the Public Service Commission of the state. He was a delegate in 1904 to the Republican National Convention at Chicago, when Roosevelt was nominated for President. He was chairman of the Republican State Committee from 1912 to 1916 has had the distinctive honor of being the national committeeman from this state.

Mr. Highland is a thirty-second degree Scottish Rite Mason, an Odd Fellow and Elk, a member of the Clarksburg Rotary Club, Country Club, New York Bankers Club, National Republican Club of New York, and is a Baptist. December 31, 1902, he married Miss Gertrude E. Morgan, of Clarksburg. Their children are: Stephen Lee, Anita, Linda Marion and Florence Jean.

SAMUEL A. POWELL. Few lawyers in the state have had a more uniformly successful record than Samuel A. Powell of Harrisville. He has handled cases in all the state and many of the Federal courts, and has been unusually successful in the pursuit of his chosen profession. Mr. Powell has extensive interests in business and civic affairs in Ritchie County, and has practiced law there for the past seventeen years.

He was born on a farm in Wood County, West Virginia, September 13, 1876. His parents were Hiram D. and Ann (Hubbard) Powell, of Wood County. The father died January 21, 1922. They were both natives of Monroe County, Ohio, where the father was born July 8, 1847, and the mother in 1859. They were reared and educated in their native county, and after their marriage lived on a farm there for a few years. On coming to West Virginia they located in Wirt County, where they bought a farm. Hiram Powell was a factor and did work at his trade and as a contractor in connection with farming. After selling his farm in Wirt County he moved to Elizabeth, where he was elected and served as a member of the County Court. While there he went on the sheriff's bond, and when the sheriff defaulted it took all his property to meet the requirements of the bond. Hiram Powell was a democrat and a Catholic, while his wife is a member of the Methodist Protestant Church. Until the demise of Hiram D. Powell there had not been a death in their family circle since their marriage, though they had nine children. These children are: Thomas E., a teacher at Parkersburg; James T., a farmer at Hartley, Iowa; Jane, wife of Samuel Lindewood, of Alberta, Canada; Philip A., a farmer at Hartley, Iowa; Samuel A.; Mary, wife of E. A. Leach, of Mineral Wells, Wood County, West Virginia; Bessie, wife of Floyd Melrose, of Chesterville, Wood County; Thurman A.; and Clarence E. Powell, both located at Seott City, Kansas.

Samuel A. Powell spent his early life on a farm, attended the common schools, and is a graduate of the law department of West Virginia University with the class of 1901. He passed a practical examination, was admitted to the bar, and for several years practiced in his home county of Wood. In 1905 he removed to Harrisville, and has since then been busied with a constantly increasing volume of private practice and business responsibilities. For a time he was assistant prosecuting attorney of Ritchie County. He is a stockholder of and attorney for the First National Bank of Harrisville, attorney for the Pullman State Bank and the Bank of Cairo, all in Ritchie County, and is a stockholder in several other corporations. He is secretary-treasurer of the Safe Oil Company, owning a quarter of its stock. Mr. Powell is a republican, and is affiliated with Harrisville Lodge No. 98, A. F. and A. M., and is a member of the Macabees. On December 24, 1899, he married Miss Minnie L. Archer. They have two children: Virginia M., who, at the age of sixteen, graduated from high school and has since taken the Master of Arts degree from Ohio University at Athens. The second daughter, Mabel, was born in 1909, and is attending school at Harrisville. The family are Methodists. During the World war Mr. Powell was chairman of the Local Board of Ritchie County and was very active in both the Red Cross and Liberty Loan drives.

CHARLES MARSH GOHEN at the age of fourteen began work as a messenger in a Huntington bank. That was over thirty years ago, and his service has been continuous with one banking institution, under two organizations, and throughout he has been in close touch with the practical and technical side of banking.

The bank that first employed him was the Commercial Bank of Huntington. From messenger he became teller. In 1894 the consolidation of this bank with the Bank of Huntington resulted in the present Huntington National Bank. Mr. Gohen continued with the new institution in the capacity of teller, and was successively promoted to assistant cashier, cashier and other responsibilities, and since July 1, 1919, has been president of this, one of the largest and strongest banks in the state, with total resources aggregating nearly $8,000,000. The bank has a capital of $700,000, which with surplus and undivided profits total considerably over a million. The deposits in 1921 averaged over $5,000,000. The active executive officers are: Charles M. Gohen, president; James K. Oney, H. O. Aleshire, C. R. Carder, J. W. Ensign, Frank Enslow, C. W. Phellis, vice presidents, and W. H. F. Dement, cashier.

Mr. Gohen's grandfather was Thomas A. Gohen, who was born in Ireland in 1832 and as a young man came to America and settled at Cincinnati. He was a chemist by profession and was associated with the Marsh & Harwood Chemical Company of Cincinnati, where he lived until his death in 1900. He married Anna De Coursy, who was born in France in 1834, and died at Cincinnati in 1902. They reared a family of three daughters and five sons. There are three sons still living: James A., whose record follows; David M., secretary of the trustees of the Sinking Fund of Cincinnati; and George A., in the insurance and real estate business at Cincinnati. One of the deceased daughters was Elizabeth, wife of the late Stark Arnold, who was a nephew of Stonewall Jackson and was a prominent West Virginia attorney and afterward a minister of the Methodist Church. Their son, Gohen C. Arnold, is now president of the State Senate of West Virginia.

Samuel A. Powell

James A. Gohen, father of the Huntington banker, was born in Cincinnati May 5, 1849, was reared there, married in Aurora, Indiana, and was a carriage manufacturer at Aurora and other places, and in 1884 established his home in Huntington, West Virginia, where for twenty years he was connected with the motive power department of the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad. In 1904 he removed to Indianapolis, where he was with the motive power department of the Big Four Railroad until he retired in 1914. He is still living in Indianapolis. James A. Gohen married Malvina Fenton Marsh, who was born at Aurora, Indiana, September 8, 1852, and died at Indianapolis in December, 1920.

Charles Marsh Gohen, only child of his parents, was born at Aurora, Indiana, September 18, 1876, and has lived at Huntington since he was eight years of age. He attended the public schools of this city until at the age of fourteen he took up his banking career. Besides his office as the executive head of the Huntington National Bank he is president of the Clearing House Association of Huntington, is president of the West Virginia Paving and Pressed Brick Company of Huntington, and vice president of the Fesenmeier Packing Company of Huntington. He is a member of the West Virginia State and American Bankers Association, is a democrat, a vestryman in the Episcopal Church, a member of the Rotary Club, Guyandotte Club, and Guyan County Club of Huntington. During the World war he was County chairman for the War Savings drive, also an active factor in filling the local quota for the Liberty Loans. Mr. Gohen owns a fine home at 1418 Fifth Avenue.

June 14, 1906, at Huntington, he married Miss Mary Elizabeth Emmons, daughter of Carlton Delos and Minnie (Gibson) Emmons, residents of Huntington, where her father is president of the Emmons-Hawkins Hardware Company. Mrs. Gohen is a granddaughter of Delos E. Emmons, who was commissioned by his brother-in-law, Collis P. Huntington, of New York City, to lay out the City of Huntington, and he was active in the upbuilding of this West Virginia railroad and commercial center. Mrs. Gohen is a graduate of the Hollins Seminary of Roanoke, Virginia.

R. P. ALESHIRE, representative of Cabell County in the Legislature, is one of Huntington's prominent financiers, head of a real estate and investment brokerage business in that city.

Mr. Aleshire was born at Gallipolis, Ohio, and his grandfather, Reuben Aleshire, was a pioneer in that city on the Ohio River, going from Luray, Page County, Virginia. He was a flour miller at Gallipolis, where he lived until his death at the age of seventy-five. He married Margaret Shepard, who was born in 1818 and died at Gallipolis November 19, 1896, at the age of seventy-eight.

Edward S. Aleshire, father of R. P. Aleshire, was born at Gallipolis in 1841, and as a young man enlisted from that city in Company F of the Second Ohio Heavy Artillery and served all through the war. He was also engaged in the flour milling industry at Gallipolis, but about 1890 moved to Huntington, West Virginia, and became manager of Armour & Company's branch house in that city. He died at Huntington January 3, 1905. He was a democrat, a vestryman of the Episcopal Church and affiliated with the Masonic fraternity. Edward S. Aleshire married Justine Onderdonk, a native of New York State, now living at Huntington. She became the mother of seven children: Walter, who died at Gallipolis at the age of seventeen; Henry O., vice president of the Huntington National Bank; Edward S., secretary and treasurer of the Standard Printing Company at Huntington; R. P. Aleshire; Halsey W., a merchandise broker at Huntington; Morris B., an artist in New York City; and Justine, who died in infancy.

R. P. Aleshire graduated from the Gallipolis High School in 1889, and also attended the Gallia Academy in that city for two years. After completing his education his early experience was in banking, and he was bookkeeper and subsequently promoted to assistant cashier of the Ohio Valley Bank of Gallipolis. He also became interested in politics while in Ohio, and in 1901 was democratic candidate for state treasurer, but was defeated in the republican landslide of that year.

Mr. Aleshire removed to Huntington in 1905, and has since been in the real estate and investment brokerage business. He is president of the Aleshire-Harvey Company, real estate dealers and brokers, and is a director in several real estate organizations. He is secretary-treasurer of the Mutual Land Company, Home Land Company, Steel Products Company and the Boone Block Mining Company, all Huntington business organizations.

Mr. Aleshire was elected to represent Cabell County in the Legislature in November, 1920, on the democratic ticket. During the session of 1921 he ably represented his constituents, and was a valued member of the committees on finance, mines and mining and labor. He is a member of the Episcopal Church, of Huntington Lodge No. 313, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, and is past exalted ruler of his former home lodge in Gallipolis. He is a member of the Rotary Club, Guyandotte Club and Guyan County Club of Huntington. Mr. Aleshire is unmarried.

BOYD JARRELL. The influence and service of Boyd Jarrell that have combined to make him one of the widely known citizens of Southern West Virginia have been chiefly exercised in the educational field and in journalism. For a number of years he has been connected with the newspaper life of Huntington, and is editor of the Herald-Dispatch of that city.

Mr. Jarrell was born in Wayne County, West Virginia, May 16, 1875. The name Jarrell is one of the oldest and best known in this section of the state. His great-grandfather moved here from Eastern Kentucky very early in the nineteenth century, and was a slave holding farmer and planter. John Jarrell, grandfather of the Huntington editor, was born in Pike County, Eastern Kentucky, in 1800, but he lived on the old plantation in Wayne County for eighty years, dying there in 1884. Besides his farming operations he was more widely known as a pioneer Baptist minister, and he performed all the duties of a minister of the Gospel throughout his section of the state. He was greatly beloved for this work and his character. He married Elizabeth Bromley, who was born in Wayne County in 1813, and died at the home of her son, John Jarrell, in Wayne County in 1898. Her father, William Bromley, was one of the very first settlers in Wayne County and was a slave holding farmer.

The father of Boyd Jarrell was also named John, and he was born in Wayne County, near the confluence of the Levisay and Tug Fork rivers in 1836. He spent all his life in that county, and was both a farmer and timber man. For twenty-four years he was a member of the Wayne County Court, was a democrat, a consistent member of the Baptist Church and the Masonic fraternity. John Jarrell, who died in 1912, married Nancy Lambert, who was born in Wayne County in 1836, and died there in August, 1903. The following is a brief record of their children: James L., formerly a gold prospector, now a fruit grower at Ashland, Oregon; Rebecca, of Huntington, widow of Thomas Osborn, who for many years played a prominent part in the school and educational affairs in Wayne County; Belle, who lives at Ceredo in Wayne County, is the widow of Taylor Watts, a farmer; Samuel became a miner in the Northwest and died in Idaho at the age of forty; Ida, living on her ranch at Ashland, Oregon, is the widow of William A. Crandell, who died there in 1921 and had formerly been postmaster of Aberdeen, Washington; William R., a resident of Seattle, Washington and chief of the United States secret service for the states of Washington, Oregon and Alaska; Pearl, who was a lumber grader, died in Nicholas County, West Virginia, at the age of thirty-five.

Boyd Jarrell was educated in public and private schools in Wayne County, taking the branches leading up to college entrance. He did his last school work as a student at the age of twenty-two. At the age of eighteen he began teaching, and for four years worked in the rural schools of his native county. For two years he was a teacher in private schools, and following that for two years had his first journalistic experience as editor of the Wayne News. He then resumed teaching for a year in the grade school of Effie, where he taught the high school branches. The next year he was editor of the Mingo Democrat at Williamson, West Virginia, and in 1904 came to Huntington to become editor of the Dispatch, which was the first morning paper established in the city. It began publication May 26, 1904. Mr. Jarrell continued as editor of the Dispatch until the fall of 1908, and during the next two years he was city editor of the Huntington Advertiser.

In the meantime, on January 1, 1909, a consolidation had been effected between the Herald and the Dispatch, resulting in the present title of the Herald-Dispatch. The Herald is one of the older papers of Huntington, established in 1891. In the fall of 1910 Mr. Jarrell returned to the Herald-Dispatch as editorial writer, and since 1911 has been editor and is also vice president of the Huntington Herald Company, which owns and publishes the paper. The president of the company is David Gideon. This is the leading republican paper in Cabell County, and is a real newspaper, with circulation all over the southern counties and over a considerable area of Eastern Kentucky.

Mr. Jarrell has been in close touch with politics and public affairs, but has never sought any political office. He votes as a republican, is a member of the Baptist Church, is affiliated with Huntington Lodge No. 313, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, Huntington Rotary Club, Cabell Council No. 1998, Royal Arcanum, and Ancient Order of United Workmen. During the World War he had many duties outside of the burdens imposed upon him as a newspaper editor. He was head of the Publicity Committee of Cabell County, a member of the Four Minute Speakers Bureau, and he made speeches throughout the county in behalf of the various drives.

On October 5, 1915, at Huntington, Mr. Jarrell married Miss Ella Taylor, daughter of Alfred B. and Ora (Chapman) Taylor, residents of Huntington. Her father is a farm owner and also has some valuable oil royalties. Mrs. Jarrell is a graduate of the Huntington High School and finished her education in Marshall College. Two children have been born to their union: Boyd, Jr., on October 31, 1916, and Nancy, born August 17, 1921.

COLEMAN A. STAATS. The success which has attended the career of Coleman A. Staats, of Huntington, is directly traceable to his possession and exercise of qualities which, when properly utilized, seldom fail of the attainment of position and prosperity. Good business judgment and a capacity for sustained endeavor are chief among these, to which he adds a pleasing personality and the happy faculty of making and keeping friends among worth-while people. The president of the Fidelity Insurance Agency is a native of Ravenswood, Jackson County, West Virginia, born October 17, 1887, a son of Coleman A. and Emma (Keeney) Staats.

Coleman A. Staats, the elder, was born in Virginia (now West Virginia), in 1849, and was reared and educated in Jackson and Roane counties, in the latter of which he was married. For a short time following his marriage he resided at Spencer, where he carried on general merchandising, and then moved to Ravenswood, where he continued his mercantile operations, became prosperous and highly respected, and died in 1897. A republican in politics, he took an interest in political affairs and was well known in public matters, and for a number of years served in the capacity of city recorder of Ravenswood. He was a faithful member and active worker of the Presbyterian Church, and was a deacon thereof for a long period. Fraternally he was affiliated with the Masonic order. Mr. Staats married Miss Emma Keeney, who was born in Jackson County, West Virginia, in 1854, and survives him as a resident of Huntington. They became the parents of the following children: Ora, unmarried, who is treasurer of Marshall College and a resident of Huntington; Daisy, the wife of James F. Holswade, a retired merchant of Huntington; Ada, the wife of Isaac J. Osburn, district manager for the General Explosive Company of Birmingham, Alabama; Kathryn, the wife of Ray B. Cummings, a lumber manufacturer of Buffalo, New York; and Coleman A.

Coleman A. Staats attended the public schools of Ravenswood up to his senior high school year, after which he pursued a course of study at Marshall College, an institution which he left in 1907. At that time he took a position with J. W. Valentine, who conducted an establishment handling ladies' ready-to-wear garments at Huntington, and remained in Mr. Valentine's employ for seven years, during which time he worked his way up through industry and fidelity to the post of buyer in the notion department. He had been frugal and careful, and with the small capital which he had saved embarked in the insurance business in 1914, operating a venture under the name of the Staats Insurance Agency. In this enterprise he proved successful, and in 1918 bought out the business of two other agencies and formed the Fidelity Insurance Agency, which is incorporated under the laws of the State of West Virginia, the officers being: President, C. A. Staats; vice president, T. W. Harvey; secretary, H. E. Cragg; and treasurer, J. H. LeBlanc. The offices are situated in a suite of rooms located at No. 1028 Fourth Avenue. Under Mr. Staats' capable and energetic management this has been built up to be the largest general insurance business in Huntington. Mr. Staats is independent in his political views, and his religious faith is that of the Presbyterian Church. He is a member of Huntington Lodge No. 53, A. F. and A. M.; West Virginia Consistory No. 1, Wheeling, thirty-second degree; and Beni-Kedem Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S., Charleston, of the Masonic order; and Huntington Lodge No. 313, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. He belongs also to the Guyandotte Club, the Gypsy Club, the Guyan Country Club, the Rotary Club of Huntington and the Huntington Chamber of Commerce.

On September 25, 1916, Mr. Staats was united in marriage at Boston, Massachusetts, with Miss Nancy Campbell, daughter of Charles W. and Jennie (Ratcliff) Campbell, the latter of whom died at Baltimore, Maryland, while the former is mayor and a distinguished attorney of Huntington, where he makes his home at No. 1102 Fifth Avenue. Mrs. Staats is a graduate of The Castle, an exclusive young ladies' school of Tarrytown, New York. She and her husband have one child, Jean, born September 26, 1919.

WILLIAM E. TALBOTT, M. D. During a busy career as a physician and surgeon at Harrisville for forty years Doctor Talbott has had a varied program of service outside his profession. He has served in the Legislature, has been mayor of his home city, and has borne many of the responsibilities of good citizenship there.

Doctor Talbott was born in Upshur County, Virginia, now West Virginia, September 13, 1858, son of George M. and Sarah L. (Wilson) Talbott. His parents were both natives of Upshur County, where his father was born in 1825. They grew up in the country district, had a common school education, and after their marriage settled on a farm at Princeton, where George M. Talbott eventually acquired extensive tracts of land and became a prosperous farmer. They were very devoted members of the Methodist Episcopal Church and the father was a republican. Of their eight children five are living: Perry, of Buckhannon; William E.; Lloyd, of Alton, West Virginia; G. B., a farmer and hotel man at Frenchton, West Virginia; and G. P., a farmer.

William E. Talbott grew up on the farm and finished his literary education in the noted French Creek Academy. For several years he taught school in Upshur and Lewis counties, then took up the study of medicine, and in 1880 graduated M. D. from the College of Physicians and Surgeons at Baltimore. For one year Doctor Talbott practiced at Centerville in Upshur County, and he located at Harrisville in 1882, and from that year to the present has been the physician, friend and trusted counsellor to many of the best families in this vicinity. Doctor Talbott has one of the good homes there and has a nice suburban farm of sixteen acres.

In 1883 he married Alma McKinney, who died nine months later, in 1884. In 1887 he married Metta L. Lambert. His second wife died December 27, 1918. There were no children by either marriage. Doctor Talbott is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, is a past master of Harrisville Lodge No. 98, A. F. and A. M., and is a republican in politics. He served seven years as mayor of Harrisville. He has also been a member of the Board of Health, was in the Legislature during the sessions of 1915-16, and is a stockholder in the People's Bank.

HUGH B. HAGEN, president of the corporation of Hagen, Ratcliff & Company, the oldest and most substantial wholesale grocery concern in the City of Huntington, has been a resident of Cabell County from the time of his birth. He is a representative of one of its honored pioneer families, and he has witnessed and assisted in the development of the fine industrial City of Huntington, which he has seen evolved from a corn field into a fine city of more than 50,000 population. His father, the late William H. Hagen, was born at Wellsburg, Brooke County Virginia now West Virginia, in the year 1823, a son of John Hagen, who was of Irish ancestry and who gained a due share of pioneer honors in what is now West Virginia. As a young man William H. Hagen came to Cabell County and engaged in the general merchandise business at Guyandotte. He married Mary, daughter of William Buffington, one of the early settlers of the county, where he became the owner of large tracts of land, including a portion of the site of the present City of Huntington. After the death of Mr. Buffington this land was purchased by the late Collis P. Huntington, the great railroad builder, who intended to establish here the terminus of the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad. The home of William H. Hagen was situated on the Guyandotte River, in what is now the City of Huntington, and there he and his wife reared their six children. Mr. Hagen became a citizen of prominence and influence in the community, served fifteen years as president of the County Court, and on this account became widely known as Judge Hagen. He served also as a member of the City Council of Huntington in the early days, and was a director of the old Bank of Huntington, which gained the questionable distinction of having been robbed by Jesse James. He was also a director of the First National Bank. He was a great admirer of Alexander Campbell, he having been one of the early graduates of Bethany College, which was founded by Mr. Campbell. William H. Hagen was one of the venerable and honored citizens of Huntington at the time of his death, and his name and memory are revered in the city and county which long represented his home.

Hugh B. Hagen was born December 7, 1866, and when Huntington was founded the future city came to him rather than his having gone to the city. From the corn field and meadow he has seen every phase of the growth and development of Huntington, and his loyalty to the place and his native county has never wavered, but rather has found expression in civic liberality and effective contribution to business advancement. He completed his youthful education in Marshall College when sixteen years of age, and in 1884 he entered the service of the First National Bank of Huntington, at a time when it had only two office executives, who did all the detail work. In this institution he won advancement to the position of paying teller. In 1887 he aided in the organization of the wholesale grocery firm of Hagen, Ratcliff & Company, and he has been an influential factor in the development and upbuilding of the large and prosperous business. The concern was eventually incorporated, as a matter of commercial and financial expediency, and he is now its president. He continues a member of the directorate of the First National Bank, and is one of the quiet, unostentatious and substantial citizens and business men who have made the name of Huntington a synonym of civic and commercial integrity and progressiveness. Mr. Hagen has received the thirty-second degree of the Scottish Rite of the Masonic fraternity, is a member of the Mystic Shrine, is a democrat in politics, and he and his family hold membership in the Johnson Memorial Church. He has had no desire for public office, but his civic loyalty has been shown by his service in past years as a member of the city council. Mr. Hagen married Miss Etta Gaines, and they have four children.

JOHN EDWIN ROBERTSON, M. D. The fine little City of Logan, judicial center of the West Virginia county of the same name, claims Doctor Robertson as one of its representative physicians and surgeons, he having been established in practice since 1913 and his popularity and prestige being reinforced by the fact that he is a native son of Logan County. He was born at Logan on the 3d of August, 1888, and is a son of S. B. and Etta (Bryan) Robertson, both likewise natives of West Virginia. S. B. Robertson is engaged in the wholesale grocery business at Logan and is one of the leading citizens of Logan County, where he has been prominent and influential in civic affairs as well as in the domain of business enterprise. He served as sheriff of Logan County four years, 1900-1904, he and his wife are zealous members of the Presbyterian Church, and he is affiliated with the Masonic fraternity, in which he has received the thirty-second degree of the Scottish Rite, besides being a member of the Mystic Shrine. He is a son of John Edwin Robertson, whose widow is now a resident of the City of Huntington. The Robertson family was founded in Virginia in an early day, as was also the Bryan family. The maternal grandfather of Doctor Robertson is a resident of Barbersville, Virginia, and is now venerable in years.

After attending the public schools of Logan, Doctor Robertson continued his studies in Alderson Academy, a preparatory institution at Alderson, Monroe County, and in 1909 he graduated from the Ohio Military Institute in the City of Cincinnati. In preparation for the profession of his choice he then entered the medical department of the University of Louisville, in which excellent Kentucky institution he was graduated as a member of the class of 1913, he having further fortified himself while attending this school by serving one year in Mount Hope Hospital at Huntington. Upon receiving his degree of Doctor of Medicine he returned to his native city, where he has since been engaged in active and successful practice and where he has gained specially high reputation as a surgeon of marked judgment and skill. He is a member of the surgical staff of the hospital at Logan, where most of the surgical work is assigned to him, and the demands placed upon him in this connection and in his general practice were such that he was not called into service in connection with the World war. Doctor Robertson is an active and valued member of the Logan County Medical Society and is identified also with the West Virginia State Medical Society and the American Medical Association. He and his wife are members of the Presbyterian Church in their home city.

At Louisville, Kentucky, in May, 1910, was solemnized the marriage of Doctor Robertson and Miss Helen James, daughter of A. B. and Ellen (Grey) James, both natives of the State of Indiana. Mr. James is engaged in the wholesale grocery business at Louisville. Doctor and Mrs. Robertson have one son, John Edwin, Jr.

HARRY MAGILL VENABLE, an ex-service man who was with the Engineers in France, is an engineer by profession and training, and has been a factor in the mining development of West Virginia. He is now superintendent of the McCall Coal Company at Christian in Logan County. He opened a mine, the location being established in May, 1920, and operations beginning in October of the same year. All this work has been done under his supervision.

Mr. Venable was born at Bellview, Kentucky, just over the Ohio River from Cincinnati, October 16, 1889, and is a son of Matthew W. and Mariah (Dyer) Venable. His father, who was born in Prince Edward County, Virginia, and is now seventy-four years of age, was a youthful soldier in the Confederate army, is a graduate of the University of Virginia, a civil engineer by profession, and for many years has employed his technical abilities in the development of mines in all the important fields of West Virginia. He now resides at Charleston. He has four living sons, the oldest being associated with his father in the M. W. Venable &

Son firm. Another son, W. W., is chief engineer of tippie construction with the Kanawha Manufacturing Company of Charleston. C. S. Venable is a constructing engineer in the Logan field. After the death of his first wife Matthew W. Venable married Anna Byrne, daughter of Col. Ben W. Byrne. By this union there are two sons, Ben, a captain in the United States Army, and Richard, a civil engineer living at Charleston.

Harry Magill Venable received his education in the Virginia Military Institute, and on leaving school in 1909 took up construction work and had a varied experience with opportunities of travel in South and Central America and in Mexico. For a number of years he had been associated with his father at Charleston, and he was also just before the war engaged in installation work for the Lincoln Smokeless Coal Company in Raleigh County.

In November, 1917, he enlisted at Washington in the Twenty-third Engineers, was trained at Camp Meade, Maryland, and was overseas until June, 1919. He received his honorable discharge at Camp Sherman. He was in the St. Mihiel, the Meuse and Argonne sectors, around Chateau Thierry, and was on the scene of much of the heavy fighting engaged in building highways and bridges. He was discharged with the rank of master engineer. Mr. Venable is a member of the Elks Lodge at Hinton, and in politics is non-partisan.

JOHN B. LAING, of Lewisburg, judicial center of Greenbrier County, has made a record of constructive enterprise as a coal operator and railroad builder in West Virginia, in which state the family residence was established when he was an infant. His father, James Laing, was born and reared in Scotland, and came thence to the United States in the year 1867. In Pennsylvania this sterling young Scotsman became identified with coal-mining enterprise, and there was solemnized his marriage with Miss Susanna Kay. In 1878 they came to West Virginia and settled in Fayette County. In 1888 removal was thence made to Raleigh County, where James Laing had charge of the opening up of the mines of the Royal Coal & Coke Company, which was the first coal corporation to initiate mining operations in that county. In 1896 Mr. Laing opened the first shaft and first slope on the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad, at Sun, on Loup Creek in Fayette County. Here he organized the Sun Coal & Coke Company, and here he continued operations until 1904, when he removed to Lewisburg, his death having here occurred in 1907. He was possessed of the thrift and the mature judgment that are characteristic of the Scotch type, and ordered his life on a lofty plane of integrity and honor—a man who was reserved, unostentatious, tolerant and kindly and animated by fine principles of personal stewardship, he having been a devout member of the Presbyterian Church, as is also his widow. Of their eight children the firstborn is Janet K.; Margaret died in infancy; and the names of the other children are here recorded in respective order of birth: John B., Thomas K., Anna J., James K., Susanna K. (wife of Dr. R. L. Spears), and Bess Belle (Mrs. Charles M. McWhorter).

John B. Laing was born in Mercer County, Pennsylvania, September 23, 1876, and, as before stated, was an infant at the time of the family removal to West Virginia. He received the full advantages of the public schools of this state, and at the age of twenty years became associated with his father in coal operations. In this connection he opened the mine at Sun and the Lanark Mine on Piney Creek in Raleigh County. He remained at Sun after the removal of his parents to Lewisburg, but since selling the mine property at the former place he has maintained his home and business headquarters at Lewisburg. He has given much of his time to the development of coal properties in the western part of Greenbrier County, under the corporate title of the Nelson Fuel Company and here is controlled by the company one of the best coal properties in the state, beside one of the last of the great smokeless fields to be developed, the product being a smokeless fuel of the best grade. In the development of this property it was found essential to provide a railroad outlet, and the result was that in 1919 the Greenbrier & Eastern Railroad Company was organized, its line having been completed in 1921 and this important work having been done under the direct and effective supervision of Mr. Laing. The road is eleven miles in length and at present connects with the Sewell Valley Railroad, an independent branch of the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad. This connection is at Meadow Creek. Mr. Laing erected the first all-steel tippie in Monroe County, it having five loading tracks (in addition to supply track) for the making of prepared coal. He is president of the Greenbrier & Eastern Railroad Company, is vice president of the Lewisburg & Ronceverte Electric Railway Company, is president of the Lewisburg Seminary, a director of the Bank of Lewisburg, and is president also of the McKinley Land Company, the Laing Mining Company, and the Craig-Giles Iron Company. It is uniformly conceded that he has done more for the development of the natural resources of Greenbrier County than has any other one man or minor group of men, and he has made definite incidental contribution to the civic and material advancement of the state in general.

April 20, 1898, recorded the marriage of Mr. Laing and Miss Margaret Nelson, and they became the parents of three children: Martha Spence, James and Andrew, the younger son having died in 1918, at the age of fifteen years. Mr. Laing is a Shriner Mason and a member of the Presbyterian Church.

JOHN T. SYDNOR. Though a young man, still in his early thirties, John T. Sydnor has held responsible positions with coal companies for seventeen years. He is general superintendent of mines Nos. 1 and 3 on Huff's Creek and No. 2 on the Guyandotte for the Mallory Coal Company, one of the largest operators in this section of Logan County. Since he became general superintendent he has done much to make Mallory an ideal mining town, and at the time of this writing is building a union church for the community.

He was born at Wilson, Dinwiddie County, Virginia, June 6, 1888, son of Thomas T. and Amantha (Reamis) Sydnor, natives of Dinwiddie County. His parents are still living, his father at seventy-five and his mother at seventy-three. His father became a courier for General Wise in the Confederate army at the age of fourteen, and was only seventeen when he was at Appomattox at the final surrender. He participated in the bloody fighting at the battle of the Crater at Petersburg, and was also at the evacuation of Richmond. After the war he continued his education with an academic course, and attended Hampden-Sidney College. His father, R. H. Sydnor, was a representative of the old Virginia aristocratic land holdings, planting and slave holding class. Thomas T. Sydnor after leaving school returned to the farm and worked on the plantation, but soon removed to Nottoway County, and is still engaged in the general mercantile business. He is a republican and a member of the Methodist Church. He and his wife had six sons and two daughters.

John T. Sydnor graduated from high school at his home town, spent one year in Allegheny Academy at Clifton Forge, Virginia, and with that education he entered the coal fields, but as a general student along technical lines involved in the coal industry. He has taken courses with the International Correspondence School, and is still a reader of everything pertaining to the practical side of coal operation.

In 1905 he entered the employ of the Thacker Coal and Coke Company as chief pay roll clerk at their mines in Mingo County. He was there five years, following which he was office man and pay roll clerk for the Red Jacket Coal Company, then general bookkeeper and assistant to the general manager of the Alburn Coal and Coke Company, and then transferred to Freeburn in Pike County, Kentucky, where he was cashier and later superintendent of mining operations. He was superintendent and later general superintendent for the Pond Creek Coal Company in Pike County, Kentucky. From there he came to Mallory as general superintendent for the Mallory Coal Company in October, 1920.

Mr. Sydnor in 1912 married Blanch Ford, of Huntington. She died in 1915. In 1918 he married Hettie E. Shay, daughter of A. M. Shay, of Olive Hill, Kentucky. They have one daughter, Doris. Mr. Sydnor is a member of the Masonic Lodge at Stone, Kentucky, the Royal Arch Chapter of Williamson, Huntington Commandery No. 9, K. T., Rose Croix Chapter of the Scottish Rite at Huntington, West Virginia Consistory No. 1, at Wheeling, and the Shrine at Charleston. He is also a member of the Elks, and is a democrat in politics.

John B. Laing.

HON. FRANCIS MARION REYNOLDS. A youthful attorney, with a certificate of proficiency signed by three judges at Morgantown, came to the Village of New Creek a few weeks after the close of the Civil war, and with a brief exception there has been no break in his career as lawyer, judge and man of affairs in this community. Considering the aggregate of his activities and achievements it is remarkable that even in such a period of years so much real work and usefulness could be credited one man. Undoubtedly, both now and for years past, Judge Reynolds has been one of the eminent men of his section of West Virginia.

Judge Reynolds was born in Taylor County, West Virginia, September 18, 1843. His grandfather, Cornelius Reynolds, was one of the first settlers in that part of the state, going there when Taylor was still a part of Harrison County. He came either from Fauquier or Loudoun County, Virginia. His brother John settled on West Fork in Harrison County about the same time, and the brothers probably made the journey over the mountains together with their families. This settlement was made about 1798. John Reynolds married Catherine Phillips, and, for his second wife, Frances Rogers. As a pioneer Cornelius Reynolds made available for cultivation some of the first wooded lands of the locality around Pruntytown, his home being a mile west of that old village. He lived there until his death in 1869, at the age of ninety-four. His father was in all probability a soldier of the Revolutionary war. Cornelius possessed a fair education. He married a Miss Ehart, and their two children were Cornelius Ehart and William. William later became sheriff of Taylor County and finally settled near St. Louis, Missouri.

Cornelius Ehart Reynolds, father of Judge Reynolds, was born on the old farm near Pruntytown in January, 1811. He had the opportunities afforded by the common schools of his day, and his life was devoted to his farm and his live stock, and with such energy and good judgment that he accumulated a substantial competence before his death. For a number of years he was justice of the peace, was president of the County Court under the old regime, and in every way a valuable citizen of his community. He was a member of the Methodist Protestant Church. Cornelius Ehart Reynolds, who died in January, 1885, married Phoebe Ellen Smith, and her father, Rev. John Smith, was a minister of the Methodist Protestant Church, and died and is buried in the Pruntytown locality. Phoebe Reynolds died in 1890. She was always deeply interested in her church. Her children were: George W., who spent his life in Taylor County, represented the county one time in the West Virginia Legislature as a democrat, and died when about eighty-one; Lemuel E., was a farmer near Pruntytown, where he died aged about seventy-one years; Delia A. lives near Pruntytown, wife of James Burnside, a farmer and stock dealer; Charles W., was a farmer and stock man at Pruntytown and a member of the Board of Education there; and Judge Francis M.

Francis M. Reynolds' youth was passed in the rural conditions that prevailed in the '40s and '60s, and the first school he attended was held in an old log cabin. Later he attended school at Pruntytown, and in 1862 entered the old academy at Morgantown. He remained there two years, and on two occasions was called out with other members of the militia to defend New Creek, now Keyser. One time the troops got about six miles from Morgantown and the other time went as far as Grafton. While at Morgantown Judge Reynolds studied law in the office of Judge Bunker, of the firm Bunker & Brown, and after completing his studies he presented himself before the three judges, Ralph Berkshire, John A. Dilley and Thomas Harrison, who examined him and signed his certificate.

It was in June, 1865, that Judge Reynolds moved to what was still known as New Creek, then in Hampshire County, with county seat at Romney. He tried his first case at New Creek before Justice of the Peace Joseph Ritzell. Shortly afterward he removed to Romney and practiced there until Mineral County was formed by the Legislature in 1866. He then returned to New Creek, the county seat of the new county, and began practice with William Welch as a partner. This firm was soon dissolved, and Judge Reynolds practiced alone for a number of years, then for a time was with Judge J. T. Hoke as Reynolds & Hoke, and after that he continued his legal work alone until he went on the bench.

Judge Reynolds had the privilege of casting his first presidential vote for Abraham Lincoln in 1864. He is now one of the oldest republican voters in the state, and has done a great deal of work in behalf of the party during many campaigns. He served two terms as prosecuting attorney of Mineral County, being elected in 1872 and again in 1888, each term being for four years. At the same time and for twelve years altogether he was prosecuting attorney for Grant County, and while in that office he took a prominent part in the county seat fight which terminated in favor of Petersburg. In 1894 he was elected a member of the House of Delegates, and in 1900 was again sent to the House and re-elected in 1902. In each term he was chairman of the finance committee and a member of the judiciary committee and was designated floor leader of the House of his party. He twice voted for Stephen B. Elkins for United States Senator. As chairman of the finance committee he devoted much of his time in study to the new tax laws enacted while he was in the Legislature.

A long and active association as a lawyer and its public service admirably qualified him for his next important post of duty, as judge of the Sixteenth Judicial Circuit. This was a new district recently formed, comprising the counties of Mineral, Tucker and Grant. He was elected judge of this court in 1904, and in 1912 was re-elected in spite of the sweeping democratic victory of that year. His service on the bench covered a period of sixteen years, and when he retired in December, 1920, he at once resumed his law practice, and though now in the shadow of his eightieth year, his intellectual vigor is apparently undimmed.

Judge Reynolds has been a member of the council and mayor of Keyser, and while he was on the Board of Education the first school house was erected in Keyser. He was once nominated for Congress, and made the campaign against William L. Wilson, the father of the Wilson tariff bill. He was republican nominee for judge of the Supreme Court of Appeals in 1890, when the republicans were in the minority. He served one term as a member of the Republican State Executive Committee, and was a delegate to the national convention of 1896 when Major McKinley was nominated at St. Louis. He was a member of the platform committee and was one of the seven members of that committee of more than fifty who voted in favor of the gold standard. Judge Reynolds has been a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church since 1870, for half a century has held the post of steward and for fifty-one years continuously has been superintendent of the Sunday school. His only fraternity is the National Union.

His business enterprise, directed always on a high plane of public spirit, is an important addition to his record as a lawyer and public servant. The old Town of New Creek was renamed Keyser in 1873 in honor of William Keyser, of Baltimore, then a vice president of the Baltimore & Ohio Railway. Judge Reynolds was one of the promoters of the original Keyser Bank, opened in 1887, served as its president, and in 1902 became president of the First National Bank, which succeeded the old institution. He has been president of this national bank for twenty years. In 1894 he helped organize the Keyser Electric Light Company and became its president; was one of the promoters of the Potomac Milling and Ice Company; helped organize the Piedmont Grocery Company in 1903, and is president and director; was an organizer of the Siever Hardware Company and became one of its directors. He built the Reynolds Hotel, the leading public house in Keyser, also the Post Office Building and several other business sections and a number of residences. His home is one of the more substantial residences of the city and occupies a conspicuous site. Judge Reynolds had some part in the coal development of this region, for many years has owned and operated farming lands, and from his farm has supplied some of the high class Hereford and Holstein blood to the cattle herds of the county.

On October 27, 1866, at Morgantown, Judge Reynolds married Miss Belle R. Hennen. She was born at Fairmont in 1845, daughter of Washington and Justina (Shay) Hennen, is a graduate of the old female college in Morgantown, and was a teacher for a brief time before her marriage. The three surviving children of Judge Reynolds are: Edward Bunker, of Keyser, George H., of the same city, and Nina R., widow of the late L. T. Carskadon, of Keyser.

JAMES CLARK SANDERS. To men and women "born to teach," education calls out every degree of enthusiasm and devotion and provides satisfactions that in a measure compensate for the poor financial rewards attending the profession. The highly constructive work performed by Mr. Sanders in the educational system of Keyser is the source of the generous esteem paid him and to a degree that many of the more prosperous class financially might envy.

Mr. Sanders is a member of an old family of West Virginia, and was born at Maidsville, Monongalia County, January 31, 1872. The founder of the West Virginia branch of the family was John Sanders, who was one of the men sent out by Alexander Hamilton, then secretary of the United States Treasury, to collect the revenue on distilled whisky in the Alleghany region. The refusal of the whisky makers to pay the tax brought on the "whisky rebellion," such as described in every American history. John Sanders eventually settled in Monongalia County, and remained there in business as a stock dealer and drover. However, he is buried at Duck Creek, Delaware. His children were Jefferson; John; Susan, wife of Crawford B. Dailey; Mary, who married Michael White; Sarah, who became the wife of John White, a nephew of Michael; and Thomas S.

Of these children John Sanders, Jr., grandfather of Professor Sanders, was born, lived and died in Monongalia County. By his marriage to Elizabeth Houston he had the following children: Hettie, who married Professor A. L. Wade; James, of whom more is said in the following paragraph; Sarah, who married Samuel Hackney; Elizabeth, who became Mrs. Cyrus Courtney, and died at Delphos, Kansas; Mrs. Lucinda Arnett, who recently died in Monongalia County; John, who was a Federal soldier and otherwise lived in Monongalia County; and Melissa, who never married. The second wife of John Sanders was Sarah Hunt, and they had three children: William and McClellan, now living in Iowa; and Ettie, wife of Dow Ours, living at Kenosha, Wisconsin.

James Sanders was born December 27, 1832, and was liberally educated for his day. For a time he was a teacher in Greene County, Pennsylvania, but eventually settled down on a farm. He also conducted a tannery in his section of Monongalia County. He was a man of industry himself, and he taught his children the ways of honest workmanship. His death occurred in February, 1916. His wife was Sarah Miller, who was born in 1839, and died November 30, 1915. Her parents were Amherst and Sarah (Locke) Miller. The Millers came to Monongalia County about 1800 from Connecticut. The children of James Sanders and wife were: Luther, of Cassville, West Virginia; Harry, of the firm of Sanders & Miller, of Morgantown, West Virginia; Elizabeth, wife of A. T. Billingslea, of Mount Morris, Pennsylvania; John, who died just as he attained manhood; Virginia, who married Professor T. W. Hendricks, of Culpeper, Virginia; James Clark, of Keyser; Miss Winnie, a milliner in Pittsburgh; Lawrence D., deceased, whose wife and family live in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania; and Maude, who married Bruce Bailey, a civil engineer, and lives at Fairmont, West Virginia.

James C. Sanders during his early life at the old homestead in Monongalia County became acquainted with the duties of the farm and also the tanyard. He attended the schools there, and at the age of seventeen qualified as a teacher. His first school was near Mount Morris, in his home community, and his last work as a rural teacher was done in Monongalia County. He did some county normal work in his native county under the direction of former Governor W. E. Glascock, then county superintendent. In 1890 Mr. Sanders entered West Virginia University, where he majored in chemistry, and graduated A. B. in 1896. A period of more than a quarter of a century has intervened since he left university prepared for more efficient work as a teacher. During the next five years he was principal of the high school at Hodgesville, Berkeley County, West Virginia, and while there he brought the school to the standing of the first grade high school, so that its graduates were admitted to the State University without examination. During 1902-03 Mr. Sanders was principal of the graded school in Piedmont, associated with Superintendent W. M. Folk. While there he was offered the vice principalship of the State Preparatory School at Keyser, and his duties in that new position made him a resident of Keyser in 1903. The State Preparatory School is now known as the Potomac State College. He was its vice principal nine years, and resigned when elected superintendent of the city schools of Keyser, succeeding J. W. Stayman.

Mr. Sanders has been the official head of the school system at Keyser for ten years. It is possible to note only briefly some of the outstanding features of the school improvements during this time. When he became superintendent the enrollment was about 800 pupils, and it has since doubled. The grade school building has been modernized, the Davis property purchased and on it a new junior high school completed at a cost of $150,000. The high school enrollment has increased from less than 100 to about 250 students. Departments of manual training, domestic science and domestic art have been added, and the high school course revised to conform with the national committee requirements for college entrance. The high school is a member of the Southern Association of High Schools, and graduates from it are admitted to all the first class colleges without examination.

Mr. Sanders is well known in the educational centers of the state. He has been secretary and treasurer of the State Educational Association of West Virginia for a number of years, was a member of the State Book Board in 1917, and at different times has been a member of the examining board of the state.

At Cassville, West Virginia, August 26, 1897, Mr. Sanders married Miss Mary Morris, daughter of Dr. Flora and Emma K. (Kelley) Morris. Her father was reared at Mount Morris, Pennsylvania, practiced the profession of medicine for many years and died at Berwick, Illinois. He was a son of Maj. J. B. Morris, who was a Union officer in the Civil war. The widow of Major Morris is still living, a resident of Morgantown, at the age of ninety-six. The widow of Doctor Morris lives in Keyser, at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Sanders. Doctor Morris and wife had four children: Lena, wife of Harry Bowly, of Morgantown; Mrs. Mary Sanders, who was born at Mount Morris, Pennsylvania, March 28, 1879; Emma, wife of Charles Cordry, of Cassville; and James Morris, a civil engineer at Huntington. Mr. and Mrs. Sanders have a family of three sons, named James Morris, John K. and George Thomas.

During the period of the great war Mr. Sanders, like other patriotic citizens, assumed a share of additional duties, and rendered some good service as county food administrator. He was also a member of the County Council of Defense. He is a Master Mason, a member of the Modern Woodmen of America and the Patriotic Sons of America, belongs to the Keyser Rotary Club, and is a steward in the Methodist Episcopal Church and teacher of the Men's Bible Class.

LUKE McDOWELL. Education, like many other vital interests of mankind, has been undergoing great changes of objective and method in recent years. That the new elements, proved and tested as to their results, are getting introduced into many conservative and old-time sections of West Virginia is due in no small measure to the progressive attitude and enlightened leadership of such school men as Luke McDowell, who has been an educator at heart all his active years and who several years ago was promoted to the responsibility of county superintendent of Mineral County.

Mr. McDowell was born near Burlington, Mineral County, June 15, 1876, son of Thomas and Mary (Rogers) McDowell, his mother being a daughter of William and Mary (Parker) Rogers. The McDowells originated in County Londonderry, Ireland. The first American of the name was Joseph McDowell, who was also of Scotch ancestry, while his wife was of English stock. Thomas McDowell was born in New York City, May 9, 1828. His parents came to Western Virginia and settled on a farm when Mineral County was included in Hampshire County. The grandfather of Joseph McDowell had been a railroad laborer, but after settling in Mineral County exchanged that work for farming. Thomas McDowell received his education before the days of free schools, and his time and labor were devoted to the tilling of the soil. He was a member of the Virginia Militia before the Civil war, and was commissioned captain of a company by Governor Joe Johnson of Virginia. He lived a quiet, efficient and steadfast life in his community, was a good citizen and believed in progress, and for years was a class leader and an officer in the Ridgeville Methodist Church. His scholarship was of no mean quality in Biblical literature, and he wrote and left behind him some manuscripts that betray a wide knowledge of the Bible and religious subjects. He began voting as a democrat, but voted for Lincoln in 1864, while his father had voted for Breckinridge for president in 1860. When Thomas McDowell was eighty-eight years of age he walked five miles to cast his ballot for the republican ticket in the election of 1916. This venerable old citizen of Mineral County passed away September 30, 1920, at the age of ninety-two. His wife died April 14, 1907. A brief record of their children is as follows: Martha E., widow of J. W. Roberts, living at McCoole, Maryland; Joseph W., farming the old homestead; Alexander S., who died February 18, 1922, leaving a large family at Dartmouth, West Virginia, where he was blacksmith for the Davis Coal and Coke Company; Angeline, who died at Moorefield, West Virginia, in 1909, wife of W. F. Simmons and mother of two sons and two daughters; Marion, wife of L. A. High, Charleston, West Virginia; John T., who is owner of the old farm of his parents and one of the successful fruit growers in that section of the state; Henry L., of Keyser; Bessie, Mrs. J. T. Grove, of Luke, Maryland; Luke; and Miss Tirza, at home.

Luke McDowell acquired a public school education, and after completing the eighth grade passed satisfactory examination for a teacher's certificate. His first school was taught at the age of nineteen, in the Red Star School in Welton District of Mineral County. He continued teaching for several years, but after his marriage, as a means of supporting his own home, he took up carpenter work and also learned cabinet making in the Keyser Table Factory. Through employment at these mechanical trades he was able to supplement his wages as a teacher in the winter, but for several years he gave up teaching altogether in favor of his trade. He resumed school work in the rural districts, and it was while teaching at Paris that he put into practice some of the fundamental principles of modern education of the hand as well as the mind. Largely at his own initiative and expense he put up a little work shop where he could train the boys in the use of tools. He did this in order to create a greater interest and make school more attractive to the boys. With tools provided by him and some by the community and with his own skill as a practical cabinet maker he made this department a marvel of efficiency and instilled a new life and vitality into school. It was this work, then, in a small county community, that brought him to the attention of the Board of Education of Keyser, and led to his accepting their offer that he become the teacher of manual training in the schools there. He continued as instructor of manual training for the Keyser schools four years. On July 1, 1918, he left that work to accept appointment as county superintendent of schools as the successor of A. E. Sites, deceased. At the close of the unexpired term he became a candidate to succeed himself, and was elected in the fall of 1918. Since he has been superintendent he started the agitation for consolidation of rural schools in New Creek District. The movement was somewhat premature, and owing to strong opposition the plans were dropped until the community could be educated to accept consolidation as a proper means for securing better schools in the country districts. Mr. McDowell has accomplished a great deal of splendid work while county superintendent, though he has had unusual obstacles to contend with. He went into office while the World war was in progress and when many of the best qualified teachers had been attracted into other fields. He has worked hard and, in the main, successfully to give the schools competent and well trained teachers. He has also introduced the practice of awarding certificates of excellence to the pupils throughout the county who showed the greatest proficiency in any one branch, whether it be penmanship, mathematics, history, and this has done much to encourage pupils who have a real bent for some particular line, though they could never hope to excel in all the branches and studies that comprise a school curriculum.

Mr. McDowell is a republican, casting his first vote for McKinley in 1900. He is a past grand and has been secretary of Queens Point Lodge No. 78, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, is a past consul of Camp No. 8070, Modern Woodmen of America, and is recording steward of the First Methodist Episcopal Church of Keyser and superintendent of its junior Sunday school.

At Keyser, March 9, 1898, Mr. McDowell married Miss Mary E. Davis, who was born in the Burlington community of Mineral County, February 24, 1876, daughter of William and Martha (Stewart) Davis, and second in their family of children. The oldest is James T. Davis and the other two are Mrs. H. W. Clark and Mrs. J. W. Minear. Mrs. McDowell acquired a rural school education, and she began teaching in the same school where her husband had taught his first term, but after this term closed she was married and has since had a busy routine of caring for her home and rearing her own children. These children are: Marie, a graduate of the Keyser High School, who taught for one year and is now office assistant to her father; Russell, a graduate of the Keyser High School and in the employ of T. B. Rogers & Son of Keyser, merchants; Lester, also a high school graduate and now a freshman in the Potomac State School; Elizabeth and Lucille, both attending high school; and James Henry.

LESTER J. HUDSON is prominently concerned with the industrial activities of the City of Huntington, where he is manager of the United States Chain & Forging Company, the extensive plant of which, together with the general offices, is situated at Fifteenth Street, West, and Adams Avenue. This well ordered corporation, one of the most important in its special field of enterprise in the United States, manufactures a large variety of iron and steel chains, especially for railroad and dredging purposes, and Mr. Hudson has the general supervision of the work of 125 employes.

Lester J. Hudson was born in Wood County, Ohio, July 5, 1887, and is a son of Frank M. and Catherine (Miller) Hudson, both natives of Seneca County, Ohio, where the former was born in 1853 and the latter in 1855, the father being now a resident of Deshler, Henry County, that state, and being still active in the supervision of his fine farm in that county, his wife having passed to the life eternal in 1917. He is a republican in political adherence and is a zealous member of the Presbyterian Church, as was also his wife. Gaylord, eldest of their children, is an electrician and resides at Deshler; Laura is the wife of Henry Wentz, of Elkhart, Indiana; Elmer is a farmer near Attica, Ohio; Lester J., of this sketch, and his twin brother, Chester A., were next in order of birth, the latter being an employment manager in the City of Cleveland, Ohio.

Frank M. Hudson was reared and educated in his native county, where his marriage was solemnized and where he continued his activities as a farmer until he removed to Wood County, Ohio. In the latter county he was engaged in farm enterprise until 1892, since which year he has been one of the substantial exponents of agricultural and livestock enterprise in Henry County, that state.

After attending the district schools of Henry County, Ohio, Lester J. Hudson there continued his studies in the high school at Deshler until his graduation in 1907. He taught two terms of school in that county, and in 1910 he graduated from the Lima Business College at Lima, Ohio. He then became stenographer in the offices of the Standard Chain Company at St. Marys, Ohio, and he so thoroughly familiarized himself with the details of the business that he won consecutive advancement and finally, in 1912, was made manager of the company. In 1918 this concern sold its plant and business to the American Chain Company, and Mr. Hudson was transferred to the latter's plant at Columbus, Ohio, where he held the position of purchasing agent three months. He then, in November, 1919, resigned and accepted his present responsible office, that of manager of the United States Chain & Forging Company.

Mr. Hudson is a thoroughgoing republican, but has had no desire for political office. He and his wife are members of the Fifth Avenue Baptist Church at Huntington, in which he is a member of the church orchestra. He is a past grand of Shawnee Lodge, I. O. O. F., at St. Marys, Ohio, where he is affiliated also with St. Marys Lodge No. 219, Knights of Pythias. He is a member of the West Side County Club of Huntington. He gave loyal service in support of the various patriotic movements in connection with the World war, and was specially active in advancing local campaigns in support of the Government bond issues, he having been responsible for bonds sold to the employees of the company of which he was an executive.

At Pittsfield, Illinois, in 1917, Mr. Hudson wedded Miss Cora C. Laugh, who was born near Cincinnati, Ohio, and who graduated from high school in that city and also from a training school for nurses. Mr. and Mrs. Hudson have no children.

Mr. Hudson is a scion of one of the sterling pioneer families of the old Buckeye State, his paternal grandfather having been born in Seneca County, Ohio, in 1817, a date that indicates the pioneer priority of the family in that commonwealth. In his native county the grandfather became the owner of a valuable landed estate and was an extensive and successful farmer, his death having there occurred in 1897.

HARRY F. COFFMAN, M. D., took up the work of general practice at Keyser with a thoroughness of training and breadth of experience that at once made him one of the most useful men in the profession of medicine in Mineral County. He located at Keyser in 1917.

Doctor Coffman was born in the picturesque Valley of Virginia, on a farm near Woodstock, March 28, 1883. His great-grandfather, Adolph Coffman, a German ancestor, moved from Pennsylvania to the Valley of Virginia about 1785. Reuben A. Coffman, grandfather of Doctor Coffman, was a native of Shenandoah County, was a slave holder before the war and devoted his entire life to his plantation. He married a Miss Hollar, and they were the parents of fourteen children. Several of the sons were in the Confederate army, and one or two of them gave up life in battle for the cause of the South.

David W. Coffman, father of Doctor Coffman, was a native of Shenandoah County, had a common school education, and for some years followed farming, but later took up railroad service with the Baltimore & Ohio at Cumberland, Maryland, and is still on duty there. He married Annie L. Richards, also a native of Shenandoah County. Her father, Capt. John A. Richards, was a captain in the Confederate army during the war. The children of David W. Coffman and wife are: Dr. Harry Franklin, of Keyser; Lucy R., wife of Clyde L. Smith, of Morgantown, West Virginia; Durus D., of Cumberland, Maryland; Mary A., wife of Henry Bailey, of Bedford, Ohio; Nellie F., wife of Carl C. Stump, of Cumberland; and John David, who is attending high school at Cumberland.

Harry F. Coffman lived in Shenandoah County until he was about twenty years of age. He attended the country schools, the New Market High School, and in 1909, after he had been earning his own way for some years, graduated from the Alleghany Academy at Cumberland, Maryland. He learned telegraphy at Plains, Virginia, and while at Cumberland, he was employed as a utility man and in January, 1905, assigned a regular place in the Cumberland yards of the Baltimore & Ohio. He resumed and continued that work through the summer vacations while he was completing his medical course. In 1909 he entered the University of West Virginia Medical School, finished his course in 1911, and took advanced work in the College of Physicians and Surgeons at Baltimore, where he graduated in 1913. Doctor Coffman in March, 1914, became assistant medical examiner for the Baltimore & Ohio system, with headquarters at Cleveland, his special jurisdiction being the Northern district of Ohio. On June 3, 1917, the railroad company transferred him to Keyser, West Virginia, where he continued similar duties until April 1, 1918, and at that date began the general practice of medicine.

Doctor Coffman is one of the thoroughly modern physicians and surgeons, never satisfied with present attainments and always seeking opportunities to keep in touch with the broad march of the profession. In 1921 he took post-graduate work in the Western Reserve University of Cleveland. He is president of the Four-County Medical Society, including Grant, Hampshire, Hardy and Mineral counties. He is designated medical examiner for the Veterans Bureau, and during the World war he was one of the medical board of five members comprising the Advisory Board in Keyser. In addition to these duties and his private practice he served as health officer of Keyser for two years. He is a member of the Phi Kappa Psi medical fraternity, belongs to the Church of the Brethren and in politics is a republican.

At Mansfield, Illinois, September 28, 1915, Doctor Coffman married Ruth E. Swartz, who was born in Pike County, Illinois, March 10, 1892, daughter of John J. and Mary (Elliott) Swartz. The three children of Doctor and Mrs. Coffman are Harry Franklin, Jr., born in 1916, Mary Elizabeth, born in 1919, and Ralph Swartz, born in 1921.

CHARLES N. FINNELL. Thirty years a member of the West Virginia bar, Charles N. Finnell has done his best work as a lawyer since locating at Keyser. His practice has been satisfying to a degree that he has needed no outside sources of income, though in later years he has acquired some business interests in that section of the state. He has been in politics for the good of the community and not for office, and his public service has been almost entirely within the line of his profession.

Mr. Finnell was born at Morgantown, West Virginia, July 17, 1867. His grandfather was William Finnell, also a native of Monongalia County, where he was a substantial farmer. His home was near Granville, that county, and he died about 1886, at the age of eighty-four. William Finnell married a Miss Tapp, and their four sons and two daughters were: Robert A., who spent his life near Morgantown; Alonzo, mentioned below; Evander, who died near Morgantown; Webster, who lived in Monongalia County; Theodosia, who died as the wife of A. Wesley Snider; and Miss Fannie.

Alonzo Finnell, father of the Keyser lawyer, was a native of Monongalia County, and had to his credit a service of three years as a Union soldier in a West Virginia regiment. He spent his active life in the butcher business at Morgantown. He died in 1877, at the age of forty-one. He married Louisa Hare, who was born on the farm of her father near Morgantown, March 19, 1838, and is now eighty-four years of age, living at Long Beach, California. Her father was John Hare. Her brother, Silas W. Hare, was a first lieutenant in the Fourteenth West Virginia Infantry during the Civil war, and he was on duty for part of two years around Keyser, then called New Creek. He is now eighty years of age and a resident of Los Angeles, California. Another soldier of the family was Elias C. Finnell, an uncle of Alonzo Finnell. He was captain of Company I, of the Fourteenth West Virginia Infantry, and after the war moved out to Illinois, where he died. Alonzo Finnell and wife reared only two children, Charles Newton and Miss Belle V., the latter living at Long Beach, California, with her mother.

Charles N. Finnell was reared at Morgantown and had the advantages of the schools of that educational center. He finished high school and took the classical course at the West Virginia University, graduating A. B. in 1889. For three years he taught school, and then he re-entered the university for his law course, graduating in 1893. After being admitted to the bar he sought a location at Parsons in Tucker County, and while there was a member of the firm Finnell & Conley. He tried his first law suit there. Then, in 1895, he moved to Keyser, and since then has been alone in practice. He does a general practice, and his interests as a lawyer has acquired his attendance at the courts of all the adjoining counties, in the State Supreme Court and also the Federal Courts. Early in his career he was admitted to practice in the United States Court.

In the line of his profession he served Mineral County as prosecuting attorney four years, being elected in 1900 as successor to Frank C. Reynolds. He did not seek re-election. He served two terms as city attorney, declining reappointment for the third time. As a leader in the republican party Mr. Finnell was chairman of the Congressional Committee of the Second West Virginia District from 1908 to 1912, and has been a delegate to a number of congressional and state conventions. He is serving his third term as a member of the Board of Education of the Keyser Independent District, and was president of the board when the Col. Tom Davis property was acquired for school purposes, this being the site upon which the new high school has recently been completed. Mr. Finnell cast his first presidential vote for Benjamin Harrison in 1888.

In Masonry he is affiliated with the lodge at Keyser, where he was raised, and is a thirty-second degree Scottish Rite Mason in the West Virginia Consistory at Wheeling, and a member of Osiris Temple of the Mystic Shrine in the same city.

At Parsons, West Virginia, October 9, 1901, Mr. Finnell married Miss Lena Rees Blackman, a native of Tucker County and educated at Parsons. Her parents were Silas R. and Mary (McGuffin) Blackman. Her mother died in 1899, at the age of forty-eight. Her father, who died at Parsons in 1920, at the age of seventy-one, was a native of Beverly, this state, and spent his life as a farmer. Mrs. Finnell was born November 24, 1874, the oldest of five children, the others being: Philadelphia Blackman, of Washington, D. C.; Miss Harriet, deceased; Mary S., wife of E. A. Hays, of Elkins; and Judson S., of Shinnston. Mr. and Mrs. Finnell have four children. The oldest, Robert Blackman, graduated from the Keyser High School and is now a student in the West Virginia University. John Hare is attending high school at Keyser. The two youngest children are Elizabeth Harriet and Ruth.

Among business interests, now strictly professional, Mr. Finnell has become a stockholder in several orchard companies in the vicinity of Keyser. He is attorney for the Peoples Bank of that city, and one of the counsel of the Western Maryland Railway Company. During the World War he was a member of the Registration Board to register all men subject to the draft, and later served as chairman of the Draft Board of Mineral County and still later was a member of the Legal Advisory Board. He was one of the busy men in this section building up patriotic sentiment and made a number of addresses over the county.

ROY E. WISEMAN spent eight years of his young life in the service of the Western Maryland Railroad, as agent and Telegrapher, and was still under thirty when he was nominated and elected assessor of his native county of Mineral. He is one of the most popular men in the county seat at Keyser.

Mr. Wiseman was born near Elk garden in Mineral County, November 12, 1892. His grandfather, Dolphus Wiseman, came to West Virginia from New York State, and devoted his active life to farming. He died about 1895, at the age of eighty-eight. He had only one son, the late John Wiseman, who was born in New York and was brought to West Virginia when a child. He served as a Government teamster for the Union army during the Civil War. Otherwise his years were devoted to his farm near Elk garden, where he died in January, 1917, at the age of seventy-six. He married Ann Nethken, daughter of Frederick Nethken and of Danish ancestry. Their children were: Charles L., of McCool, Maryland; John H., a photographer who died unmarried when a young man; James T., of Elk garden; Frederick P., who enlisted in the regular army about the close of the Spanish-American war, and during his three years' service made a trip around the world, and is now a resident of Luke, Maryland; Bertie C., wife of Stephen C. Green, of Elk garden; and Roy Edgell, who is the youngest child. The mother of these children is still living at the old homestead of Elk garden, at the age of seventy-two. She is a member of the Southern Methodist Church and comes of a democratic family, while her sons are equally divided in politics, two of them democrats and two republicans.

Roy E. Wiseman grew up on the farm, and had a part in its affairs until he was seventeen. He attended public school there, and he began learning telegraphy in the Elk garden station of the Western Maryland Railroad Company under the regular agent. After completing his period of training his first assignment to regular duty was at the lumber town of Dobbin, West Virginia. He went on the company pay roll in 1910, and when he resigned in 1918 he had done duty at twenty-three stations along the Western Maryland system, including a position for a time in the main office at Cumberland, and was classed as one among the fastest and best operators on the railroad.

When he left the railroad service Mr. Wiseman returned to farming, and for two years was a producer of food stuff in Mineral County. It was about this time that he became an aspirant for the office he now holds. In the primaries of 1920 he entered the field in which five other men sought the same office. He won the nomination by five votes over his nearest competitor, and as a republican was elected over his opponent by more than 800 votes. He entered upon his official duties at Keyser in January, 1921, as the successor of A. H. Metcalf. His first county assessment showed a gross gain of approximately $360,000, and the second year showed a gross gain of more than $300,000.

Mr. Wiseman was one of the promoters of the Elk District Highway, now under improvement and construction, running from Blaine, West Virginia, to the intersection of the Northwestern Turnpike. He is unmarried. During the World War he was not called into service, due to his railroad service, but he registered and was placed in the first class of drafted men.

Fraternally he was made a Mason at Piedmont, West Virginia, in 1915, a member of Mount Carbon Lodge No. 28, and has since become a member of the Scottish Rite Consistory No. 1, Wheeling, the Royal Arch Masons at Keyser and Osiris Temple of the Mystic Shrine, is a member of the Eastern Star, is a past chancellor of the Knights of Pythias and a member of the Pythian Sisters, has taken both the subordinate and encampment degrees of Odd Fellowship and is a Rebekah. He is a member of the Potomac Shriner Club of Keyser.

GEORGE T. CARSKADON. The Carskadon family is one of the oldest in the Eastern Panhandle, and has furnished a number of men of conspicuous ability and high character to that community and to the state at large. It is a Scotch name, and a son of the first Carskadon to come from Scotland was Thomas Carskadon, who established his home at Headville in what is now Mineral County. The old brick house he built is still standing and in use.

One of the prominent members of the family was the late James Carskadon, who was born in what was then Hampshire County, now Mineral County, in 1819. While his life work was mainly on his farm, he was a practical business man, and was one of the makers of the new State of West Virginia. In 1860 he was elected a member of the State Senate of Virginia, but did not take his seat at Richmond. Instead he joined the group of leaders from the western counties at Wheeling in the deliberations for the creation of a new state, and by virtue of his election was a member of the Provisional Government under Governor Pierpont, being a personal friend of Mr. Pierpont, who frequently visited at the Carskadon home. He became a member of the first State Senate of West Virginia, serving in the first and second Legislatures of 1863-64 and again was a member of the fifth and sixth Legislatures, in 1867-68, representing the Tenth District, including Mineral County. He was an active member of the Methodist Church.

James Carskadon married Rebecca Parker, who was born in Mineral County, some fifteen years her husband's junior. Her father, James Parker, died at Keyser in 1907, at the venerable age of ninety-six. James Parker married Jane Reese, and their children were: Susan, who married Abraham Johnson and lived in Mineral County; Mrs. Carskadon; and Thornton Parker, now a resident of Freeman, Missouri. Mrs. James Carskadon was the mother of a large family of eleven children, two of whom are Isaac, of Headsville, and George T. Carskadon of Keyser.

George T. Carskadon was born on New Creek, some three miles from the old Town of New Creek, on November 1, 1851. He grew up in the Headsville community, and the farm provided the scenes of his childhood activities. He was educated largely by teachers hired by his parents to instruct the children in their home. At the age of eighteen he entered West Virginia University at Morgantown, and witnessed the first graduation in the university. He was a student there in 1869-70, and since then a widening experience of fifty years has given him a mature knowledge of men and affairs. On leaving school he returned to the country and remained there until he was twenty-two, when he found, to quote his own words, "sprouts growing too fast for him," and consequently he gave up agriculture as a practical vocation and came to Keyser, which only recently had received that name instead of New Creek. Mr. Carskadon identified himself with Keyser in November, 1874, and entered general merchandising with his uncle, Thomas R. Carskadon. A few years later he bought his uncle's interest, and for about forty years was a leading merchant of the village, and probably no other man has been so long in business in one line as he. He sold out in 1917 and since then has turned his attention to other affairs.

Mr. Carskadon has been active in the development of the fruit industry in Mineral County. He was associated with his brother, James T. Carskadon, in planting the Carskadon orchard of apples and peaches on New Creek Mountain. They set out 100 acres, cared for it and brought it into a state of profitable bearing, but before realizing returns on their investment they sold the property in 1920. Mr. Carskadon has had a part in the promotion of other business enterprises at Keyser. He is a director of the First National Bank and of the Thompson Furniture Company, and is one of the large real estate owners in the town. He has contributed to other industries, but some of them failed to materialize as hoped for.

For many years he has been a republican leader in his section of the state. He cast his first vote for General Grant in 1872, and for half a century has given his vote to the republican ticket in national elections. He has been a member of the Council and Board of Education at Keyser, and in 1918 was elected a member of the County Court, succeeding George E. Klenke, of Piedmont. His colleagues on the board are J. F. Jenkins and Aaron Thrush. The chief problem handled by the board during his administration has been road building. Bonds to the amount of $200,000 were issued recently, and the expenditure of these funds for the purpose of road building is being handled by the present board. This program of modern highway construction includes the building of twenty miles of concrete and macadam roads from Keyser to Laurel Dale, another stretch from Keyser to Piedmont, and a mile from the cemetery to the county seat.

In convention days Mr. Carskadon was frequently a delegate to state and other republican conventions, and seldom missed the inaugurating ceremonies of the new governor each four years. He has had some honorary service, being appointed a colonel on the staff of Governor A. B. White, and served in a similar capacity on the staff of Governors Dawson, Glascock and Hatfield.

He joined the Masonic order at Keyser, and has taken all the degrees of the Scottish Rite except the supreme honorary thirty-third, being a member of the Consistory at Wheeling and Osiris Temple of the Mystic Shrine there. He is a past master of his lodge and has sat in the Grand Lodge. He has been on the official board of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

On February 4, 1875, at Mount Vernon, Ohio, Mr. Carskadon married Martha E. Johnson, who was born at Mount Vernon in 1860, daughter of James and Mary Jane (Morton) Johnson. Mr. and Mrs. Carskadon lived their lives together over forty years, the union being broken with the death of Mrs. Carskadon on March 21, 1917. Of their children Winfred J. is an employee of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Company at Keyser. Mary is the wife of Dr. J. T. Little, of Pittsburgh, and has a son, Jesse Carskadon Little. George A., who lives at home, is also a Baltimore & Ohio Railroad employee.

THOMAS J. JONES. The lumber industry at Huntington has had since 1919 a worthy, capable and progressive representative in the person of Thomas J. Jones, sole proprietor of the Leon G. Brown Lumber Company, a wholesale concern. For many years Mr. Jones was one of the best known figures in telegraphic circles, having held numerous important positions with the leading companies. He is purely a self-made man, as he has been making his own way since fourteen years of age, and the success that he has attained is added evidence of the value of the possession of the virtues of persistence, integrity and fidelity.

Mr. Jones was born at Dade City, Florida, December 9, 1871, a son of Matthew Jones. His father, who was born in 1819, was a veteran of the Seminole war as well as of the war between the states, in the latter of which he fought as a Union soldier. For a number of years he lived in Pasco County, Florida, where he carried on extensive operations as an agriculturist, and his death occurred at Dade City, that state, in 1879. He was a democrat in politics, fraternized with the Masons, and was a local preacher of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Mr. Jones married Miss Emily Jackson, who died near Dade City in 1880, and they became the parents of the following children: William A., who resides at St. Petersburg, Florida, and is engaged in the real estate business; Mary, the wife of John O'Berry, a farmer of Blanton, Florida; Martha, who married Isham Howell, and died at Terraeca, Florida, where Mr. Howell is engaged in farming; Emily, who married Newton D. Eiland, and is now deceased; James M., superintendent of the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company at Brunswick, Georgia; Leila, the wife of Clarence Lockhart, a farm owner of Jacksonville, Florida; Thomas J., of this review; Julia, who died as the wife of John Klein, a prominent farmer of Melrose, Minnesota; and Marvin, superintendent for the Pressed Steel Car Company at McKee's Rock, Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania.

Thomas J. Jones was reared on a farm near Dade City, Florida, and as his parents died when he was still a lad his education in the public schools was cut short when he was fourteen years of age, at which time he went to Tampa, Florida, and learned the cigar-making business, at which he spent three years. His next location was San Antonio, Florida, where he entered the railway station and learned the art of telegraphy, a field of endeavor in which he made rapid strides. He followed this line of work with the Orange Belt Railway, now a part of the Atlantic Coast system, until 1890, in which year he joined the Florida East Coast Railway and remained with that system for six years. He was then with the Plant system, now a part of the Atlantic Coast system, with which he remained until 1898 as a telegrapher, being then made rate clerk, a post which he held until April, 1899. At that time he removed to Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, and joined the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad in the train dispatcher's office, but November 6, 1899, left that post and joined the Pressed Steel Car Company at McKee's Rock, Pittsburgh, as general file clerk, a position which he held until 1905. He was then head of the order department until May 25, 1910, when he resigned and joined the Western Union Telegraph Company as a branch manager in the Stock Exchange at Pittsburgh. On October 1, 1911, he became district manager of the Western Union Telegraph Company, covering Northern West Virginia and Western Pennsylvania. On April 1, 1912, he was appointed district cable manager at Pittsburgh, covering the states of West Virginia, Maryland, Pennsylvania and New York, and June 1, 1916, was made district commercial manager, covering Western Pennsylvania, with headquarters at Pittsburgh. He received further promotion August 1, 1916, when he was appointed district commercial manager of the Western Union Telegraph Company, in charge of all offices in West Virginia, with headquarters at Huntington, and resigned this position March 1, 1919, at which time he engaged in the wholesale lumber business by becoming sole owner of the Leon G. Brown Lumber Company. Mr. Jones' offices are situated at 717½ Ninth Street, and he has built up one of the leading enterprises of its kind at Huntington. He has a splendid reputation for business integrity, and has the esteem and confidence of all with whom he has been identified whether in a business or social way. In politics Mr. Jones is a democrat, but he has never taken more than a good citizen's interest in political matters. His religious connection is with the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Fraternally he affiliates with Huntington Lodge No. 313, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. He took an active part in all local war activities, assisted in all the drives for funds for all purposes, bought bonds and War Savings Stamps, and contributed to the various organizations to the limit of his means.

On December 7, 1898, at Tampa, Florida, Mr. Jones was united in marriage with Miss Electa Carlin, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Carlin, the latter of whom is deceased. Mr. Carlin, a resident of Los Angeles, California, is a retired locomotive engineer, who was in the employ of the Fort Wayne Railroad for forty-two years. Six children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Jones: Marion Leila, Thomas Marvin and Margaret E., graduates of the Pittsburgh High School; and Melvin, Flavia and Regis, who are attending the graded schools of Los Angeles.

PAUL MONROE ROBINSON has secure status as one of the representative business men and loyal citizens of his native City of Clarksburg, Harrison County, where he is vice-president of the Union National Bank. He was born in Clarksburg on the 20th of October, 1863, and is a son of Joseph Lewis Robinson and Mary E. (Waters) Robinson. Joseph L. Robinson was born in Frederick County, Virginia, in 1827, the youngest of the five sons of John Thomas and Elizabeth (Emerson) Robinson. John Thomas Robinson was born in Prince William or Hanover County, Virginia, in 1781, a son of John C., who was a son of John, a son of William, who was a son of John, the latter having been a son of Christopher, who was a son of John Robinson. The lineage of the Robinson family in England traces back through many generations. The original progenitors of the American branch of the family came from Yorkshire, England, and settled in Virginia in the early Colonial period. John Robinson, who died at Cleasly in Yorkshire in 1661, was the father of John Robinson, who became minister to Sweden, bishop of London and otherwise prominent and influential in English affairs. Another son, Christopher, came to Virginia in 1666, and his son John was president of the council of Virginia, 1720-40, and for a time governor of the colony. The latter's sons were Christopher, William, Henry and John. Of these sons William became the father of John, who in turn was the father of John C. Robinson, the great-grandfather of him whose name initiates this review.

Joseph Lewis Robinson came to what is now Harrison County, West Virginia, in the year 1849. He was a shoemaker by trade, and for many years he was engaged in the mercantile business at Clarksburg, where he became a substantial and honored citizen. His wife, Mary E. (Waters) Robinson, died in 1864. She was born and reared in Maryland, a representative of an old and honored family of that commonwealth.

Paul M. Robinson was reared in the home of his maternal aunt, Mrs. Annie (Waters) Monroe, wife of James Monroe, who was an influential citizen of Clarksburg and who served both as sheriff and clerk of Harrison County. Mr. Robinson profited by the advantages of the public schools of his native city, and from his youth he has been actively associated with banking enterprise. In 1891 he became cashier of the Traders National Bank at Buckhannon, Upshur County, and in 1893 he was called to similar office in the West Union Bank at West Union, Doddridge County. He retained this position until 1900, when he became associated with Hugh Jarvis in organizing and establishing the Peoples Banking & Trust Company at Clarksburg. This institution, together with the Traders National Bank of Clarksburg, of which Mr. Robinson was for a time vice president and manager, was later merged into the Union National Bank, which was organized and incorporated in 1905, and which is one of the strongest and best ordered financial institutions in this section of the state. Mr. Robinson was one of the organizers of the Union National Bank, and has served continuously as its vice president from the time of its chartering.

He was chairman of the Liberty Loan Committee for Harrison County during the World war.

Before initiating his career in connection with banking enterprise Mr. Robinson served two years, 1890-91, as treasurer of the Monongahela River Railroad. From 1880 to 1887 he served as deputy clerk of Harrison County, and in 1887-8 he was clerk of the Circuit Court for this county.

The year 1901 recorded the marriage of Mr. Robinson and Miss Willa Jarvis, daughter of Lemuel D. and Martha (McCann) Jarvis, of Harrison County. Mr. and Mrs. Robinson have three children: Jenet, Paul Monroe, Jr., and Jarvis Beverly.

FRANK L. GRANT is a civil engineer and contractor, with experience in construction work over a large part of the eastern states. For a number of years he has had his home and headquarters in Clarksburg, where he handles an extensive business as a bridge and road building contractor.

Mr. Grant was born at Bryn Mawr, Montgomery County, Pennsylvania, June 20, 1880. His great-grandfather was Jacob Grant, a Scotchman, who came to the United States prior to the American Revolution and settled at the historic Town of Valley Forge, Pennsylvania, where he was a farmer and miller. He married Esther De Haven, daughter of Jacob De Haven. Jacob De Haven is mentioned in the annals of the Revolutionary war as a patriot who furnished Washington's army with extensive stores of flour. The grandfather of the Clarksburg engineer was William Henry Grant who was born at Valley Forge, Pennsylvania, in 1804 and married Esther Mitton. The father of Frank L. Grant was also William Henry Grant. He was born in Pennsylvania, lived his life in that state, and during the Civil war was a Union soldier in Company D of the Fifth Pennsylvania Cavalry. He was a landscape gardener by profession. His death occurred in 1907, at the age of sixty-five. He married Matilda Bond, daughter of Joseph Bond, a native of Pennsylvania. The Bonds were of Welch ancestry and Quakers in religion, while the Grants for the greater part have been Baptists. Matilda (Bond) Grant died in 1905, at the age of sixty-two. She was the mother of the following children: Alexander, who died young; Joseph V., a resident of Anniston, Alabama; William H., of Philadelphia; Frank L.; and Esther, deceased.

Frank L. Grant during his boyhood at Bryn Mawr attended common schools and later, as his practical experience made him realize the need, he improved his technical knowledge by courses in civil engineering with the International Correspondence School. While in the East he spent several years as superintendent of construction in Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Delaware and Maryland. Mr. Grant has been a resident of Clarksburg since 1913, and has built up an extensive business as a contractor. His specialty is bridges and street paving. He has handled a number of important contracts in West Virginia, Pennsylvania and North Carolina. He is a thoroughly responsible contractor, and has perfected an organization for efficient service in his line.

In 1900 he married Matilda Kyle, who was born at Manoa, Delaware County, Pennsylvania, and died in 1905, leaving three children: Gertrude M., Francis M. and Raymond D. Mr. Grant in 1909 married Fannie M. Gill, who was born and reared at Reedsville, Northernumberland County, Virginia. Mr. and Mrs. Grant are members of the St. Paul's Methodist Episcopal Church, South, at Clarksburg, of which he is a trustee. He is a Master Mason and an Elk.

JOHN CORNELIUS SOUTHERN, who was well established in the practice of his profession in his native City of Clarksburg at the time of his election to the bench of the Criminal Court of Harrison County, is one of the representative lawyers and jurists of the younger generation in this section of West Virginia, and he has the distinction of being a scion of one of the old and honored families of Harrison County. His great-grandfather, Samuel Southern, was born in the year 1804, in Eastern Virginia, and was the first to establish a nursery in what is now the State of West Virginia, a commonwealth famed for the excellence of its fruit. Samuel Southern was a young man when he came to Harrison County, where he became a leader in the progressive agricultural and fruit-growing industries of that early period. Here he continued his residence, as one of the prominent and influential citizens of the county, until his death in 1878. His son John, born in 1829, likewise became a prosperous farmer of this county, and here his death occurred in 1859. John Southern married Edith Ann Husted, and they became the parents of four children: Annetta, James R., George Cornelius and Lona Belle. Mrs. Southern was a daughter of Robert and Elizabeth (Corbin) Husted, who came to this part of West Virginia while it was still a part of Virginia.

George Cornelius Southern, above mentioned, was born and reared in Harrison County and here passed his entire life. He was born August 6 1837, and died April 15, 1921. He received the advantages of the public schools of the locality and period, and at the age of twenty years, in March, 1878, he initiated his independent business career in the City of Clarksburg, where for several years he successfully conducted a meat market. In March, 1886, he removed to Adamston, now a part of the City of Clarksburg, and for many years thereafter he was actively engaged in the real estate business, through which he did much to further the civic and material advancement of his native county, where he became associated also with other important business interests. He was known as the "Father of Adamston" as he was one of the foremost of the loyal and enterprising citizens who contributed to the development and upbuilding of that place. He was a stalwart in the ranks of the republican party and held minor political offices.

December 23, 1883, George C. Southern wedded Miss Elizabeth Catherine Gain who was born in Harrison County, March 1, 1857, a daughter of Rev. Eli and Martha (Morrison) Gain. Her father was a clergyman of the Baptist Church and was seventy years of age at the time of his death, which occurred in Doddridge County in 1891. Mrs. Southern still maintains her home in Clarksburg, and her only child is Judge John C. Southern, of this review.

After having profited fully by the advantages of the public schools of Clarksburg in which city he was born on the 17th of October, 1884, Judge Southern here continued his studies in Broadus College. In preparation for his chosen profession he later entered the law department of the University of West Virginia, at Morgantown, in which he was graduated in June, 1906. In the following September he was admitted to the bar at Clarksburg, and in this city he has continued his professional work, with secure standing as one of the representative members of the bar of his native county. In former years he was active and influential in the local councils of the republican party. He served four years as secretary and treasurer of the Republican Executive Committee of Harrison County. In 1920 he was made the republican nominee for judge of Criminal Court of Harrison County, and was elected to this office by a majority that attested the high estimate placed upon him in his native county. He assumed his position on the bench in January, 1921, and is giving a most effective administration. Judge Southern has received the thirty-second degree in the Scottish Rite of the Masonic fraternity and is affiliated also with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows.

On the 2d of October, 1909, was solemnized the marriage of Judge Southern and Miss Ida Jackson Gerst, of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania and they have two sons, John Cornelius, Jr., and Joseph Lewis.

TENMAN JAMES COFFMAN has been a resident of Harrison County for over seventy years, and for at least half a century of that period has been active in the lines of farming, merchandising and other business. His home for the past dozen years has been at Salem.

He was born on a farm in Harrison County, February 21, 1848, son of George W. and Sarah Ann (McIntyre) Coffman. His grandfather, Henry Coffman, was a native of Pennsylvania and as a young and single man came to Harrison County, where he married Miss Robinson, and lived in the county the rest of his life. The maternal grandparents of Tenman James Coffman were Zadoc and Keziah (Drummond) McIntyre. George W. Coffman and wife were both born and reared in Harrison County, and were the parents of ten children. The father died in 1868, at the age of forty-five and the mother in 1864. He was a whig and a republican in politics, and a Methodist, while his wife was a Baptist.

Tenman James Coffman spent his early life on the farm, attained a common school education, and the advantages of his youth have been supplemented by constant reading and close observation. Life with him has been an opportunity for the acquisition of knowledge as well as achievement in practical lines of business. He remained on the farm with his father until he was nineteen, and then started out for himself. For a time he worked in the lumber mills and woods, and after his marriage, at the age of twenty-one, settled on a farm, and was a tiller of the soil for six years. His turn of mind was toward business, and on leaving the farm he became a merchant at Bristol in Harrison County. That was his home for many years, and he built up a very prosperous establishment there as a merchant. In 1910 he removed to Salem. He still has mercantile interests, but his time is largely devoted to real estate and to the production of oil and gas and the glass industry. He is chief owner of the mechanical plant of the Salem Herald-Express, a weekly newspaper.

Mr. Coffman has never sought a political office, is a republican voter and for many years while living at Bristol was a member of the local board of education and is now a member of the board of education at Salem. For many years he has been a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church and is teacher of the Men's Bible Class in Sunday School.

In 1869 he married Miss Emma R. Meredith, who died in 1902. In 1907 he married Miss Eva L. Samples. There were two sons by his first marriage: Clarence W., of Cleveland, Ohio; and I. Wade, a former Circuit and Criminal Court clerk of Harrison County and now clerk of the United States District Court at Elkins. The one child of his second marriage is a son, Lyle C. Coffman.

Mr. Coffman started life without capital but with a fixed determination to succeed. Success has been measured not only in material accumulations, but in the esteem paid him as a good citizen and a reputation for honor and probity in all the relations of life.

GEORGE R. SEAMONDS, in his second term as Circuit Court clerk at Huntington, was formerly a railroad man and manufacturer in that city, and represents one of the very old and prominent families of Cabell County.

His grandfather, William R. Seamonds, was born in Cabell County in 1812, spent his life there as a farmer, and died on land that is now a part of the City of Huntington.

D. Beamonds

His death occurred in 1889. He married Nancy Harshbarger, a native of Cabell County, who also died at the old home in Huntington. Their son, William H. Seamonds, was born near Barboursville, Cabell County, June 21, 1840, was reared and married in the county, and spent his life there as a more than ordinarily successful farmer. In 1914 he retired to Huntington to spend his last days in comfort, and died there February 22, 1919. As a young man he was a captain at the muster days at Barboursville, and was a member of the Home Guards during the Civil war. He served on the board of education and as road surveyor of Barboursville District, was a democrat and affiliated with the Baptist Church. William H. Seamonds married Sarah J. Lusher, who was born in Barboursville District June 20, 1842, and is now living at Huntington. She is the mother of the following children: Randolph Moss, an employe of the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad Company at Huntington; Mary M., of Huntington, widow of James G. Hatfield, a building contractor and road builder; Susie L., of Huntington, widow of Benjamin F. Goolsby, a shop employe of the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad Company; Lena, wife of William H. Tinsley, a Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad man at Huntington; William, who died at the age of nineteen years; George R.; Maggie, wife of J. Alvin Burdette, a locomotive engineer with the Chesapeake & Ohio at Huntington; Andrew J., also a locomotive engineer at Huntington; and Kate Gem, wife of W. Alonzo Toney, a railroad conductor living at Huntington.

George R. Seamonds was born at Barboursville, Cabell County, February 17, 1873. He was educated in rural schools, and graduated in 1893 from Morris-Harvey College at Barboursville. The following fifteen years Mr. Seamonds spent in the clerical department of the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad at Huntington. From 1908 to 1914 he was secretary of the Jarvis Machine & Supply Company of that city, and in November, 1914, was first elected Circuit Court clerk for the term of six years. In November, 1920, he was re-elected, and his present term in the Court House at Huntington expires in 1927. Mr. Seamonds has been one of the busy men of his community for nearly thirty years, and has become widely known for his ability, his thoroughness and his integrity.

He is a democrat, a member of the Baptist Church, and fraternally is affiliated with Huntington Lodge No. 53, F. and A. M., Huntington Lodge No. 313, B. P. O. E., Modern Woodmen of America, Ancient Order of United Workmen, and Cabell Council No. 196, Junior Order United American Mechanics. He is owner of some valuable real estate in Huntington, including his own eight room brick house at 919 Ninth Street, and an adjoining dwelling similar in size and appointments at 917 on the same street. During the war Mr. Seamonds went to the full extent of his means and influence to support the Government in all the drives.

He married at Huntington in 1905 Miss Cora Lee Jarvis, daughter of Joseph C. and Alice N. (Pippin) Jarvis, residents of Huntington. Her father, now retired, was for many years owner and operator of a machine shop. Mrs. Seamonds, who died June 17, 1921, is survived by one daughter, Alma Louise, born October 4, 1906.

ISAAC SCOTT KENNEDY. To Isaac Scott Kennedy has been granted the fulfillment of all that is signified in a long life of useful service to humanity. He has practiced medicine for nearly half a century, and for thirty-five years his home has been at Salem in Harrison County.

He was born on a farm on Lost Creek in Harrison County, September 3, 1842, son of William and Elmira (Reed) Kennedy. His father was a farmer and one of the fine characters in his community. He was known as a peacemaker, and settled many difficulties among his neighbors by his influence and advice. He was a true friend and devoted to his family. In youth he joined the Seventh Day Baptist Church and lived a consistent Christian life. His wife was a life-long member of the same church. Of their children Doctor Kennedy is the only survivor, and the others were: Catherine, Zurah, Ruth, Margaret, Emily, Loman and Austin.

As the oldest son Isaac Scott Kennedy began helping his father in the farm work when only a boy, and his early school advantages were supplied by the brief term of school in the old field log schoolhouse. As a young man he was afflicted with catarrhal trouble, and was successfully treated by Doctor Bossley, a local homeopathic physician. His admiration for this successful treatment led him to express a desire to Doctor Bossley to take up the study of medicine in the homeopathic school, and for two years he pursued his studies under Doctor Bossley, his preceptor, and followed that with a course of lectures in the Hahnemann Medical College at Philadelphia, though he did not graduate. On returning home and upon examination he was granted a certificate to practice by the West Virginia State Board, and he began his professional career at Lost Creek. Harrison County has always been the scene of his professional endeavors, and thirty-five years ago he moved his home to Salem. He has kept abreast with the advances made in his school of medicine, but Doctor Kennedy has made a specialty of diseases of women and children, and has also excelled in the treatment of chronic troubles. Though now eighty years of age he is still looking after his practice.

His profession has been the chief source of his income, though like many others who reside in an oil and gas district he has invested in companies exploiting these resources, and in his case his investments have brought him gratifying success. He has never been in politics, and while a democrat nominally, he is in fact an independent voter. Doctor Kennedy since the age of sixteen has been a member of the Seventh Day Baptist Church.

At the age of twenty he married Sarah Johnson, who was the mother of five children, Emma, Nora, Dora, Scott W. and Lewis A. His second wife was Mrs. Prudence Dix. There were no children by this union. His third wife was Sarah Smith, and they have two daughters, Mabel and Silva.

WALTON LEE STROTHER, M. D. For nearly thirty years the community of Salem has appreciated the technical abilities and the personal character of the two men named Strother, engaged in the practice of medicine and surgery here. Walton Lee Strother is the younger of the two brothers, and he joined his older brother in practice here over twenty years ago and they were associated until the death of the older brother.

Walton Lee Strother was born and reared at Wilsonburg in Harrison County, and is a son of John J. and Almira (Fitro) Strother. His grandfather, William Strother, was born in old Virginia in 1807, and was an early settler in Harrison County, where he lived until his death in 1867. He married a Miss Morrison. John J. Strother was born at Wilsonburg in 1839, and his business was farming and stock raising. During the Civil war he was a teamster in the Union army. John J. Strother, who died at his home in Wilsonburg in 1899, married Almira Fitro, daughter of Martin Fitro of Harrison County. Their children were: William M.; Lillie B., who died in infancy; Samuel Edison; John B.; Thomas Edmond and Silas M., both of whom died in infancy; Walton Lee; Jesse F.; David H.; and Ray L.

Walton Lee Strother spent his early life in Wilsonburg, where he attended the public schools, and acquired his literary education in Salem College and West Virginia Wesleyan College of Buckhannon, and pursued his professional course in the University of Maryland at Baltimore, where he graduated in 1900. Immediately thereafter he became associated in practice at Salem with his brother Samuel E. Strother. His brother had located at Salem in 1893, and was also a graduate in medicine from the University of Maryland.

Dr. Walton Lee Strother through long experience and special talent is one of the ablest and most successful physicians in Harrison County. He is a member of the County, West Virginia State and American Medical associations, is a Master Mason, a Methodist and a republican.

He married Miss Helen Boughner in 1914.

OREN FLEMING MORRISON. Soon after completing his education he took up banking as a serious vocation, and has devoted approximately half his lifetime to that business. He is cashier of the Merchants and Producers Bank at Salem in Harrison County.

He was born on a farm in the same county October 13, 1884, son of Otto L. and Dora (Pepper) Morrison, also natives of Harrison County. His grandparents were Andrew J. and Susan F. (Roach) Morrison. The former was a native of Fauquier County, Virginia, and on coming to Harrison County settled on Ten-Mile Creek, three miles south of Salem. He was a cabinet maker by trade. Otto L. Morrison was born in 1859, and is still living on his farm two miles north of Salem, agriculture having constituted his life's pursuit. He is a democrat in politics, affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and he and his wife in early life united with the Baptist Church. His wife died at the age of forty-eight, the mother of ten children: Arphad Paul, Oren F., Aubra C., Beulah, Beatrice, Marshall J., Tascar B., Blanche, Walter J., and Edwin C.

Oren F. Morrison was reared on a farm, attended rural schools, and finished his education in Salem College and a business College at Parkersburg. At the age of nineteen he became an employe of the First National Bank of Salem, beginning as a messenger. He became assistant cashier, and was with that bank for thirteen years. For a brief time Mr. Morrison was in the life insurance business, and in 1920 he took up his duties as cashier in the Merchants and Producers Bank of Salem. This bank was established in 1900, with a capital of $50,000, and has enjoyed a steadily increasing business. It has a surplus of $40,000, and owns its substantial home, a two-story brick building. The bank has had only one President, Mr. S. Brodwater.

Mr. Morrison is a Knight Templar Mason and Shriner, a member of the Baptist Church and a democrat in politics. In 1913 he married Miss Mayme (Mary Ann) Bond. They have a daughter, Martha Jane Morrison.

JONATHAN WARNER WEBB, M. D. While he was a teacher for several years Doctor Webb had his ambitious set on a medical career, and he graduated qualified for the work of that profession seventeen years ago, and is one of the accomplished physicians and surgeons of Harrison County. His home is at Salem.

He was born in Calhoun County, West Virginia, August 6, 1877, son of Nutter and Margaret (Depew) Webb, now living retired at Parkersburg. His paternal grandfather was William Webb and his maternal grandfather, Jonathan Depew, also natives of West Virginia. The Webbs were a strong Union family at the time of the Civil war, and two brothers of Nutter Webb gave up their lives while serving as soldiers. Nutter Webb was a merchant for several years and then engaged in farming. His home was in Calhoun County for forty years or more, after which he retired from the farm, locating at Parkersburg, where he still maintains his home. He has been a staunch republican, and he and his wife for many years have been affiliated with the Baptist Church.

Jonathan Warner Webb was one of nine children, and he grew up in Calhoun County, attending public and normal schools there. He taught school for three years, and then entered upon the study of medicine, attending the University of Maryland at Baltimore, where he graduated in 1905. Doctor Webb practiced for two years at Big Bend in Calhoun County, and then came to Harrison County, being located at Sardis until 1919, since this year his home and office have been in Salem.

Doctor Webb has taken four post-graduate courses in the Chicago Polyclinic. He is a member of the Harrison County and West Virginia Medical Societies.

Doctor Webb is a republican, a member of the Baptist Church and a Master Mason. In 1901 he married Miss Eliza A. Kidwell, and they are the parents of three sons.

ROLANDUS S. LARUE, of Kingwood, went into the mines as a boy worker, has been foreman, superintendent and for many years one of the leading coal operators of Preston County. His career has been one of success, and he is connected with families of social and civic prominence.

The LaRues are widely scattered over Kentucky and West Virginia, and some spell the name Larew, but practically all are descended from an original French stock. The ancestor of this branch was a French physician who came to the Carolinas with the Huguenots in 1756, removed to Virginia before the Revolutionary war, and reared his family near Winchester. One of his sons was Hiram LaRue, grandfather of the Kingwood coal operator. This Hiram LaRue was born January 29, 1793, near Winchester, Virginia, and was a soldier in the War of 1812, probably in the army under General Scott. He was a weaver by trade and he took in many young apprentices and taught them the art. About 1850 he moved from Winchester and established his home in "The Coves" in Barbour County, West Virginia, where he continued his trade as a weaver until his death, May 23, 1856. He was a whig, and in religious faith was a follower of the Wesleys. His wife was Elizabeth Grimes, of Winchester, and their sons were William, James, John, Hiram and Samuel L., their daughters, Ellen and Sarah.

Hiram LaRue, Jr., was born June 13, 1830. Although he had but the common school education to be obtained in those times, he remained a student throughout his life and was especially devoted to the study of history. He did not take to the weaver's trade, but became a farmer instead. In 1858 he moved with his family from Barbour County to Preston County, and settled in the southern part of the county, near Evansville. During the war he was a member of Colonel Moore's regiment of militia. A crippled hand made him unfit for active duty, and as a guard he and the militia were stationed along railroads. He later bought a farm about a mile west of Evansville, where he passed the remainder of his active life. He died in Independence, Preston County, July 30, 1913, and was laid to rest beside his wife at Evansville. He was a republican, although he took no active part in politics, and was a member of the Methodist Church. Hiram LaRue, Jr., married in 1854, Miss Alcinda Hotsinpler, daughter of John Hotsinpler, who came from Whitepost Tavern, Virginia, a property he had owned, and moved to West Virginia at the same time as the LaRues. Mrs. Hiram LaRue died in 1887, at the age of fifty-four. They reared the following children: Rolandus Summerfield, Maria, Sarah, Mary, John, Martha, Hiram and William.

Rolandus S. LaRue was born in Barbour County, West Virginia, January 23, 1856, and was two years of age when the family moved to the farm at Evansville. He acquired his education in private and public schools, and when about seventeen changed his farm duties for work in the mines, and mining has been his life work. At an early age he became mine foreman, and has had charge of many mines throughout this section of the state. Under appointment from Governor Dawson he served as state mine inspector, continuing in this office altogether for four years. He then went with the Consolidation Coal Company, being employed by ex-Governor Fleming, and remained with this company eight years. During this period Mr. LaRue, who has always been deeply interested in mining conditions and especially in mine ventilation, contributed several valuable articles to the mining journals of this country. His articles on steam ventilation attracted particular attention in both foreign and American press. He was the recipient of many letters of commendation and inquiry concerning these articles, among these being letters from representatives of the French, Belgian and Russian governments. The system advocated by Mr. LaRue has been adopted by some of the leading coal companies of the country, the Consolidation Coal Company being the first to adopt it.

After severing his connection with the Consolidation Coal Company, Mr. LaRue became an independent operator in the Kingwood locality along with the Gibson Brothers. He is interested in the LaRue By-Products Colliery Company, LaRue Coal Company, and the Lick Run Collieries Company, being general manager of the first two companies and a director of the third. He also has financial interests in the undeveloped coal properties of Preston

R. S. La Rue

County, and is a director and stockholder in the Bank of Kingwood, all these indicating the substantial nature of his business connection with the locality.

Mr. LaRue is a republican, but one of liberal tendencies and has never been the type of man that lends blind obedience to party policies. He has done his political duty chiefly as a voter, though he has attended different county conventions as a delegate and has many friends among the party leaders. He has been an Odd Fellow for forty years and is a past noble grand of the lodge and past chief patriarch of the encampment. He is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

In Preston County, May 5, 1878, Mr. LaRue married Miss Mary Melissa Glenn, a native of the county and a member of a prominent pioneer family. The Glenns were of Scotch descent. The first of the name to come to America, Sander Leendertse (Alexander Lindsay) Glen, a Scotchman in the service of the West India Company, settled at Fort Nassau on the Delaware in 1631. He received a grant of land in Delaware and in 1665 obtained a patent for lands in Schenectady, New York. He called this section of land Scotia, and he resided there until the time of his death, November 13, 1685. The home that he built on this estate is still standing. Later, some of the family came to Maryland and settled in Cecil County. The first to spell the name with two n's was Samuel Glenn, who was born in Cecil County in 1737 and was the great-great-grandfather of Mrs. LaRue. He and his son Jacob and many others of the family were all born in Cecil County. Jacob Glenn married Charlotte Baldwin, who was a direct descendant of Pocahontas. Their son, Elias Bolling, grandfather of Mrs. LaRue, was born December 26, 1801, and married in 1825 Rachel Ann Taylor. Elias B. Glenn founded the family in what is now West Virginia, settling near Morgantown, where he was a farmer and horse dealer, taking his stock to Baltimore to market for shipment. In his family were ten children. Among them was Samuel Chambers Glenn, father of Mrs. LaRue. He was born in Monongalia County, September 29, 1831, and spent his active life as a lumber dealer and in railroad. He married Sarah Jane Shaw, October 12, 1854. She died February 5, 1899, while he passed away in August, 1905. The Glenn children were: Mary Melissa, Alberta, Amelia Jane, William M., Rachel Ann, George W., Albert H. and Rosa. Mrs. LaRue was born November 7, 1855. She acquired her education in public and private schools and was a successful teacher of the county until the time of her marriage. Mr. and Mrs. LaRue have three children: George Barton, Ethel and Mary. The oldest child, George Barton LaRue, a coal operator at Kingwood, was born March 9, 1879. He married Hallie Paugh, June 7, 1899. Their children are Esther, born August 2, 1900, and George William, born April 5, 1902. The second child of Mr. and Mrs. R. S. LaRue, Ethel, was born May 1, 1883. She was married February 12, 1912, to Joseph Vincent Gibson, attorney and coal operator of Kingwood. Their children are: Milford LaRue, born January 7, 1913; Nancy Jackson, born April 26, 1916; Margaret Jane, born June 3, 1919. The third child, Mary, born July 20, 1891, was married, June 27, 1912, to Dr. Robert Parvin Strickler, instructor in Greek in Johns Hopkins University at Baltimore. Their daughter, Mary Rosalie, was born May 7, 1913.

J. K. PARSONS. Born and reared in old Virginia, where he was a farmer and merchant for several years, J. K. Parsons since moving to West Virginia has found increasing scope for his abilities in the great coal measures in the southern part of the state. He has developed the Logan-Elkhorn Corporation, owning, operating and selling the product of some of the best bituminous mines in that part of the state. His home is in Huntington, where he also conducts a successful insurance business.

Jefferson K. Parsons was born in Lee County, Virginia, December 19, 1882. His father, Henry Z. Parsons, was born in the same county in 1851, spent his entire life there as a farmer, and died in 1913. He was a democrat in politics, and a very devoted member of the Missionary Baptist Church. His wife was Elizabeth Parsons, though they were not related. She was born in Lee County in 1846. These parents had five children: Albert F., a coal operator living at Huntington; Margaret, wife of John M. Kirk, operator of a coal mine in Lee County; Jefferson K.; Amanda L., whose husband, W. S. Peters, lives in Logan County, and is superintendent of the J. K. Parsons Coal Mine; and George Z., a merchant in Lee County.

J. K. Parsons spent the first seventeen years of his life on his father's farm, acquired a common school education, and thereafter farmed on his own responsibility in Lee County until he was twenty-five. Then for several years he was a merchant in the same county, and in 1912 he took up the business of coal operation in the West Virginia hills, and for the past decade his activities and energies have been absorbed in this industry. His mines are in Logan County, this state, and Perry County, Kentucky. The mines owned by him have a capacity of 25,000 tons per month, and they comprise the Logan-Elkhorn Coal Corporation. A sales organization for handling the output of these mines is known as the Logan-Elkhorn Fuel Company, which is also owned and operated by Mr. Parsons. His interest in the insurance field is the Co-Operative Insurance Company of Huntington, of which he is the founder and manager. The offices of the Insurance Company and his own personal offices are in the American Bank Building.

Mr. Parsons, who is a democrat in politics, married in Lee County, Virginia, in 1899, Miss Alva Garrett, daughter of George W. and Anna (Newman) Garrett, her mother now living in Logan County. Her father was a farmer and is now deceased. Mr. and Mrs. Parsons have the following children: Ruby married Harry Pennington, an employee of the Chesapeake & Ohio Railway Company at Huntington; Jack assists in his father's mines in Logan County; Edith, Powell and Blanche are students in the Huntington school; and Marjorie and Jefferson K., Jr., are the youngest of the family.

FRED E. WAY, secretary and general manager of the Kenova Hardwood Flooring Company, has been identified with this concern since 1905, and has also been prominently connected with civic affairs for a number of years, his record both in public and business life having been one of constructive achievements and public-spirited activities. He was born at Wyanet, Bureau County, Illinois, May 3, 1869, a son of Edwin D. and Margaret (Piper) Way.

Edwin D. Way was born July 16, 1837, in Ashtabula County, Ohio, and was twenty years of age when he accompanied his parents to Henry County, Illinois. Early in the war between the states he enlisted in Company B, Nineteenth Illinois Infantry, as a private, but after a short service received his honorable discharge because ill health incapacitated him for active duty. During the remainder of the war he was in charge of the Soldiers' Home at Paducah, Kentucky, and at Vicksburg, Mississippi, under the supervision of the United States Sanitary Commission. At the close of the struggle he went to Wyanet, Illinois, where he established a hardware business, and was engaged in that line of trade for fifteen years. Disposing of his interests, he went to Peoria, Illinois, where he was in the grocery business until 1892. He was always a friend of education, and while residing at Wyanet was president of the school board. His health failing, in 1892, Mr. Way went to California, where he died January 3, 1893. He married Miss Margaret Piper, who was born in Indiana County, Pennsylvania, November 21, 1841, and now survives him at the age of eighty years, being a resident of Chicago, Illinois. Two children were born to them: Fred E. and Verna, the latter the wife of H. R. Mardorf, who started as a messenger boy for the C. I. & L. Railroad, Chicago, at the age of fifteen, and is now assistant secretary-treasurer of that route.

Fred E. Way finished his education at the Peoria High School at the age of nineteen years, at which time he secured employment in the office of the McCormick Harvester Company, Peoria, where he remained three years. For the two years that followed he was identified with the Acme Harvester Company at Pekin, Illinois, and then went to Dallas, Texas, where he was in the employ of Aultman, Miller & Company, manufacturers of farm implements, from 1894 to 1904. Mr. Way's next experience was in an agricultural way, and tilling the soil on a farm near Dallas continued to be his occupation until 1905, in which year he came to Kenova, in the year following succeeding M. A. Hayward, former general manager of what is now the Kenova Hardwood Flooring Company. This business was originally established in 1902, and was then known as the Kenova Poplar Manufacturing Company, the president of the concern then being E. W. Houghton and the vice president, G. A. McClintock. W. O. Houghton, son of the former president, now occupies the chief executive position. In its earlier days the territory of the company was confined entirely to the Middle West, but its product now meets with a steady demand not only through this locality, but in New York and other eastern points. The plant was taken over by the present concern August 16, 1916.

Mr. Way has established and maintained a reputation as a sound, reliable, progressive man of business, and one who is thoroughly familiar with the principles and ethics of commercial life not only as they affect his own concern but as they apply to business matters in general. He has taken an active part in civic affairs at Kenova, where he has served as mayor and recorder, and his public record is an excellent one. He is an interested and working member of the Chamber of Commerce and local movements for the benefit of the community always have his support and co-operation. During the World war period he was active in Red Cross and other work. As a fraternalist he affiliates with the Knights of Pythias, while his political identification is with the republican party.

On October 5, 1905, at Chicago, Mr. Way was united in marriage with Miss Georgina Stewart, daughter of Peter Stewart, of Edinburgh, Scotland, a sergeant-major in the Royal Scots. He died in his native land, following which his widow brought her children to the United States. Four children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Way: Edwin W., Warren Stewart, Fred E., Jr., and Martha Louise. Mr. and Mrs. Way are consistent members of the Presbyterian Church of Kenova, to the movements of which they have been liberal contributors, and in which Mr. Way officiates as an elder.

FRED DIDDLE, an ex-service man who was a first lieutenant during the war, has given his time to banking since he left the army, and is cashier of the First National Bank of Salem.

He was born at Philippi in Barbour County, October 20, 1891. His grandfather, John Diddle, settled in Barbour County a short time before the beginning of the Civil war, but finally moved out to Kansas, and he died at Newton in that state at the age of eighty-one. He was of Irish lineage, and the tradition is that two Diddle Brothers came to America and were Colonial soldiers in the American Revolution, one of them subsequently settling in Pennsylvania and the other in Virginia. George Diddle, father of Fred Diddle, was born in old Virginia and was one year old when the family settled in Barbour County. He was in business as a contractor, and died in 1919, at the age of sixty-one. He married Flora Lee Mason, a native of Tyler County, West Virginia, and daughter of Harrison Mason, also a native of this state.

Fred Diddle, only son and child of his parents, was reared in Philippi, where he completed a high school education. For one year he attended West Virginia University, and then entered Yale University, where he was graduated with the A. B. degree in 1916. In that year he volunteered for service in the Tenth Field Artillery, Connecticut National Guard, for duty during the Mexican border troubles. He had six months of military training with this organization. Then, in June, 1917, he volunteered for the World war, and subsequently entered the Second Officers' Training Camp at Fort Benjamin Harrison, where he was commissioned as first lieutenant in November, 1917. He was assigned to duty within the United States, and continued until his honorable discharge in December, 1918. Mr. Diddle is a member of the American Legion.

After leaving the army he was in the service of the Citizens National Bank of Philippi until he resigned and in January, 1920, became cashier of the First National Bank of Salem.

The First National Bank of Salem was established in 1898 as the Bank of Salem, and in 1904 it changed its charter to a National Bank, with a capital of $60,000.00. The bank has now surplus and undivided profits of $72,000.00, and is one of the most prosperous banking institutions of Harrison County. It has had only one president, Genius Payne. The bank is housed in its own building, a three-story brick block erected in 1902.

Mr. Diddle in 1921 married Miss Lucile Denton, of Trezevant, Tennessee. He is a thirty-second degree Scottish Rite Mason and Shriner, a member of the Knights of Pythias and in church faith is a Baptist.

EMERY JUDSON WOOFER, D. D. Members of the Woofter family have been noted as sterling and substantial people in West Virginia through four generations, but the distinctive service associated with the name has been the ministry of the Baptist Church. In the present generation Dr. E. J. Woofter is one of the best known Baptist ministers in West Virginia, and for a number of years has been a pastor of the great church of that denomination at Salem in Harrison County.

His great-grandfather was Johnathan Woofter, who came from Fauquier County, Virginia, to what is now West Virginia. At a much earlier date the Woofters settled in Virginia from Massachusetts, and came originally from South Hampden, England. The name was originally spelled Wooster, the "s" in the name was written "long S," after the familiar chirography of the time, and was mistaken for an "F" and eventually the spelling Woofter was adopted.

The grandfather of E. J. Woofter was Rev. John Woofter, who did much of the pioneer work of his denomination in West Virginia. He was a leader in missionary enterprise and the church building over a large territory, and he had the distinction of serving forty-six years as pastor of one church, the Leading Creek Baptist Church of Gilmer County. His son Calvin Woofter was a deacon in the same church for many years. Calvin Woofter married Susan Vannoy, and both were natives of Gilmer County. Her father, Francis Marion Vannoy, came from old Virginia. Calvin and Susan Woofter had three children, one son and two daughters.

Emery Judson Woofter was born on his father's farm in Gilmer County, April 25, 1867, grew up on the farm and assisted his father in its work until he was twenty-two years of age. His early education was supplied by the rural schools, and for a time he was a student in Transylvania University at Lexington, Kentucky, until failing health compelled him to leave his studies. Later he entered the Southern Baptist Theological Seminary at Louisville, completing a literary course and also his theological studies in 1893. In 1894 he was ordained to preach at Leading Creek Baptist Church, of which his grandfather had been pastor for nearly half a century. His first pastorate was at Glenville, and for eight years he was pastor of the Church at Troy in Gilmer County, and subsequently pastor at Harrisville and Bridgeport. On April 21, 1907, he entered upon his duties as pastor of the Salem Baptist Church at Salem, where he has been a part in his congenial duties for fifteen years. This church organized in 1882, and is one of the strongest church organizations in West Virginia. Six years after becoming pastor Doctor Woofter had the pleasure of seeing a handsome church edifice dedicated, and this, together with a manse, cost about $57,000. Doctor Woofter has been a leader in general church activities, and in 1911 and in 1914 he was chosen president of the Baptist General Association of West Virginia. He is now president of the West Virginia Baptist Educational Society and is associate editor of the West Virginia Baptist Banner. In 1918 Salem College conferred upon him the degree Doctor of Divinity. Doctor Woofter is a Knight Templar Mason and Shriner and an Odd Fellow.

M. L. Taylor

He married Miss Alice Gay Bush, of Gilmer County. Their three daughters are Mildred, Mary and Madeline.

MARVIN LUCIUS TAYLOR, vice president and general manager of the Morgantown Coal Company, is a native of West Virginia and a scion of the fourth generation of the Taylor family in this commonwealth. Isaac Taylor, his great-grandfather, was born in Kentucky in 1781 and later settled on the Cheat River in Randolph County, Virginia (now West Virginia), about the opening of the nineteenth century. There in 1803 he married Elizabeth Hays, whose father was a pioneer settler on Smith's branch of the Cheat River. Their son, Nimrod, was born in Randolph County in 1815, and his wife, Margaret, likewise was a native of that county, where her parents were early settlers. Washington Coyner Taylor, son of Nimrod and Margaret Taylor, was born in 1838, and in 1861 he married Jane, daughter of Elijah Nelson. Their son, Elam Elijah, was born in Randolph County in September, 1862, and became one of the prominent and influential citizens of his native county, where he served in various offices of public trust, including those of constable, justice of the peace, county surveyor and county road-engineer, of which last mentioned office he was the incumbent at the time of his illness which caused his death in 1913. In 1885 he married Lydia Ann Coberly, daughter of Levi and Mary (Canfield) Coberly, and after the death of her husband Mrs. Taylor married again, becoming the wife of William B. Maxwell, a prominent attorney of Elkins, West Virginia, where they still reside.

Marvin L. Taylor, son of Elam E. and Lydia A. Taylor, was born at Elkins, county seat of Randolph County, on the 1st of October, 1886. His early education included the discipline of the high school in his native city, where in 1904 he entered Davis & Elkins College. After a preparatory course in this institution he was matriculated, in 1906, in the University of West Virginia, where he took up a course in civil engineering. He was not graduated, however, as he left the university in 1911 to become assistant road engineer of Randolph County under the regime of his father. In 1913 he became chief engineer of the Rockcastle River Railroad in Laurel County, Kentucky, but in the spring of the following year he accepted the position of examiner of surveys in the United States forest service in Randolph and Tucker counties, West Virginia. In the spring of 1915 Mr. Taylor became associated with the Monongahela Valley Engineering Company of Morgantown, and while thus allied he also served, 1916-17, as city engineer of Elkins, besides which, in 1915, he was county bridge-engineer of Randolph County. In 1917 he became vice president and general manager of the Morgantown Coal Company, and president of the Baketa Motors Company of this city. He is a member and former director of the Morgantown Chamber of Commerce, a member of the local Kiwanis Club, a life member and a member of the Advisory Board of the Old Colony Club, besides which he is a member of the Morgantown Country Club, and is affiliated with the Sigma Phi Epsilon college fraternity, the Masonic fraternity and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. He is a director of the American Wholesaler Coal Association, 1921-1922. In April, 1922, he organized the Taylor Fuel Company at Morgantown, W. Va., of which he is general manager.

Mr. Taylor married Miss Lena Leota Holt, daughter of William B. and Martha O. (Hyman) Holt, and she is a popular figure in the representative social activities of Morgantown.

MOSES HOFFMAN VAN HORN has been an active figure in the educational affairs of West Virginia for thirty years. Much of his time and talent have been devoted to his alma mater, Salem College, at Salem in Harrison County, where he is now dean and head of the department of mathematics.

Mr. Van Horn was born in Harrison County, August 9, 1872, and is member of one of the oldest families in this section of the state. The tradition is that the Van Horns came to West Virginia from New Jersey. They were of Holland-Dutch ancestry. The pioneer ancestor was William Van Horn, Sr., who settled in the eastern part of Harrison County as early as 1781. Many of his descendants still live in the county. The first settlement was made in a community of Seventh Day Baptist Church people, and while the Van Horns were not originally of that faith, they embraced the church, and for generations have been leaders in its affairs. The son of William Van Horn, Sr., was William Van Horn, Jr., and he in turn was the father of Moses Van Horn, grandfather of the Salem College dean. Moses Van Horn married Elsie Drummond. William B. Van Horn, father of Moses H., was born in Harrison County and became a well to do farmer there. Farming has been the favorite occupation of the family through the various generations. William V. Van Horn married Elsie Kennedy, who was born in Harrison County, daughter of William and Elsie Melvina (Reed) Kennedy.

Moses Hoffman Van Horn spent his early life on the farm, attended rural schools, and in the intervals of teaching he pursued the studies leading to his liberal education. He was a pupil in Salem Academy, and then in Salem College, where he graduated A. B. in 1897. In 1908 his alma mater awarded him the Master of Arts degree. He also attended Cornell University and West Virginia State University and took correspondence work at the University of Chicago. Mr. Van Horn began teaching in rural schools, remaining in that work for four years, for one year was principal of the graded schools at Shinnston, for eight years principal of the Salem High School, and eight years was professor of Mathematics in Salem College. For six years he was superintendent of city schools of Salem. In September, 1920, he became dean and head of the department of mathematics in Salem College. Mr. Van Horn is a member of the West Virginia State and National Educational Associations and the National Society for the Study of Education, is a member of the Kiwanis Club and the Seventh Day Baptist Church.

In 1896 he married Miss Metta Wilson, daughter of Hiram and Mandane (Lowther) Wilson. They have one daughter, Hallie Florene Van Horn, and a foster son, William Simpson.

S. ORESTES BOND, whose career since early manhood has represented a successful devotion to the cause of education, is president of Salem College, an institution that has trained several generations of young men and women and is one of the notable schools of West Virginia. The school is conducted under the auspices of the Seventh Day Baptist Church. The Bond family for a number of generations have been active in this religious faith.

Mr. Bond was born on a farm in Upshur County, West Virginia, August 12, 1877, and is member of an old American family, being a descendant of Samuel Bond, a native of England, who after coming to America married Ann Sharpless and settled in Maryland. Their son, Richard Bond, was born in Maryland, and Levi, a son of Richard, was also born in that state. Brumfield Bond, grandfather of Orestes Bond, was born and reared in Harrison County, West Virginia, where his parents were early settlers. He married Belinda Hoffman, also a native of Harrison County.

The parents of Orestes Bond were Levi Davis and Victoria (Arnold) Bond. The latter was born in Barbour County, West Virginia, daughter of Moses Arnold, a native of the same county and of old Virginia ancestry. Levi Davis Bond was born in Upshur County, and still lives there, at the venerable age of eighty-two. His active interests were those of a farmer and stockraiser, and he was a pioneer breeder of pure bred stock, especially cattle and sheep. His first wife died, leaving two children, S. Orestes and Emery H. Bond. His second wife was Byrd Queen, and they have a son, Esle Bond, still living with his parents at their old homestead in Upshur County.

S. Orestes Bond was about eight years of age when his mother died. He acquired his early education in the rural schools, and at the age of nineteen began teaching in a country district. For several years he alternated between teaching and attending school himself. Mr. Bond is an alumnus of the college over which he now presides. He graduated from Salem in 1904. In 1909 he received his

A. B. degree from West Virginia University, and in 1913 he won the Master of Arts degree from Columbia University of New York City. In 1914 he did an additional year of graduate study in Columbia University. Mr. Bond had fourteen years of active experience as a teacher of the public schools of West Virginia. For five years he taught in normal schools, one year as acting principal of the Glenville State Normal and four years as head of the educational department of Shepherd College State Normal School.

Mr. Bond returned to Salem College for the summer of 1919 to conduct a summer course, and a few weeks later, upon the resignation of the President, Dr. C. B. Clark, Mr. Bond was chosen his successor. He has brought a large experience in the educational field to the administration of the splendid old educational institution. He has been a member of the West Virginia State Education Association since 1906, of the National Education Association since 1912, and of the Society for the Study of Education, since 1913. He was reared and has always been loyal to the religious faith of his parents, the Seventh Day Baptist Church.

Mr. Bond in 1904 married Miss Venie Hagerty, of Harrison County.

ARTHUR B. BOGGESS has given effective service in various public and semi-public offices at Clarksburg, judicial center of Harrison County, where he is now the incumbent of the position of clerk of the Circuit Court. The various official preferments that have come to him bear distinct evidence of the secure place he holds in popular esteem in his native county.

Mr. Boggress was born at Lumberport, Harrison County, November 30, 1870, and is a son of John W. and Margaret J. (Bowman) Boggress, the former a native of Harrison County and the latter of Ohio County, this state. The Boggress family settled in what is now the State of West Virginia at a very early period, and it is one of the oldest and most numerous in Harrison County at the present time. Albertus Boggress, grandfather of the subject of this sketch, passed his life in Harrison County, he having been a son of Samuel Boggress. John W. Boggress was a miller at Lumberport for a number of years and was also engaged in farm enterprise near that town. He served many years as justice of the peace, and was otherwise a figure of prominence in his community. He was seventy-six years of age at the time of his death. By his first marriage he was the father of several children, and Arthur B., of this review, is the only child of the second marriage, his mother having been in her eighty-ninth year at the time of her death.

The early education of Arthur B. Boggress was acquired in the public schools of his native village and in the Buckhannon Academy. As a youth he found employment at Clarksburg, and he there continued his service in various capacities until he assumed a clerical position in the Clarksburg Post Office, in which he became assistant postmaster and served as such for ten years. In January, 1909, he was appointed deputy circuit clerk for Harrison County, and in this position he continued the efficient incumbent until August, 1921, when Judge Haymond Maxwell, presiding on the bench of the Circuit Court of that county, appointed him clerk, to fill out the unexpired term of I. Wade Coffman, who resigned.

Well fortified in his views concerning political and economic matters, Mr. Boggress is found aligned loyally in the ranks of the republican party. He has completed the circle of York Rite Masonry, and is a Shriner, and has received the eighteenth degree in the Scottish Rite of the time-honored fraternity. He is also a member of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, being one of the charter members of Clarksburg Lodge No. 482.

The year 1901 recorded the marriage of Mr. Boggress and Miss Nellie Post, daughter of Russell E. and Ella Fowkes Post, and the one child of this union is a daughter, Ella Louise.

URIAH HERBERT DEBENDARFER, M. D. For the greater part of three decades Doctor Dehendarfer has performed the typical services of a physician and surgeon in West Virginia, and for the greater part of that time has been in practice at Mannington in Marion County.

Doctor Dehendarfer was born on a farm in Armstrong County, Pennsylvania, December 5, 1868, son of Amos Spang and Caroline (Kepple) Dehendarfer, natives of the same county. His grandfather, Frederick Dehendarfer, a native of Wurtemberg, Germany, when a boy of twelve years came to America with his two brothers, and he grew up in Armstrong County, where he married Salome Klingensmith, a native of Westmoreland County, Pennsylvania. Amos S. Dehendarfer was born in 1845, devoted his active life to farming, and died November 5, 1891. His wife, Caroline Kepple was born in 1842, and died June 5, 1921. Her father, Samuel Kepple, was also a native of Westmoreland County.

Doctor Dehendarfer spent his early life on the farm, while there attended the common schools, supplemented these advantages in the Ellerton Academy of Pennsylvania, and passed three years of his student life in Thiel College at Greenville, Pennsylvania. He graduated from the medical department of the University of Pittsburgh in 1894, and while a student acquired some practical experience in the West Penn Hospital. After graduating he began practice in Canton, Ohio, and in 1896 located at Smithfield in Wetzel County, West Virginia. Since 1898 Doctor Dehendarfer has had a home and professional office at Mannington, and has been busy with his professional practice as a physician and surgeon. He is a member of the Marion County and West Virginia State and American Medical Associations.

Doctor Dehendarfer outside his profession has taken an active interest in fraternal and civic affairs. He is affiliated with Mannington Lodge No. 31, A. F. and A. M., Crusade Commandery, K. T., at Fairmont, West Virginia Consistory No. 1 of the Scottish Rite at Wheeling, Osiris Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Wheeling, and served as district deputy grand master in 1904 and was grand patron of the Grand Chapter of the Order of the Eastern Star in West Virginia in 1920.

September 17, 1897, Doctor Dehendarfer married Minerva Cecilia Kepple, a native of Westmoreland County, Pennsylvania, and daughter of Jacob and Elizabeth Kepple. Doctor and Mrs. Dehendarfer have two children: Madge Virginia, who is a graduate of the Mannington High School and a student in Emerson College at Boston, Massachusetts; and Harold Kepple, now manager of a store at Clarksburg. He married Mildred Snodgrass, of Mannington, West Virginia, August 25, 1920.

HARRY V. VARNER, M. D., one of the able and representative members of his profession engaged in practice in the City of Clarksburg, Harrison County was born on a farm near Salem, this county, May 28, 1873, and is a son of Allen and Amanda (Powell) Varner, the former a native of Harrison County and the latter of Taylor County. The mother was reared in Doddridge County, a daughter of the late Ralph and Roxaline (Williams) Powell. Allen Varner, a son of John and Phoebe (Pew) Varner, maintained his home in Harrison County during his entire life and was fifty-four years of age at the time of his death, his widow being still a resident of this county. He was a successful exponent of farm industry and also made an excellent record as a traveling salesman. He enlisted for service in the Union Army at the time of the Civil war. He was a loyal republican in his political alignment and was a consistent member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, as is also his widow. Of their children, three sons and two daughters attained to years of maturity: Wheeler, who died at the age of twenty-five years; Rev. Weldon P. Varner, a clergyman of the Pittsburgh Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church; Mrs. Jennie M. Backman, who is now deceased; Dr. Harry V., of this sketch; and Mrs. Stella King, whose husband has charge of the old homestead farm of her father, where her widowed mother likewise remains.

Doctor Varner gained his initial experience in connection with the activities of the home farm, and after completing the curriculum of the rural schools he was for five years a student in Salem College. In preparation for his chosen profession he entered the Baltimore Medical College, and in this excellent Maryland institution he was graduated in 1903. After thus receiving his degree of Doctor of Medicine he established himself in general practice at Clarksburg, and here he has gained both reputation and unqualified success in his effective service as a physician and surgeon. The doctor maintains active affiliations with the Harrison County Medical Society, the West Virginia State Medical Society, and the American Medical Association. He was a member of the Examining Board during the World war, and was health officer of the City of Clarksburg and Harrison County for eleven years. He is regarded staunchly in the ranks of the republican party, is affiliated with the Masonic fraternity, and he and his wife hold membership in the Methodist Episcopal Church.

On October 7, 1907, was solemnized the marriage of Doctor Varner and Miss Maude Morrison, of Clarksburg, and they passed their honeymoon in Europe, where the doctor assisted himself of the clinics of various leading hospitals in Great Britain, besides which, after he and his wife returned to the United States, he completed a six weeks course in the New York Post-Graduate School of Medicine. Doctor and Mrs. Varner have three daughters: Helen, Mildred and Marie, the latter two being twins.

SAMUEL A. HAYS, a lawyer and business man of Parkersburg, is a grandson of one of the earliest congressmen from Western Virginia, and the family has been one of merited distinction in West Virginia for a century or more.

His grandfather, Samuel L. Hays, was born in Harrison County, West Virginia, of Scotch ancestry, the original seat of the family having been in East Lammernmoor, Scotland. This branch of the family settled in old Virginia before the Revolution. Samuel L. Hays spent his early life on Elks Creek, just above Clarksburg, and later moved to the mouth of Freeman's Creek, in what is now Lewis County. Though most of his active energies were expended on farming, he had the gift of eloquence and an unusual degree of practical sense that made him a leader among his fellowmen and brought him some of the highest offices in their gift. He served as a member of the Virginia Legislature, and led a successful campaign against the gifted John Carlisle for Congress. This was before the Civil war and the creation of West Virginia. While in Congress he appointed the famous Stonewall Jackson to a cadetship in the West Point Military Academy. He then went to Minnesota, where he died. Samuel L. Hays was twice married. His second wife was an Arnold, of a prominent family of Lewis County.

One of the children of the second marriage was Peregrine Hays, who was born in 1832. He was also a farmer, had an extensive business as a land dealer, and was elected and served in the State Legislature of Virginia and later as a member of the House of Delegates of West Virginia. While in the House of Delegates he was the prime mover in the creation of Gilmer and Calhoun counties, and served as sheriff of both these counties. He was also instrumental in having a state normal school located at Glenville in Gilmer County. In stature he somewhat resembled his father, both being over six feet tall, though the elder Hays was spare in build while Peregrine had a most commanding presence. As a boy he was a school and playmate of Stonewall Jackson, and served under that great leader in the Confederate Army. Peregrine Hays died in 1903. He married Louisa A. A. Sexton, and of their five children four are now living.

One of these is Samuel Augustus Hays, who was named after his two grandfathers, and was born in Calhoun County, West Virginia, March 31, 1861. He attended the State Normal School at Glenville, graduating in 1878, and in 1884 graduated from the University of West Virginia. Mr. Hays practiced law at Glenville for ten years, and still maintains a law office there. From the law his energies became absorbed in the timber business and in 1913 he was appointed collector of internal revenue for the district of West Virginia, and moved to Parkersburg for his official term. He held that office until 1921. He is now a member of the firm of Hays & Gilkeson, stocks, bonds and commercial paper, and he is also president of the Wiant & Barr, Wholesale Hardware Company and president of the Kanawha Union Bank at Glenville, West Virginia. Mr. Hays is a thirty-second degree Scottish Rite and Knight Templar Mason and Shriner, is a democrat and a member of the Presbyterian Church.

He married Susan Adelaide Ewing, who died in 1891, leaving two children. The son, Matthew Ewing, died in 1918, at the age of twenty-nine. The daughter, Genevieve Maud, is the wife of Fred M. King, of Parkersburg.

COL. T. MOORE JACKSON was long and prominently identified with important industrial and business enterprises in his native state and city, was a representative of a family whose name has had much of prestige in the history of Virginia, especially that part of the Old Dominion that now constitutes West Virginia, and he was one of the influential and honored citizens of Clarksburg, Harrison County, at the time of his death, February 3, 1912.

Thomas Moore Jackson was born at Clarksburg, on the 22d of June, 1852, and was a son of James Madison and Caroline Virginia (Moore) Jackson, his paternal grandparents having been John G. and Mary (Meigs) Jackson. The progenitor of the Jackson family in America was John Jackson, who is supposed to have been born in the North of Ireland, of Scotch lineage, and who came from London, England, to America in 1748. In Maryland John Jackson wedded Elizabeth Cummings, and subsequently they became pioneer settlers at Buckhannon, in what is now Upshur County, West Virginia. John Jackson was a resident of Clarksburg, Harrison County, at the time of his death, in 1801. Two of his sons, George and Edward, were patriot soldiers in the War of the Revolution, in which he also gave loyal service as a soldier of the Continental Line. The son George rose to the rank of colonel, later served as a representative of Virginia in the United States Congress, and finally he established his residence at Zanesville, Ohio, where he passed the remainder of his life. His son Edward was the grandfather of Gen. Thomas J. ("Stonewall") Jackson, the distinguished Confederate officer of the Civil war, Clarksburg, West Virginia, taking pride in recording General Jackson's name on the roster of its native sons. Of the other sons of John Jackson it may be noted that Samuel removed to Indiana, his death having occurred at Terre Haute, that state, and that there were also two other sons, John, Jr., and Henry, besides three daughters. The loved mother attained to the remarkable age of 105 years and was a resident of Clarksburg at the time of her death.

John G. Jackson, grandfather of the subject of this memoir, was a son of Col. George Jackson, mentioned above. Colonel Jackson settled at Clarksburg in the early days and as a member of the United States Congress he was succeeded by his son John G., who was one of the eminent lawyers in the western part of Virginia. After his congressional career John G. Jackson became the first Federal judge for the Western District of Virginia, and of this office he continued the incumbent until his death in 1825, while still a young man. Judge John G. Jackson was twice married, first to Mary Payne, a sister of Dollie Madison, the wife of President James Madison, and the Jackson-Payne marriage was the first to be solemnized in the White House at Washington. For his second wife Judge Jackson wedded Mary Meigs, a daughter of Return Jonathan Meigs, one of the first governors of Ohio.

James Madison Jackson was born at Clarksburg, January 15, 1781, and his wife likewise was a native of this place, she having been a daughter of Thomas P. Moore, who was the builder of the first fine brick residence on West Pike Street in this city, this beautiful old homestead later becoming the property of the son T. Moore Jackson, to whom this memoir is dedicated, and being now the home of the latter's widow.

T. Moore Jackson was reared at Clarksburg and his higher education was acquired in Bethany College and at Washington and Lee University. From the latter institution he received the degree of Civil Engineer, in 1873, when twenty-one years of age. For several years thereafter Mr. Jackson followed his profession, exclusively, as civil engineer in railroad construction. From 1874 to 1875 he was chief engineer for the Middle Island Railroad. He was identified with other railroads, and in later years built what was known as the Short Line Railroad, he having been president of the company until the line was sold to the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Company. The constructive ability and loyal citizenship of Colonel Jackson were exemplified in the effective service which he gave in the development and upbuilding of his native city, in which he ever took great pride and deep interest. In 1888 the regents of the University of West Virginia called Mr. Jackson to the chair of civil and mining engineering in that institution, and as the incumbent of this position for a period of about three years he did much to bring his department up to a high standard of efficiency, his resignation having occurred in 1891. After his graduation in Washington and Lee University that institution eventually conferred upon him the supplemental degrees of Mining Engineer and Doctor of Science. He made a high record in his profession and became an active member of the American Society of Civil Engineers, as well as a fellow of the Geographical Society of America. The oil industry has been one of the greatest of the productive resources of West Virginia, and in the same Mr. Jackson was a pioneer. He and Professor I. C. White, of the University of West Virginia, were associated in the developing of oil wells at Mannington, Marion County. Mr. Jackson was interested also in coal production, and had large holdings in connection with important coal-mining enterprises in the West Virginia fields. He was influential in securing to Clarksburg many of its industrial plants, including the tin-plate manufacturing enterprise. He was one of the foremost in promoting the civic and material advancement of his native city, and his loyal and earnest character, as combined with his ability and gracious personality, gained to him unqualified popular esteem. For several years Colonel Jackson was president of the Traders Bank at Clarksburg, and his versatility was shown in his successful work in connection with the many and varied enterprises in which he became interested. He had a sane and kindly outlook, was tolerant in judgment, and was always ready to aid those in suffering or distress. In his death Clarksburg lost one of its best and most honored citizens.

In the year 1884 was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Jackson and Miss Emma Lewis, who, with their only daughter, Miss Florence, resides in the fine old homestead at Clarksburg. Mrs. Jackson likewise was born at Clarksburg, and she is a daughter of the late Judge Charles S. Lewis, who had been a member of the Virginia Legislature and also of the United States Congress prior to the Civil war. Later Judge Lewis was a member of the West Virginia Legislature, besides which he served as state superintendent of education and as adjutant general of West Virginia. He was a lawyer of eminent ability, as was also his father, Charles Lewis, who was born in Fayette County, Pennsylvania, and who came to Clarksburg from Philadelphia, that state. At the time of his death, in 1870, Judge Charles S. Lewis was serving on the bench of the Circuit Court.

BURRUSS B. MCGUIRE, M.D. Before locating at Jacksonburg Doctor McGuire had qualified for his career as a physician and surgeon by graduation from one of the oldest and best medical schools in the country, and also by an active service as a medical officer in the navy during the World war.

Doctor McGuire is a native of North Carolina, born at Cullasaja in Macon County, October 23, 1894. His grandfather, Patrick McGuire, was a life-long resident of East Tennessee, spending his life as a farmer near White Pine. He married a Miss Alexander, also a native of East Tennessee. Samuel L. McGuire, father of Doctor McGuire, was born at White Pine, Jefferson County, Tennessee, September 22, 1852, was reared there and about 1873 removed to Cullasaja, North Carolina, where he conducted a blacksmith shop. He subsequently owned and operated a wool carding mill at Norton in Jackson County, North Carolina, but soon gave that up and returned to Cullasaja until 1895, when he resumed his business as a wool carder at Norton and still owns the plant, though he has been practically retired since 1919. Samuel L. McGuire is a republican, an active member of the Methodist Episcopal Church and a Mason. He married Marcella Norton, who was born in 1853 at Norton in Jackson County, North Carolina. A brief reference to their children is as follows: Dr. Wayne P., a dentist at Sylva, North Carolina; Samuel Lawrence, a farmer at Norton; Roy L., a graduate in civil engineering from the University of Tennessee at Knoxville, now employed as a road surveyor for the State Roads Commission of North Carolina, his home being at Asheville; Arley R., an automobile dealer at Sylva; Burruss B., who is the fifth in the family, while there were three others who died young.

Burruss B. McGuire acquired a public school education in Macon County, North Carolina, graduating from the Iotla High School of that county in 1913. For one year he did general preparatory work in the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill, and also took two years of his medical course there. From Chapel Hill he entered Jefferson Medical College at Philadelphia, graduating M.D. in 1918. For three months in 1918 he served as an interne in the South Side Hospital at Pittsburg. In the meantime, in January, 1917, he had applied for enlistment as a private in the Medical Reserve Corps, U. S. Army. He was transferred to U. S. N. R. P. and was called to active duty September 3, 1918, being sent for instruction to the Naval Medical School at Washington and from November 8, 1918, until April 8, 1919, was on duty at the Naval Hospital at Charleston, South Carolina. He was commissioned a junior lieutenant August 5, 1918, and January 1, 1919, was promoted to lieutenant. April 8, 1919, he was ordered to inactive duty and was disenrolled September 1, 1921.

On his release from service in the spring of 1919 Doctor McGuire became an interne in the Ohio Valley Hospital at Wheeling, and on November 1, 1919, established his home and began his professional career at Jacksonburg, where in two years he has built up a successful practice and a wide influence in his profession.

Doctor McGuire is a republican, is affiliated with the Presbyterian Church, and is a member of Glenville Lodge No. 551, A. F. and A. M., at Glenville, North Carolina, and has taken fourteen degrees in the Scottish Rite, West Virginia Consistory No. 1 at Wheeling. He is also a member of Pine Grove Lodge No. 460, Independent Order of Odd Fellows. May 10, 1920, at Jacksonburg, he married Miss Charlotte Bessey, daughter of Ralph J. and Maude (Wilcox) Bessey, residents of Friendship, New York, but at present of Jacksonburg. Her father is a gauger for the Pure Oil Pipe Line Company.

WILLIAM BRECKENRIDGE STEWART. During a period of about nine years William Breckenridge Stewart has discharged the duties of postmaster at Chester, and his administration of the affairs of that office has left nothing to be desired. Applying himself unreservedly to the responsibilities devolving upon him, he has been able to accomplish several reforms and to bring about an elevation of the standards of the service that has been highly pleasing to the citizens of the community.

Mr. Stewart is a member of an old and honored West Virginia family, and was born at the family farm near Pughtown (then Fairview), August 26, 1855, a son of William and Mary (Bambrick) Stewart, a grandson of James Stewart, and a great-grandson of Col. George Stewart, an officer during the Revolutionary war who at the close of the struggle for American independence settled in what is now West Virginia and here passed the rest of his career. James Stewart passed his entire life as an agriculturist, and his farm still remains in the family possession, two of his grandsons, Joseph G. and Charles Stewart, residing thereon at this time.

William Stewart was reared to agricultural pursuits and followed farming during his entire active career, although in his younger years he likewise owned an interest in the grist mill at Pughtown. He was a man of integrity and industry, had the confidence and esteem of his neighbors, and when he died, at the age of seventy-three years, his community lost a good citizen. He was a Presbyterian in his religious belief. Mrs. Stewart, who was reared a Catholic, died when sixty-five years of age, just twenty-five days before the death of her husband, and both were laid to rest in the cemetery at New Cumberland. Of their children seven grew to maturity: James B., a carpenter and contractor, who died in March, 1883; Thomas Pierce, a carpenter and contractor at Pughtown; William Breckenridge, of this review; Anna, who married Robert Sutor and resides near Toronto, Ohio; Lawrence Lee, a farmer in Pennsylvania who died in 1913; Mary B., who was a teacher in the schools of Hancock County until her early death; and Margaret J., who married James H. Martin, of Long Beach, California.

William Breckenridge Stewart was reared on the home farm, receiving his education in the public schools, and as a young man, in his native community, began teaching school, a vocation which he followed for many years in both Ohio and West Virginia. For eight years he was principal of a department school at Toronto, Ohio, and for several years served as county superintendent of schools of Hancock County, West Virginia. In 1906 he took up his residence at Chester, where he continued teaching school for even years, and in 1914 was appointed to the office of postmaster, during President Wilson's first administration. The income of the office at Chester was at that time about $4,500.00 and is now about $9,000.00. There has been free delivery since the establishment of the office, with two carriers, in addition thereto being a rural free delivery carrier, three assistants and a messenger. Mr. Stewart devotes all of his attention and energies to the office, and his general abilities, as well as his unfailing courtesy and obliging nature, have made him a general favorite with those whose business brings them into contact with him in either his official or a private capacity. Mr. Stewart is a staunch democrat and has been an unflinching supporter of the candidates and principles of his party. He has often been a delegate to district and state conventions. His religious belief is that of the Disciples Church.

At East Liverpool, Ohio, Mr. Stewart married Miss Elizabeth J. Nicholson, and to this union there have been born two daughters: Ethel, the wife of Sanford B. Thorn, of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania; and Helen, now Mrs. R. L. McHenry, who is assistant to her father at the Post Office. Mrs. Stewart is a member of the Presbyterian Church.

FRED BLAINE DEEM in half a dozen years has achieved honor and success in the legal profession at Clarksburg, where he is one of the prominent young lawyers.

He comes of an old Wood County family, where the Deems were established in pioneer times by his great-grandfather, who came from Pennsylvania and was of German ancestry. The grandfather of the Clarksburg lawyer was Jacob Deem, who died only a few years ago, at the age of ninety-six. The parents of Fred B. Deem are Peter and Letha Viola (Cook) Deem, both natives of Wood County, where they have spent all their lives, the father a successful farmer and stock raiser. Letha Cook's ancestry is English, and her father came to West Virginia from Massachusetts. Fred Blaine Deem is the younger of two sons, his brother, Ralph Lemuel, being a teacher in the schools of Wood County.

Fred Blaine Deem grew up on a farm, had the advantages of the rural schools and also attended a preparatory school of the State University. He had two years in the literary department of the State University, and then concentrated his studies in the law school, where he was graduated LL. B. in 1913. Admitted to the bar, he practiced two years in association with the prominent law firm of Smith & Jackson at Clarksburg, and since then has been depending upon his own exertions and abilities to achieve his professional success and render service to the enlarged clientele accorded him. He is a member of the Clarksburg City Board of Education, in politics is a republican, and is unmarried. Mr. Deem is a member of the Baptist Church, is a Knight Templar, thirty-second degree Mason and Shriner, and is affiliated with the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. He belongs to the County and State Bar associations.

CHARLES A. SMITH. The career of Charles A. Smith and the development of Chester are so closely connected that there are points innumerable in each which are interwoven. A brief statement of facts in this connection will serve to outline the salient features of the achievements of Mr. Smith and his associates in developing one of the live and prosperous communities of the Upper Ohio Valley.

At the time of the contemplated organization of a town-site company J. F. McDonald, who is still associated with Mr. Smith in some of his business affairs, owned a farm of 177 acres, known as the Marks farm, which, with adjoining property, was readily recognized as a suitable site for the location of industries. The first step necessary was the construction of a bridge to connect this body of land with East Liverpool. Mr. McDonald had as associates in this movement, the same gentlemen also organizing a land or town-site company, W. L. Smith, of East Liverpool, E. D. Marshall, of Chester, George P. Rust, of Cleveland, and A. R. Mackell, of East Liverpool, who organized the East Liverpool Bridge Company, and during 1896 erected the bridge, which was opened December 31 of that year. John Shrader of Chester was the contractor, with C. Jutty & Company and the Penn Bridge Company as the actual constructors.

William Banfield, a practical steel manufacturer, who started the first tin plate mill in the United States, at Irondale, Ohio, at present the general manager of the Follansbee Brothers Steel Mill at Follansbee, West Virginia, and considered the best-posted tin plate man in the United States, was employed to construct a sheet steel mill, which was located on a part of the Marks farm, which, in the meantime, had been sold to Charles A. Smith. The principal associates of Mr. Banfield in this venture were W. L. Smith, Sr., J. E. McDonald, C. W. and J. R. Tindall, W. N. Voegtley and Charles McKnight. However, before this plant was placed in operation it was absorbed by the American Sheet and Tin Plate Company, the present owners. About 1900 the Taylor, Smith & Taylor Pottery Company plant was erected on this same property by Col. John W. Taylor, president of the Knowles, Taylor & Knowles Company, the largest industry at East Liverpool, Joseph G. Lee, of the same city and company, and Colonel Taylor's two sons. W. L. Taylor, now deceased, and Homer Taylor, now the head of the Knowles, Taylor & Knowles Company, together with W. L. and Charles A. Smith. The two last-named later, in 1904, became sole owners of this venture, but kept the original name, which has remained to the present.

It was in 1900 that Charles A. Smith secured the Marks farm upon which both the Chester potteries are located. He and his brother had secured all the stock in the Taylor, Smith & Taylor Company, and he was also a partner in the E. M. Knowles pottery at Chester, of which he had been the promoter and with which he was identified for several years. In 1901 the above farm was largely included in the town of Chester, but before Mr. Smith offered the property for sale he built more than 100 homes, graded the property, laid streets and concrete sidewalks, and in numerous other ways improved the community. He also erected a water works, under the name of the South Side Water Works Company, to furnish water for Chester, this public utility plant costing in the neighborhood of $100,000, and likewise installed a sewer plant on that part of the town taken from the farm.

About 1900, in company with his brother W. L. Smith, William Banfield and J. E. McDonald, Mr. Smith bought all the interests of the original bridge company, as also the steel company and the land company. At the time of the building of the bridge a single-track street railway had been built as far as Rock Springs Park, and later C. A. and W. L. Smith and J. E. McDonald became sole owners of this as well as the other properties, acquiring the Banfield interests by purchase. Charles A. Smith has done most of the development of this park, which included the rebuilding and improvement of the railway and its extension into a double-track system. The Smith brothers and Mr. McDonald operated this line until 1906 or 1907, when it was taken over by the Ely interests, Charles A. Smith becoming one of the leading stockholders in this company, with lines from Beaver, Pennsylvania, to Steubenville, Ohio, and other connecting points, comprising about 125 miles of trackage. For the past four or five years Mr. Smith has been general manager of the system, to which he devotes his personal attention. This is now known as the Steubenville, East Liverpool & Beaver Valley Traction Company, and offices are maintained at the east end of East Liverpool.

Four and one-half miles south of Chester, on Fairview Road, Mr. Smith is the owner of Hill Crest Farm, a tract of 1,100 acres, on which he has an orchard of from 5,000 to 6,000 apple trees. Here he has the most modern improvements to be found anywhere, and his barn is a model for others to follow. Mr. Smith makes this farm his hobby, and his chief source of pride is his herd of 125 Hereford cattle, which he exhibits frequently at fairs, where he has carried off many honors. His home, however, is not made on the Hill Crest Farm, but at Chester, on the property formerly included in the Marks farm.

Mr. Smith was born at Wellsville, Ohio, and as a lad worked as a waterboy on gas pipe line construction work. Later he operated sawmills and developed gas and oil, and within ten years was the owner of the company for which he had formerly worked as waterboy, subsequently disposing of his holdings to great advantage. His career has been an active and interesting one, but he is modest about his achievements and does not care for praise thereof. A supporter of the good roads movement, he had accomplished much in this way both as a citizen and through his good roads contracting business, for the carrying on of which he maintains full and modern equipment. Other worthy civic enterprises have his co-operation, as have those which pertain to education, religion and charity.

STEWART BROTHERS. In the Upper Ohio Valley there is no better known combination in the farming, dairying and stockraising industries than that formed by the Stewart brothers, E. C., Charles O., Samuel A., Austin B. and Nick L., who are carrying on extensive operations two miles east of Chester, in Grant District, on Tomlinson's Run, where all reside with the exception of E. C. Stewart, whose home is at Chester.

The partnership of Stewart brothers in their present enterprise was established some seventeen years ago, one of the principal factors in the formation of the association being an older brother, Thomas G. Stewart, who continued as a partner for a number of years, but finally retired to Chester. Stewart Brothers own the old homestead, where their father, John D. Stewart, spent most of his life, having been born near that place. The father of John D. Stewart was George Stewart, a half brother of R. G. Stewart, recently deceased. George Stewart was a son of Samuel Stewart, who was born in Hancock County and died when in advanced years, being buried at the Old Mill Creek Cemetery, Beaver County, Pennsylvania. He was a son of Col. George Stewart, who came from Ireland and gained his title in the Continental forces during the Revolutionary war, and after spending a few years in Alleghany County came, about 1790, to Hancock County, where he spent the rest of his life. He is said to be buried at the Old Mill Creek Cemetery. His old home farm is the present site of the operations of his great-grand-sons. George Stewart, the grandfather of the brothers, was a farmer on this property for many years, but finally entered the feed business at East Liverpool, where he died in 1876, when about seventy years of age.

John D. Stewart married Miss Rachel Baxter, the daughter of a neighboring farmer, and she passed away in 1899. Mr. Stewart surviving until 1904 and being sixty-two years of age at the time of his death. His last years were spent at Chester, where he owned several pieces of property. Originally he was a member of the Mill Creek Presbyterian Church but later became an organizer, member of the building committee and member of the Board of Trustees of the Presbyterian Church at Chester. In addition to the sons John D. and Rachel Stewart were the parents of three daughters: Dora K., who died in June, 1918, as the wife of H. F. Hobbs; Bertha, the wife of Rev. J. W. Dunbar, originally of Washington County, Pennsylvania, who was the first pastor of the Presbyterian Church at Chester and served in that capacity for a number of years, and is at the present at the head of the industrial school at Old Concord, Washington County, Pennsylvania; and Maud E., unmarried, an instructor in the same school as Reverend Dunbar, the School of Arts and Crafts, at Old Concord, Pennsylvania, which is the first and probably the only institution of its kind in the United States and is open to membership to the children of any foreign-born parents.

For about twenty years the Stewart brothers were engaged in business as oil contractors, drillers and operators, and at this time have gas on their own farm. This is a tract of more than 500 acres, where there is a herd of from seventy-five to eighty cows, of which forty head are milked, and wagons have been operated at Chester and East Liverpool for about thirty years. This is the oldest dairy on the south side of the river, and has had as customers members of the same families for several generations. The animals on the farm are of Holstein breed.

The brothers are variously identified with the business, civic, political and fraternal interests of their community. Their father was an original director of the First National Bank of Chester, and E. C. and S. A. Stewart are now members of the directing board of the same institution while Thomas is a director of the Hancock County Building and Loan Company. E. C. Stewart is a democrat, and although living in a republican county has been elected county commissioner. His election, something over fifteen years ago, came as a result of his support of the good roads movement, and during his administration the board inaugurated this movement in Hancock County. He has not, however, been much of a party worker. The brothers all belong to the Presbyterian Church, in which E. C. and S. A. are elders and Thomas G. a member of the Board of Trustees. All the brothers are married, and among them have eleven children and an adopted child. E. C. Stewart married Eva Hunter, of Beaver County, Pennsylvania, and they are the parents of three children: Clark Hunter, Rachael Catherine and Elinore Elizabeth.

W. W. ROBINSON. A marked development of efficiency in the school systems of various communities in Hancock County has been noted in recent years, and in this connection attention is called to the thriving and growing City of Chester, where the advancement and improvement have been definitely marked. Credit for this gratifying condition of affairs rests with the aroused interest shown by pupils and parents, the co-operation of an intelligent and progressive school board and the trained activities of the superintendent of schools, W. W. Robinson.

Mr. Robinson was born in Richland County, Ohio, and as a youth attended the public schools. After his graduation from the high school at Bellville, Ohio, he entered the Ohio State University, where he pursued a scientific course, and when he was duly graduated from that institution became supervising principal of the centralized school at New Carlisle, Ohio, a position in which he remained four years. He then became teacher of science in the high school at East Liverpool, where he remained five years, and in 1921 assumed the duties of superintendent of schools of Chester. Mr. Robinson is thoroughly imbued with the spirit of advancement characterizing modern educational methods, and is affiliated with a number of teachers' and educational organizations.

The Chester schools have experienced remarkable expansion and advancement during recent years, the present enrollment being 730 pupils, taught by twenty-three teachers, of whom there are 110 pupils in the high school taught by seven teachers. There are two well-located buildings, but lacking in capacity, and a new school building is the city's greatest need in an educational way. It is interesting to note that the number of high school pupils has about doubled in the last two years, whereas the entire enrollment has not increased to any material extent. Also whereas in former days it was quite common to issue numerous work permits, at this time there are only an inconsequential number being sought, thus indicating an increased interest in educational work on the part of both parents and pupils. Athletics to a reasonable extent are encouraged through a football team and both a male and female basketball team, and what is especially gratifying in this connection is that school athletics have become self-sustaining, citizens rendering enthusiastic support of every phase of such sport, realizing the many advantages resulting therefrom.

It is not assuming too much to say that the gentlemen composing the Board of Education of Chester are fully appreciative of modern methods and all hold advanced ideas tending to make the Chester schools second to none in the county or state for a city of like size.

On January 16, 1915, Mr. Robinson married Miss Gertrude Wherry, of Mansfield, Ohio; two children have blessed this union, John D. and Ruth G. The family are Presbyterians. Mr. Robinson is a member of the Masonic Order, holding membership at Bellville, Ohio.

CHESTER PLANT, AMERICAN SHEET & TUBE COMPANY. The development of an important industry in a community is an epitome of the growth of the locality itself, for a city is but an aggregation of industries about which gather a vast army of men with their families who are in some way connected with the carrying on of these business operations. The thriving community of Chester, Hancock County, owes its growth and prosperity principally to its manufacturing interests, and a typical branch of its business and one of the leading sources of its income is the Chester plant of the American Sheet and Tube Company.

This plant, the largest of Chester's industries, with 360 employees and an annual pay-roll of more than $900,000, produces a special line of black plate used for enameling and shipping milk and lyne cans, signs, stovepipes, stoves, metal furniture, asphalt containers, etc. The product meets with a splendid sale not only in this country, but abroad, and large shipments are made to numerous foreign countries, especially Japan, where the product is used for house roofing, bath tubs, etc.

T. R. Timothy, general manager of the Chester Plant of the American Sheet and Tube Company, was born in Armstrong County, Pennsylvania, and at the age of six years went to Wales with his parents, where he received a public school education, and as a youth applied himself to learning a useful trade. He joined the American Sheet and Tube Company at Wheeling, West Virginia, later transferred to Martins Ferry, Ohio, where he worked in the mill for four years, then spending a like period at Cambridge, Ohio, in a similar capacity. In 1895 he was transferred to Chester, where he worked his way up through the various positions until 1912, when he was made general manager. He has since remained in that capacity, and much of the success of this plant, which has shown a constant growth and development, can be accredited to his energy and ability. He is a director of the Hancock County Building and Loan Company and has a number of civic and social connections.

F. R. Timothy married Carrie Obermann, a native of Wheeling, West Virginia, and they are the parents of three children: Thomas C., Carrie M. and Charles Edward. The family are members of the Episcopal Church. Mr. Timothy is a member of Ohio Lodge No. 1, A. F. and A. M. of Wheeling, West Virginia, Wheeling Consistory No. 1, of Wheeling, West Virginia, and Osiris Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S., also the York Rite Order up to and including Wheeling Commandery No. 1, K. T.

CHESTER RUHL OGDEN, M. D., who is engaged in the practice of his profession in the City of Clarksburg, Harrison County, is a representative of a family whose name has been one of prominence and influence in American history since the early Colonial period. He is a direct descendant of John Ogden, who was born at Bradley Plain, Hampshire, England, September 19, 1609, and whose marriage to Jane Bond was recorded May 8, 1637. He became one of the founders of Southampton, Long Island, in 1640, and in 1642 was the builder of "Stone Church," the first church building erected on Manhattan Island. He founded Northampton in 1647, and in 1650 established the first whaling industry on Long Island. In 1664 he became the founder of historic old Elizabethtown, New Jersey, and in 1673 became governor of New Jersey, his death having occurred at Elizabethtown, in May, 1682. He was the first of the family in America.

Dr. Chester R. Ogden was born in Harrison County, West Virginia, November 9, 1873. His father, Robert S. Ogden, was born in this county November 9, 1836, was long a representative farmer of the county, besides having conducted a general merchandise store at Sardis for forty years, and he was eighty-three years of age at the time of his death, February 22, 1919. His father, Dr. William R. Ogden, was born in Maryland, in 1804, and became a pioneer physician in what is now Harrison County, West Virginia, he having been a son of Nathan Ogden, who likewise was a native of Maryland, and who was a direct descendant of David Ogden, the latter having been either a son or a grandson of John Ogden, the founder of the family in America. David Ogden came to this country with William Penn on "Ye Good Ship Welcome" and was a zealous member of the Society of Friends. Nathan Ogden became the pioneer representative of the family in the present Harrison County, West Virginia, where he made settlement near Shinnston. The family gave patriot soldiers to the Continental Line in the war of the Revolution, and in succeeding generations many members have been prominent in political, professional and business affairs in divers states of the Union.

Robert S. Ogden married Miss Jane Rittenhouse, who likewise was born and reared in Harrison County, a daughter of Bennett and Zilpha (Shinn) Rittenhouse, both the Rittenhouse and Shinn families having been early established in this county and the Town of Shinnston having been named in honor of the latter. The paternal grandmother of Doctor Ogden of this review was Mrs. Mary (Shinn) Ogden, and hence both of his grandmothers were representatives of the Shinn family, which is of English origin, as is also the Ogden family, the Rittenhouse family genealogy tracing back to staunch Holland Dutch origin. Mrs. Robert S. Ogden was fifty-six years of age at the time of her death, in 1900. The children, eight sons and three daughters, were reared at Sardis, where the family home was long established.

The preliminary education of Dr. Chester R. Ogden was obtained in the public schools of his native county, and in 1897 he was graduated from Salem College, with the degree of Bachelor of Science. For three years he was superintendent of the public school at Salem, and in 1897-8 he was a student in the University of West Virginia, where he completed his preparatory work leading up to that of his chosen profession. In 1902 he received from the University of Louisville, Kentucky, the degree of Doctor of Medicine, and in the following year he engaged in active general practice at Clarksburg. He has taken effective post-graduate courses, and since 1916 has specialized in surgery. He is a member of the Harrison County Medical Society, the West Virginia State Medical Society, the Mississippi Valley Medical Association and the American Medical Association, besides being a Fellow of the American College of Surgeons. The Doctor is a member of the surgical staff of St. Mary's Hospital in his home city, and is local surgeon for the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad. He has kept in the closest touch with advances made in medical and surgical science, and his contributions to various periodicals of his profession have been timely and well received. He is a democrat in political allegiance, and he and his wife are members of the Baptist and Methodist churches, respectively. Doctor Ogden is a Knight Templar and Scottish Rite Mason, a member of the Mystic Shrine, is affiliated also with the Elks and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and is a loyal and valued member of the local Kiwanis Club.

In the year 1902 was solemnized the marriage of Doctor Ogden and Miss Edna Elizabeth Louchery, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Daniel Carson Louchery, of Clarksburg, and the two children of this union are Mary Elizabeth and Virginia Jane.

MARSHALL A. MAXWELL, assistant to the president of the A. J. King coal interests, with headquarters at Huntington, is an electrical and mechanical engineer with twenty years of experience in mining and public utilities in different parts of the United States and Canada.

He was born at St. Stephen, New Brunswick, Canada, January 14, 1875, son of Joseph Henry and Emily (Andrews) Maxwell. Both parents were of United Empire Loyalist stock, the families being originally settled in Virginia and Connecticut. M. A. Maxwell was educated in the common and provincial normal schools, spent some time as a teacher, and in 1902 graduated from McGill University at Montreal with the degree Bachelor of Science in electrical and mechanical engineering.

The same year he moved to Easton, Pennsylvania, became assistant to the chief engineer of the Easton Power Company and was promoted to superintendent the same year. From 1904 to 1908 he was a member of the firm Beadle & Maxwell, consulting engineers, with office at 82 Beaver Street, New York. From 1908 to 1910 he was at Boston as general superintendent of the Massachusetts Lighting Companies, a group of gas and electric public service properties.

Going to Alberta in Northwest Canada in 1910, on account of his health, Mr. Maxwell formed the engineering and contracting firm of Maxwell & Mackenzie. This firm covered a broad and successful field of operations until the outbreak of the war, when the entire personnel enlisted with the Canadian Expeditionary Force except Mr. Maxwell, who was rejected on account of age and physical condition. While in Northwest Canada Mr. Maxwell was instrumental in the development and operation of the Round Hill Collieries, Limited, of which he was managing director, the Spicer Coal Company and the Stoney Creek Collieries, Limited, of Alberta, in all of which he is a large stockholder.

Mr. Maxwell in February, 1915, came to Logan, West Virginia, as general manager of the Logan County Light & Power Company, a corporation organized to supply electric power to the coal fields of Logan County and vicinity. This company was successfully developed, and was sold to the newly formed Kentucky and West Virginia Power Company in 1919. At that date Mr. Maxwell retired and has since been associated with A. J. King in the administration of coal properties, and is also interested in various other public service corporations.

Mr. Maxwell is an associate member of the American Institute of Electrical Engineers, the Engineering Institute of Canada, is an executive of the Kentucky and West Virginia Mine, Electrical and Mechanical Engineers, and is a member of fifteen years' standing on the Engineers Club of New York. He is a member of the Episcopal Church and the Masonic Order. In December, 1902, he married Edna Beatrice Clinch, of St. Andrews, New Brunswick.

JOHN R. SCHAEFFER. While a merchant for a number of years, John R. Schaeffer inherited the fine mechanical qualities of his forefathers, and probably his most distinguishing work has been in the field of photography. His artistry has served to give wide publicity to the wonderful scenery in his section of West Virginia. His home is in Gormaniana in Grant County, where the Schaeffers were among the first settlers.

However, he was born on a farm near Mount Storm in another part of Grant County, October 4, 1858. His great-grandfather, Adam Schaeffer, was a native of Germany, and after coming to the United States he settled in Preston County, in what is now West Virginia. His children were Abraham, Adam, Conrad, John, Jacob, Daniel, William, Mary, Catherine, Kate and Susan.

Of these children Jacob Schaeffer was born in Preston County in the year 1803. He grew up near Mount Carmel, and was one of eight brothers. He organized the first Sunday school in Preston County, at Mount Carmel, or Old Town, in 1825. Leaving that vicinity, he purchased land on the Potomac River, settled in the wilderness and built his cabin on what later became the townsite of Gormaniana. At that time this locality was in Hardy County. His was the first home erected in Gormaniana. He kept a tavern there and also worked as a mechanic and became the first postmaster. At that time the place was known as Schaeffersville. When he sold this place he returned to Preston County, where he died May 10, 1888. As a youth of seventeen he learned the trade of wheelwright at Cumberland, and subsequently worked as a cabinet maker. He was a real artist in the making of furniture. While at Cumberland he became acquainted with Miss Roseanna Eizenhart, whom he married. Their children were: George Adam, James Henry, Jacob Rhodes, William Franklin, Daniel Wesley, George and Samuel, twins, Francis Ashbury, Daniel Hess, Thomas Jefferson, Mary Ann Savilla Baxter, Martha Catherine Sophia, Harriet Elizabeth Priscilla, wife of John Ruckman of Gormaniana, and Martha C., who married Alexander Kitzmiller and now lives near Bayard, West Virginia.

Daniel Wesley Schaeffer was born on the farm that now includes the homesite of Gormaniana, January 5, 1836. He was a Southerner in sentiment at the time of the war, was a democrat, but two of his brothers were republicans and were Federal soldiers, one of them dying while a prisoner of war. Daniel W. Schaeffer left his birthplace during the Civil war and located near Mount Storm, where he continued farming until his death May 11, 1910. He was a Methodist and active in the formation of the society in the erection of a house of worship at Mount Storm. Daniel W. Schaeffer married Sarah Ann Shillingburg. Her father, Jacob Shillingburg, represented one of the old families in the Mount Storm vicinity, was born in 1807, and in 1830 married Polly Sollars. The children of D. W. Schaeffer and wife were: Mary Ellen, wife of David Aronhalt, of Mount Storm; John R.; Jacob Howard, of Mount Storm; Aliee Virginia, of Mount Storm; George Payton, of Petersburg, West Virginia; and Fannie Priscilla, wife of D. M. Uphole, of Mount Lake Park, Maryland.

John R. Schaeffer spent his boyhood and youth on the farm where he was born, attended common schools and summer normals, and at the age of twenty began teaching. That was his vocation for a period of seventeen years. Besides his work in Grant County he taught for a time in Carroll County, Missouri, and in Davis County, Iowa. At Bloomfield, Iowa, he attended and received the Master of Didactics degree from the Normal and Scientific College there. His last work as a teacher was done as principal of the Gormaniana schools in 1909. He early became a devotee of photography, and for a number of years has been in business as an artist and printer, taking photographs and enlarging pictures. As noted above, much of this work has been in the scenic field, and he has carried his camera over many of the stretches of scenery in Western Maryland and West Virginia. During the road contest staged by the United States Government when a prize was offered for the best picture of the best road in public use and also the worst one in public service, he won the second prize with a picture of a good road on the State Road of Maryland, and also that of the worst road, for which his subject was a stretch or the Northwestern Pike in Grant County. Mr. Schaeffer is author of the pictorial and historical work entitled: "From Baltimore to Charleston," issued in 1906, giving a history of the towns along the Western Maryland Railway. This is a splendid work of portraiture of the magnificent photography along the road and also the history of the highways and localities and something of their development.

In connection with his artistic vocation Mr. Schaeffer has developed a general merchandise business at Gormaniana, and has a prosperous store where he not only conducts his studio and handles photographic supplies, but also has a stock of jewelry and other commodities. He served Gormaniana two terms as postmaster, appointed by President Wilson, and was the successor of M. Aronhalt. He left that office in July, 1921. Mr. Schaeffer cast his first presidential vote for General Hancock in 1880, and has supported the democratic nominees at every subsequent election. He is a past grand of the local lodge of Odd Fellows, a member of the Junior Order United American Mechanics and is a Methodist.

H. M. Bateman

At Bedford, Pennsylvania, May 3, 1894, Mr. Schaeffer married Susie C. Miller, daughter of Charles Miller, who married a Miss Blackburn. Mr. and Mrs. Schaeffer have had seven children and several grandchildren. Their son Alonzo Victor lives in Garrett County, Maryland, and by his marriage to Floe Rider has three children, named Lillian, Ora May and John. William Newton, the second son, died in infancy. Edna D. is the wife of C. R. Haines, of Gorman, and their children are Winfred Wilson Randolph and Virginia Gertrude Dare. Miss Gustava M., the fourth child, is a nurse in the Washington Hospital at Washington, D. C. The other children are Charles Wesley, of Gorman, Paul E. and Ola Theresa Pettit.

BOYD RANDAL is one of the able school men of West Virginia, and to that profession, in his personal preparation and in the practical work of teaching and school administration, he has devoted all the years of his life since boyhood. Mr. Randal is now superintendent of the city schools of Salem.

He was born on a farm in Berkeley County, West Virginia, January 1, 1888, son of John Ferdinand and Imogene T. (Welshans) Randal, and grandson of James F. and Ann Maria (Onderdonk) Randal. The Randals are of English lineage. James F. Randal was a Confederate soldier. The maternal grandfather, Philip Henry Welshans, was of Holland Dutch descent, married Sarah Jane Mallory and spent his life in Berkeley County, where his daughter Imogene was born. John F. Randal and wife are still living, the former a retired farmer. Their three children were named Boyd, Eliza May and Maria Pauline.

Boyd Randal was reared on his father's farm in the eastern part of the state, attended rural schools there, and also Shepherd College State Normal, where he graduated in 1905. He took the regular course in West Virginia University, graduating A. B. in 1909. As a school man he has been a student constantly since leaving university, and in 1915 he was awarded the A. M. degree by Columbia University, and has taken several courses in the University of Chicago.

Mr. Randal was instructor of mathematics and physics for two years, beginning in 1909, in the public schools of Shuinston, thus doing his first practical educational work in Harrison County.

During 1911-12 he was instructor of mathematics and physics in Shepherd College State Normal, and in 1912 assisted in organizing and became principal of the Harpers Ferry District High School. He was connected with this high school for six years, and in 1918 became principal of the high school at Cairo, West Virginia, and from there in 1920 came to his present duties as superintendent of the city schools of Salem.

Mr. Randal is a member of the West Virginia State Educational Association and the National Educational Association, also the Monongahela Valley Educational Association. He is a Master Mason and a member of the Kiwanis Club, of Wild Life League and of the United Brethren Church.

In 1916 he married Miss Anna Morehead Miller. She was born in Berkeley County, West Virginia, graduated in 1915 from Shepherd College State Normal and during the following year was teacher in the Berkeley County rural schools. In 1919 she had special work in physical education and subsequently taught physical education for girls in the Cairo, West Virginia, public schools. Mr. and Mrs. Randal have one daughter, Keitha Anne.

ALEXANDER BISHOP is both vice president and cashier of the First National Bank of Williamson, county seat of Mingo County, of which he was one of the organizers, and is also secretary and treasurer of the War Eagle Coal Company and an official in several other coal producing companies, of minor order.

Mr. Bishop was born in Pike County, Kentucky, as were also his parents, Miles and Nancy Jane (Motney) Bishop. who still maintain their home in that county, where the father has long been a representative agriculturist and stock-grower. The father of Miles Bishop was born and reared in Ireland, and upon coming to America first settled in Virginia, whence he later removed to Kentucky and became a substantial farmer in Pike County. The Motney family was founded in Virginia in the Colonial period of our national history.

Alexander Bishop, the eldest in a family of eight sons and six daughters, was reared on the old home farm, gained his early education in the rural schools and later continued his studies two years in the Presbyterian College at Pikeville, Kentucky. In his youth he applied himself vigorously to farm work and logging, and in 1895 he left college to become a traveling salesman for a wholesale shoe house. About one year later he accepted the position of general manager of the mercantile establishment of Varney, Williamson & Company at Williamson, West Virginia, and in 1899 he entered the employ of the Williamson Bank, of which he served as bookkeeper and assistant cashier until June 1, 1903, when the bank liquidated its business and passed out of existence. Mr. Bishop then became associated with other representative business men in the organization of the First National Bank of Williamson, of which he was elected cashier, an office of which he has continued the efficient and valued incumbent to the present time, besides which he is serving also as vice president of the institution, to the upbuilding of whose substantial business he has contributed in large measure. He has become one of the leading business men and most loyal and progressive citizens of Williamson, and his capitalistic interests include his connection with coal-mining industry in this section of the state, as intimated in the opening paragraph of this review.

Mr. Bishop was elected a member of the County Court of Mingo County, has been its president since 1918, and his present term will expire in 1923. He served about ten years as a member of the city council, and has been at all times an apostle of progressiveness in community affairs. He is an active member of the local Kiwanis Club, is affiliated with O'Brien Lodge No. 101, Free and Accepted Masons, is a democrat in politics, and both he and his wife are members of the Presbyterian Church in their home city.

Mr. Bishop married Jane Maynard, who was born in and is a representative of one of the oldest and most honored families of Pike County, Kentucky, and the two children of this union are: Elwyn, who was born August 28, 1900; and Mary June, who was born May 22, 1920.

HOWARD MARSHALL BATSON, M. D. One of the best equipped physicians and surgeons in the state is Dr. Howard Marshall Batson of Mannington. Doctor Batson for a number of years was physician and surgeon to mining and other industrial corporations in West Virginia. He was one of the few men members of the Medical Corps from West Virginia who had front line duty in France during the World war, and it was after more than two years of army service that he established his home and office at Mannington.

Doctor Batson was born in Mannington District, on a farm in Marion County, October 26, 1878, son of Elias and Virginia (Hunter) Batson, also natives of Marion County. His grandfather, Eli Batson, was an early settler here. Elias Batson was born in 1850, and followed a varied career of farming, railroading, sawmilling, and again as a farmer, and died November 2, 1910, while his wife was born in 1857 and died in 1896.

Doctor Batson grew up on a farm, acquired a district school education, attended the Barrickville Normal School during 1896-97, and was a student in the Fairmont State Normal in 1898. He took the regular course in the Medical College of Virginia at Richmond during 1902-06, graduating in the latter year. He then located at Paden City in Wetzel County, but the following year removed to Nicholas County, and for seven years was physician to mining and lumber companies. For three years he had a mining practice in Kanawha County.

On August 6, 1917, Doctor Batson volunteered for the Army Medical Corps and was commissioned a first lieutenant, August 18th. He was sent to Camp Greenleaf, Fort Oglethorpe, Georgia, where he was assigned to the Medical Corps, Fourth Division, Regular Army, was then taken to Camp Greene, North Carolina, and on April 28, 1918, with the Fourth Division, started for Long Island, New York, and on the 10th of May sailed for France, reaching Brest, May 24th. In France he was attached to the Second Battalion, Thirty-ninth Infantry of the Regular Army, and from that time until the signing of the armistice was with his command, altogether in front line duty, having no assignment to base hospitals. He participated in the Aisne-Marne defensive, the Aisne-Marne offensive, in the course of which, on August 30, 1918, he was promoted and commissioned captain. He was in the St. Mihiel campaign and the Meuse-Argonne battlefield. After the signing of the armistice his command was part of the Army of Occupation, and he was at Coblenz, Andranach, Sinzig, Oberwinter, Neuenache, Adenau and other towns. Doctor Batson left the Rhine July 22, 1919, landed at Hoboken, August 6, 1919, and received his honorable discharge from the service, August 27th, at Camp Lee, Virginia.

Soon after leaving the army Doctor Batson established his home at Mannington, where his abilities have gained him recognition as one of the ablest physicians and surgeons of the county.

Doctor Batson is commander of Charles Millan Post No. 40, of the American Legion and at Morriston is affiliated with the Masonic Order, Knights of Pythias, Elks, Modern Woodmen of America and the Maccabees. He married Miss Anna G. Butler, a native of Richmond, Virginia, and daughter of Robert S. and Alice Butler. They have three children: Anna V., born in 1904; Pearley M., born in 1908; and Howard M., Jr., born in 1910.

WILLIAM THURMOND HARVEY. An electrical engineer by training and profession, Mr. Harvey is also a coal mining expert, and for the past ten years has carried some important responsibilities in the mining district of Logan County. He came to this field in 1913, and had the task of opening Argyle Mine No. 1, and also the mine of the Thurmond Coal Company in 1917. He is now general superintendent for the Argyle Coal Company's Mine No. 1 on Rum Creek, and No. 2 on Dingess Run, and the Thurmond Coal Company's property at Dabney at the mouth of Rum Creek.

Mr. Harvey was born April 16, 1888, in Fayette County, West Virginia, on the farm of his parents, John W. and Lucy A. (Thurmond) Harvey. His father was born in Appomattox County, Virginia, and was a boy when his people came to West Virginia. He was a farmer in Fayette County, where he died in 1907, at the age of fifty-four. In politics he was a democrat. His wife was born in 1861 at Oak Hill in Fayette County, daughter of Capt. W. D. Thurmond.

William Thurmond Harvey attended school in Fayette County, including the Oak Hill High School, and he secured his technical education in the Virginia Polytechnic Institute at Blacksburg, where he graduated in the electrical engineering course in 1911. He was one of the graduates selected to an apprenticeship and practical course in the shops of the General Electric Company at Lynn, Massachusetts, where he went through the shop routine and a course of instruction as a student engineer. On account of the proficiency he showed and his evident qualifications he was selected for the purpose of performing the duties of opening mines and acting as superintendent in the West Virginia coal fields.

On October 6, 1920, Mr. Harvey married Helen Lindsay Barger, daughter of Capt. David H. Barger, now of Shawsville, Virginia, but who formerly was extensively interested in the Pocahontas coal fields. Mr. and Mrs. Harvey have established connections with churches in Logan, Baptist and Presbyterian, respectively. He is affiliated with Aracoma Lodge No. 99, A. F. and A. M., at Logan, Logan Chapter, R. A. M., Huntington Commandery, K. T., West Virginia Consistory of the Scottish Rite at Wheeling, and the Charleston Temple of the Shrine. In politics he is a democrat.

NOAH Q. SPEER is to be credited with the development of one of the important industrial enterprises of Morgan County, that of producing the remarkably superior white sand for which the county has become noted, his research and investigation having led to the discovery of what is conceded to be the best quality of all the varied sands of this section. He is one of the progressive business men and representative citizens of Berkeley Springs, the county seat, and is specially entitled to recognition in this history.

Mr. Speer was born in Rostraver Township, Westmoreland County, Pennsylvania, near Belle Vernon, on the 7th of August, 1837, and in the same county his father, Louis Marchand Speer, was born in the year 1810, a son of Noah Speer. Noah Speer purchased a tract of land in Fayette and Westmoreland counties, Pennsylvania, and thereon laid out the present town of Belle Vernon, developed a fine farm estate, and became a successful agriculturist and stock-grower. He eventually sold a part of his land to John Gibson, who there established a distillery and also platted and developed the town of Gibsonton. Noah Speer met his death in an accident when he was sixty-three years of age. He married Nancy Frye, a representative of an old Virginia family, and their son Louis M. was reared on the home farm, his educational advantages having been those of the common schools of the locality and period. Louis M. Speer acquired a tract of land just to the east of Belle Vernon, and on this land he developed a productive sand bank. He became a successful boat-builder on the Monongahela River, and continued his residence in his native county until his death, at the age of seventy-three years. His wife, whose maiden name was Jane Finley, likewise was born and reared in Westmoreland County, a daughter of William and Margaret (Wilson) Finley, and a granddaughter of Rev. James Finley, who was the first Presbyterian clergyman to cross the Allegheny Mountains and whose brother, Samuel, was the first president of the College of the State of New Jersey, now known as Princeton University. William Finley passed his entire life in Westmoreland County and was a farmer by vocation. Mrs. Jane (Finley) Speer died at the age of forty-four years, her children having been seven in number: William Finley, Noah Q., Margaretta, Mary, Celia, James Rowland and Louis Edgar.

Noah Q. Speer attended the common schools of his native county, and after a preparatory course in Dunlap Creek Academy he entered Washington College, in which he completed a course of higher study. He then became manager of his father's sand business, and in this connection he invented a machine to supplant the old-time method of washing and otherwise cleaning of sand by hand. The machine which he thus invented is still widely employed in connection with sand production. With the increasing demand for a better quality of commercial sand Mr. Speer made explorations and soon found sand rock of the desired type at Layton Station, on the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, in Pennsylvania. He there worked the sand quarry until the deposit was exhausted, and then came to Morgan County, West Virginia, and opened, near Haneock, the first sand quarry and plant in the county. Since that time other quarries have here been developed, and the mountain which had seemed valueless at the time when he initiated operations has since yielded immense quantities of the best quality of sand, for which there has been a ready market at all times.

In 1876, while making explorations at Martinsburg, Berkeley County, Mr. Speer discovered limestone which he knew would be of great value in connection with the manufacturing of steel. He associated himself with John J. Hohlitzell in the building of a kiln and the burning of lime, the product being sold to steel manufacturers. This was the initiation of the new important lime-rock industry in Berkeley County. After operating his sand quarry near Haneock a few years Mr. Speer opened a quarry in the Juniata District of Pennsylvania. The financial panic of 1893 brought to him utmost disaster in connection with his business operations, and he was compelled to start anew. He then engaged in the selling of supplies to glass manufacturers, with an office in the City of Pittsburgh.

After about five years he became manager of the American Window Glass Company's sand plant at Wolcott, Indiana, and also the sand plants of the same corporation at Derry and Mapleton, Pennsylvania. He continued his connection with this corporation five years, and in 1905 he returned to Morgan County, West Virginia, and established the Speer White Sand Works near Berkeley Springs. This plant is still in successful operation. After operating the plant about three years Mr. Speer sold the property and business and developed the sand plant at Great Cacapon in Morgan County, West Virginia, a property now owned and operated by the Hazel Atlas Glass Company, and while he has since lived nominally retired, his vital energy and progressiveness have not permitted him to be idle. Realizing that sand was being transported hundreds of miles to the factories, Mr. Speer instituted explorations in Virginia and West Virginia with the purpose of discovering productive fields nearer the manufacturing centers. The result of his investigations is that he has secured three miles of Bratton's Mountain land, near Goshen, Rockbridge County, on which he has developed an immense deposit of glass sand convenient for shipment by the Chesapeake & Ohio Railway. Mr. Speer has been one of the world's productive workers, a captain of industry, a man of thought crystallized into action. He has achieved much and has at all times guided his course along the line of invincible integrity and fairness, with the result that he commands the high regard of all who know him. He is a member of the Presbyterian Church.

In 1860 was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Speer and Miss Alline Bugher, who was born in Fayette County, Pennsylvania, a daughter of Aaron and Rachel (Farquhar) Bugher. To Mr. and Mrs. Speer were born eight children, namely: James Howard, Martha Jane (Mrs. William P. Leggett), Louis Marchand, Frances (Mrs. Frances Speer Reed), Hamilton Bugher, Annie (Mrs. William B. Lambing), Cecil Alline (Mrs. John A. Proctor) and Noah Q., Jr.

AARON EDSON ALTIZER, M. D. Altizer is one of the oldest family names in the Buffalo Valley District of Logan County. During the past seventy years the business interests of the family have been chiefly engaged in farming and the timber and logging industry there. Doctor Altizer had some rugged experience as a boy in the timber, and since qualified for his profession has done an extensive practice, chiefly around the mines that have developed within his lifetime along this valley. His home is at Accoville.

Doctor Altizer was born on a farm that included ground on which the later town and now thriving little City of Man is located, near the mouth of Buffalo Creek. He was born there November 19, 1882, son of Joseph and Nancy (White) Altizer, and grandson of Aaron and Sarah Altizer. His grandfather came from Virginia to Logan County in 1858. Aaron Altizer is now ninety-eight years of age. He has been a witness of and a contributing factor in the development of this valley for seventy years. Soon after coming here he bought a large tract of land at the mouth of the Buffalo. This land was covered with heavy timber, and his labors cleared up a farm there. His active years were devoted to the timber business and farming. Aaron Altizer has been an influence for good in this locality. He has been a man of temperate habits, which no doubt accounts for his long life, and he has also been satisfied with the simple life, producing most of the food that supplied his table, including milk, butter and honey, and has kept up with the march of events by constant reading, so that he is well informed not only on local history, but on the history of the world and topics of the day. He was a Confederate soldier and a prisoner of war. His service was with a Virginia regiment. In politics he has a rather independent choice in casting his vote. The large tract of land he formerly owned he finally sold for $15,000, but it is now worth many times that figure. The town of Man was built on this land, and he was the first postmaster of the village and served as justice of the peace and at different times was a member of the local school board. His great age is not exceptional in his family, since he had an older brother in Virginia to reach the age of ninety-eight years. After the death of his first wife Aaron Altizer married Mary Aliff, of Roanoke County, Virginia, and she died in 1907. He now lives with his son Charles at Kistler, a mining village also built on part of the Altizer farm.

Joseph Altizer, father of Doctor Altizer, was one of a family of nine sons and two daughters. He was born in 1843 in Montgomery County, Virginia, and was ten years of age when the family came to Logan County. He devoted his life to the lumber business and farming, and died on March 10, 1911. He was a Baptist and a democrat. His wife, Nancy White, was a daughter of Green White, and she is now sixty-five years of age. They had a family of seven sons and two daughters: George W., a merchant and justice of the peace at Accoville; D. K., a lumberman and dealer in railroad ties and timber, living at Huntington; Aaron E. and Bruce, twins, Bruce being yard master for the Chesapeake & Ohio at Logan; Walter, in the mines at Kistler; Ellen, wife of Thomas Perry, of Kistler; Julius, who lives with his mother at Kistler; Lona, wife of Beverly Burke, of Kistler; and Cecil, at home.

Aaron Edson Altizer had a happy boyhood on the old farm long before any railroad was in the vicinity or any of the mines opened along the valley. He worked in the timber, and helped pilot many log rafts down the Guyandotte River. He attended school at Man, and during 1905-07 was a student in Marshall College at Huntington. At the age of twenty he began teaching, his first school being at Olive on Island Creek in Logan County. He taught a number of terms, aggregating fifty-two months altogether. As a teacher he made the money that put him through medical college at the University of Louisville, entering that school in 1907 and graduating in 1910. While there he specialized in children's diseases. He had work in the Louisville City Hospital in 1911, 1920 and 1922, and then returned to Man and began practice. Almost from the beginning much of his practice has been in the mining towns. In 1916 he moved to Accoville, where he has charge of the medical practice for the mines owned by the Litz-Smith, the Deegan Eagle, the Arthur D. Cronin companies. He is president of the Triadelphia District School Board and many of the modern school buildings have been erected under his supervision. He is associated in membership with various medical societies.

In 1911 Doctor Altizer married Elsie Burgess, daughter of C. A. Burgess, of Man. Their four children are Boyd Delmont, Aaron Edson, Jr., Vera Vane, and Joseph Cornelius. Doctor Altizer is a trustee of the Methodist Church. He is affiliated with the Lodge and Chapter of Masonry at Logan, the Knight Templar Commandery at Charleston, the Shrine at Charleston, and the Scottish Rite degrees in Wheeling.

ARTHUR ARNOLD. The prosecuting attorney, Arthur Arnold, is one of the able, resourceful and aggressive members of the Mineral County bar, and one who has taken a leading part in all of the important, first-class litigation in his native county. He has devoted himself, his capabilities and skill, to the practice of his chosen profession, and not only has built up a very large and valuable connection, but has been called upon to occupy positions of trust and responsibility by his fellow citizens.

The birth of Arthur Arnold took place at Piedmont, Mineral County, West Virginia, where he still maintains his residence, September 21, 1884. He is a son of Stewart B. and Hannah (Elliott) Arnold. Stewart B. Arnold was born in the Valley of Virginia, near Winchester, and was there reared and educated. Prior to his marriage he came into West Virginia and established himself in a mercantile business at Piedmont. Here he continued to conduct a general store and deal in meat and cattle upon an extensive scale. His death occurred in 1887 when he was only forty years of age. He was married at Piedmont, and his wife was a daughter of James B. and Jane (Sewell) Elliott. Mrs. Elliott was born in England, was there married and came to the United States, with her husband locating at Piedmont, West Virginia, in 1850. Her husband, James

B. Elliott, aided in the construction of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad as an engineer, with which organization he was connected until his death. While he was not identified in a military sense with either side during the war of the '60s, his sympathies and those of the Elliott family were with the North, and it was under this influence that Arthur Arnold was reared, his father having died when the son was only two years of age. The Arnolds were Southern sympathizers, and one of the brothers of Stewart B. Arnold was in the Confederate service, and a sister, Laura Arnold, took a very active part in the conflict, being a trusted messenger for the Confederacy, operating in the Valley of Virginia. Stewart B. Arnold and his wife had the following children: Arthur, whose name heads this review; and Miss Stewart E., who is one of the popular and efficient educators of the Piedmont schools, being principal of the Piedmont High School.

Arthur Arnold attended the Piedmont schools through the high-school course, and then entered the University of West Virginia, where he took up law, history and literature, and was graduated from the legal department in the spring of 1906. During the time he was attending the university he was a member of the Glee Club, and belongs to the Pi Kappa Alpha fraternity.

Upon completing his law course Mr. Arnold was admitted to practice in the Circuit Court of Mineral County, and in the fall of 1906 established his law office at Piedmont, which is five miles from Keyser, the county seat. Subsequently he opened another office at Keyser, and maintains both. He tried his first Circuit Court case in Keyser, but since then has had cases outside of the county, for his skill, determination and fearlessness have brought him many clients from a wide area. Mr. Arnold has never taken a partner, preferring to practice alone, and he has concentrated his attention upon his professional work. In 1909 Mr. Arnold was chief clerk of the Judiciary Committee of the State Senate, and in 1910 was appointed prosecuting attorney of Mineral County by Judge F. M. Reynolds to fill out the unexpired term of A. J. Welton. With the expiration of that period Mr. Arnold retired to private life, but in November, 1920, was elected to the same office. Since assuming the duties of this office Mr. Arnold has had ample opportunity of not only proving his ability as an attorney but his worth as a citizen. He has done both, and is giving the people a service which is marked by its stern pursuit of evildoers and its unflinching insistence upon equal rights for all classes.

In politics a republican, Mr. Arnold cast his first presidential ballot for William H. Taft, but long before that, during his minority, made himself useful on behalf of his party, and was active in the interests of the party which he had already selected for his own, his mother and her immediate relatives being ardent republicans. He has been a delegate from Piedmont to every republican convention held in the county, district and state, since he attained his majority. At different times he has been a member of the Mineral County Republican Committee, and managed numerous campaigns in the county. As a member of the State Senatorial and Second Congressional District committees of his party he has also rendered yeoman service, and he has been one of the effective campaign speakers for years. Fraternally Mr. Arnold maintains membership with the Knights of Pythias. He is a communicant of the Episcopal church, and was reared in its faith.

On June 26, 1918, Mr. Arnold married at Piedmont, West Virginia, by Rev. Mr. Ronalds Taylor, rector of the Episcopal Church at that place, Mrs. Mabel (Shook) Long, a daughter of the late Maj. E. H. Shook, a Union veteran of the Michigan Volunteer Infantry, with an enviable war record. He was born in New York State, but was taken to Michigan by his parents, and was reared at Mount Clemens and Detroit. Following the close of the Civil war Major Shook was employed by the Government, and he came to Piedmont with the United States postal card factory after the Spanish-American war, and was in the Government service until his death. Both he and his wife are buried at Mount Clemens, Michigan. Mrs. Arnold is the younger of two children, the elder being Mrs. Mira Gore, of Detroit, Michigan. Mr. and Mrs. Arnold have no children. In every respect Mr. Arnold measures up to the highest standards of American citizenship, and the future looks very bright for him. His fellow citizens realize that no matter what honors may be bestowed upon this talented young attorney they will be deserved, and that he will prove capable of discharging greater responsibilities if called upon to do so, for his is a character which expands under the stress of demand.

CHARLES C. ROBISON. In preparing a review of the prominent men of West Virginia whose careers have been devoted to persistent effort, and who through pluck and ability of a high order have battered down the obstacles which ever stand in the path of the ambitious and risen to positions of distinction, the record of Charles C. Robison, treasurer and general manager of the Morgantown Lumber Company, and president for 1920, 1921 and 1922 of the Morgantown Chamber of Commerce, is one that is worthy of more than passing mention. Mr. Robison is one who essentially belongs to the men of action of his state, and that he has not overlooked his opportunities is shown in what he has accomplished. His success has been the natural sequence of the logical unfolding and development of his native powers, and close application, indefatigable energy, integrity and determination have constituted the foundation of his achievements.

Mr. Robison was born July 25, 1886, on the home farm near Stewartstown in Union District, Monongalia County, West Virginia, and is a son of the late James and Sarah Jane (Hare) Robison, natives of Grant and Union districts, respectively, the former of whom died in 1894 and the latter in 1909. Mr. Robison remained on the home farm until he reached his fifteenth year, and in the meantime attended the district schools. In 1902 he entered the employ of Robe & Rightmire, cabinet makers of Morgantown, which firm later became merged into that of Chaplin, Warman & Rightmire Company, a concern with which the youth was connected until the plant was destroyed by fire and the company went out of business. He next became one of the organizers and secretary-treasurer of the General Woodworking Company, but sold his interests in that company in 1915 and became treasurer of the Monongahela Supply Company, in which concern he had previously acquired an interest, and of which he continues treasurer. In August, 1920, he took charge as vice president of the Seaman Mill & Lumber Company, which was later reorganized as the Morgantown Lumber Company, of which he has since been treasurer and general manager. He is a member of the Board of Directors and of the Executive Committee of the Union Savings and Trust Company and has various other important business interests.

Mr. Robison joined the West Virginia National Guard in 1904, and rose to the rank of captain. In 1916 he was selected by the United States War Department and sent to the Mexican border as assistant chief of staff of the Fourteenth Division, and as such was in active service on the border for four months. He returned to his home in the early part of December, 1916. On March 28, 1917, he was ordered to duty by the War Department and placed in command of Company L, First West Virginia Infantry, mobilizing at Fairmont, West Virginia, and six days later was ordered to Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, in which city he took charge of the Pittsburgh Storage and Supply Depot, a branch of the Philadelphia Depot, U. S. A. On July 23, 1917, he was ordered back to Fairmont, and then ordered to Fort Sill, Oklahoma, to take a course of training in building fortifications in the engineering department, a school of arms. Upon the completion of his course he was given the best grade to be obtained and given credentials as an instructor. He was then ordered to report for duty to the Thirty-eighth Division, then being formed at Camp Shelby, near Hattiesburg, Mississippi, where he was assigned to duty with the 150th Regiment of Infantry, and was also instructor in the Division Engineering School, where he continued until August 1, 1918. At that time he was commissioned major and assigned to the Eighty-fourth Infantry, stationed at Fort Beauregard, Louisiana, at which camp he was on duty in different capacities (at one time being in command of the regiment) until February 9, 1919, at which time he was honorably discharged at his own request. Before the signing of the armistice Major Robison made application to the adjutant-general's department for overseas duty, but this was refused for the reason that his services were needed in the capacity in which he was acting. He was recommended to be retained in commission after the close of the war, but retired to his home and his business interests. Major Robison organized the ex-soldiers of Monongalia County who had returned from war into a post, of which he was made commander, and this post joined the American Legion. He served as commander for two terms, and also was a member of the Executive Committee of the West Virginia State American Legion, which he helped to organize.

Mr. Robison was elected president of the Morgantown Business Men's Association in the early summer of 1919, and in the same year was active in the organization of the Morgantown Chamber of Commerce, of which he was elected president. He has continued in office to the present. With his family he belongs to the Methodist Protestant Church. As a fraternalist he holds membership in the local lodges of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks and the Knights of Pythias.

On November 7, 1912, Mr. Robison married Miss Goldie M. Pixler, daughter of J. C. and Addie Pixler, of Morgantown, and to this union there have come a son and daughter: James C., born November 10, 1914; and Dorothy Grace, born September 4, 1918.

CLIFFORD STARR MUSSER. In the mutations incident to the solid development of any community there is urgent need of men of wisdom, of strength of character and even of genius in their chosen lines of endeavor, and this applies particularly to the newspaper field, the journals of a locality generally reflecting the character and to some extent influencing the course of the people. In the person of Clifford Starr Musser the thriving City of Shepherdstown has a man who possesses the qualities noted above. As publisher and editor of the Shepherdstown Independent he has done much to aid his community and its people, and in business circles, as secretary of the Shepherdstown Chamber of Commerce and secretary of the Morgan Grove Fair Association, has likewise contributed to the progress of the place of his adoption.

Mr. Musser was born at Gettysburg, Pennsylvania, August 5, 1878, and is a son of Charles Edward Musser. His grandfather, Charles Musser, served in a Pennsylvania volunteer infantry regiment of the Union Army during the Civil war, and was captured by the enemy and incarcerated in Libby Prison. Escaping therefrom, he made his way to his home, but his experiences had been such that he died two weeks later.

Charles Edward Musser served an apprenticeship to the printer's trade in the office of the Times-Star at Gettysburg, Pennsylvania, and for a time published the Mount Holly Echo, at Mount Holly Springs, that state. He is now superintendent of printing of the York (Pennsylvania) Printing Company. Mr. Musser married Amanda Elizabeth Green, who was born near Fredericksburg, Virginia. Her father, Captain Green, commanded a company of Virginia volunteer infantry in the Confederate Army during the war between the states, and was killed while leading his command in a valiant charge at the battle of the Wilderness. Mrs. Charles E. Musser died at the age of forty-four years, leaving three children: Edna May, who became the wife of Edward Burnaier; Charles Edward, Jr., who is a machinist and linotype operator and now superintendent of printing of the Charleston (South Carolina) Observer; and Clifford Starr.

Clifford Starr Musser attended the public schools of Harrisburg and Mount Holly Springs, Pennsylvania, following which he served an apprenticeship to the printer's trade with the Mount Holly Printing Company. After being with that concern for five years he was with the Atlantic City Press as foreman for seven years, and in 1906 came to Shepherdstown and established the Independent, a weekly newspaper which is devoted to the interests of the entire people and which upholds the principles of the republican party. Mr. Musser presents to his readers an attractive weekly, with authentic news, interesting local items, timely and well-written editorials and other matter of interest, and the publication enjoys a large circulation not only at Shepherdstown but throughout the surrounding countryside. As before noted, he is secretary of the local chamber of commerce and of the Morgan Grove Fair Association, and takes an active part in all movements affecting the welfare of the community. He is also well known in fraternal circles, being a thirty-two degree Mason, and holding membership in the following: Mount Nebo Lodge No. 91, A. F. and A. M.; Mecklenburg Chapter, R. A. M.; Martinsburg Lodge of Perfection No. 7; Charlevoix Chapter No. 1, Rose Croix; Albert Pike Council, Knights of Kadosh No. 1; and West Virginia Consistory, all of the Masonic fraternity; Caledonia Lodge, I. O. O. F., of which he is a past noble grand; and Washington Lodge No. 8, P. O. S. of A., of which he is a past president and past state officer; and former editor and publisher of the West Virginia Patriot, a monthly journal he founded devoted to the interests of this order.

On May 10, 1922, he assumed the postmastership of Shepherdstown after being appointed by President Warren G. Harding and confirmed by the United States Senate, and is giving to this office a business administration that insures the patrons of this office not only the best of service, but one that will reflect credit upon the incumbent.

On October 5, 1899, Mr. Musser was united in marriage with Miss Ada Florence Wilson, who was born at Shepherdstown, daughter of Nelson and Mary Ellen Wilson. To this union there have been born two sons: Nelson and William Freeston.

DR. GIDEON THOMAS PLUMMER has had an unusual range of experience as a medical man in the forty odd years he has practiced in West Virginia and elsewhere. For nearly thirty years his home and work have been in Grant County, at the Town of Bayard.

When Doctor Plummer came to Bayard in 1894 it was a new lumber town. The Buffalo Creek Lumber Company had a large mill and a small one operating, and these mills and this large force of men were rapidly beginning the process of stripping the hills and valleys of the fine spruce and the hemlock which hardwood nature had placed there. Doctor Plummer has witnessed the passing of the lumber resources from this particular locality, and in place of the saw mills mining has become the typical industry, and he witnessed the opening of the first mines.

Doctor Plummer was born at Piedmont, in what was then Hampshire, but is now Mineral County, on March 24, 1859. His father, Patrick Plummer, was born at Summerhill in Cambria County, Pennsylvania, of Pennsylvania-Dutch stock, and became a locomotive engineer of the Baltimore and Ohio Railway before the Civil war, establishing his headquarters at Piedmont in 1853. He continued in the service of this company until his death on August 28, 1889, at the age of fifty-nine years, eleven months and ten days. He was a strong Southern man, and would have joined the Confederate Army had he been called to service. He was a democrat and a member of the Catholic Church. Patrick Plummer married Susanna Paxton at Piedmont. She was born August 1, 1840, daughter of Joseph Paxton, who was born in October, 1793, and died at Piedmont. Mrs. Paxton was born May 22, 1802, and is also buried at Piedmont. Susanna Plummer died at Newburg, June 14, 1904, and is buried beside her husband. Her children were: Laura A., born July 5, 1857, living at Grafton, widow of James Flanagan; Dr. Gideon T.; William, born March 19, 1861, and died June 12, 1862; George McClellan, born April 9, 1863, and died January 10, 1879; Anna, born November 3, 1865, wife of Michael Maloney, of Newburg; Catherine, born January 17, 1868, wife of G. A. Frey, of Fairmont; Mollie, born February 27, 1870, wife of John Burk, a locomotive engineer of Newburg; Frank, born May 27, 1875, of Homestead, Pennsylvania; Charles E., born March 23, 1878, a locomotive engineer, living at Newburg; May, born January 12, 1881, wife of Charles Warnick, of Newburg; Edith, born May 15, 1883, wife of William B. Annan, a Newburg druggist.

Doctor Plummer spent most of his useful years at Newburg in Preston County, attended the public schools there, and for a time did work as a laborer during the construction of the double track of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad. He also worked at the round house and the machine shop at Newburg. At the age of seventeen he had made a definite selection of medicine as his life work, and he began his reading under the direction of Dr. William M. Dent of Newburg. Subsequently he entered the College of Physicians and Surgeons at Baltimore, and completed his medical course in 1881. Soon afterward he began practice at Rowlesburg in Preston County, a year later moved to Simpson in Taylor County, and leaving there went to Utica, Nebraska, and had charge of a drug store as prescription clerk for a year. Then, following a visit back home, he located at Arapahoe, Nebraska, and practiced medicine and acted as prescription clerk in a drug store. On returning from the West, Doctor Plummer practiced for over a year at Fellowsville in Preston County, and then in the nearby Town of Austin, and subsequently practiced at Newburg and at Corinth.

In 1894 he came to Bayard, establishing his home in that village on July 10th, and his skill and abilities as a physician and his public spirit as a physician have been constantly at the service of the community. Doctor Plummer is the present mayor of Bayard, and several times served on the council and as town recorder. He is a democrat and is affiliated with the Fraternal Order of Eagles and the Knights of Columbus. During the World war he was a member of the Medical Reserve Corps, but his duty was in his home community. He was also treasurer of the Bayard branch of the Red Cross.

At Newburg, September 28, 1887, Doctor Plummer married Alice Golden, who was born in July, 1858, daughter of William and Mary (Sherwood) Golden. Doctor and Mrs. Plummer have one daughter, Mary Susan.

WILLIAM COLUMBUS GRIMES, who is established in the practice of his profession at Keyser, judicial center of Mineral County, has to his credit a record that places him among the representative members of the bar of his native state and that marks him as one of the progressive and public-spirited citizens of this commonwealth.

Mr. Grimes was born in Tyler County, West Virginia, December 5, 1876, and is a son of Jacob C. and Cora V. (Haines) Grimes, the former of whom was born in Belmont County, Ohio, December 6, 1852, and the latter of whom was born in what is now Tyler County, West Virginia, where their marriage was solemnized and where they still reside on their farm near Sistersville. Of their children William C., of this review, is the eldest; Samuel A. resides at Sistersville and is a rural mail carrier, as is also his next younger brother, John R.; Agatha is the wife of Brice Welling, of Tyler County; and James R. remains at the parental home. Jacob C. Grimes is a republican, is a loyal and public-spirited citizen, and he and his wife hold membership in the Christian Church. He is a son of John C. and Nancy (Bishop) Grimes, the former a native of Chillicothe, Ohio, and the latter of Pennsylvania, the death of both having occurred near Barnesville, Ohio. Their children were six in number: Isaac (a loyal soldier of the Union in the Civil war), George W., Jacob C., Henry, Alonzo and Julia (Mrs. Dallas Baer).

Rearred on the home farm and afforded the advantages of the public schools of his native county, William C. Grimes advanced his education by a course in the Ohio Northern University at Ada, Ohio. At the age of nineteen years he engaged in teaching school in Tyler County, West Virginia, and he had successfully taught for six or more terms prior to completing his course in the university at Ada, Ohio. Thereafter he did effective post-graduate work in the University of West Virginia, and after thoroughly fortifying himself for the legal profession he was admitted to the bar and in 1904 engaged in the practice of law at Cameron, Marshall County. He tried there his first case in the Circuit Court, at Moundsville, and there he built up a substantial and important law business. In 1912 he removed to Keyser, and here his practice has been of broad scope and representative order, extending into adjoining counties and also into the courts of Maryland. He has presented a number of important cases in the West Virginia Supreme Court as well as in the Federal Courts of the state. Among leading causes with which he has been associated as counsel in presentation before the Supreme Court may be noted the prosecution of Weisengoff for the killing of the sheriff of Mineral County; the State of West Virginia versus Payne, indicted for criminal libel, in which he represented the defendant and secured his acquittal; a case which originated in Grant County and in which he represented the plaintiff in a civil suit for damages for the abduction of a child—the first suit of the kind in the state—this case having been carried to the Supreme Court, where the case was remanded for trial.

Mr. Grimes has never faltered in his allegiance to the republican party from the time of casting his first presidential vote. His first public office was that of mayor of Cameron. In 1908 he was elected state senator from the Second District, comprising Marshall, Wetzel and Tyler counties. In the Senate he was made chairman of the committee on public buildings and humane institutions, and a member of the judiciary and other important committees. He was the author of the first bill presented to regulate automobile traffic on the public highways of the state, championed the primary-election law, the employers' liability act, the depletion tax on natural resources, and secured an appropriation for the purchase of the historic mound at Moundsville, to be developed as a state park. In his term of four years he was active and influential on the floor of the Senate and in the deliberations of the committee room. He was also one of the first in the state to champion equal civil rights for women and men. Mr. Grimes was chairman of the Republican Executive Committee of Mineral County from 1914 to 1920, and he served consecutively as chairman of the Republican Committee of the Second Congressional District from 1916 until January 1, 1922, when he resigned. While he was chairman of these committees he did not lose a single political battle. He has been repeatedly a delegate to the West Virginia state conventions of his party, and in the convention of 1920 he was a member of the committee on resolutions, as representative of his senatorial district. A well merited preferment and distinction came to Mr. Grimes when, December 30, 1921, he was appointed assistant United States district attorney for the Northern District of West Virginia, the duties of which office he assumed January 1, 1922.

In the World war period Mr. Grimes was chairman of the Mineral County Draft Board, chairman of the Fuel Committee of Mineral County, and chairman of the committee in charge of the drive in the sale of War Savings Stamps. He was one of the leading "Four-Minute Men" who made speeches in promotion of the various local movements of patriotic order, was a member of the Red Cross Executive Committee of Mineral County, as is he still, and was registered personally for the last draft, the war having closed, however, ere he had been classified.

Mr. Grimes is a stockholder in the Echo Printing Company, the Mineral County Coal Company and was one of the organizers and a director of the Cameron Orchard Company and the Mineral County Orchard Company. He is affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the loyal Order of Moose, and he and his wife hold membership in the Methodist Episcopal Church.

At Mannington, this state, on the 5th of December, 1912, Mr. Grimes wedded Miss Zola Park Gump, the accomplished and charming daughter of James and Luverna (Park) Gump, natives of Monongalia County, this state. Mrs. Grimes was graduated at the Mannington High School in 1905, and her higher education was received in the West Virginia Wesleyan College. Mr. and Mrs. Grimes have no children.

CHARLES A. RAY, M. D., has completed a third of a century in the essentially social service of a physician and surgeon. The greater part of his time has been given to his duties as physician and surgeon for coal companies, but he is now one of the staff of the Kanawha Valley Hospital at Charleston, all his work being in connection with that institution.

E. W. Dickerson

Doctor Ray was born at Kanawha City in Kanawha County in 1864, son of John E. and Deborah (Gay) Ray. His father devoted practically his entire active career to the great salt industry of the Kanawha Valley. His home was at Kanawha City, where he died in 1920, at the age of eighty-six. The mother is still living. Both parents represent long lived families.

Doctor Ray attended public schools, and received his medical education in the College of Physicians and Surgeons at Baltimore, from which he graduated in 1887. The first twelve years after his graduation he was physician and surgeon for the Winifrede Coal Company in Kanawha County. For eighteen years following that he was surgeon for the Cabin Creek Consolidated Coal Company in the same county. Thus for thirty years he performed the important duty of a mine physician, safeguarding the health and treating disease in the mining towns. Doctor Ray became associated with the Kanawha Valley Hospital at Charleston in 1917. The head of this hospital is Dr. G. A. MacQueen, whose professional record is given on other pages. Doctor Ray has charge of diagnosis and internal medicine as a member of the staff. He is active in both his profession and as a citizen, is a member of the State, County, Southern and American Medical Associations, and for many years has been one of the influential leaders in county politics. He is chairman of the democratic county executive committee. Doctor Ray has an important and valuable diversion in a nice stock farm in Kanawha County.

He married Miss Mamie A. Fisher. They are the parents of three sons: John V., a lawyer at Charleston; T. S. Ray, in the coal business; C. A. Ray, a student in the University of Cincinnati. Doctor Ray is a York Rite, Knight Templar and Shriner Mason, an Elk and a member of the Kiwanis Club.

GEORGE JAMES DICKERSON is a citizen and business man upon whom high estimate is placed in the City of Huntington, where he is president of the Dickerson Lumber Company. He was born at Ravens Eye, Fayette County, this state, January 21, 1878, and is a son of Albert Reuben Dickerson, who was born in Virginia, March 3, 1845, and who now resides near Barboursville, Cabell County, West Virginia. His parents removed to what is now Fayette County, this state, about 1856, and he was there reared and educated, and his marriage was there solemnized. He continued as one of the representative farmers of that county for many years, and since 1914 has resided on his fine farm in Cabell County. He is a democrat, and while a resident of Fayette County he served in various offices of local trust, including that of county superintendent of schools, a position which he retained two terms. He has exceptional ability as a practical surveyor, and has probably surveyed more land in Fayette, Greenbrier and Nicholas counties than has any other one man. He surveyed and purchased all of the land for Mrs. Joseph Berry, who became the owner of a very large landed estate. He is an active member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, while his wife is a member of the Baptist Church. He is affiliated with the Masonic fraternity, and he gave gallant service as a soldier of the Confederacy during the last three years of the Civil war. His wife, whose maiden name was Phoebe V. Rodgers, was born in Greenbrier County, Virginia (now West Virginia), March 2, 1849, and is a representative of an old and influential family of that county. Of the children of Mr. and Mrs. Dickerson the eldest is Herbert J., who is a prosperous farmer in Fayette County; William Rodgers is a merchant at Lansing, that county; Lulu M. died at the age of three years; George James, of this review, was next in order of birth; Grace C., who now resides at Huntington, is the widow of Wallace D. Amick, M. D., who was engaged in practice at Glenalum, Mingo County, at the time of his death; John Edward is traveling salesman for a wholesale lumber company of Birmingham, Alabama;

Lawrence A. is associated with the Azel Meadows Realty Company of Huntington; Alice is the wife of Walter D. Boone, cashier of the bank at Mount Hope, Fayette County; Ida is bookkeeper for the Dickerson Lumber Company at Huntington.

The rural schools of Fayette County afforded George J. Dickerson his early education, and thereafter he was for one year a student in Valparaiso University at Valparaiso, Indiana. In 1902 he became stenographer in the office of the O. L. Packard Machinery Company in the City of Chicago, and one year later he went to Baltimore, Maryland, where he was for three months a stenographer in the offices of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad. He next took the position of bookkeeper in the Bank of Mount Hope in his native county, won promotion to the position of assistant cashier, and retained this office until 1905, in May of which year he removed to Huntington and organized the Carolina Lumber Company, of which he continued the general manager until March, 1918, when he organized the Dickerson Lumber Company, of which he has since continued the president and general manager. Walter Perkins, of Bluefield, is vice president of the corporation, and L. P. Quesenberry is its secretary and treasurer. The company handles all kinds of lumber and building supplies, with offices at 632 Ninth Street, and under the progressive direction of its president has been developed the leading enterprise of its kind in Huntington—in fact, the concern is conceded to be one of the largest and most important in the exclusively retail lumber trade in the entire state. Mr. Dickerson is also secretary and treasurer of the Piney Creek Coal Company.

While the activities of so called practical politics have had no appeal to Mr. Dickerson, he is most loyal and progressive as a citizen and is a staunch supporter of the principles of the democratic party. He is a vital member of the local chamber of commerce, holds membership in the Guyan County Club, and is affiliated with Huntington Lodge No. 313, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. He owns and occupies one of the fine, modern residences of the city, at 210 Sixth Avenue.

In September, 1909, at Huntington, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Dickerson and Miss Clara Medford, who was born near Wheeling, this state, and who was a student in Marshall College nearly four years. Mr. and Mrs. Dickerson have three children: George "Jim," Jr., born in August, 1910; Mary Louise, born in July, 1913; and Albert Medford, born in January, 1915.

Mr. Dickerson is a scion of a family that was founded in Virginia in the Colonial period of our national history. There his grandfather, William Dickerson, was born in the year 1807, and he removed to what is now Fayette County, West Virginia, in 1856. He there became a pioneer farmer and there he and his wife passed the remainder of their lives, his death having occurred in 1891, and his wife, whose maiden name was Mary J. Maddox, having died at the venerable age of eighty-six years.

Lawrence A. Dickerson, youngest brother of the subject of this sketch, responded to the first call for volunteers when the nation became involved in the World war, and at Fort Benjamin Harrison, Indiana, he received his commission as a second lieutenant. He later was in service at Chillicothe, Ohio, and he was at Camp Sevier, North Carolina, where he was commissioned first lieutenant, and received his honorable discharge after the close of the war.

WALTER S. WOOD has written some important chapters of the history of the coal industry in West Virginia during the past quarter of a century. From rather small and modest beginnings his name has come to be associated with some of the biggest coal corporations in the state. His active partner in many of these enterprises has been Mr. Quin Morton.

Mr. Wood, whose home for a number of years has been at Charleston, was born in Mecklenburg County, Virginia, in 1874, son of John S. and Jennie (Scott) Wood. He grew up on the old homestead in Mecklenburg County, was educated in the public schools of Clarksville, Virginia, and in 1892, at the age of eighteen, entered the claim department of the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad at Cincinnati. While in that city he was also in the employ of the Carlisle Coal Company, subsequently merged into the Kineon Coal Company, with which he remained a period of about four years. It was with this equipment of experience that Mr. Wood came to West Virginia in 1896 and engaged in the coal business with the St. Clair Coal Company at Eagle in Fayette County. He remained with that company until 1900. August 1st of that year he joined in the organization of the Falls Colliery Company at Glen Ferris, West Virginia. This company in 1901 he sold to the Kanawha & Hocking Coal Company. He returned to Eagle as general superintendent of the Gordon Coal and Coke Company, remaining in that capacity until the spring of 1904, when he acquired a controlling interest in the Standard Splint Gas Coal Company on Paint Creek. Mr. Wood was closely identified with this enterprise and kept his residence at the Paint Creek properties until 1913, since which date his home has been in Charleston.

In the meantime, with broadening interests, he was president of the Keeney's Creek Colliery Company at Winona from February, 1911, until it was sold to the Maryland Coal Company in 1917, and was president of the Sullivan Coal & Coke Company at Sullivan in Raleigh County from 1908 to 1919.

Mr. Wood's active association with Mr. Quin Morton dates from 1916, in which year the Wood Coal Company of Logan County was organized. Mr. Wood is still president of this corporation. He was one of the organizers and was vice president of the American Eagle Colliery Company, when organized in 1918, and he is now president of that company. He is president of the Leevale Coal Company, organized in 1919; president of the Hopkins Fork Coal Company, organized in 1917; president of the Imperial Smokeless Coal Company and vice president of the Wood-Morton Fuel Company, and is vice president and general manager of the Middle Creek Coal Company at Hartland, on the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, organized in 1917. Mr. Wood is also one of the state's bankers. He organized and is president of the Bank of Quinwood, a flourishing bank of $50,000 capital at Quinwood in Greenbrier County.

Mr. Wood is obviously a man of many prominent interests and high standing in the business and social life of Charleston. He is a member of St. John's Protestant Episcopal Church, and is a Knight Templar and thirty-second degree Mason and Shriner. He married Miss Lucy Sims. Their four children are Virginia, Helen Reid, George Walter and Alice.

GEORGE HENRY CAPERTON has been a factor in the coal industry of West Virginia forty years, and as president of the New River Coal Operators Association and the Smokeless Coal Operators Association of West Virginia he ranks as one of the very first in the coal industry of the state.

Mr. Caperton, whose home has been at Charleston for a number of years, represents an honored and distinguished name in West Virginia and old Virginia. His first American ancestor was John Caperton, who came from the North of Ireland. It has not been ascertained whether he was of Scotch or Norman French origin. His settlement was made in Maine. However, his immediate descendants left that state and some of them settled at Crump's Bottom, six miles below the present Town of Hinton, West Virginia, among the first in that section of the frontier. The great-grandfather of George H. Caperton was Adam Caperton, who lost his life in an Indian battle known in history as Estill's Defeat. The Capertons have represented a strong, sturdy race of men in all their generations in American citizenship. They were trans-Allegheny pioneers, associated with the first of those who penetrated and crossed the mountains and settled in the valleys of what is now West Virginia and Eastern Kentucky.

The grandfather of the Charleston coal operator was Hugh Caperton, who was born in 1780, and was one of the early pioneers in Monroe County in what is now West Virginia. For several years he was a member of the Virginia House of Delegates, and was elected as a Federalist to the Thirteenth Congress, serving from March 4, 1813, until March 3, 1815, during the second war with Great Britain. His son, Allan T. Caperton, was a member of the Confederate States Congress and afterward represented West Virginia in the United States Senate from 1875 until his death in 1876. Hugh Caperton, who died in Monroe County February 9, 1847, possessed the pioneering enterprise of the strong men of his day. He was wealthy according to the standards of his time, owned several thousand acres of land, had extensive interests in agriculture, livestock and timber, and was a large shipper of livestock and other products to Baltimore.

His strong and sturdy qualities descended to his son G. H. Caperton. Hugh Caperton married Jane Erskine, daughter of Michael Erskine. Jane Erskine's mother, while her family was migrating from Virginia to Kentucky, was captured by the Indians and held in captivity two or three years. She afterward married Michael Erskine and lived in Monroe County. The son, G. H. Caperton, was born in Monroe County, his home being at Union, and he became a man of substance and large affairs. Before the Civil war he removed to Lynchburg, Virginia, and after the war went to Amherst County, Virginia. He married Mary E. Henderson.

George Henry Caperton, son of G. H. and Mary E. (Henderson) Caperton, was born at Lynchburg, Virginia, in 1860, and his home until he reached his majority was in Amherst County. He attended school at Lynchburg, and was also a student at the Virginia Agricultural and Mechanical College, now the Virginia Polytechnic Institute at Blacksburg in Montgomery County. Following his student career he farmed a year in Amherst County, and in 1880 left there and located at Fire Creek in Fayette County, West Virginia, on the Chesapeake & Ohio Railway. Here began his first operations in the coal industry, and he kept his home in that vicinity until 1906, since which year his residence has been at Charleston, though most of his coal operations are in the New River District. Through many years of successful business effort he has achieved his position as one of the largest coal operators in West Virginia. The New River Coal Company, of which he is president, is a selling company. He is also president of the Slab Fork Coal Company, operating a number of mines in Raleigh County. The Scotia Coal & Coke Company, of which he is president, operates its mines in Fayette County. He is also president of the South Side Coal Company, operating mines in Fayette County.

The fruits of his extensive experience and good judgment have been made available to the coal operators' organizations of the state, and it is not only a personal honor but a recognition of his leadership that he is president of the New River Coal Operators Association and the Smokeless Coal Operators Association of West Virginia. He is also a director of the West Virginia Coal Association. Mr. Caperton is president of the New River Banking & Trust Company at Thurmond. He is a member of the Chamber of Commerce at Charleston and the Edgewood Country Club.

At Warrenton, Virginia, he married Anna P. Chambliss, a native of Greenville, South Carolina. Her father, Dr. John Alexander Chambliss, was one of the noted Baptist ministers of his day. Mr. and Mrs. Caperton have five children: George H., Jr.; William Gaston Caperton; Mary, wife of Dr. Eugene M. Blake, of New Haven, Connecticut; Caroline McHardy, wife of Dr. McRae C. Banks, of Raleigh County, West Virginia; and Erskine Miller Caperton, now a student in the University of West Virginia.

ROY O. SEARS is a successful Charleston business man, president of the Sears Monument Company, and has been in this business all his active career. He has earned a high reputation for skill and achievement on the artistic as well as the commercial side of the industry.

Mr. Sears was born at Hillsboro, Highland County, Ohio, June 3, 1883. He attended public school, but even as a schoolboy was selling newspapers, and that developed his early abilities as a salesman. Quite early he began selling monuments, and his increasing experience in this line brought him a first class traveling position with a prominent monument manufacturing concern of Boston, for which he represented an extensive territory from Portland, Maine, to Indianapolis, Indiana.

When his affairs had progressed to a point where he felt justified in going into business for himself Mr. Sears selected Charleston as the most eligible city, and made his start here in 1911.

The Sears Monument Company, of which Mr. Sears is president, are designers and manufacturers of monuments of all descriptions, statuary, bronze work and mausoleums, giving particular attention to the manufacture and installation of mausoleums. They have on their staff only the most successful and talented designers and engravers. Their plant at Charleston has produced many examples of genuine art. It is probably the largest plant of its kind in West Virginia, and one of the most important in quality of output in the country. Since the great war Mr. Sears has designed and manufactured a number of memorials to the dead soldiers. Chief among these should be mentioned the Putnam County Memorial in commemoration of the men who made the supreme sacrifice in the World war, erected in 1921 by the taxpayers of Putnam County, and this memorial is a work of art. Still more recently, in December, 1921, Mr. Sears met with the Vicksburg Monument Commission at Point Pleasant. The purpose of the meeting was to select designs of monuments and markers for the Vicksburg National Military Park. The commission had been empowered by the last Legislature to provide a suitable memorial to the memory of the men who served in the battle and siege of Vicksburg. The designs selected by the commission consist of a colossal size bronze bust of Maj. Gen. Arza M. Goodspeed and four other monuments erected to West Virginia men, known on battlefields, as markers, all to be placed at the different positions held by the men during the siege. Mr. Sears was awarded the contract for the erection of one large monument, four small ones, one colossal size bust and five bronze tablets to be placed on monuments and to bear inscriptions of the positions held by West Virginia men. This work was completed in the spring of 1922.

Just recently they have been awarded the contract to erect a large soldier monument to be erected in the Court House grounds at Wayne, Wayne County, West Virginia. This will be the largest and most expensive soldiers' monument that has been erected in West Virginia. This work will be completed in the fall of 1922.

Mr. Sears is a member of the Charleston Rotary Club and is a Knight Templar and Scottish Rite Mason and Shriner.

ROBERT DOUGLAS ROLLER, M. D. Besides its prominent physician in Charleston, the capital city honors the name Roller for the distinguished services of his father, Rev. R. D. Roller, now a retired Episcopal clergyman.

The Rev. R. D. Roller was born in Rockingham County, Virginia, in 1850, graduated from the Virginia Theological Seminary in 1875, and immediately began his life work in the Episcopal Church. A service that has proved his greatest and most lasting achievement was rendered for thirty years in Charleston, from the beginning of his work as rector of St. John's Episcopal Church in 1888. St. John's had just begun building when he took charge and organized the parish while the foundation was being laid, and he built up and made this one of the largest and most influential churches of the denomination in the state. After thirty years he was retired in 1918, with the title of Rector Emeritus. His active ministry made him part and parcel of the life of Charleston, and the community will long cherish his character and service here. Rev. Doctor Roller, who represents an old family in Virginia, where his ancestors settled prior to the Revolutionary war, married Caroline Booker.

Their son, Dr. Robert Douglas Roller, was born in old Virginia in 1880, and grew up in Charleston. He graduated in the literary course from the University of West Virginia in 1900, and then began his medical studies in the University College of Medicine at Richmond. He received his M. D. degree in 1905. For about ten years Doctor Roller performed the arduous duties of physician in the coal fields, chiefly in Raleigh County, West Virginia. Then followed a period of hospital work in Connecticut, and from there he went to New York for the purpose of continuing his hospital and post graduate experience. While there, in the summer of 1917, he enlisted in the Medical Corps of the United States Army, receiving the commission of captain. Doctor Roller did most of his honor work at Camp Pike, Arkansas. After more than two years of continuous service he received his honorable discharge in October, 1919, with the rank of major. Doctor Roller early in 1920 resumed private practice at Charleston, and is now a specialist in internal medicine, with office in the Coyle & Richardson Building. He is a member in good standing of the County, State and American Medical Associations.

HERBERT DEWITT MCCLINTOCK, a popular citizen and representative business man of the City of Huntington, has developed an important industrial enterprise in the manufacturing of lumber and coopersage stock, and conducts the thriving business under the title of the H. D. McClintock Lumber Company, with offices at 420 Tenth Street. In addition to being sole proprietor of this business he is also president of the Tri-State Lumber & Stave Company.

Mr. McClintock was born at Dempseytown, Venango County, Pennsylvania, on the 16th of June, 1873. His paternal grandfather, Gen. James R. McClintock, was a successful farmer in the vicinity of Dempseytown and served as a brigadier general in the Pennsylvania State Militia. He was beyond the age limit for service in the Civil war, but he recruited and trained companies that went to the front and made gallant records in defense of the Union. He married Jerusha Tennant, of New London, Connecticut, a member of a family that was founded in New England in the Colonial days. The original American progenitors of the McClintock family came from Scotland to this country in the early Colonial period of our national history.

Charles A. McClintock, father of the subject of this review, was born on the old homestead near Dempseytown, Pennsylvania, December 7, 1846, and died at Huntington, West Virginia, August 19, 1914. He was reared in his native county, and there his initial enterprise of independent order was in connection with farm industry. Later he engaged in the manufacturing of lumber and barrel staves, and in 1889 he engaged in this line of manufacturing enterprise at Huntington, where he passed the remainder of his life, a successful business man and highly esteemed citizen. He was a democrat in politics, was affiliated with the Masonic fraternity and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and both he and his wife were zealous members of the Presbyterian Church. In his native county he married on October 6, 1870, Miss Adeline Richey, who was the daughter of William and Angeline Givon Richey. She was born in the year 1847, and died in the same year as did her husband, on July 21, 1914. James Pliny, eldest of their children, is living retired at Los Angeles, California, he being a veteran of the Spanish-American war; the subject of this sketch was next in order of birth; William R., who likewise served in the Spanish-American war, resides at Arcola, Mississippi, and is the manager of a plantation near that place; Miss Emma is a popular teacher in the public schools of Huntington; Mabel is the wife of C. Lloyd Ritter, a prominent lumber manufacturer and financier, and they reside at Huntington; Laura is the wife of Henry C. Walburn, of this city, he being state agent for the Bankers Life Insurance Company of Lincoln, Nebraska, and president of the Huntington Board of Education.

Among the teachers who gave effective instruction to Herbert D. McClintock in the public schools at Dempseytown, Pennsylvania, were Martin Carey, who is now vice president of the Standard Oil Company, and P. M. Spears, who is now chief counsel for that great corporation. After the family removal to Huntington Mr. McClintock here attended the high school until he had partially completed the work of his senior year. Thereafter he was for somewhat more than three years a student in Central University at Richmond, Kentucky, from which he withdrew in his senior year to become instructor in Greek and military tactics and science in Jackson College, in Breathitt County, that state, where he remained one year. Within this period in that tempestuous county he had for a time active charge of county affairs, in command of a force of 100 men for one week, and the aggressive work which he thus accomplished resulted in the hanging of Tom Smith, a leader in the French-Eversole feud.

In 1896 Mr. McClintock returned to Huntington, and shortly afterward assumed active management of his father's lumber mill in Mingo County. In April, 1898, he entered the nation's service, at the inception of the Spanish-American war, and was sent to Chattanooga, Tennessee, where he was made a sergeant, his honorable discharge having been given on the 4th of February, 1899. He had previously gained wide experience in military affairs. In 1889 he was captain of the Huntington High School Cadets; while attending Central University he was senior captain of its Cadet Corps; in 1895 he was promoted to the rank of major, and his name was placed on the honor roll of the war department of the United States. On the 11th of November, 1889, he enlisted in the West Virginia National Guard, in which he served thirteen consecutive years and was a member of the staff of every colonel that has commanded the Second Regiment. In the World war period he was commanding officer of the Huntington Militia Reserves.

From the spring of 1899 until 1910 Mr. Clintock was actively identified with lumbering operations in the State of Mississippi, and he then returned to Huntington, where he has since been successfully engaged in the manufacturing of lumber and coopers stock, under the title of the H. D. McClintock Lumber Company.

Mr. McClintock is a democrat, is a member of the Huntington Chamber of Commerce, the West Side Country Club and the local lodge of Elks, and he and his wife hold membership in the Presbyterian Church.

The year 1900 recorded the marriage of Mr. McClintock and Miss Ada Stewart, who was born in Huntington, and in their home resides her father, Isaac Foster Stewart, a retired brick manufacturer, his wife being deceased. Mrs. McClintock graduated from the Wesleyan Female Institute at Staunton, Virginia, this being one of the patrician educational institutions of Virginia. Of the four children born to Mr. and Mrs. McClintock the first, Mary, died at the age of nine years; Mabel is, in 1922, a student in the Enslow School at Huntington; Grace died in early childhood; and Charles is attending the Guyandotte school. These children are the sixth generation of an early settler of Huntington on the Stewart side.

GEORGE EDWIN LEWIS, M. D. Coming to Chester in 1900, Dr. George Edwin Lewis has been engaged in the unbroken practice of his calling ever since, and during these twenty-two years has not only built up a material success but has risen to a leading place in the Hancock County medical profession. He has likewise been identified with civic and business affairs, and in a number of ways has gained the right to be numbered among his community's most useful and highly-respected citizens.

Doctor Lewis was born January 19, 1873, on a farm one mile from the National Road and about the same distance from the Pennsylvania State Line, in Ohio County, West Virginia. The first of the family to locate in this section was John Lewis, who was born March 1, 1775, and was reared near Baltimore, Maryland. He is known to have lived near Lake Erie, where he kept a public house at one time, and also was for a time a resident of Uniontown, Pennsylvania, as his son George was born there July 2, 1814. It seems that a removal was soon made to Whitely, near Morgantown, West Virginia, and that he served as captain of a company of infantry for eight months during the latter part of the War of 1812. The family moved thence to Central Ohio about 1820, as John Lewis met his death by drowning in 1845 while crossing Wills Creek in a skiff during a freshet. About the year 1854 his son George settled near Valley Grove, Ohio County, some twelve miles east of Wheeling, where he died at the age of eighty-seven years. Like his father, he was a shoemaker as well as a farmer. His son, William G. Lewis, was born in 1845.

William G. Lewis, after his marriage to Samantha Chambers, then living in Washington County, Pennsylvania, but a native of Marshall County, West Virginia, where she was born February 7, 1851, settled on a farm near his old home place, which was located but one and one-half miles west of West Alexander, Pennsylvania, one mile from the National Road. There he spent his life on his farm. During the Civil war he was a member of the Home Guards. He was first a republican, later a prohibitionist and finally again a republican, but never sought office, being content with his farm and his home. He belonged to the United Presbyterian Church at West Alexander. His widow survives him at the old farm, which is now being operated by one of his sons, James Chambers Lewis.

George Edwin Lewis attended the country schools of Ohio County, later pursuing a course at the Normal School at West Liberty at the time when R. A. Armstrong was principal of that institution. Even while attending normal school he was engaged in teaching in the country schools, and thus divided his time for three years, following which he began to read medicine under the preceptorship of Doctor Woods of West Alexander. Later he pursued a course in the medical department of the Western University of Pennsylvania, now the University of Pittsburgh, and was graduated as a member of the class of 1897, receiving the degree of Doctor of Medicine. At that time he began his practice at Hancock, where he remained for over two years, and in 1900 came to Chester, prior to the organization of the town, when it consisted of only about 500 population. He is the only physician and surgeon at Chester of unbroken practice, and devotes all of his attention to the care of his patients. He has a large practice of a general character, is on the training school board of East Liverpool Hospital, and serves as the local health officer at Chester. Doctor Lewis holds membership in all the leading medical societies. He is an original stockholder and a director of the First National Bank of Chester. Doctor Lewis belongs to the Presbyterian Church. He is a Knight Templar Mason at Wheeling and a Noble of Osiris Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S., of Wheeling, and in the Scottish Rite of Masonry has attained to the fourteenth degree. His hobby is the collecting of antiques, especially fire-arms, of which he has a large, interesting and valuable assortment of all times. He belongs to the local gun club and the National Rifle Association, but, while an excellent marksman, is not a tournament player.

Doctor Lewis married Miss Hettie Curtis, of West Liberty, a normal school classmate, who is now a leader in Sunday School and missionary societies of the Presbyterian Church, and a woman of many accomplishments and numerous friends. She and her husband have two daughters: Helen Virginia, a graduate of the Chester High School, who is now a senior student at the Margaret Morrison School at Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania; and Elsie Marion, who is one of the most popular students at the East Liverpool High School, where she is president of the senior class, 1922. Doctor Lewis is a member of the East Liverpool Kiwanis Club.

WILLIAM L. SMITH, SR. The real peace and contentment of the evening of life may only be experienced after a career in which industry has been the controlling factor. Each man his own life to live; early conditions and advantages, or the lack of the latter, play their destined part in the shaping of his career; but it is within his own power to make use of his abilities, to so mold and direct his activities as to make his life useful to those among whom he lives and worthy to himself. No doubt there may be some satisfaction in the display of inherited wealth; but how infinitely greater may be the satisfaction of pointing to one's possessions and saying: "These things my hands have wrought." History and biography show us that all great men were industrious, and the greatness of the majority was gained because of their own sterling qualities and the use they made of them.

The career of William L. Smith, Sr., president of the Taylor, Smith & Taylor Company, potters, of East Liverpool, Ohio, and Chester, West Virginia, has been an industrious one in every respect, and has been a singularly successful one, whether viewed from the point of the material things which he has won or from the universal respect in which he is held by those among whom he has passed his life. He was born at Wellsville, Ohio, in 1858, and secured a public school education, and through youthful energy and ambition worked his way up to the ownership of a lumber and contracting business at East Liverpool. In 1893 he sold his holdings and bought an interest in the D. E. McNicol Pottery Company, with which concern he accepted a managerial position. He continued to be identified with this company until 1899, when a pottery was built at Chester by what was then known as the Taylor Lee & Smith Company, which was incorporated under the Ohio laws and capitalized at $200,000. In 1903 there was formed the Taylor, Smith & Taylor Company, composed of Col. John W. Taylor, president of the Knowles, Taylor & Knowles Company, the largest industry at East Liverpool; Joseph G. Lee, of the same city and company; Colonel Taylor's two sons, W. L., now deceased, and Homer, now the head of the Knowles, Taylor & Knowles Company; W. L. Smith and C. A. Smith. In 1904 W. L. and C. A. Smith became the sole owners of this business through purchase, although retaining the same name. In 1907 the business was incorporated under the laws of West Virginia, and about 1918 the capital was increased to $500,000, the new stockholders being largely old employees of the business. Up to 1913 there were ten kilns, with 200 employees, but in that year seven kilns were added, making seventeen kilns in all, with 425 employees and an annual payroll of $600,000, there being in excess of 300 carloads of materials used each year. The product of the company consists of earthenware and porcelain, and is sold to jobbers and high grade department stores, with four regular traveling salesmen kept on the road and special men from five or six agencies in the West and Southwest. The plant owns about ten acres, of which one-half is covered by the plant itself. A specialty of the business is the manufacture of high-grade dinnerware. The officers of the company at this time are: W. L. Smith, president; W. C. Lynch, vice president; C. C. Davidson, secretary; C. A. Smith, treasurer; W. G. Jackson, assistant treasurer; and W. L. Smith, Jr., manager.

The original bridge and land company, which made possible the development of Chester by erecting a bridge to East Liverpool, was composed of W. L. Smith, of East Liverpool; E. D. Marshall, of Chester; George P. Rust, of Cleveland; and A. R. Markell, of East Liverpool. These gentlemen organized the East Liverpool Bridge Company and during 1896 erected the bridge, which was opened December 31 of that year. W. L. Smith became president of the company, to which he contributed the benefit of his marked ability, and later he and his brother, with J. E. McDonald, secured by purchase the control of all of this property. Mr. Smith is a director in the First National Bank of East Liverpool and president of the Potters Savings and Loan Company, one of the largest in Ohio. A staunch republican in politics, he has been active in public affairs, has served as delegate to several national conventions and has numbered among his friends many notable men, among them the late President William McKinley. His pleasant home is located at East Liverpool, but he maintains his office at the plant.

W. L. Smith, Jr., son of W. L. Smith, has been general manager and a director of the company since 1915. He resides at Chester, where he takes an active part in all local affairs, and gives his support to worthy movements. Mr. Smith married Miss Mand Barlow, of East Liverpool, who is president of the Women's Club of Chester.

THE CORD TIRE CORPORATION. One of the leading industries of Chester, which, while practically a newcomer to this section, has already developed to startlingly large proportions, is the Cord Tire Corporation. In the short period of three years the company has approximately tripled its original output, and the popularity of its product is increasing daily under efficient management and intelligent handling of a superior grade of goods.

The Cord Tire Corporation was incorporated in April, 1919, by the following: J. D. Comstock, of Cleveland, Ohio, president and treasurer; Henry Seigfried, of Pittsburgh, secretary; E. H. Hall, of New York City, purchasing agent; and Irvin E. Fair, of Akron, Ohio, plant manager. All of these gentlemen have taken up their residence at Chester. This company, which is capitalized at $1,000,000, manufactures the celebrated Superior Cord Tire, for use on automobiles. The present plant was used originally as a car barn, and was then converted into a rubber factory for use by a previous company. This concern, however, did not meet with success, and it was bought by the present company, who began operations in May, 1919. Its success has proven most gratifying, its capacity and output having increased from 150 to 600 tires daily, while there are now 250 employees and the semi-monthly payroll amounts are in excess of $18,000.00. The product has met with a cordial reception, and the name Superior seems to have been a happily chosen one, as dealers in this product are to be found in every state in the Union. The plant covers some five acres of ground and the annual consumption of crude rubber is about 650,000 pounds, while almost 300,000 pounds of cord and 65,000 pounds of fabric are used in manufacturing the finished article. Five commercial travelers are in constant personal touch with the trade, while the mail orders have assumed large proportions.

Irvin E. Fair, the efficient manager of the mechanical end of the company, and who is responsible for producing a product that measures up in every way to the high standards set by the concern, is a practical tire man, having spent seven years with the B. F. Goodrich Rubber Company at Akron, where he mastered every detail of tire management before accepting his present position. He is a native of Somerset County, Pennsylvania, born September 22, 1885, and received a good practical education in the high school of his native community and at the Chicago Technical College. Mr. Fair married Miss Ida M. Tayman, of Somerset County, Pennsylvania, and they are the parents of one son, Orville R., a student in the high school at Chester.

JOSEPH LESLIE PYLE, M. D. The problems of health are really the problems of life and must pertain to all questions of human interest, so that the physician and surgeon is really the most important and useful man in his community. He must possess a wide range of general culture, be an observant clinician and well-read neurologist, even although he never specializes along any given line. To take his place among the distinguished men of his profession he must bear the stamp of an original mind and be willing to be hard-worked while at the same time his soul oftentimes faints within him when he is studying the mysteries of his calling. Acquainted with the simple annals of the poor, and the inner lives of his patients, he acquires a moral power, courage and conscience which enable him to interfere with the mechanism of physical life, alleviating its woes and increasing its resistance to the encroachments of disease. Such a skilled, learned and sympathetic medical man is Dr. Joseph Leslie Pyle, one of the distinguished members of the Hancock County medical profession, a practitioner at Chester since 1907, and president of the West Virginia State Board of Health.

Doctor Pyle was born December 2, 1866, in Tyler County, West Virginia, and is a son of Benjamin Leslie Pyle. Benjamin L. Pyle was born in Cecil County, Maryland, and as a young man came to Tyler County, West Virginia, where he passed the remainder of his life in agricultural pursuits. He married Miss Mary Duty, a native of this county, and they were highly esteemed and respected. One of their sons, Christian Engle Pyle, went to the West in 1886 and became an attorney in Missouri. Later, however, he returned to Middlebourne, Tyler County, where he practiced for some years, finally going to Huntington. He became a leading member of the bar, and died at Chester in May, 1921, while on a visit to his brother, Doctor Pyle. Another brother, Stephen G. Pyle, at the age of twenty-one years, at Middlebourne, was county superintendent of schools of Tyler County. He also served two terms in the State Legislature, managed a lumber yard at Sistersville, where he became cashier of the First National Bank, and was then president of the First National Bank of Middlebourne. He still retains this position, and is also cashier of the Tyler County Bank at Sistersville, although a resident of Middlebourne. He is also manager of the line between these two points of the Tyler Traction Company, a distance of about ten miles. A strong republican, he is a power in state politics.

Joseph Leslie Pyle spent his boyhood on his father's farm and as a youth received only a common school education. He taught school for three years in Tyler County and then began reading medicine, receiving his degree of Doctor of Medicine at Keokuk, Iowa, in 1896. He began the practice of his calling at Bearsville, Tyler County, his old home town, where he remained until 1905, and then spent one year in post-graduate work at Chicago. On his return he spent a short time at Follansbee, and in 1907 came to Chester, which has since been his home and the scene of his practice and success. Elected mayor for a two-year term, he resigned from that office in order that he might give his undivided attention to the duties of his profession. On June 1, 1913, he was appointed a member of the State Board of Health by Governor Hatfield for a four-year term, and was reappointed by the same republican governor in 1917. In 1921 he was given his third appointment to the position, this time by a democrat, Governor Cornwall. In July, 1921, he was elected president of the board, which position he still holds, his associates being: V. T. Churchman, M. D., of Charleston; W. M. Babb, M. D., of Keyser; B. F. Shuttleworth, M. D., of Clarksburg; T. L. Harris, M. D., of Parkersburg; H. G. Camper, M. D., of Welch; and W. T. Henshaw, M. D., Commissioner of Health, Charleston. Doctor Pyle gives close attention to the business of the board, which examines all applicants for diplomas, supervises all matters of public health and sanitation and holds three annual meetings yearly to discuss matters pertaining to the welfare of the people of the state. The Doctor is a strong republican in politics, but politics has had nothing to do with his preference, which rests on merit alone. He holds three post-graduate diplomas and is an active member of the Hancock County Medical Society, the West Virginia Medical Society, the Ohio Medical Society, the Columbiana County Medical Society, the Pennsylvania Railway Surgeons Association and the American Medical Association. He is local surgeon for the Pennsylvania Railway System. As a fraternalist he belongs to the Masons, being a thirty-second degree Knight Templar and Scottish Rite Mason, and a member of the Mystic Shrine, to the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks of East Liverpool, the Knights of Pythias, and the D. O. O. K., in all of which he is very popular.

Doctor Pyle married Miss Lillian Monce, of Frankford, Kansas, but who, at the time of their marriage, lived in Chicago, Illinois. They have no children.

FRANK W. IRVIN is one of the younger group of business men in Huntington, but has been exceedingly busy in improving his opportunities since he left school, and for the past two years has been in business as an electrical contractor, in the Irvin-Hall Electrical Company.

Mr. Irvin was born at Huntington, December 10, 1890. His grandfather was a native of Pennsylvania, born in 1820, and his enterprise brought him a wide and varied experience. As a young man he went South and bought a plantation in Louisiana. This property he lost during the Civil war, and he became a Union soldier, rising to the rank of colonel. After the war he lived in Iowa for a short time, and then established his home on a ranch and a farm near Hutchinson, Kansas, living there when that town was out on the frontier, and he had a part in suppressing border troubles. After many years as a Kansas farmer he removed to Los Angeles, and retired and died in that city in 1905. He was a republican and a member of the Episcopal Church.

Walter L. Irvin, father of Frank W., was born in Iowa in 1865, grew up in a suburb of Cleveland, Ohio, and as a young man came to Huntington, where he married and where for several years he worked in the general store of his brother-in-law, E. E. Ward. From that he went into the service of the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad in the freight department, and was promoted from time to time and was chief clerk when he died at Huntington in 1897. He was one of the prominent republicans of the county, and at one time was candidate for the office of County Court clerk of Cabell County. He was a member of the Episcopal Church and was affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. Walter L. Irvin married Carrie H. Lallance, who was born at Syracuse, Ohio, June 4, 1868, and is living at Huntington. Her two children are Frank W. and Doris, the latter the wife of John O. Deering, an insurance man at Huntington.

Frank W. Irvin acquired a public school education at Huntington, and attended Marshall College in that city through his sophomore year. He left college in 1908, and for two years following was a clerk in the White Sulphur Springs Hotel in this state, and for another two years was assistant manager of the J. G. MacCrory's Company of Huntington. He then entered the service of the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad, and was an electrician with that road until 1920, acquiring a very thorough and well rounded knowledge of everything connected with the electrical industry. On March 1, 1920, the Irvin-Hall Electrical Company began business, his partner in this enterprise being E. R. Hall. This firm has the facilities and the expert organization that fit them for handling electrical contracts of every type. They have done wiring and electrical installation for several large manufacturing and industrial concerns. The offices of the company are at 928 Fifth Avenue.

Mr. Irvin is a republican, a member of the Episcopal Church, and is affiliated with Huntington Lodge No. 33, Knights of Pythias. In August, 1915, at Huntington, he married Miss Georgia Lanthorne, daughter of Ezra R. and Rose (Jeffers) Lanthorne, residents of Huntington, where her father is a grocery merchant. Mr. and Mrs. Irvin have two children, Frank, Jr., born February 20, 1918, and James Maurice, born August 18, 1920.

HENRY O. MILLER. Perhaps no one man in the educational life of the Ohio Valley of West Virginia has exerted an influence finer in quality and purpose than Henry O. Miller, superintendent of schools of Hancock County, for it is one proceeding from a character of quiet strength, sanity and disinterestedness. Mr. Miller not only is a good teacher, but a man of specialized training and comprehensive learning, as well as capable and progressive executive. The representative relation of the teacher to the pupil is a close and intimate one, and few leave the schoolroom without carrying with them the impress of the character of the one under whom they have studied, so that it is very important that the individual who trains the youthful mind during the formative period be one whose example is worthy of emulation, a position for which Mr. Miller's qualities and abilities equip him eminently.

Mr. Miller is a native of the Gas Valley, having been born in Poe District, Hancock County, West Virginia, three miles east of Pughtown, October 20, 1876, a son of John P. and Margaret A. (Campbell) Miller, a grandson of Benjamin Miller, also born in Hancock County, and a great-grandson of David Miller. David Miller was born in County Tyrone, Ireland, and as a young man immigrated to America and settled first at Pittsburgh, where he spent a few years. Later, about 1780, he came to the Poe District, where he passed the rest of his life in agricultural pursuits, and his old farm is still in the family possession. He was one of the real pioneers of this locality and experienced the hardships of such a life, including the clearing up of a farm and warfare with the Indians, by whom he was forced to leave the community on one occasion and seek refuge in a more settled locality, but was also of the stuff of which the pioneers were made, and lived to the remarkable age of ninety-nine years.

Benjamin Miller, the grandfather of Henry O. Miller was born in 1799 and spent his life on the same farm, dying in 1876. The family landed possessions were exended under his management, and at the time of his death the property was passed on to his two sons, John P. and Martin Luther, who spent their lives on that property. Another, Morgan H. Miller, still resides on an adjoining farm, at the age of eighty-one years. He is a veteran of the Civil war, having fought as a private in Company I, ninety-second Regiment, West Virginia Volunteer Infantry. Another brother, Joseph Harvey Miller, died young. A half-brother, Dr. L. M. Miller, who practiced at Toronto, Ohio, died at the age of thirty-three years, and a half-sister, Margaret, married Lawrence W. Glass and now resides at East Liverpool, Ohio. John P. Miller married Margaret L. Campbell, a daughter of Robert and Ellen (Young) Campbell, who were of the same vicinity. John P. Miller, in addition to being a farmer, was quite a sheep breeder and grower. He and the other members of the family were democrats until the split between the states of the North and South, at which time they joined the ranks of the republican party. For many years the family has been identified with the Presbyterian Church. David Miller was an original member of "The Flats" Presbyterian Church, about four miles distant, and his son Benjamin was an elder therein, as was also the latter's son, Morgan H. That church was organized about 1800 and was the parent church of all the Presbyterian churches of the vicinity. Since 1891 it has been known as the Fairview Presbyterian Church, and is located about one and one-half miles from Pughtown, at the Flats. David and Benjamin Miller were buried at the site of this church, but John P. Miller, who died in 1907, at the age of seventy-five years, was laid to rest in the Mill Creek Hill Cemetery, as was his worthy wife, who passed away in 1903, at seventy years of age. They were the parents of the following children: Joseph Harvey, who died at the age of thirty-four years while an employee of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company at Pittsburgh; Elmer A. and B. S., partners on the old farm until it was sold, and now both residents of Pughtown; William M., who is engaged in the practice of medicine at Clinton, Pennsylvania; Robert Sherman, twin of Benjamin S., mentioned before, who left West Virginia as a lad and is now retired farmer of Sumner, Nebraska; Margaret Ellen, who died at Chester at the age of forty-five years as the wife of Lawrence L. Stewart; Mary Jane, the wife of Frank Mayhew, living near Salem, Ohio; and Henry O.

Henry O. Miller acquired his early education in the country schools, following which he attended the Tri-State Normal School, then at Pughtown, of which the president is J. D. Hull. At the age of twenty years he began teaching, and spent the next eight years in Hancock County, during four years of which time he was principal of schools at Pughtown. In 1909 Mr. Miller was elected superintendent of schools of Hancock County, and consecutive re-elections have brought him to his fourth term. In 1909, when he first assumed the duties of this office, there were twenty-eight schools and fifty-eight teachers, with two high schools at New Cumberland and one at Chester. There are now 125 schools, with four first-class high schools. The enrollment in 1909 was 1,000 pupils, whereas now there are 4,000 pupils, of whom about 300 are attending the high schools. Much hard work was necessary to interest the people in the advantages of high school training, but splendid sentiment has arisen in this direction. About seventy-five per cent of the teachers have had normal school training. The Tri-State Normal School continued only until 1906, but many of the high school graduates attend normal schools elsewhere in West Virginia, as well as in Pennsylvania and Ohio, and at the present time preparations are being made for summer normal terms in Hancock County. Mr. Miller is devoted to his work and is an earnest striver for an elevation of standards. His labors have resulted in arousing public interest and in gaining him the co-operation of teachers, parents and pupils.

In 1911 Mr. Miller was united in marriage with Miss Sarah Wells, daughter of William H. Wells, of East Liverpool, Ohio, and granddaughter of George Wells, whose old home stood on the present site of Newell. A blockhouse once stood on the old Wells farm and Indian relics picked up there are now in the possession of Mr. Miller. George Wells was an old steamboat owner and followed the river, and also followed farming until his farm was all sold to the townsites company. His son, William H., who was a carpenter by trade, died in 1920, age seventy-one years. Mrs. Miller, who was born at East Liverpool, Ohio, is active in the Ladies' Aid Society of the Presbyterian Church, of which she and her husband have long been members. He belongs to the Blue Lodge of Masonry at New Cumberland and has attained to the Scottish Rite degree. Mr. Miller is well known as a public speaker in the line of educational work, and his services in this direction are frequently in demand.

JAMES W. FINLEY. One of the best known and most highly respected citizens of Hancock County, James W. Finley has long been practically in charge of all the construction work done by the big firm of Finley Brothers of Chester. He has been identified with this line of work for more than thirty years, and few men bear a better record in business matters or as to citizenship.

Mr. Finley was born on the old Finley farm, one mile from Chester, Hancock County, February 1, 1863, and belongs to an old and honored family, a complete record of which will be found in the sketch of Mr. Finley's brother, Joseph N. Finley, elsewhere in this work. He was reared on the home farm and secured a good educational training, and was variously employed until he reached the age of twenty-eight years, at which time he entered the trade. Inside of the same month he was given the responsible position of supervision of construction, a line in which he has continued to the present time, being generally the one in direct charge of all the construction work. The Finley Brothers continued as a partnership until August, 1903, when the business was incorporated, with a capital of $10,000, the officers being Joseph N. Finley, president; Joseph McCoy, vice president; R. Frank Finley, treasurer; and George A. Hasson, secretary. James W. Finley assumed the duties of superintendent of construction. R. F. Finley became vice president of the concern in 1916, at the time of the death of Joseph McCoy, a brother-in-law, whose widow is now a director in the concern. In 1921 the capital of the business was increased to $50,000. The work of this concern is not confined by any means to Hancock County, nor to the State of West Virginia, for the reputation of the enterprise for honest representation, high grade of workmanship and honorable fidelity to contracts has extended to distant points, and work has been done by Finley Brothers as far west as Moline, Illinois. Much of the success of the business must be accredited to James W. Finley, an expert in his line, a capable executive in the handling of labor and possessed of much energy and ideas of a modern character. He was formally a member of the Chester City Council, where he served on several important committees and worked faithfully in behalf of the welfare of his community.

While engaged in park work in Summit County, Ohio, Mr. Finley met Miss Ustha E. Boughton, who later became his bride. Mr. and Mrs. Finley have three sons: Richard Dale, Clyde Emmer and Elvet Franklin, all attending school. At one time Mr. Finley belonged to thirteen fraternal organizations and passed through the chairs in most of these orders, of a number of which he was representative to the state bodies. Of later years, however, he has not evidenced so much interest in fraternalism, and when his business duties allow of a vacation he either spends his time in his home or else takes a hunting trip in the mountains of his native state or goes to Michigan in search of deer and bear.

SAMUEL G. POMEROY. Some individuals are fortunate enough to inherit the spirit of industry, financial sense and business capability which help to make them successful in their life work, while others are obliged to strive against adverse circumstances and only attain prosperity and position because they have developed winning characteristics themselves. Pughtown numbers among its most responsible and representative men some who have been satisfied to work out their destiny along the even lines of ordinary occupations. They have not sought the applause of admiring throngs, nor have they desired to wrest wealth from speculative enterprises, but, doing the duty that lay nearest at hand, have gained material advancement and the respect of their fellows. In this category may be included Samuel G. Pomeroy, who is engaged in the general merchandise business at Pughtown, a community in which he is well known and highly regarded.

Mr. Pomeroy was born at Pughtown, October 14, 1867, a son of Rev. Joseph S. and Isabel (Griffith) Pomeroy. Rev. Joseph S. Pomeroy was married in Mercer County, Pennsylvania, in 1849, and came to Hancock County, West Virginia, as pastor of the old Flats Presbyterian Church near Pughtown, the only church of that denomination in Hancock County, whose members were scattered for a radius of twenty miles in every direction. He lived at Pughtown, where he bought a home, which is now occupied by his son. Reverend Pomeroy served the old Flats Church until 1877, a period of twenty-eight years, during which time he labored faithfully, zealously, cheerfully and unselfishly in behalf of his flock and his church, and built up a large and prosperous congregation. He then spent nine years as pastor of the Presbyterian Church at Moundsville, following which he returned to his old home at Pughtown and went into semi-retirement, although he continued to visit various churches as the demand arose until within two or three years prior to his death, when advanced years caused his complete retirement to a life of rest after a long and eminently useful career. He died in August, 1907, at the age of eighty-five years, being buried at the Flats Cemetery, while his worthy wife survived him twelve years, passing away when but one month and six days less than ninety-five years old. After he had retired from regular active work as a minister Reverend Pomeroy was called upon frequently to officiate at special events. He was called upon to act at funerals, and was popular at marriages. During his long career he married parents and later their children, and buried several generations of the same family. He was also a popular lecturer, being a man of broad information on a number of interesting and important topics, and his voice was frequently heard from the platform. He and Mrs. Pomeroy were the parents of the following children: John B., who became a minister of the Presbyterian faith, preached in North Dakota, Illinois and Ohio, retired to his home at Findlay, Ohio, and died there in 1920; Chester, who for a time operated the store started by his father soon after the Civil war at Fairview, now Pughtown, and later became a merchant at East Liverpool, Ohio, where he died; Samuel G., of this record; Jennie, who died in Colorado as the wife of Ross Carney; Clara, who married D. L. Evans and died at Pughtown; Myra, unmarried, formerly deputy postmistress at Pughtown and with her brother, Samuel G., in the store, and who has remained as his constant companion and housekeeper; and Ella, who married Frank McClellan and went to Colorado.

Samuel G. Pomeroy received a public school education at Pughtown and as a youth entered the store of his brother Chester, whose interest in the business he later bought. He has continued in the same line to the present, and this enterprise now has the distinction of being the oldest continuous business in Northern West Virginia. Mr. Pomeroy carries a full line of general merchandise and has developed an excellent business, his customers being drawn from all over the surrounding countryside. His old establishment, the original one, was destroyed by fire in 1906, but was replaced immediately with a more modern structure, the present one. In business circles Mr. Pomeroy is known as the man of the strictest integrity and probity. He has never evinced other than a good citizen's interest in politics, although his father kept posted on election returns and was able to recall the returns of every county in the state, a mathematical talent that was also possessed by his son Chester. Samuel G. Pomeroy is unmarried and resides with his sister Myra, a capable housekeeper and a woman of many virtues and numerous friendships. They are faithful members of the old Flats Presbyterian Church, to the movements of which they contribute liberally. While he does not take an active part in public life, Mr. Pomeroy is a friend of progressive and constructive enterprises tending to advance his community, and such receive his unqualified support.

DAVID E. MAYHEW. The prosperous stockman and farmer illustrates by his experience the ups and downs of his vocation, its fascinating promises of fortune and its equally abundant opportunities for failure. He has his full measure of both, as a rule, but if he possesses the qualities which make for success he emerges on the top wave and achieves a permanent place among the substantial men of his section. Among the agriculturists of Hancock County who have been successful in their life work, one who is well esteemed in his community as an agriculturist and a citizen is David E. Mayhew of Pughtown.

Mr. Mayhew was born at Pughtown, June 21, 1856, a son of James N. and Mary Jane (Crawford) Mayhew. James N. Mayhew was born near Florence, Washington County, Pennsylvania, in 1827, and was seven years of age when he came to West Virginia with his parents, John and Elizabeth (Jackson) Mayhew, the family settling in Hancock County, adjoining the Village of Fairview, now Pughtown. John Mayhew, a farmer with about 340 acres of land, lived in a brick house which still forms a part of the residence on the property. He died when past ninety-three years of age, while his worthy wife passed away when seventy-five years old. They were the parents of the following children: Rebecca, who died as Mrs. Albaugh; Eliza, who married a Mr. Buchanan and had a son, John Buchanan, who was an attorney at Beaver, Pennsylvania; James N.; David Simeon, who removed to Illinois; Nancy, who married a Mr. Fulton and died at the age of ninety-six years, being the mother of Rev. W. P. Fulton, a noted Presbyterian divine of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania; John W., who died in Beaver County, Pennsylvania; William, who was last heard from in California; Elizabeth, who married a Mr. Travis; and Mary, who married Mr. Custer.

James N. Mayhew received a public school education and as a youth engaged in agricultural pursuits, which he followed throughout life, being one of the well-known and highly-respected men of his community. He married in Columbiana County, Ohio, Mary Jane Crawford, and they became the parents of thirteen children, all of whom are living at this writing, in 1922: Thomas C., a resident of Nebraska; John H., of Chester; David E., the subject of this sketch; William Lucas, a resident of Lisbon, Ohio; Nancy Jane, widow of Wesley Herron, of Pughtown, who has thirty-two grandchildren in 1922; James L. and Charles C., twins, the former mayor of Chester, West Virginia, and the latter a resident of California; Ella, the widow of Howard Warren, of Cleveland; George, of Sebring, Ohio; Ira, residing on the old farm home; Frank, of Salem, Ohio; Elizabeth, now Mrs. Emanuel Thomas, of Salem, Ohio; and Noah, of New Brighton, Pennsylvania. All of the members of this remarkable family still survive, the youngest being now in middle life.

David E. Mayhew has passed his entire career on the old farm and at the village nearby. He received a country school education and when given a choice of vocations decided upon agriculture as his life work, and has had no reason to repent of his decision. He is now the owner of a property of sixty-seven acres, on which he has made modern improvements and erected substantial buildings and his progressive methods, industry and good management have served to gain him a worth-while and well deserved success. His standing in the community is that of a man of integrity, and his good citizenship has never been questioned. A democrat in politics, he follows the family inclinations, as nearly all of the Mayhews have been supporters of democratic principles and candidates. In 1896 fourteen votes from this immediate family alone were cast for the candidacy of William J. Bryan for president, including father, sons and sons-in-law.

Mr. Mayhew married Miss Lida A. Sproule, daughter of Hugh and Nancy (Donehogh) Sproule, and granddaughter of Hugh Sproule, of Ireland. Both Hugh Sproule the elder and younger were agriculturists all their lives and were men of probity and integrity, both being elders in the old Flats Presbyterian Church. Mrs. Mayhew's father passed his entire life in Hancock County and died at the age of seventy-five years. Her mother, Nancy Donchoo, was a sister of Dr. R. S. Donchoo, the oldest physician in Hancock County. Mrs. Mayhew was reared on the home farm and educated in the public schools, and was eighteen years of age at the time of her marriage. There were two children born to Mr. and Mrs. Mayhew who died in infancy, and they have a foster son, Hubert S. Mills, Mrs. Mayhew's nephew, who was taken into their home and hearts at the age of 2½ years and has been given every advantage. He has passed his life on the farm and is now twenty-three years of age, and accounted one of the capable and industrious young agriculturists of the community. The family are members of the old Presbyterian Church, although Mr. Mayhew was reared in the faith of the Methodist Protestant Church, of which his parents were members.

PAUL A. BOOTHE. His professional work as a mining and consulting engineer has brought Mr. Boothe an extensive experience in a number of states, both East and West. He recently established at Huntington the Paul A. Boothe & Company, consulting engineers and architects, and the firm serves a large and important clientele in the industrial regions of this state.

Mr. Boothe was born at Fort Scott, Kansas, March 11, 1888. He is a descendant from the old English family of Boothes. His ancestor, William De Boothe, obtained special recognition from the Crown, and one of his sons, George Boothe, was knighted, William De Boothe was a landed proprietor in Lancashire, England. The grandfather of Paul A. Boothe was William K. Boothe, who was born in 1840, and spent most of his life in the vicinity of Terre Haute and Staunton, Indiana, where he was a farmer and merchant. He finally disappeared, being last heard from at Staunton in 1904.

Charles P. Boothe, father of Paul A., was born at Des Moines, Iowa, in 1866, but grew up near Terre Haute, Indiana, was a merchant at Rich Hill, Missouri, where he married, lived for a very brief time in Fort Scott, Kansas, and since 1895 his home has been at Kansas City, Missouri, where he is in the lumber and coal business. He is independent in politics, is a lay minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and is one of the highest Odd Fellows in Missouri, being a past grand of the Grand Lodge of the state. He is also a member of the Modern Woodmen of America. Charles P. Boothe married Harriet Barber, who was born at Streator, Illinois, in 1867. Paul A. is the oldest of their children. Martha Charline is the wife of W. Benjamin Wilson, their home being at Kansas City, while his duties are with the Standard Oil Company's plant at Sugar Creek, Missouri. Robert, the third child, died in infancy, and Gordon K., the youngest, is a heating engineer in Kansas City, Missouri.

Paul A. Boothe acquired a public school education at Kansas City, graduating from high school in 1906, and in the course of his subsequent education attended the University of Missouri at Columbia, the Armour Institute of Technology in Chicago, and the Montana School of Mines at Butte. He graduated from the Montana school with the degree of Metallurgist and Mining Engineer in 1916. In the meantime he had performed a widely varied service in engineering and construction work in Missouri, Illinois, Minnesota and Montana. For two years he was assistant chief engineer for the Standard Oil Company of Indiana, and after his graduation from the school of mines he returned to Chicago, and was in business in that city as a consulting engineer until May, 1917. He then went to Butte, Montana, to take charge of the designing of a concrete shaft to be placed in Granite Mountain for the North Butte Mining Company. He remained there until October, 1917, acting as consulting engineer. In October, 1917, he established himself in practice at Denver, Colorado, and in the spring of 1919 became associated with the Lloyd-Thomas Company of Chicago, Illinois, industrial engineers and appraisers.

Mr. Boothe came to Huntington and on January 1, 1921, established the Paul A. Boothe Company, consulting engineers and architects. He is president of the company, whose offices are in the Wilson Building on Tenth Street.

Mr. Boothe's church preferences are the Episcopal, but his affiliations are with the Methodist Church. He is a member of the West Side Country Club and West Side Commercial Club of Huntington. On April 30, 1914, at St. Paul, Minnesota, he married Miss Elsa Helen White, daughter of Benjamin Stuart and Caroline (Beiswenger) White. Her father, who died at Madisonville, Ohio, was a successful attorney. Her mother died at Chicago, June 2, 1914. Mrs. Boothe is a graduate of the Hinshaw Conservatory of Music at Chicago, and attended the American Conservatory in the same city. She is a soprano and has appeared with success on the concert, lyceum and opera stage. Mr. and Mrs. Boothe have two children: Helen Adair, born May 24, 1917, and Barbara Ann, born November 16, 1919.

WILLIAM D. LEWIS. Wholesale merchant and banker of Charleston, is a successful business man who has pursued a well balanced purpose in his achievements. Mr. Lewis in later years has given generously and has been in fact primarily responsible for the success of Charleston's unique institution, the Union Mission. The Union Mission stands out as perhaps the most original organization of its kind in the country. It is a centralized agency, both religious and philanthropic, wherein are concentrated the means and the influences for the alleviation of hardship and suffering in the community. It performs the work performed in many other cities by the Associated Charities, but is even broader in scope than those worthy organizations, and it has been conducted so efficiently as to win the confidence of men like Mr. Lewis, who alone, it is said, has contributed many thousands of dollars to the Mission, and it constitutes his largest interest and pride outside his business and personal affairs.

William D. Lewis was born near Malden in Kanawha County, June 21, 1850, son of John D. and Betty (Darnel) Lewis. He is of Scotch-Irish ancestry. His great-grandfather, Charles Lewis, was a native of the Shenandoah Valley, served as a colonel in the Indian wars, and was killed at the battle of Point Pleasant, in what is now West Virginia. His son, Charles Lewis, Jr., subsequently settled in the vicinity of Point Pleasant, on the Ohio River, and was a farmer there. John D. Lewis, father of the Charleston business man, was born in 1800, and was reared in Mason County and later settled on the Kanawha River, where he was a pioneer in the salt industry, and at one time owned 70,000 acres of land covered with timber and underlaid with coal. He was a man of wealth, a large slave owner, served in the Legislature, and was widely known for his blameless character and philanthropic impulse. He was a whig and later a democrat, was a member of the Episcopal Church, and died at the age of eighty-two, in December, 1882. Betty Darnel, his third wife, was born in Kentucky and died in 1851, leaving two children, Julia D. and William D.

William D. Lewis, though his boyhood was spent in the Civil war period, acquired a liberal education, graduating from Washington and Lee University at Lexington, Virginia. He has kept in close touch with his alma mater, and in 1907 was elected a trustee of that institution. After leaving university Mr. Lewis entered the lumber industry, managing his father's timber lands and manufacturing lumber for a number of years. Since retiring from the lumber industry he has been active in business organizations at Charleston, where he is president of the Hubbard Grocery Company and a director of the Kanawha National Bank. Mr. Lewis is an elder in the First Presbyterian Church of Charleston, and politically has always been aligned with the democratic party.

He married Miss Jennie G. Stanley, who is a native of Kanawha County, daughter of Joel Stanley. Mr. and Mrs. Lewis have five children: William D., Jr., Mrs. Lynn Holderness, John D., Captain Brown and Julia V. Red.

MAJ. JAMES I. PRATT, a veteran of the Spanish-American and Philippine wars and who served as a major in the World war, has been an active business man of Charleston for many years, an official in a prominent machinery and supply business and also in the automobile business.

Major Pratt was born in Ritchie County, West Virginia, in 1879, grew up on a farm and attended country schools. As a youth he became a member of the National Guard of West Virginia, and at the outbreak of the Spanish-American war was mustered in with the Second West Virginia Regiment.

Following his return home he entered West Virginia University, from which he graduated in 1901, and then for several years was a worker in the West Virginia oil fields. His home and business interests have been centered at Charleston since 1905. Mr. Pratt is sales manager for and a stockholder in the Capital City Supply Company. This corporation, founded in 1902, does an extensive wholesale business in mill and mine machinery and supplies, and through its auxiliary concern, the Howell Motor Company, acts as distributors for this territory of the Dodge Brothers cars. The company's offices and plant at the corner of Broad and Smith streets comprise one of Charleston's largest and most important industrial and commercial enterprises.

Major Pratt resumed his active connection with the National Guard after his army service, rose to the rank of major in command of the First Battalion, Second West Virginia Regiment, and became widely known in army circles as an expert in rifle practice. As a rifleman and sharpshooter he made high scores as a representative of the West Virginia National Guard in the annual rifle tournaments at Camp Perry, Ohio, conducted by the Regular Army. Early in 1918 Major Pratt was called to the United States Army and with the rank of major and assigned to duty as instructor in the School of Instruction for Army Officers at Camp Perry. About 5,000 young officers passed through this school, the first classes being given a thirty-day course. As the war grew more serious in the summer of that year, the work of the school was broadened to a six weeks' intensive course. The faculty of this school was composed of the very best rifle shots in the United States Army at the time, the instructors being all National Guardsmen, selected for their ability to shoot and to teach others to shoot.

While in the service Major Pratt, in association with Prof. Charles S. Hastings of Yale University, designed and perfected a rifle known as the "special model United States Army Rifle, model of 1913," a rifle having a high degree of accuracy and a telescope sight adjusted to the last degree for windage, elevation and zero. It was designed particularly for sniping purposes and to be used by snipers especially trained for this hazardous service. It was adopted by the army, but facilities had not been perfected for its manufacture before the close of the war.

Major Pratt received his honorable discharge in February, 1919, and then returned to Charleston and resumed his active association with the Capital City Supply Company. He is a leader in Charleston business and civic affairs, is a director of the Kanawha County Bank and member of the Kiwanis Club.

ALICE SWANEY, M. D. The professional career of Dr. Alice Swaney, which it is proposed briefly to sketch, embraces a period of eighteen years, practically all of which have been passed at New Cumberland. It possesses some features of interest, inasmuch as it assisted in breaking through the barrier of professional bigotry which had to some extent before her coming excluded women from practicing the healing art in a professional way. To her example, winning by assiduous attention to her professional calls and by profound knowledge of the art and skill in its practice a place among the reputable practitioners of medicine and surgery in Hancock County, has been due in a measure the rapid advancement made recently by her sex in this field of effort.

Doctor Swaney was born at New Cumberland, Hancock County, West Virginia, and is a daughter of John

S. and Ella (Grafton) Swaney. The Swaney family, which originated in Holland, has resided for many years in Pennsylvania, where was born Isaac Swaney, the grandfather of Doctor Swaney. He was a carpenter by trade and was ten years of age when brought by his parents to the vicinity of New Cumberland, where he spent his life in working at his vocation. He died in Hancock County during the Civil war period, at the age of fifty-five years, after a career that had included only an industrious application to his trade, without any public achievements. His wife, who bore the maiden name of Margaret Summerwell, was also a native of Pennsylvania, and died in Hancock County in extreme old age.

John S. Swaney, father of Doctor Swaney, was born in Beaver County, Pennsylvania, April 3, 1845, and as a child was brought by his parents to Lexington, three miles above New Cumberland. During his early years he mastered the trade of stone mason, which he followed in connection with farming. During the Civil war he enlisted in Company F, First Regiment, West Virginia Volunteer Infantry, which was later consolidated with other troops, becoming the Second Veterans. Mr. Swaney's brother, T. R., served in the same company, and a younger brother, S. D., served in the Fourth West Virginia Cavalry. Both are now deceased. Following the war Mr. Swaney resumed his operations as a stone mason and farmer, but gradually gave up the former vocation. He became interested in the breeding of track horses and had a number of good performers which brought fancy prices. One of these, "Sultan," was a noted prize-winner at the Pittsburgh Horse Show. In 1881 Mr. Swaney was elected sheriff of Hancock County, serving in that office until 1884, and again in 1889 was chosen for that position, and served until 1893. Later he acted for six years as a member of the Board of County Commissioners, and his entire record in both offices was a splendid one. He has always been an active republican. In 1871, at the age of twenty-six years, Mr. Swaney was united in marriage with Miss Ella Grafton, who was born October 13, 1848, and died August 11, 1921, after fifty years of married life, their Golden Wedding Anniversary having been celebrated at San Diego, California. They were the parents of two children: William Grafton, who has medical courses at the University of West Virginia and the University of Pennsylvania, but became a business man and was Pacific Coast manager for the Ingersoll Construction Company at Portland, Oregon, when he died at the age of thirty-five years; and Alice.

William Hill Grafton, the maternal great-grandfather of Doctor Swaney, was born April 13, 1787, in Harford County, Maryland, and came to what is now Hancock County West Virginia (then in Virginia) in the year 1806. On July 19, 1807, he married Nancy Baker, of Virginia, born in February, 1789. William Hill Grafton was the first postmaster of the Town of New Cumberland, assuming the duties of that office in 1844. In the year 1840 he helped organize the Christian Church, the first church organized at this place, and from 1850 until 1856 he served as sheriff of Hancock County. He and Thomas Bousall were the first merchants of New Cumberland. Mr. Grafton was the father of a large family, among his children being Nathan Baker Grafton, who was born April 3, 1819. On January 22, 1848, he married Rachel Chapman. Nathan B. Grafton became the first school teacher of New Cumberland, in 1845, and also followed merchandising, traveling about once a year by stage and canal boat to Philadelphia in order to replenish his stock. He served as county supervisor, which corresponds with the present office of county commissioner, and in his later years was a justice of the peace.

Ella Grafton Swaney, the wife of John S. Swaney, and Charles Edwin Grafton, the mother and uncle of Dr. Alice Swaney, were daughter and son of Nathan B. Grafton. Ella G. Swaney was born October 13, 1848, graduated from Pleasant Hill Seminary, Washington County, Pennsylvania, in the year 1865, married John S. Swaney March 23, 1871, and died July 11, 1921. Charles Edwin Grafton, M. S., C. E. brother of Mrs. John S. Swaney was born September er 15, 1854, and in 1880 graduated from West Virginia University, being the first graduate of that institution to receive the degree of civil engineer. His work has been largely confined to railroad construction, and during his career he has held responsible positions with the Illinois Central, Baltimore & Ohio and Union Pacific railroads and others. During the past ten years he has been county engineer for Hancock County, his present post. He is a member of the American Society of Civil Engineers.

Alice Swaney, following her graduation from high school, spent three years at Oberlin and then enrolled as student at the Women's Medical College, Philadelphia, from which she was graduated as a member of the class of 1903, receiving her degree of Doctor of Medicine. For one year thereafter she did post-graduate work in the Women's Hospital, Philadelphia, and then began the general practice of her calling. She is a member of the Hancock County Medical Society, the West Virginia State Medical Society and the American Medical Association, and acts as medical examiner in the public schools. While of a suffragette, in the generally accepted meaning of the term, she believes in equal suffrage for her sex. Her own example is a stimulating one. She has arisen to influence and has obtained recognition through solid merit, founded upon good natural abilities, ripened by liberal cholaic training and matured by thorough scientific study and long, continuous and assiduous practice. With all her acquisitions she has fully preserved the innate delicacy of her womanly nature, and is none the less a lady because she has become a physician. Her religious connection is with the old Christian Church, the first church to be established at New Cumberland.

JOHN BENTLEY NEWELL. The influence exerted by the deeds of those who never seek publicity, but who are ever ready to do their part in the world's work for civilization and progress, is a very potent one. Transitory success comes to some who disregard the principles of honor and morality, but once they are removed from their scene of action the lack of merit in their work is soon realized, and their names are used but to illustrate the uselessness of their manner of living. The man who is remembered is the one who puts self last; who endeavors to give to others a little more than the treatment he wants for himself, and who is willing to make some sacrifice for the good of his fellow-men. Such a man can be depended upon and his life is a benefit to the community. Judged by these standards, the late John Bentley Newell, of Newell, West Virginia, measured up to the highest ideals of good citizenship, and although a number of years have passed since he was called to his final rest, he lives in the memory of his friends as the highest type of manhood.

John Bentley Newell was born April 12, 1839, at the old mill on Tomlinson's Run, in Hancock County, West Virginia, a son of John and Lydia Ann (Edie) Newell. John Newell, father of John B. Newell, was born near Georgetown, Washington County, Pennsylvania, in 1796, a son of Hugh Newell who with his brother had removed to Vance's Fort soon after the close of the Revolutionary war. Hugh Newell built one of the first brick houses in Washington County, Pennsylvania, and John Newell built the first house of brick at Pughtown in Hancock County, a old residence that is still standing. He also owned a tannery, which he operated for some years, even after he had secured what later became known as the Hartford Flour Mill, on Tomlinson's Run, about four miles on the Ohio. He built flatboats, which he ran down the Ohio River to New Orleans, carrying flour and leather, and would then walk back to his home. About 1850 he sold the mill to a man named Hartford and located on the present Newell farm, to which he brought his wife, who had been Lydia Ann Edie, of Fairview. This farm was a part of the Greathouse tract or grant, and the old deed Greathouse is still held by the Newell family. The original settler, named Greathouse, whose cabin was on the left bank of Tub Mill Run; at the entrance to the mill (the cellar being still visible), was killed by an Indian floating down the river in a canoe. The place is now included in the village of Newell. W. F. Lloyd, a steel manufacturer of Pittsburgh, bought parts of four farms, that of Newell, Wells, McDonald and Moore, but sold out some twenty years later to the North American Manufacturing Company, who really started the town, the first step being to erect a bridge from East Liverpool. The farm extended to the Ohio and reached back as far as the hill, which is some 500 feet above the river level. The pottery, of course, was down by the flat on the river. The farm had formerly been occupied and rented by Alexander Edie, the brother of Lydia Ann (Edie) Newell, and was purchased by John Newell from a Mr. Glass and others. It contained 320 acres, on which Mr. Newell made many improvements, including a brick residence. He built his pottery on the site of the present station at Newell, on the right bank of Tub Mill Run, the first pottery on the West Virginia side of the river, and in his two-kiln plant, with its thirty or forty employees, manufactured a creditable article of yellow-ware. John Newell died in 1884, when eighty-eight years of age. He married Lydia Ann Edie in 1826, and she died in 1844, the mother of seven children: Hugh, a sketch of whose career will be found elsewhere in this work, in the record of John F. Newell; William, of Berthoud, Colorado; Rev. James, of Los Angeles, California; George, of Delta County, Colorado; John Bentley; Lizzie, who married Alfred Marks, owner of the old Marks farm at Chester; and Rachel, who married George Harker, a potter at East Liverpool. Mr. and Mrs. Harker had a son, William Harker, president of the Potters National Bank of East Liverpool, whose son, Robert, still resides at Newell, and is one of the owners of the Harker Pottery, founded by his grandfather.

John Bentley Newell was ten years of age when brought by his parents to the home farm and his education was acquired in the public schools. During the Civil war he served as a Lieutenant in the Home Guards, and was twice called into active service, once during the time of Morgan's Raid. With this exception his life was a quiet one, and he was content to remain on his farm, where his industry and good management, together with his intelligent application of modern methods, won him success. His integrity and probity were universally recognized, while he was also a strong temperance man, and in this connection it may be noted that Hancock County had never had a licensed saloon within its borders. He never cared for public life. He and his worthy wife were members of the First Presbyterian Church of Newell, West Virginia, in the faith of which Mr. Newell died October 21, 1914, and Mrs. Newell, October 19, 1910. At the age of twenty-six years Mr. Newell married the twenty-one-year-old daughter of Dr. Robert A. Johnston, a physician of Wells-ville, Miss Margaret Jane Johnston, who was born at Noblestown, Pennsylvania, and to this union there were born the following children: Carrie, a teacher in the public schools of East Liverpool, who died unmarried December 20, 1919; James, residing at home, who has been active in promoting the Newell bridge and other enterprises, married Maud Croxall, of East Liverpool; and Charles B., Ada and Robert C. (Bert), all unmarried and at home.

Robert C. Newell attended George Washington University in 1905, following which he pursued his law course at the West Virginia University as a student in jurisprudence and diplomacy. An amusing incident of his college days, which he vividly recalls, is the following: On the day succeeding the historic victory of West Virginia University over Washington and Jefferson College the students desired to celebrate, and President Purington, seeing little chance of keeping them from their desires, gave his consent. The law students, raising a great yell on the campus, succeeded in bringing out several classes from recitations and the crowd became greatly augmented. Finally the disturbance reached the class taught by Miss Johnson, whose determined stand and uncompromising demeanor abashed and bluffed the entire crowd of law students.

Mr. Newell was admitted to the bar in 1908, and immediately engaged in a general practice of his profession, to which, however, he does not devote his entire attention, being also a farmer and fruit grower. The Newell Fruit Farm now consists of 254 acres, with some five acres in small fruits and thirty-five acres in apples and peaches. John Bentley Newell, who conducted this farm as a sheep breeding property for a number of years, later in life became interested in fruit and was the originator of the Red Willow apple, which has become one of the leading varieties and which is produced on this farm, as well as Grimes Golden and Elberta peaches. The old residence stands well up on the bluff, one-half mile back from the river, but not with a view. It was the center of the social life of the community for more than a half a century, and its doors have always been kept hospitably open. The Newells have ever stood for high standards of citizenship, their influence always for progress, advancement and betterment of conditions in the community which honored John Bentley Newell by the adoption of his name.

WALTER S. LINK, M. D., who died in the City of Parkersburg on the 6th of March, 1921, justified in able and faithful service his choice of vocation, and by his sterling character and marked technical skill honored the profession in which he achieved high standing and unequivocal success. He built up a large and representative general practice in the City of Parkersburg, and held rank as one of the leading physicians and surgeons of Wood County at the time of his death, in the very prime of his strong and useful life.

Dr. Walter Scott Link was born in Jefferson County, West Virginia, on the 13th of July, 1870, and was a son of Thomas and Elizabeth Jane (Melvin) Link. The lineage of the Link family traces back to German origin, seven brothers of the name having come from Germany and settled in America prior to the war of the Revolution, and from these founders descend the representatives of the name now found in various states of the Union. Members of the family were gallant soldiers of the Continental Line in the War of the Revolution, and the War of 1812 likewise gained loyal soldiers from this family of American patriots. Virtually every war in which this country has been involved has claimed members of the Link family as soldiers. Adam Link, an ancestor of the subject of this memoir, was a patriot soldier in the Revolution, and in a cemetery in Jefferson County, West Virginia, are the graves of soldiers of the Link family who served in all other wars of the nation in their day and generation. Thomas Link was a gallant soldier of the Confederacy in the War between the States, took part in various battles and was severely wounded while participating in an engagement near Winchester. After the war he continued his activities as one of the representative farmers of Jefferson County, and there both he and his wife passed the remainder of their lives, secure in the high esteem of all who knew them. They became the parents of the following children: John A., Edward M., Thomas O., Jacob Albert, Adam G. (a minister of the gospel), Davis Beauregard, Charles W. and Walter S.

Dr. Walter S. Link found the period of his childhood and early youth compassed by the invigorating influences of the home farm, and in the meanwhile he made good use of the advantages offered by the public schools of his native county. After his graduation in the high school at Shenandoah he entered the University of West Virginia, in which he was in due time graduated, with the degree of Bachelor of Arts. In preparation for his chosen profession he was matriculated in the Baltimore Medical College at Baltimore, Maryland, and in this institution he was graduated as a member of the class of 1897. After thus receiving his degree of Doctor of Medicine he further fortified himself by an effective post-graduate course in the New York Eye and Ear Infirmary, in which great institution he served three years as house surgeon. About 1900 Doctor Link established his residence at Parkersburg, and while his practice was of general order in its earlier stages, it was as a specialist in the diagnosis and treatment of diseases of the ear, nose and throat that he gained his major success and reputation. In this special field of practice his fame far transcended local limitations, and he gained authoritative status as a specialist along these lines.

In 1902 Doctor Link showed his high sense of professional stewardship and his civic progressiveness by establishing a private hospital in his home city, and to this institution came patients from the most diverse sections of the Union to avail themselves of its advantages and of the able service of Doctor Link.

As was to be anticipated in connection with a person of so great patriotism and high ideals as those of Doctor Link, he was among the first to tender his aid to the Government when it became apparent that the United States must become actively involved in the great World war. In December, 1917, he enlisted in the medical corps of the United States Army, was commissioned lieutenant and later promoted to a captaincy, and his arduous and unremitting work in connection with the development of the nation's medical department for war service was the predisposing cause of his untimely death. He continued his service in the medical corps until his impaired health made necessary his retirement, and in the loved city of his home he passed the closing days of his earnest and noble life, loved for his kindness and abiding human sympathy, and admired for the splendid service which he had given in his exacting profession. The Doctor was an appreciative and valued member of the Wood County Medical Society, and likewise was actively identified with the West Virginia State Medical Society and the American Medical Association, as well as the Southern Medical Society. Doctor Link was an exceptional Bible student and was a zealous member of the Presbyterian Church. His widow is a member of the Catholic Church. He was a member of the Parkersburg Chamber of Commerce, the local Kiwanis Club, and the Parkersburg Lodge of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. In the Masonic fraternity he received the thirty-second degree of the Ancient Accepted Scottish Rite, his maximum York Rite affiliation being with the Parkersburg Commandery of Knights Templars, and his Masonic activities having further been extended by his identification with the Mystic Shrine.

On the 22d of July, 1902, was solemnized the marriage of Doctor Link and Miss Mary Eleanor Prendergast, daughter of Thomas and Juliette Burea (Cummings) Prendergast. Mrs. Link was born in the city of Brooklyn, New York, was graduated in Chestnut Hill Convent and the New York Polyclinic Hospital as a trained nurse. Her career, as was that of her husband, has been one of distinct consecration to high effort in the relieving of human suffering, and she has seen much of hospital service, besides rendering aid to those in distress wherever and whenever her efficient service was required. She proved a devoted and helpful coadjutor of her husband in the maintenance of his hospital, and was his counselor in all departments of his work. In continued service she finds the greatest mode of consolation now that her loved companion has passed to the life eternal. Dr. and Mrs. Link became the parents of one daughter, Juliette Elizabeth, and the pleasant home in Parkersburg is known for its gracious hospitality.

JAMES L. MAYHEW. The chief executive office in any community is a responsible one, and the individual occupying it bears the responsibility on his shoulders not only of handling the multitudinous details of municipal management, but the accountability for its commercial and moral integrity. As he is, so is generally his community, for it soon reflects his character and manner of dealing with large problems, and unless he keeps a firm grip upon the reins of government and influences his associates to act as he believes is right and just, his administration soon shows the effect of lax principles. For this reason of recent years the people of the enterprising communities all over the country have been choosing their chief executives more and more from the sound business class, recognizing the beneficial effect of example and action. Ex Mayor Mayhew, of Chester, West Virginia, is not only a business man of proved ability and substantial standing, but a man who has had former experience in public office and who has shown his worth in securing the successful bringing about of movements for the public welfare.

Mr. Mayhew was born at the old Mayhew farm home at Pughtown, Hancock County, March 18, 1862, and is a son of James N. and Mary Jane (Crawford) Mayhew. James N. Mayhew was born near Florence, Washington County, Pennsylvania, in 1827, and when seven years of age was brought to West Virginia by his parents, John and Elizabeth (Jackson) Mayhew, who settled adjoining the village of Fairview, now Pughtown. John Mayhew owned about 340 acres of land and lived in a brick house which still forms a part of the residence on the property. He followed farming until his death when eighty years old, while his wife died when seventy-five or seventy-six years of age. They had the following children: Rebecca, who died as Mrs. Albaugh; Eliza, who became Mrs. Buchanan and had a son, John Buchanan, an attorney at Beaver, Pennsylvania; James N.; David Simeon, who died in Illinois; Nancy, who became Mrs. Fulton and died at the age of ninety-six years, being the mother of Rev. W. P. Fulton, a noted Presbyterian divine of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania; John W., who died in Beaver County, that state; William, who was last heard from in California; Elizabeth who married a Mr. Travis; and Mary who married a Mr. Custer.

After completing a public school education James N. Mayhew turned his attention to agricultural operations, in which he was engaged all his life, and became one of the highly respected and esteemed men of his locality. He was a democrat in politics, and he and his wife belonged to the Methodist Protestant Church. In Columbiana County, Ohio, he married Mary Jane Crawford, and they became the parents of thirteen children, all of whom are still living in 1922, the youngest being now in middle life: Thomas C., a resident of Nebraska; John H., of Chester; David E., of Pughtown, who is engaged in farming the old home place; William Lucas, a resident of Lisbon, Ohio; Nancy Jane, the widow of Wesley Herron, of Pughtown, who had thirty-two grandchildren in 1922; James L., of this review; Charles C., his twin, who is a resident of California; Ella, the widow of Howard Warren, of Cleveland; George, of Sebring, Ohio; Ira, residing on the old home farm; Frank, of Salem, Ohio; Elizabeth, now Mrs. Emanuel Thomas, of Salem, Ohio; and Noah, of East Palestine, Ohio.

James L. Mayhew received a public school education and remained on the home farm until reaching his twentieth year, at which time he went to New Brighton, Pennsylvania, where he took up the trade of painting. He followed that vocation for a long period, and was a contractor in the same line for five years, following which for twelve years he was the proprietor of a grocery and meat market. In 1900, while residing at New Brighton, he was elected one of the three county commissioners of Beaver County, Pennsylvania. This proved to be the most responsible position in the county, with court in session all the time during the administration. At the time all he bridges in the county were toll bridges, but in 1900 he commission of which Mr. Mayhew was a member started the movement for free bridges by purchasing the first bridge of this kind in the county. New Brighton is located on the Beaver River, near its junction with the Ohio, and there are bridges in every direction. The movement for free bridges met with a turmoil of opposition and the most strenuous objections, but later, after a start had been made in this line, the enterprise met with growing favor, and finally became popular. Mr. Mayhew, however, met defeat for reelection by a small majority. Later he conducted a hotel at New Brighton for about ten years, and in 1915 disposed of his holdings and returned to Hancock County, settling at Chester, where he was elected mayor in 1920 and served capably for two years his term expiring April 1, 1922. He has been prominent in the ranks of the democratic party and is a member of the committee of his party for the congressional district, as well as a jury commissioner, his associates being Capt. Harvey

Robb, of New Cumberland. As chairman of the congressional committee he is one of the most active workers in the conduct of campaigns and has frequently been a delegate to conventions. At present, in a business way, Mr. Mayhew is engaged in the handling of paints and wall paper, and is contracting in work of this kind. He has several fraternal connections and is accounted one of the most energetic and public-spirited citizens of his community.

Mr. Mayhew married Miss Nannie E. Snowden, who was born near Pughtown, daughter of the late W. D. Snowden, who was engaged in agricultural pursuits in Hancock County until his death. To Mr. and Mrs. Mayhew there have been born two children: Ina, who is the wife of Theodore McLain, of New Brighton, Pennsylvania; and William A., who is associated in business with his father.

A. D. OSBORNE. An active and unselfish life, based upon high principles, animated by kindly impulses which have been faithfully devoted to industry and directed to the discharge of every duty and responsibility, may be justly regarded as a successful one, without reference to pecuniary results. Under such a searchlight A. D. Osborne may be pronounced as being a successful man in every sense of the phrase. He has held honorable and responsible positions, has faithfully discharged his duties wherever placed, and has retained the confidence and respect of those with whom he has been associated. For a long period he has been identified with the cause of education, and as superintendent of the Grant District schools at Newell is carrying on a work that is bringing about excellent results.

Mr. Osborne was born in Meigs County, Ohio, where he received his early education, and after attending the Kent State Normal School pursued a course at the Ohio State University at Athens. For five years previously he taught in the rural schools and then for fourteen years was principal of the Ward School at East Liverpool, Ohio, then located at Newell, West Virginia, where he has been superintendent of the Grant District schools since 1916. Grant District has ten buildings, with twenty-four teachers and 704 pupils. In September, 1921, Superintendent Osborne's report showed that the enrollment in the grades totaled 299, while 104 pupils were registered in the junior and senior high schools at Newell. The Newell Building was erected in 1912, and consists of eight rooms, a basement library and two portable outside rooms. The high school course consists of a full four years, both junior and senior. There are fourteen teachers, of whom seven are in the high school departments. The matter of education is an important one at Newell, as this is rapidly becoming a place of importance. Newell is one mile below Chester, the two communities being separated by a bluff one-half mile long, with just room between for a railroad and road, which at places is very narrow. A bridge connects both Newell and Chester with East Liverpool, Ohio, these bridges being three-quarters of a mile apart, and a street car line crossing each. Newell has two important industries, the Homer Laughlin China Company, the largest single china plant in the world; and the E. M. Knowles China Company.

Mr. Osborne is secretary of the district school board, and a member of the West Virginia Teachers Association, the Hancock County Teachers Association and the Ohio Valley Schoolmasters Club. He is also one of the three members of the County Board of Equalization. He is a Mason and has attained to the fourteenth degree in the Scottish Rite. Mr. Osborne married Miss Annie Swan, of Washington County, Ohio, and they have two children: Vera, a graduate of Newell High School, who attended the Kent Normal School of Ohio, and is now a teacher in the first grade of the Newell School; and Gladys, a sophomore at the Newell High School. The family belongs to the Presbyterian Church, in which Mr. Osborne is a member of the Board of Trustees and an active Sunday School worker.

JOHN A. WATSON, whose fine homestead farm on the Ohio River in Hancock County, is in close proximity to Brownsdale, here occupies a house that was erected by his maternal grandfather, John Arbuckle, he having built the house in Hancock County in the early '50s and his death having occurred at the time when the Civil war was in progress. His daughter Margaret was the mother of him whose name introduces this paragraph. As a youth he learned the machinist's trade, and since 1878 he has maintained his permanent home at the ancestral place in Hancock County.

In the year 1882 Mr. Watson here married a daughter of the late John Brown, who was a member of one of the most honored pioneer families of this county. Mrs. Watson passed her entire life in Hancock County, and here her death occurred in July, 1915. Of the two children the elder is George, who is a bachelor and who has active management of the home farm, while Miss Mary, the only daughter, has had supervision of the domestic economies and social affairs of the home since the death of the loved wife and mother.

AUSTIN H. BROWN resides in the fine old-family homestead, a stone and brick structure on one of the well-improved farms of Hancock County, and in this dwelling he was born July 17, 1875, his father likewise having been born in this house, which is situated $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles north of New Cumberland, the county seat. The stone part of the building was erected in 1821 by Jacob Nessly, who came here as a pioneer of the year 1785 and who here became the owner of 5,000 acres of land, which he obtained by trading a rifle to an Indian. The historic old house faces the Ohio River. The brick addition to the original structure was erected in 1865, and the entire building, of most substantial order, is well preserved. The original tract of land continued along the shore of the Ohio River and extended as far as Georgetown, Pennsylvania, there having been about forty miles of shore line and the tract having been comparatively narrow. By the payment of 100 English pounds sterling Mr. Nessly later extended the width of his holdings by the purchase of an additional tract of 1,500 acres. Nessly came to this section from Eastern Pennsylvania, in accord with the advice of his father-in-law, who was a man of wealth. This young pioneer first erected a log cabin at the mouth of Yellow Creek, but soon removed two miles further south, to the site of the present house. Mr. Nessly developed a productive farm and continued his general supervision of the same until his death, at an advanced age, the closing years of his life having been passed in the home of one of his daughters, on the opposite side of the river, at Port Homer, Ohio. It is related that on one occasion, when he was on a trip on the Ohio side of the river he was pursued by Indians, but saved his life by taking refuge in a rocky cave, across the river from his own dwelling, he later having chiseled on a rock at this cave his name and the date of this incident. Barbara, daughter of this sterling pioneer, became the wife of Col. Richard Brown, who was of Holland Dutch ancestry and who served as a patriot soldier and officer in a Maryland regiment in the War of the Revolution, his wife having inherited the old homestead and both having there passed the remainder of their lives. Colonel Brown had local renown as a fighter in personal contests, and many tales are told of his prowess along this line. Adam Poe, was at one time a dinner guest at the Nessly home, and the two subsequently diverted themselves by engaging in a spirited fight, the result of which was that Poe had to be put to bed. A brother of Poe later appeared on the scene, while Adam was still at the Nessly home, and when he learned of the recent conflict and its result he boasted of his own ability as a fighter, with the sequel that he endured worse punishment at the hands of the doughty colonel than had his brother, he likewise having been cared for in the Nessly home after having thus failed to best his antagonist. On another occasion Colonel Brown, while on a trip back from Philadelphia, was followed and challenged by a man, and in the ensuing fight the colonel broke this man's neck with a blow. The eldest of the sons of Col. Richard Brown was Jacob Nessly Brown; John, the second son, settled at the mouth of Tomlinson's Run and was a young man at the time of his death; George continued his residence near the old homestead until his death, when past eighty years of age; and James likewise attained to venerable age, he having owned and occupied a part of the ancestral farm estate.

Jacob Nessly Brown married Ann Myler, and they resided on the old home farm. He owned and operated a flour mill at Wellsburg, twenty miles distant from his home, and on the farm he operated a distillery, besides developing a clay bed on the place and supplying clay for the manufacturing of jugs at Wellsburg, this having been the initiation of the clay industry and the original jugs having been used for the whiskey containers. On his farm Mr. Brown originated and developed the "Willow Twig" apple, he having planted a large orchard, having maintained his own nursery and being credited with the origination of the above mentioned variety of apples, which became the standard in this section, his orchard having produced an average of 20,000 bushels of apples annually. The old home farm of Mr. Brown now comprises only seventy-two acres. Mr. Brown died in 1879, after having passed the eightieth milestone on the journey of life, his wife having passed away in 1865. Their daughter Barbara became the wife of Archibald Hendrie; Virginia never married, and she had charge of the old home farm for thirty years, she having been seventy-five years of age at death; Richard H. is more specifically mentioned in a later paragraph; Ann became the wife of William L. Brown, they purchased a part of the old homestead and there they passed the remainder of their lives, a nephew, Charles M. Brenneman, having succeeded to the ownership of the farm; Alice was a young woman at the time of her death; George, who became a representative lawyer in the City of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, died a bachelor, as did also Jacob, who remained with his sister Virginia on the old home farm; and Edward removed to Bloomfield, Ohio, in which state he passed the remainder of his life.

Miss Virginia Brown showed marked ability in the management of the old homestead farm, as foreman of which she retained a colored man, William Wilson, who came from Albemarle County, Virginia, and who served as a youthful soldier in the Twelfth West Virginia Infantry in the Civil war, then commanded by Col. R. Hooker Brown, father of him whose name initiates this review. Wilson was about sixteen years old when, after the close of the war, he accompanied Colonel Brown to Hancock County and entered the employ of the latter's sister, Miss Virginia, with whom he remained until her death. He then purchased a part of the old Brown farm, and he is today one of the highly respected and very substantial citizens of Hancock County, his fidelity to the Brown family having never wavered and his service to the family having been of most conscientious and appreciative order.

Col. Richard Hooker Brown was graduated in the Duff Business College in the City of Pittsburgh, and he distinguished himself as a gallant soldier of the Union in the Civil war, in which he became colonel of the Twelfth West Virginia Volunteer Infantry, his service having continued until the close of the war. In 1867 Colonel Brown married Miss Elizabeth Pugh, daughter of David and Nancy (Allison) Pugh, Mrs. Brown having been reared at Pugh-town, Hancock County, a place named in honor of the family of which she was a representative. Colonel Brown added the brick portion to the old stone house in which he was born, and he served as county commissioner prior to the creation of Hancock County as did he also after the organization of the new county. He served one term as county sheriff, but in the meanwhile continued his residence on the old home farm. Here his death occurred on the 19th of March, 1910, and his widow passed away on the 20th of January, 1917. Of their twelve children all but one attained to maturity: Walter died in young manhood; Anna is the wife of A. H. Bowker, of Rochester, New York; King resides at Chester, West Virginia; J. Campbell is a merchant at East Liverpool, Ohio; Austin Hooker is the immediate subject of this sketch; Alice died within a short time after her marriage to Frederick Porter; Margaret is the widow of Joseph Hough and resides at Chester, Hancock County; Frank is a mill man at Warren, Ohio, and his twin brother, Edward, died in childhood; Barbara is the wife of Harry Darrington, an oil refiner, and they reside in the City of Chicago, Illinois; Richard is a railroad man at Wellsville, Ohio; Benjamin is a merchant at Toronto, Ohio.

F. H. Vance

Austin Hooker Brown was reared in his native county, and after the discipline of the rural schools he received that of the high school at Wellsville, Ohio, and was for two years a student in the West Virginia State Normal Schools at West Liberty and Fairmont, and attended the University of West Virginia one year. He gained youthful experience in the produce trade at Pittsburgh and Greensburg, Pennsylvania, and from 1905 to 1913 was engaged in the wholesale produce business at Steubenville, Ohio. Since the latter year he has resided on and given his attention to the management of the old homestead farm on which he was born and where he has precedence as one of the leading horticulturists in this section of the state, his fruit orchards producing an average of nearly 1,000 barrels annually. He has excellent storage provisions and has developed an appreciable business as a dealer in apples. He is one of the liberal and progressive citizens of his native county, was for nine years president of the school board of his district is secretary of the Farm Bureau of Hancock County, and is a stalwart republican in politics, as was also his father. He and his wife are active members of the Methodist Protestant Church, and attend the Nessly Chapel, which was named in honor of the pioneer, Jacob Nessly, who donated the ground on which the chapel is situated. He is affiliated with the Masonic fraternity, including the Commandery of Knights Templars at Steubenville, Ohio.

In 1902 Mr. Brown wedded Miss Eleanor Gallagher, of West Newton, Pennsylvania, she having been educated in the Pennsylvania State Normal School at California and having been a popular teacher prior to her marriage. Mr. and Mrs. Brown have one son, William James, who was graduated in high school and who is, in 1922, a student in the University of West Virginia.

FRED W. VANCE, M. D., has been a physician and surgeon at Mannington for the past seventeen years. He has high standing in his profession, and his good citizenship is on a par with his professional character.

Doctor Vance was born at the Village of French Creek in Upshur County, West Virginia, February 23, 1874, son of John E. and Anna M. (Darnall) Vance, the former a native of Highland County and the latter of McDowell County, Virginia. The grandfather, Col. Morgan A. Darnall, served as colonel of his regiment in the Union Army. John E. Vance and his wife were married October 24, 1871, and are still living at the old home place at French Creek, where on October 24, 1921, they celebrated their golden wedding anniversary.

Fred W. Vance, at the age of eight years, began helping his father in a systematic way, in proportion to his strength, in the latter's blacksmith shop. He attended common schools regularly, and also attended the French Creek Summer Normal School. In 1892 he began teaching with a No. 2 certificate, and the following year he taught on a No. 1 certificate. Doctor Vance taught altogether five winter and two summer terms.

In the meantime he had continued to exercise his strength and manual skill in his father's shop, thus mastering the blacksmith's trade, and when he left teaching he opened a shop of his own at French Creek. He remained there two years, and for three years conducted a blacksmithing business at Crawford in Lewis County. While a blacksmith Doctor Vance was diligently studying medicine, and finally he entered the Eclectic Medical College of Cincinnati, where he was graduated M. D. with the class of 1905. During his senior year he was interne at Seaton Hospital in Cincinnati. In 1904 he passed the West Virginia Medical Examining Board, and for several months practiced at Gains in Upshur County, but in 1905 returned to Cincinnati to receive his medical degree, and in May of that year established his home and office at Mannington. Almost from the beginning he has had an extensive private practice, and has done much professional work besides. Since 1912 he has been a member of the United States Board of Pension Examining Surgeons. He took post graduate work in the New York Post Graduate College in 1910. He is a member of the Marion County, West Virginia State and American Medical associations.

In 1912 Doctor Vance was elected mayor of Mannington and in 1920 was chosen a member of the Board of Education for the Mannington District. He is a Knight Templar and Scottish Rite Mason and Shriner, is affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and Knights of Pythias, and is a charter member of the Mannington Kiwanis Club. In 1921 he was appointed a member of the Board of Trustees of Davis & Elkins College in West Virginia.

Doctor Vance, in 1897, married Mabel Florence Brooks, also a native of French Creek in Unshur County and daughter of Adolphus and Josephine (Phillips) Brooks. Doctor and Mrs. Vance are members of the Presbyterian Church, of which he is an elder. He is a republican in politics. His two children are: Mary Eugenia, born August 24, 1905; and John Brooks, born January 12, 1915.

GEORGE G. BRENNEMAN. Seven miles north of New Cumberland, the county seat of Hancock County, and near the Village of Arroyo, is situated the splendid fruit farm owned and actively managed by Mr. Brenneman, who is one of the most extensive and successful fruit growers in this section of West Virginia. He was born on his present homestead farm, on the 10th of May, 1847, and is a son of Jacob and Margaret (Brown) Brenneman, the latter a representative of an honored and influential pioneer family of which mention is made in other personal sketches in this publication. Jacob Brenneman was born in Pennsylvania and after his marriage he and his wife continued to reside on the farm that is now owned by their son George G., this being one of the fine places on the Ohio River in Hancock County and comprising 318½ acres. Jacob Brenneman showed marked progressiveness and initiative ability in here developing one of the best of the early apple orchards of Hancock County, where his father, Christian Brenneman, has obtained a large tract of land and divided the same ultimately among his three sons, Jacob, Richard and Cyrus. Richard Brenneman developed a fine landed estate of 300 acres. One of his sons, Dr. R. E. Brenneman, is a representative physician and surgeon at Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, and another son, H. C., resides at Point Pleasant, Mason County, West Virginia. Cyrus Brenneman sold his land to his brother Jacob, and eventually he became a railroad agent at Empire, Ohio. Jacob Brenneman was seventy years of age at the time of his death and his sons Cyrus E. and George G. succeeded to the ownership of the old homestead farm, which they equitably divided, Cyrus having later died, at the age of fifty-six years, and, with no children of his own having willed his property to his brother George, who thus retains the old homestead in its entirety. To the property George G. Brenneman has added by the purchase of an adjacent tract of forty-three acres. He specializes in the fruit-growing department of farm enterprise, has an orchard of 100 acres, devoted mainly to apples of the best grades, many of the trees having been planted by him and the annual yield from the great orchard averaging about 20,000 barrels, the while he has storage facilities for the accommodation of 14,000 barrels and is thus enabled to regulate effectively the placing of his fruit on the market. He is still extending his orchard, and he limits his production of apples to four standard varieties, in which he gives preference to the popular "Willow Twig" type. Mr. Brenneman's farm is situated in the finest apple-growing section of the state, soil, water and drainage being such as to insure the maximum returns from orchards and to make the industry one of major scope and importance.

Mr. Brenneman is liberal and progressive in his civic attitude but has had no desire for political activity or public office. He married Miss Mary Cowl, and they became the parents of six children: Elizabeth H. is the wife of Frank Goodman, of Cleveland, Ohio; John C. and Jacob N.

are associated with their father in the fruit-culture business, under the firm name of G. G. Brenneman & Sons; Miss Margaret remains at the parental home; Girard G. died at the age of twenty-eight years; and Sadie O. is the wife of Alexander E. Mahan, of whom individual mention is made on other pages of this work.

ALEXANDER E. MAHAN is a native son of Hancock County, a representative of one of the old and honored families of this section of the state, and as a fruit grower is fully upholding the prestige of the family name and that of the county, his attractive orchard homestead being situated near the Village of Arroyo and on rural mail route No. 4 from New Cumberland, the county seat.

Mr. Mahan was born at New Cumberland, this county, on the 8th of October, 1879, and is a son of Captain W. Chester Mahan and Margaret (Smith) Mahan, the former of whom died in 1908, at the age of sixty-six years, and the latter in 1921, at the age of sixty-eight years. The father was a gallant young soldier of the Union in the Civil war, in which he was a member of Company I, Twelfth West Virginia Volunteer Infantry. He was captured by the enemy and was held a captive of war at Andersonville Prison for six months. He took part in many engagements and did well his part in preserving the integrity of the nation. After the war he became actively identified with navigation service on the Ohio River as part owner of packet boats. He served as captain on these river steamboats, including the "John Porter," which vessel unfortunately carried the yellow-fever scourge as far as Gallipolis, Ohio, at the time when the dread epidemic was raging at Memphis, Tennessee. Captain Mahan later engaged successfully in fruit growing on the fine place now owned and operated by his son Alexander E., of this sketch, who is the elder of the two children and whose sister, Miss Helen M., likewise remains at the old home. Alexander E. Mahan married Miss Sadie Brenneman, a daughter of George G. Brenneman, and the one child of this union is Alexander E., Jr.

HERBERT MADDEN BRENNEMAN. Hancock County has precedence as one of the most important centers of fruit culture in the State of West Virginia, and apples here raised are known far and wide for their superiority, with the result that they always command the maximum market prices. The fine fruit farm owned and occupied by Mr. Brenneman is here situated two miles distant from Arroyo, an important shipping point, and is the place on which his birth occurred, the date of his nativity having been April 24, 1877. He is a son of Charles Christian Brenneman, who was born at Kendall, Pennsylvania, in October, 1836, a son of Jacob Brenneman. Christian Brenneman, his great-grandfather, who became a pioneer settler in what is now Hancock County, served as a soldier in the command of Gen. Andrew Jackson in the War of 1812, and incidentally walked home from New Orleans, where he had been stationed with his command. He married a daughter of Jacob Nessly, who was one of the very early settlers of the present Hancock County and of whom mention is made in other reviews in this history. Jacob Nessly owned a very large tract of land along the Ohio River, and it was on a portion of this land that Christian Brenneman settled after his marriage, his old homestead being the place now owned by George G. Brenneman, who is individually represented on other pages of this work. Christian Brenneman finally sold 209 acres of his land, and his grandson, Charles C., repurchased the property shortly after the close of the Civil war, the remainder of his life having been here passed and his death having occurred on the 1st of June, 1901. He married Mary Frances Brown, daughter of Charles Brown, who was a son of Sir Richard Brown, the latter having come from Scotland and settled in Fayette County, Pennsylvania. Charles Brown came to West Virginia when his daughter, Mary F., was eight years old, and purchased a part of the Jacob Nessly farm, adjoining the home place of Austin H. Brown. There Charles Brown remained until his death, at the patriarchal age of ninety-six years. His sons, Robert and William, became owners of the old farm and at the death of Robert Brown the property passed into the possession of Charles Brenneman, a son of John, another brother of George and Charles C. The present house on this fine old homestead was erected in 1823, heavy hewed timbers being utilized in its construction, and hand work of the old-time enduring order being in evidence throughout the structure. The house was remodeled and modernized in 1915 by its present owner, Herbert M. Brenneman, subject of this sketch. In connection with the raising of cattle and sheep Charles C. Brenneman here early began the development of an apple orchard, and in the same there is still remaining one tree that was planted in 1813 and that is still bearing fruit of excellent quality. This venerable tree is one of the original "Willow Twig" apple trees of a section now renowned for the production of this fine type of apples. Charles C. Brenneman planted an orchard of 5,000 trees, and from his orchard he received in 1896 a yield of 6,000 barrels. It was a matter of great pride to him that he lived to see the development of his orchard into one of the most productive in this section. The present owner maintains the integrity of the orchard by a careful system of resetting or replacement, no vacancy being permitted to appear in the lines of trees, and he having precedence as the most extensive commercial fruit grower in his native state. He has held to the celebrated "Willow Twig" variety as the best type of apples to be raised under the excellent conditions here in evidence, and no better or more enduring type is to be found anywhere in the world. The Brenneman orchards give an average yield of 2,500 barrels, and the place has storage facilities for the accommodation of 6,000 barrels. Mr. Brenneman buys from other fruit growers of the locality sufficient quantities of apples to reach the limit of his storage capacity. He formerly exported apples to Germany, Scotland and England, but the product of his orchards is sold throughout the United States almost exclusively since the close of the World war. His fine farm comprises 209 acres—the original tract owned by his father. The store house on this model fruit farm is a stone structure, one of the finest houses for the storing of fruit in the United States, and preserves an even temperature. Mr. Brenneman has made other improvements of the best modern order, and has reason for taking pride in his splendid hillside farm, which produces apples of finer flavor and color than do those grown in the river bottom lands of this locality.

Mr. Brenneman was formerly retained as buyer for leading wholesale fruit dealers in Pittsburgh and New York City, and in this connection he visited the fruit-growing districts in all sections of the United States, with the result that he has become a recognized authority in this field of industrial enterprise. He is a citizen of vital progressiveness and liberality, has been influential in the promotion of the good-roads movement, and raised through private sources funds to improve a road in his native county and district. He was reared in the faith of the Methodist Church and his wife is a member of the Presbyterian Church.

In 1902 Mr. Brenneman married Miss Anna Elizabeth Unkel, of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, and her death occurred ten years later, the one child of this union being Gladys Elizabeth, who is a member of the class of 1923 in the high school at Newell. In June, 1915, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Brenneman and Miss Amy Viola Cope, of Wellsville, Ohio, where she was born and reared and where her father, the late Samuel S. Cope, was engaged in the hardware business fully fifty years. Mrs. Celestia Ann (Snowden) Cope, mother of Mrs. Brenneman, was born at Hookstown, Pennsylvania, and still resides at Wellsville, Ohio. Mrs. Brenneman was for twenty years actively associated with the business established by her father, and was secretary and treasurer of the Cope Hardware & Supply Company, in which connection she developed exceptional business ability. Her social charm is equally pronounced, and she is the popular chataine of one of the beautiful and hospitable rural homes of Hancock County.

In conclusion is entered brief record concerning the brothers and sisters of Herbert M. Brenneman: Alice B.

M. L. Magee

is the wife of E. W. Hewitt, of Arroyo, Hancock County. Charles Howard, who died in 1916, at the age of fifty-three years, was at the time proprietor of the Brenne-man Baking Company in the City of Columbus, Ohio. Jacob Edward was but a lad when he went to Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, where he made remarkable advancement and eventually became the executive head of the Brenne-man Wharf & Bridge Company, which has done a large amount of important work, including the erection of the wharves of the navy yards at League Island. He is still president of this corporation. Clarence likewise left the parental home when he was a youth, and he is now secretary of the Peerless Biscuit Company in the City of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania. Willard was seventeen years of age when he went to Pittsburgh, and there he is now president and general manager of the Peerless Baking Company. Rev. George E. attended Mount Union College at Alliance, Ohio, and is a clergyman of the Methodist Episcopal Church, he being at the time of this writing, in 1923, pastor of the First Methodist Episcopal Church at New Kensington, Pennsylvania. Robert Baird, the next younger son, died in 1918, he having been a principal in and general manager of the Seaman, Irvin & Brenne-man Construction Company of Hometown, Pennsylvania. Herbert M., of this sketch, was the next in order of birth. Frank Lawrence, a traveling salesman for the Peerless Biscuit Company, of Pittsburgh, died in December, 1917. He inherited a life interest in the Robert Brown estate in Hancock County, West Virginia, and was here maintaining his home at the time of his death. Mrs. Eva C. Gardner, the youngest of the children, resides at Columbus, Ohio. Each of the sons made a record of substantial and worthy achievement, and all have honored their native county and state.

LORENZO FRANKLIN MAHAN is one of the venerable native sons of Hancock County, a representative of a sterling pioneer family whose name has been one of prominence in the history of this part of West Virginia, and he has individually contributed his share to the civic and material development and progress of the county that has represented his home from the time of his birth to the present. This sterling citizen of the Arroyo neighborhood in Hancock County was born at Mahan's Mills, on King's Creek, this county, November 17, 1838, and is the only surviving son of John Mahan, the latter a son of William and Nancy (Jones) Mahan. William Mahan had operated a line of stage coaches out from the City of Baltimore, Maryland, and upon coming to what is now the State of West Virginia he settled at Follansbee in Brooke County, his sons John and Thomas later having established a grist mill on King's Creek in the present Hancock County. In 1842 John Mahan established his residence on the farm now owned and occupied by his son Lorenzo F., of this review, near the Village of Arroyo, and the saw and grist mill which he here erected and operated was later used as a vinegar manufactory. His landed estate here comprised 576 acres. He became one of the owners also of a line of river boats, including barges and the steamboats "Oil City" and "Iron City," which were built in Hancock County. Later he became one of the owners of the navigation business conducted under the title of the Cumberland Tow Boat Company. He was one of the vigorous and resourceful business men of his day and did much to further the advancement of his home community and county. He and his sons eventually converted the saw and planing mill into a vinegar factory, which they operated successfully. In 1852 Lorenzo F. Mahan assisted in setting out the first orchard in a county that has since become one of the foremost in the apple-growing industry of West Virginia. Lorenzo F. Mahan married Mary H. Lowry, whose father was mayor of the City of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, during the Civil war, and their ideal companionship continued for thirty years, the gracious bonds being severed by the death of the devoted wife and mother, who is survived by two children, Grace and Frank Earl, the latter of whom resides at Chester, this county, and is in the employ of the Homer Laughlin China Company at Newell. He is a republican in politics, as is also his venerable father, who has been unfaltering in his allegiance to the party during virtually the entire period of its existence. In 1897 was solemnized the marriage of Miss Grace Mahan to William V. Powell, who is engaged in the general insurance business in the City of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania. Mrs. Powell owns a part of the old homestead estate, and after remaining eight years in Pittsburgh she returned home to care for her venerable parents. She is according to her father the utmost filial love and solicitude, and resides with him in the fine old home-house which he erected fully half a century ago and which, situated on a slight elevation above the Ohio River, commands a fine view of the valley for a distance of many miles, while directly opposite, on the Ohio shore, is the beautiful Children's Home in Jefferson County, Ohio. Mr. and Mrs. Powell became the parents of five children. Franklin, eldest of the five, is now engaged in the insurance business in Pittsburgh, and in connection with the World war he was in the nation's military service in France for a period of eighteen months. The younger children are Edward Hewitt, Mary Elizabeth, William Thomas and Barbara Brenne-man.

Other personal sketches in this publication offer much additional data concerning the Mahan family, and the general history of the county likewise makes proper recognition of the splendid part this family has played in connection with the development and progress of Hancock County.

MAXIE C. MAGEE, vice president and cashier of the Wheeling Bank & Trust Company, is one of the younger men in the financial life of the Wheeling District, and was called to his present post because of his undoubted qualifications and wide experience and knowledge of banking affairs.

Mr. Magee was born at Brookhaven, Mississippi, March 15, 1885. His father was a Mississippi planter. He had the best educational advantages afforded a son of well-to-do parents. He attended public schools and graduated from the University of Mississippi, at Oxford, with the class of 1909. He combined two years work in one while at the university. Following his university career Mr. Magee became traveling auditor for a cotton exporting firm, visiting various cotton centers in the South. This was his work until 1915.

In that year he entered the service of the Federal Reserve Bank at Cleveland. The Federal Reserve system was just being organized, and the most important part of the task yet remained to be accomplished, namely, to convince the individual bank in each district as to the merits and advantages of membership in the Federal Reserve system. Mr. Magee was selected as one of the publicity representatives of the Federal Bank of Cleveland, and his work corresponded with that of a traveling salesman without anything to sell, engaged in an educational campaign to make the merits of the Federal system thoroughly understood and appreciated. The district of the Cleveland Federal Reserve Bank comprised all of Ohio, fifty-six counties in Eastern Kentucky, six in West Virginia and nineteen in Western Pennsylvania. During the next several years Mr. Magee visited about two thousand banks in this district, carrying on his organization and educational campaign. One of his official visits brought him in touch with the officers and directors of the Wheeling Bank & Trust Company, and while he won them over to membership in the Federal Reserve system, at the same time he left impressions that resulted in their calling him to an executive place in the bank, and in July, 1920, the day after he resigned from the Federal Bank of Cleveland, he accepted his post as vice president and cashier of the Wheeling institution. The Wheeling Bank & Trust Company has capital of $300,000.00, surplus and undivided profits of $500,000.00, and its executive officers and directors comprise the following well known citizens: Alexander Glass, chairman of the board; S. W. Harper, president; S. O. Laughlin, vice president; M. C. Magee, vice president and cashier, while the directors are W. H. Bachman, C. P. Billings, J. A. Bloch, A. F. Brady, Jr., R. E. Breed, D. A. Burt, H. C.

Hazlett, W. B. Higgins, C. J. Kepner, Arthur Laughans, S. P. Norton, A. B. Paxton, A. C. Stifel, C. A. Vaden, A. C. Whitaker, W. P. Wilson and M. C. Magee.

Mr. Magee is a member of the Fort Henry Club and Kiwanis Club, and the St. Andrew Society of the Episcopal Church. In 1910 he married Miss Vera Roberts, of Union City, Tennessee.

JOSEPH NATHAN FINLEY. The maintenance of a business establishment for thirty years is ample proof of its worth. Commercial ventures of the fly-by-night order may pay their promoters for the time being, but they bring their communities nothing: it is the firmly-established, standardly-existing business that contributes to the locality's prestige in commercial circles. The men who stand behind such helpful enterprises are found to be of sterling worth and solid integrity, and to be citizens in whom a realization of the responsibilities of citizenship is firmly grounded. A merchant of Chester since 1892, Joseph Nathan Finley, president of the Finley Brothers Lumber Company, has assisted in building this business to a point where it is justly accounted a necessary commercial adjunct. He has been a promoter, organizer and official of movements which have made the city grow and expand, and to his helpfulness in a civic way Chester may give gratitude for much of its development.

Mr. Finley was born at the old family residence on the hill, on the old farm which extended to the Ohio River at the west end of the City of Chester, January 25, 1865, a son of John R. and Louisa (Scott) Finley. John R. Finley was born in 1824, in Washington County, Pennsylvania, and at the age of four years was brought to the Ohio Valley by his father, Thomas Finley, who passed the rest of his life here in agricultural operations and died when John R. was eighteen years of age. Of the four sons of Thomas, three, Richard, James and William, served as soldiers of the Union during the Civil war, all probably, in Ohio infantry regiments. Richard later went to Ashland County, Ohio, where he died, while James and William remained in the Ohio Valley, where they passed away. John R. Finley had charge of the farm with his mother and maiden sister, Rebecca, who died on the farm. The mother died at the age of eighty-four years. John R. Finley after his mother's death bought out the other heirs and added to the property until he had 125 acres. In addition to farming he was engaged in carpentry and made a success of his affairs. He died in 1898, at the age of seventy-four years, while Mrs. Finley passed away in 1914, aged eighty-two years, having survived him sixteen years.

The education of Joseph Nathan Finley was acquired in the public schools of Hancock County, and, like his brothers, while being reared on the home farm he learned the trade of carpenter. This he followed somewhat independently until 1892, when, with his brothers, James William, Richard Franklin and Robert Andrews Finley, he began contracting and building, mainly at East Liverpool. In 1902 the brothers, with their brother-in-law, Joseph McCoy, formed the Finley Brothers Lumber Company, which has developed into the largest business of its kind in this section. While ostensibly a lumber company, this enterprise also continued contracting and building, including all manner of structures. Among the work accomplished by this firm may be mentioned ten residences for the Government, railroad stations, potteries, factories, schools, court houses, churches, Y. M. C. A. buildings, garages, etc. in fact anything in the contracting line. More than one-half of the buildings at Chester have been erected by this concern whose patronage has also extended to Newell, Follansbee, Weirton and other communities. The company now consists of the four brothers, Mrs. Joseph McCoy, now a widow, and George Hasson. They own a well-equipped mill utilized for mill work, stair work, etc., and the entire plant is modern in every particular. Mr. Finley was one of the original incorporators of the First National Bank of Chester and has been its vice president since its incorporation.

He was a member of the first council of Chester, served as a justice of the peace for some time, and in 1909 was sent to the State Legislature as representative, being one of the few democrats ever elected to that body from Hancock County. He formerly served for some time as chairman of the County Democratic Committee. He has a number of civic and fraternal connections.

Mr. Finley married Miss Ella Rose, a sister-in-law of John E. Newell, a sketch of whom appears in this work, and to this union there have been born four children: Claire C. in the engineering department of the Crucible Steel Company at Midland, Pennsylvania; J. Paul, a student at the University of Pittsburgh; and Mary Louise and Martha Jane, twins, born seventeen years after J. Paul.

Mr. Finley is a charter member of Chester Lodge No. 142, A. F. and A. M., and also belongs to the Scottish Rite bodies up to and including the thirty-second degree. He also belongs to Osiris Temple A. A. O. N. M. S. of Wheeling, West Virginia.

ARTHUR G. ALLISON. To succeed as a member of the Hancock County bar requires more than ordinary ability which has been carefully trained along the lines of the legal profession, as well as an appreciable fund of general information and keen judgment with regard to men and their motives. In a pushing, growing city such as Chester there is so much competition, events crowd each other in such a way and circumstances play such an important part in the shaping of events that the lawyer must necessarily be a man capable of grasping affairs with a ready and competent hand to effect satisfactory results. Among those who have won recognition in the profession of law at Chester is Arthur G. Allison, who is also serving his thirteenth year as a justice of the peace.

Mr. Allison was born on a farm near Chester, Hancock County, West Virginia, March 7, 1881, a son of Joseph B. and Mary E. (Riley) Allison. There were two or three original families of Allisons, as there were of Wells, who settled in this part of the Ohio Valley. Joseph B. Allison was born on the same farm as his son, November 21, 1859, and died April 22, 1915. He was a son of Enoch Allison, the latter being a son of Burgess Allison, who settled on a farm one mile from Washington Schoolhouse in Grant District in 1801. He drove the first wagon, of the "prairie schooner" style, into Hancock County, from Cumberland, Maryland, and continued to haul freight and passengers one way and freight the other for a number of years. Freight over the mountains was for many years a profitable business. In coming from Maryland Burgess Allison followed what later became the National Road, which extended as far as Vandalia, Illinois, its destination being St. Louis. More people went over that road to Western Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Missouri and Iowa than over all the other routes. Mr. Allison later secured a farm, in conjunction with which he operated a blacksmith shop, and, becoming prosperous, loaned money to his less fortunate neighbors and became something of a financier in his locality. He lived to be ninety-three years of age, his death then being caused by an accident.

Enoch Allison was born in Hancock County and here spent his life as an agriculturist, his home being on the north branch of Tomlinson's Run. He was a man of ability and accumulated more than 2,200 acres of land, and was well esteemed in his community as possessed of qualities of integrity and probity. He died in 1888, at the age of sixty-three years. He and his wife, who bore the maiden name of Mary Ann Barclay, were the parents of six sons and one daughter: Bergess N., for more than fifty years a carpenter in the employ of the Pennsylvania Railroad, who died in September, 1921, at Wellsville, Ohio; Waitman C., who is living in retirement at Chester; Joseph B.; Ellsworth E., a Hancock County farmer, who died February 11, 1909; Sherman C., who is still following farming on his Hancock County property near Pughtown; Mary E., the wife of Leander Conant, of East Liverpool, Ohio; and Walter C., engaged in milling at Chester.

Joseph B. Allison passed practically all his life on his 700-acre farm in Grant District, where he applied himself to farming and dairying. He was well thought of in his community as to ability and personal qualities, but never cared for public office, being content with his farm and his home. He married Mary E. Riley, who was born in what is now Chester, June 25, 1863, a daughter of Enoch and Sarah (Daniels) Riley. Enoch Riley was born in Staffordshire, England, and on coming to the United States was first engaged in farming. Later he conducted a hotel at East Liverpool and was also the part owner of a pottery, and his thirty-five-acre farm is now included within the city limits of Chester, where he died in August, 1890. Two children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Allison: Arthur G.; and Sarah A., the wife of Harry E. Hall, a dairyman and fruit grower on the old farm.

Arthur G. Allison spent his boyhood on the home farm and attended first the public schools in the country and later the high school at East Liverpool, from which he was graduated as a member of the class of 1901. He then entered the law department of the West Virginia University, where he received his degree in 1904, and since that time has been engaged in a general practice at Chester. At various times he has been called to public office, having been city attorney, secretary of the Board of Education and city tax collector, is a notary public, and for thirteen years has been a justice of the peace, now being in his third term in that office. A republican in politics, Mr. Allison has done some active and effective work in his party and is accounted one of its influential members. He is secretary of the local republican club and a member of the county committee, and has been a delegate to state conventions. Fraternally Mr. Allison is a charter member of the local lodge of the Knights of Pythias. He is unmarried.

HON. J. NESSLY PORTER. In business and public circles of Hancock County few names are better or more favorably known than that of J. Nessly Porter, secretary-treasurer of the Globe Brick Company and the present state senator of the First District, comprising Hancock, Brooke and Ohio counties, West Virginia.

Mr. Porter is a son of the late Capt. John Porter, one of the best known figures in the paving brick industry in this country, a sketch of whose career will be found on another page of this work. Since boyhood he has been identified with the brick business, and at the same time has found the opportunity to interest himself in public affairs, in which he has become prominent. Ever a prominent worker in party conventions, in 1915 he was chosen as the representative in the Lower House of the West Virginia Legislature of Hancock County, a post to which he was re-elected and established a splendid record. He was then sent to the Upper House, where he is an influential member of the judiciary committee and chairman of the insurance committee. He is a prominent Mason and has numerous business and civic connections. Mr. Porter married Miss Margaret Rinchart, of East Liverpool, Ohio, and they are the parents of two sons: James Nessly and Winston Allen.

JAMES BENNETT PORTER is vice president of the Globe Brick Company, representing one of the important industrial enterprises of Hancock County, and since 1909 he has maintained active supervision of a portion of the old Mahan fruit farm near Arroyo, this county, a property inherited by his mother. In this latter connection he is one of the extensive apple growers of his native county, and has on the farm a finely productive orchard that receives scientific care. Of both the Porter and Mahan families, representing the paternal and maternal ancestry of Mr. Porter, adequate record is given in other personal reviews in this volume, he being a son of John and Carrie (Mahan) Porter and having been born at New Cumberland, judicial center of Hancock County, on the 14th of November, 1882.

Mr. Porter was afforded the advantages of the well ordered public schools of his native county, and as a youth he became actively identified with the manufacturing of brick, with which industry he has continued his association to the present time, the Globe Brick Company, of which he is vice president, being one of the largest concerns of the kind in this section of the state. The family home of Mr. Porter is maintained in the attractive and modern house which he erected at Arroyo and which commands a fine view up and down the Ohio River and also of the Ohio shore district. Mr. Porter is liberal and progressive as a citizen but has had no desire for political activity or public office. He is affiliated with both the York and Scottish Rite bodies of the time-honored Masonic fraternity.

The year 1912 recorded the marriage of Mr. Porter and Miss Josephine Lovell, of Boston, Massachusetts, she being a graduate of Wellesley College and having come to Hancock County, West Virginia, to visit a classmate, Mary Anna Brenneman, daughter of Herman Brenneman. Romance here became her portion, for here she formed the acquaintance of Mr. Porter, whose importunities resulted in her here remaining as his wife. Mrs. Porter was active in Red Cross and other patriotic service in the World war period, as was also her husband, and she is an active member of the Nessly Chapel of the Methodist Protestant Church at Arroyo. Mr. and Mrs. Porter have five children, namely: James B., Jr., John Ethan, Josephine Natalie, Helen Cross and Leah Lovell.

ROBERT CLINTON DANCER is president and general manager of R. C. Dancer, Incorporated, a business that stands in the very front rank among the wholesale wall paper houses of the Ohio Valley. The business, in fact, is national in scope. Mr. Dancer was some years ago a modest merchant in wall paper and floor coverings at Mannington, West Virginia, but later moved his business to Wheeling, where it has enjoyed its greatest growth and prosperity and has become exclusively a wall paper house.

One of the fundamental principles for success in merchandising is giving and maintaining the personal touch between the merchant and his customer. With the development and complex organization of merchandising, to a point where the merchant is really a big executive who seldom meets even a small percentage of his "trade," a substitute for the personal touch has been found in the product of the busy typewriter and in that vital and vigorous form of communication generally described as advertising. Advertising is, in fact, the great modern means utilized by merchant manufacturer in telling his customers what he has to sell and vouching for its merits. In the development of this modern phase of the mercantile business Mr. Dancer has achieved a most unusual success, and that success has been instrumental in the growth of his great business at Wheeling. In the interest of his business he has for about a year issued a monthly publication known as "the Sample Stand," and through this, in addition to his large volume of private correspondence, he is able to keep his customers and trade friends apprised of new developments in the wall paper business and his own qualifications to supply the needs of the trade. The novel quality of his little publication has attracted many favorable comments from some of the foremost manufacturers, importers and dealers in wall paper throughout the country. Here it is possible to quote only one of the many letters Mr. Dancer receives commending his publication. The following is a paragraph from the secretary of one of the large manufacturers of paper hanging at Buffalo: "Such an attractive means of communication with your customers, advising them educationally and otherwise, for the good of their business, is something which should result in much mutual benefit, and we think you have gotten off to a good start. In practice, you are a good subject for membership in Rotary, whose motto is: 'He profits most who serves best.'"

Mr. Dancer was born at Mannington, West Virginia, May 29, 1875. His father, Jesse Dancer, was born in this state in 1826 and spent his entire life in Mannington and vicinity. He was a carpenter by trade, for some years had charge of the building of bridges for the Baltimore & Ohio Railway Company. He also erected many residences and business places in Mannington. He died in that city in 1889. He served the last two years of the war in the Union Army, was always a staunch republican, was at one time mayor of Mannington and a leading member of the Presbyterian Church of that city. He was affiliated with the Masonic order. Jesse Dancer was twice married. By his first wife he had eight children, and three of them are still living. W. S. Dancer, a contracting carpenter at Fairmont, West Virginia; Maggie, wife of James Koon, a farmer at Weston; and Mrs. Henry Tutt, wife of a marble cutter living at Grafton. The second wife of Jesse Dancer was Sarah Helms, who was born in West Virginia, in 1844 and died at Mannington in 1909. Robert Clinton Dancer is the only child of this marriage.

He spent his early life at Mannington, attended public school there to the age of fourteen, and learned business through a long and diligent practice as an employee of the Snodgrass Brothers' general store. He remained with that firm in a working capacity for ten years, and he and H. B. Beatty then bought out the business and conducted it from 1900 to 1905. In 1905 the partnership of Dancer & Burgess was formed at Mannington, and they engaged in the wholesale and retail wall paper and floor covering business. In 1909, seeking a more central city for their growing business, they removed to Wheeling, and in 1914 the partnership was dissolved and since then Mr. Dancer has been the active head of the establishment. For some years the business has been exclusively wall paper, and this is without doubt the largest wholesale concern in West Virginia in this line. The store and offices are at 1121 Market Street, the store extending to 1118 Main Street. Mr. Dancer handles one of the finest lines of wall paper in the United States, and he does a large business even in New York City and as far west as the Pacific Coast. In December, 1920, he incorporated as R. C. Dancer, Incorporated, of which he is president and general manager.

Mr. Dancer is also a director of the Quarter Savings & Trust Company of Wheeling. He is a republican, a member of Wheeling Lodge No. 5, F. and A. M., West Virginia Consistory No. 1, of the Scottish Rite, Wheeling Lodge No. 28, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, and is a member of the Rotary Club, the Wheeling Country Club and the Fort Henry Club. His home is at Birch Lynn, Wheeling. In 1905, at Mannington, Mr. Dancer married Miss Bessie Craker, daughter of John and Rose (Skinner) Craker, now deceased. Her father was an oil operator. Mrs. Dancer is a graduate of Keemar College of Hagerstown, Maryland.

CHILTON KENNA OXLEY is vice president and general manager of the corporation of Oxley, Troeger & Oxley, which conducts one of the leading clothing establishments in the City of Huntington, the modern and finely equipped store being at 917 Fourth Avenue, and the interested principals in the company being likewise identified with the Oxley-Boone Company, which conducts a clothing store at 420 Ninth Street in this city.

Mr. Oxley was born on a farm near Griffithsville, Lincoln County, West Virginia, on the 10th of July, 1878, and his personal names were given in honor of Hon. William E. Chilton, former United States senator from this state and now a resident of Charleston, and the late Hon. John E. Kenna, of Charleston, who was one of the distinguished men of the state and who represented West Virginia in the Senate of the United States.

Thomas L. Oxley, father of the subject of this review, was born at Rocky Mount, Virginia, in 1826, and died at Scott Depot, Putnam County, West Virginia, in 1909. He came to what is now West Virginia within a short time after his marriage and settled on Horse Creek, near Griffithsville, Lincoln County, where he acquired a large tract of land and developed a productive farm, this land having later become very valuable on account of its coal deposits. In 1896 he left his old homestead and removed to Scott Depot, where he passed the remainder of his long, useful and honorable life. He was a democrat, served two terms as sheriff of Lincoln County, and was influential in community affairs. Both he and his wife were zealous members of the Baptist Church. His was the distinction of having been a loyal soldier of the Confederate States in the Civil war. His wife died on the old homestead in Lincoln County in 1880. Matilda, eldest of the children, resides at Huntington, she being the widow of James C. Reynolds, who was a successful merchant at Milton, this state; Dr. Silas W., an able physician and surgeon, died at Hamlin, Lincoln County, in 1887; Marinda died in childhood; Watt S. is the senior member of the clothing concern of Oxley, Troeger & Oxley of Huntington; Archibald L. was a teacher in the public schools at the time of his death, in 1897; Demetrius C., a telegraph operator by vocation, died at Malden, West Virginia, in 1907; and Chilton K., of this sketch, is the youngest of the number.

Chilton K. Oxley is indebted to the schools of Lincoln and Putnam counties for his youthful education, and he continued his association with the activities of his father's farm until he was eighteen years of age. When but nine years of age Mr. Oxley determined to become a merchant, and even thus early was shown his predilection for this line of business, besides which he showed his self-reliant initiative ability. He went up into the hills of Lincoln County, there cut down small poplar trees, and with this material constructed a little building which he equipped as a store and which received the "patronage" of other youngsters of the community.

At the age of eighteen years Mr. Oxley found employment in the general store conducted by E. L. Hollinsworth at Milton, Cabell County, his wages at the start being $10 a month. He continued this connection two years and then, in 1899, obtained a position in the clothing establishment of G. A. Northcott & Company of Huntington, with which concern he remained thirteen years and gained a thorough knowledge of all details of the business. In 1912 he became the organizer of the present corporation of Oxley, Troeger & Oxley, which is incorporated under the laws of the state and which now conducts one of the leading clothing and men's furnish-goods establishments in the City of Huntington. His brother Watt S. is president of the company, he himself is vice president and general manager, and John T. Troeger is secretary and treasurer.

Mr. Oxley is a progressive and public-spirited citizen; is a democrat in politics; is an active member of the Huntington Business Men's Association, of which he was president in 1916; is a member of the Huntington Chamber of Commerce; and is a director of the West Virginia Retail Clothiers Association. He and his wife are members of the First Methodist Episcopal Church, North, at Huntington, and he is serving as a member of its board of trustees. He holds membership in the Guyan Country Club. Mr. Oxley is the owner of valuable real estate in Huntington, including his attractive home property at 622 Trenton Place. In the World war period his patriotic spirit and loyal liberality were distinctly in evidence. He was a member of the executive committee of the Cabell County Chapter of the Red Cross, aided actively in the local campaigns in support of the Government bond issues, etc., and made his individual contributions most liberal.

September 17, 1902, recorded the marriage of Mr. Oxley and Miss Frances Eskey, daughter of John N. and Jennie Eskey, who now reside at Hampton, Virginia, Mr. Eskey being a retired mechanic and having been formerly employed in the United States shipyards. Mr. and Mrs. Oxley have no children.

HON. JOHN J. CORNWELL. Probably the great majority of the people of West Virginia, regardless of party, would fully endorse the words of the democratic state platform of 1920 when it speaks of "the administration of our great war governor as one of the most dignified, able and courageous in the history of the state. He has lifted the governorship to a high plane, which is gratifying to the people of the state."

John J. Cornwell has for many years had the esteem and confidence of his home people in Romney and Hampshire County. He was born in Ritchie County, July 11, 1867, of Jacob H. and Mary E. (Taylor) Cornwell.

The future governor was educated in Shepherd College at Shepherdstown, and soon after leaving that institution he began a career as a publisher and editor, and has been principal owner of the Hampshire Review since 1890. He was active in its management as editor until 1917, when he removed to Charleston. Mr. Cornwell has long been a leader in the democratic party of the state, and was a delegate to the national conventions of 1896 and 1912 and gave a service for ten years, from 1896 to 1906, as a member of the West Virginia Senate. He was democratic nominee for governor in 1904, and in 1916 he had the remarkable distinction of being the only democratic nominee on the state ticket to be elected. He began his term as governor in 1917, and served until 1921, when he resumed his home and the management of his business interests at Romney.

Mr. Cornwell financed and built the Hampshire Southern Railroad, a line forty miles long, has been president of the Bank of Romney, of the South Branch Development Company, the South Branch Tie & Lumber Company, is now a director in the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Company, and has held the office of secretary and treasurer of the Appalachian Orchard Company. He has been one of the prominent editors of the state, has made a reputation as a forceful writer, and aside from his routine contributions to the press is author of a book entitled "Knock About Notes," published in 1915. He is a Mason and Odd Fellow.

June 30, 1891, Mr. Cornwell married Edna Brady, of Romney.

FLOYD H. HARLESS, a Charleston attorney, where he has been in active practice for over ten years, has the honor of being state councillor for West Virginia of the Order United American Men. As head of this order in the state he is greatly interested in spreading its principles and making the order a vehicle of genuine service and usefulness as a defender and propagator of real Americanism and good citizenship.

Mr. Harless inherits some of the strong and sturdy character of his ancestors, who have lived in the Mountain State for several generations. He was born on the Harless homestead on the Straight Fork of Mud River in Lincoln County in 1884. His parents, G. W. and Louisa E. (Humphrey) Harless, are still living, the former a native of Lincoln and the latter of Kanawha County. Harless is a name of German origin, but the first American ancestor settled in Virginia about the time of the Revolution. He reared a family of eleven sons and two daughters. Four of these children lived to be over 100 years old, and in all the generations the Harlesses have been noted for long life. The grandfather of the Charleston lawyer was Rev. Edwin Harless, who lived to be over ninety years of age, and for seventy of those years was an active Baptist minister.

Floyd H. Harless attended the country schools of Lincoln County, Marshall College at Huntington, and studied law in West Virginia University at Morgantown. He finished his law course in 1910, was admitted to the bar the same year, and at once located at Charleston, where among many of the state's foremost lawyers he has won creditable distinction by his abilities and has been favored with a growing general practice. His practice is in the various Courts, State and Federal courts. He is a member of the Knights of Pythias and Odd Fellows.

PATRICK W. FLOURNOY. The character of the men of a community may be correctly gauged by the standing of its business houses, whose growth has been stimulated by progressive and intelligent methods, or held back through lack of proper development. No town or city can reach its highest standard of development unless its men in all lines co-operate to give an honest service for value received. Such men can be counted upon to promulgate and support worthy measures looking toward securing for their community solid improvements and the bringing into it of solid business houses that will add to its prosperity. They give solidity to commercial organizations and contribute liberally toward worthy movements of an educational and religious character. Judged by these standards, one of Charleston's useful citizens is Patrick W. Flounoy, whose long association with the Charleston Hardware Company, of which he is the president, has brought him into close connections with the mercantile trade of Charleston and Southern West Virginia.

Mr. Flounoy was born in Charlotte County, Virginia, in 1873, and is the son of a druggist whose father was a physician. He received a public school education and at the age of sixteen years joined an engineering party engaged in work on the Norfolk & Western Railroad, with which he came to Charleston, arriving in this city on election day, November, 1892. Here he secured employment with the Goshorn Hardware Company, the oldest concern of its kind at Charleston, by which company he continued to be employed until the organization in 1901 of the wholesale firm of the Charleston Hardware Company, founded by F. H. Markell, manager. The business was capitalized at $50,000, and there were about forty stockholders, among them Mr. Flounoy, who straightway began to secure additional stock. T. E. Embleton was the first president. After two years Mr. Markell resigned and was succeeded by Mr. Flounoy, who later became president. He continued to buy more stock until finally he became principal owner of the business, of which he is now president, although it continues to be conducted under the original name. The capital stock is now $100,000 and the capital and surplus, $400,000, all of which has been built up from the original capital of $50,000. The company owns its own warehouses on the railroad, as well as its other property, and deals in general hardware and mine supplies, catering to the needs of the mines of Southern West Virginia, mainly, although its territory is not entirely restricted to this area. The plant consists of five stories and a basement, in which there are thirty employees, in addition to which there are seven traveling salesmen. The first year's sales of the business amounted to $100,000, while at the present time the annual sales approximate $1,000,000, and the business is being constantly developed and enlarged. Mr. Flounoy gives his entire attention to this business, which has reached its present large proportions principally because of his business ability, foresight, acumen and clear-headed judgment, together with his industry and well-known business integrity. Mr. Flounoy has always been a supporter of worthy movements tending to advance the best interests of the community. He is a Knight Templar and also a Scottish Rite Mason, a Noble of the Mystic Shrine, and a member of the Edgewood Country Club.

Mr. Flounoy married Miss Grace Hathaway, a resident of Cincinnati at the time of their marriage, but a native of England, and to this union there has been born one son, Patrick W., Jr.

CHARLES CORLISS, whose experience in the building of public works is practically nation wide, has for some years been settled down as a resident and business man at West Virginia and has been one of the principals in developing an important industry for the supply of building material at New Martinsville, where he is president of the Ohio River Gravel Company.

Mr. Corliss was born in Monroe County, Wisconsin, May 7, 1864. His father, Samuel Corliss, who was born in Vermont in 1841, was a rugged New Englander and early identified himself with the arduous work of the great lumber woods. As a young man he went to Wisconsin, became a timberman and was active in the lumber industry of that state for many years, his home the greater part of the time being in Monroe County. He was a republican in politics and a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Samuel Corliss died in Wisconsin in 1907. He married Mary Williams, who was born in England and died in Wisconsin in 1907. They became the parents of two sons, George and Charles. George is a railroad man living at Minneapolis.

Charles Corliss acquired a public school education in Monroe County, Wisconsin, but at the age of fifteen was earning his own way. For four years he was employed in sawmills and the lumber camps of Wisconsin. After that he took up the somewhat itinerant occupation of employment on various public works, including bridge building, and this experience in time took him over practically all of the United States and even into old Mexico. Mr. Corliss has been a resident of West Virginia since 1911. For four years he was superintendent during the construction of the dam at Woodland. Then, in 1916, he moved to New Martinsville and established the Corliss Sand Company. In August, 1919, he incorporated the business and in January, 1921, consolidated it with the New Martinsville Sand Company. The company is now known as the Ohio River Gravel Company and was organized on January 1, 1922, consolidating with the Wheeling Sand and Gravel Company, the Armstrong Sand Company of Wheeling, the New Martinsville Sand Company, the Marietta Sand Company of Marietta, Ohio, and the Parkersburg Sand Company of Parkersburg, West Virginia. The officials are: Charles Corliss, president; George Ross, of Parkersburg, vice president and general manager; A. P. Turley, of Parkersburg, secretary and treasurer. The company has all the facilities for the rapid and economical handling of sand and gravel, digging it by dredge and elevator from the Ohio River. The capacity of each plant is a thousand tons per day for sand and gravel. This material is shipped to Fairmont, Clarksburg, Weston, Buckhannon, Elkins, Grafton and, in fact, all over Northern West Virginia. The plant and offices are on the banks of the Ohio River in the north part of New Martinsville.

Mr. Corliss is an established resident of New Martinsville, owning a modern home at 915 North Third Street. He is a republican voter, a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church and is affiliated with the New Martinsville Kiwanis Club and Phoenix Lodge No. 72, Knights of Pythias, at Memphis, Tennessee. In 1911, at St. Louis, he married Mrs. Dina Faentine Stocker, who was born in Germany and came to the United States at the age of seventeen. Her parents were Mr. and Mrs. John H. Faentine. Her mother is now deceased, while her father still lives in Germany. Mr. and Mrs. Corliss have one son, Robert, born August 8, 1913.

SAMUEL STEPHENSON. Owing to his connection with numerous business enterprises of an important character, his public spirit and his general activity along various channels, Samuel Stephenson is acknowledged to be one of the leading citizens of Charleston. He has been interested in oil and coal production, was the erector of the Union office building, now occupied by the Union Trust Company, of which he was an incorporator and is a director, and is one of the principal owners of the Coal Fork Lumber Company, one of the leading lumber manufacturing concerns in the state.

Mr. Stephenson was born in Nicholas County, West Virginia, March 10, 1859, a son of Andrew J. Stephenson. His father was also born in that county, and in 1864 moved to Clay, Clay County, where he became a prominent figure in public affairs. While he was a democrat in a republican community, he was greatly popular with his fellow-citizens, and for many years served as county and circuit clerk, and at all times proved an able and accommodating official. His death was caused by a fall, October 29, 1893, when he had reached the age of seventy-four years.

Samuel Stephenson grew to manhood at Clay, where he received a good practical education and as a young man spent several years in teaching school. He then entered the field of lumbering, in association with his brother Forsythe, a manufacturer, who made a specialty of portable mills and operated in various communities. Later Mr. Stephenson formed a partnership with Gen. James Avis Holley in 1902, in coal and timber lands. Together they bought land in Boone County, where Mr. Stephenson still has extensive holdings. They also drilled the first gas wells in the Putnam and Lincoln fields, and for ten years were very active in this line of endeavor. During this time Mr. Stephenson assisted in the organization of the Holley Oil and Development Company and the Kanawha Valley Development Company, but later sold out to the Wayland Oil Company of New York. He has also prospected in various other fields in West Virginia, and still owns oil lands that have not been developed. In 1911 Mr. Stephenson erected what at the time was the leading office building of Charleston, and which is still one of the finest, the Union Trust Building, a thirteen-story structure, representing an investment of $385,000. This was sold by Mr. Stephenson to the Union Trust Company, of which he was one of the original incorporators. Mr. Stephenson was also a director in the Charleston National Bank, and has taken stock in other enterprises. In 1918 he was one of the incorporators and is still one of the principal owners of the Coal Fork Lumber Company, one of the principal lumber manufacturing companies of West Virginia, which owns some 40,000,000 feet of timber, cuts about 40,000 per day, and gives employment to approximately 100 men. Mr. Stephenson has taken an interest in political affairs and once was the democratic nominee for state senator and once for sheriff, but met with defeat on both occasions because of his party's minority in the county. During the mayoralty administration of General Holley, Mr. Stephenson was a member of the city council and assisted in making the city "dry." While the mayor was aligned with the "wet" forces, Mr. Stephenson's long experience in handling large bodies of men had confirmed him in the belief that prohibition was best, and he was one of the main factors in making Charleston a temperance city. He also served as deputy United States revenue collector. He is a member of the Presbyterian Church and always willing to give his support, moral and financial, to any worthy movement. He has reached the thirty-second degree in Masonry and is a member of the Commandery, Consistory and Shrine, but has not made a hobby of fraternalism. While essentially an out-of-doors man, he is not a sportsman in the generally-accepted meaning of the word.

Mr. Stephenson married Mrs. Cynthia Belle (Vickers) Sayre, of Kanawha County, who had two children, by her former marriage: Ira G., an oil and gas operator; and Nona Belle, the wife of Dr. John T. Sharp, of Charleston. Two children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Stephenson: Byron Jackson and Ruby Dell.

CHESTER MASTON WIKEL. The financial interests of any live and growing community are of such importance that particular attention must be paid to the character and standing of the men connected with the institutions to whom these interests are entrusted. Pineville is the home of some of Wyoming County's wealthiest men, who expect to have their banking attended to with dispatch and safety, and they are satisfied that all requirements of modern financial life are fully met by the First National Bank of Pineville, particularly because of the men who compose its staff. One of these men, who has won the confidence of the entire community, is Chester Maston Wikel, cashier.

Mr. Wikel was born on a farm in Summers County, West Virginia, November 9, 1879, and is a son of John A. and Rhoda M. (Hutchison) Wikel. John A. Wikel was born in Monroe County, now West Virginia, a son of Everett H. Wikel, and was a child when taken by his parents to Summers County. He has been a life-long agriculturist, and is still living at the old home place on Little Wolfe Creek, in Summers County, West Virginia. Although both he and his father were opposed to secession, John A. Wikel volunteered for service in the Confederate army during the war between the states, and his father was subsequently drafted and served in the same command. During one of their engagements a cannon-ball, passing between them, wounded Everett in the leg and carried away the sole of John's army boot. At the close of the war John was a prisoner at Fort Delaware. Mr. Wikel is a republican in political sentiment. Rhoda M. Hutchison was a daughter of John M. Hutchison. Three sons and three daughters were born to Mr. and Mrs. Wikel, all living: Myrtle and Everett H., who reside at home; Chester Maston; Amy, the wife of G. C. Saunders, of Summers County; and John C. and Essie, at home.

Chester M. Wikel attended the public schools of Summers County, subsequently taking special work at the summer normal school and then pursuing a commercial course at Bryant & Stratton's Commercial College at Louisville. In the meantime he had taught two terms in a rural school, but when his commercial course was completed he gave up teaching and accepted a position with the Bank of Summers, now known as the National Bank of Summers, at Hinton, the county seat, where he spent two years. His next connection was with the Clark James Manufacturing Company of Hinton, with which concern he remained six months, then spending a like period in the postoffice at Hinton. In 1908 Mr. Wikel joined the First National Bank of Logan as bookkeeper and assistant cashier, and remained with that institution fourteen months, following which he went to Dorchester, Virginia, and for about five years was chief clerk for the Kennermer interests on the Clinch Valley Railroad. In 1914 he joined the First National Bank of Pineville, with which he has since been identified in the capacity of cashier. He has done much to increase its business and insure its place in public confidence, and has won a large number of sincere friends both for himself and for the institution which he represents. Mr. Wikel is a Master Mason, having joined that order at Norton, Virginia. In politics he is a republican.

On December 24, 1919, Mr. Wikel was united in marriage with Miss Dottie Edna Hash, of Wyoming County, West Virginia, and one daughter, Virginia, and one son, Bernard Alexander, have been born to this union. Mrs. Wikel is a member of the Baptist Church.

TOM H. McRA is one of the youngest business men in the state as the responsible head of a wholesale concern handling a remarkable volume of business over a large section of the state. This is the Kanawha Wholesale Grocery Company, which in the face of the business depression following the war has steadily grown and prospered so that every dollar of its capital is working and represents a solid investment.

The company was organized July 1, 1919, with a capital of $100,000 and an initial investment of $50,000. The first staff of salesmen comprised four men. The company has rapidly extended its trade in all directions from Charleston, and now has $140,000 invested, and a staff of fourteen employees.

The head of this company represents a branch of the Highland Scotch clan, whose name is variously spelled, as McRae, McRea and also McCray. They have been in West Virginia for over 100 years. Farquhar McRa came from Edinburgh, Scotland, about 1790, and from Baltimore moved to the Village of Morgantown about 1794. He was a tailor, bringing his goods and outfit across the mountains on horseback. A thrifty business man, he was worth the considerable fortune of $16,000, and he built a hotel which stood until recent years at the site of the present Madera Hotel, near the courthouse in Morgantown.

Duncan McRa, son of Farquhar, was born in 1786 and died in 1825. He married Rebecca Carter, of Marion County, who was born in 1792 and died in 1848.

One of the children of Duncan and Rebecca McRa was Oliver Perry McRa, who was born December 16, 1819, and died December 25, 1897. He was a remarkable man in many ways, and it is said that he could build a house, build a chimney, make any kind of farm implement used at that time, make a pair of shoes or cooper a barrel. He served in the Union army during the Civil war, was frequently a school officer, taught school, as did five of his children, was for over forty years an exhorter in the Methodist Church, was legal adviser for all his section and ministered to the sick, the suffering and the dying without waiting to be called upon. Oliver P. McRa married Jemima Jacobs, who was born March 17, 1819, and died February 19, 1898. They were married in 1844. She was a daughter of Elijah and Mary (Doolittle) Jacobs, pioneers of Monongalia County. The children of Oliver P. McRa were: Edgar, born in 1845, a Civil war veteran and died in 1916; Waitman, born in 1848 and died in 1873; Elijah, born in 1850, a veteran teacher, justice of the peace, for thirty-three years secretary of the Board of Education of Clinton District in Monongalia County, and he and his sister Virginia still occupy the old homestead in that county; Mrs. Susan Lucretia Phillips, born in 1852, and died in 1903, and one of her sons was in the regular army in the Philippines, and two of her grandsons were in France during the World war; Rev. Thomas R. McRa, born in 1854, for over thirty years an active minister of the Methodist Church in Ohio, and has a son, Richard, also a minister and another son, Donald, a teacher; Mary Rebecca, who died in infancy; Sylvester, who also died in childhood; Miss Virginia, living with her brother at the homestead; and Duncan McRa.

Duncan McRa, born July 14, 1863, is now a resident of Charleston, and has devoted most of his life to journalism. He was educated for the law, practiced for some years in Preston County, and is the acknowledged historian of that county. He is a graduate of the State University, was a teacher, is the author of several books, is former secretary of the State Republican Committee and for four years was chief clerk in the secretary of state's office during the administration of Governor Dawson.
